RICHARDSON v. MARSHALL et al.
(S. F. 11582.)

Supreme Court of California. July 8, 1927.

1. Compromise and settlement ⇨23(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that note given by judgment debtor for purpose of having judgment satisfied was given freely and voluntarily.

In action to recover balance on promissory note given by judgment debtor in furtherance of attempted settlement with creditors, after filing petition in bankruptcy, and for purpose of securing satisfaction of judgment, evidence held to sustain finding that note was given freely and voluntarily, without duress or exercise of coercion.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Findings supported by substantial evidence will not be disturbed.

Reviewing court will uphold trial court's findings when it is satisfied substantial evidence exists to support them.

3. Bills and notes ⇨144—Question of negotiability is immaterial, where note has not been transferred.

Where note is not transferred, question whether it is negotiable or nonnegotiable is immaterial in action thereon.

4. Estoppel ⇨78(1)—Judgment debtor who gave note to procure satisfaction of judgment could not claim that note was canceled by entry of satisfaction.

Judgment debtor who induced creditor to accept note and satisfy judgment to solve debtor's financial difficulties could not, in action on note, claim that note was merely collateral to judgment and was canceled by entering of satisfaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Joseph S. Koford, Judge.

Action by Richard Richardson against Errol Marshall and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Lawrence Sledge, of Oakland, for appellants.

Fry & Wood, Green Majors, and Charles Quayle, all of Oakland, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This appeal presents for determination merely a disputed question of fact. Respondent sued to recover from appellants a balance of $2,046.85, plus interest and a $250 attorney fee, due him on a promissory note. Appellants' answer alleged fear and duress in obtaining said note, but the trial court found that it had been given freely and voluntarily, and without any duress which would operate to defeat their liability thereon.

The facts are substantially as follows: Respondent procured a judgment against defendant Errol Marshall in the sum of $4,000, upon which execution was taken out and levied against the property and business of said defendant. Said defendant thereupon filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, and was regularly adjudged a bankrupt by the United States district court. With the various other creditors, respondent filed his claim, based upon the above-mentioned judgment. In furtherance of an attempted settlement with creditors, at the conclusion of the bankruptcy hearing, appellants signed a note for $4,200, payable to respondent, this being the full amount of his judgment and claim, upon the understanding that, as soon as the assets of the bankrupt were apportioned and paid to creditors, respondent would credit the note with the amount received as his pro rata of said assets, and would accept a new note for the balance remaining due. Several months later this was done, and the new note then executed is the basis of this action.

Said appellant Errol Marshall made the regular payments called for by the said note, and further made an advance payment of $500, in return for which, at his request, respondent entered of record a satisfaction of the original judgment. Thereafter said appellant continued his regular payments on said note until some time in 1922, when this respondent brought an action against him for default as to one $50 payment then overdue. In that case the court found that default as to said installment had been waived, and gave judgment for the defendant (appellant here). Thereafter said appellant continued making payments in accordance with the provisions of the note until February 1, 1924; the balance due having by that time been reduced to $2,046. He then refused to make further payments, and this action was instituted.

It is to be noted that, at the time of the first suit, the suit based upon default as to one $50 payment, all the defenses open to appellants here were then available, but nevertheless no claim of duress, menace, or fraud was advanced by them; on the contrary, in their answer in that suit, they alleged that they had paid all sums due to date, and were able, ready, and willing to continue making payments upon said note as they fell due, and, as above stated, they did thereafter continue said payments.

tioned bankruptcy proceeding was read into the record here in an attempt to show said note was executed and delivered to respondent through fear, coercion, threats of arrest, fear of imprisonment, and fear of being indicted for perjury, exercised by respondent, his agents and attorneys, and W. J. Hayes, the United States referee in bankruptcy for Alameda county, before whom the hearing was held. This claim is utterly without foundation. The record does show that the referee in bankruptcy considered filing a perjury charge against appellants by reason of the apparent fact that their testimony was not given in a straight-forward and honest manner, but there is no possible connection between such remarks of the referee and the claim of this respondent, nor can it be said that any abuse of discretion or any coercion on the part of said referee is shown.

The agreement with respondent was decidedly beneficial to appellants, and the notes were executed for the very purpose of aiding them by an extension of time to untangle their financial snarls. It was made at their solicitation, as the thing they most needed was a satisfaction of the judgment of record against them.

[2] Furthermore, as above stated, the trial court found all of the allegations made by appellants to be untrue, and it is elementary that this court will uphold the findings of a trial court when it is satisfied substantial evidence exists to support them. 2 Cal. Jur. § 542, p. 918 et seq.; 19 Cal. Jur. § 189, p. 1060 et seq.

[3, 4] Appellants advance the theory that, inasmuch as the note recited that it was given as collateral to a judgment, such recital rendered it nonnegotiable and a mere pledge, which was canceled by the entering of the satisfaction of judgment. The note was not transferred; hence, if such a clause rendered it nonnegotiable, that fact is immaterial. Appellants continued to make payments upon it long after the judgment was satisfied. The satisfaction was entered for their special benefit, with the understanding that respondent would thereafter rely upon the note alone for repayment of the principal obligation. Appellants cannot invoke the aid of respondent and then plead such act to his injury, and it requires but the bare statement of the facts to show that this point is without merit, and unworthy of serious consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

DOYLE et al. v. COULTER. (S. F. 12601.)

Supreme Court of California. July 15, 1927.

Clerks of courts ⚡17—County clerk is not entitled to fee for filing protests against formation of bridge and highway district and setting hearing thereon (Pol. Code, § 4300a, as amended by St. 1921, p. 239; St. 1925, p. 714).

The county clerk is not entitled to a filing fee for filing protests by property owners against formation of bridge and highway district and setting them for hearing as St. 1925, p. 714, requires him to do, under Pol. Code, § 4300a, as amended by St. 1921, p. 239, enumerating the fees of the county clerk.

In Bank.

Application by Frank P. Doyle and others for a writ of mandate to compel W. S. Coulter, as Clerk of the Superior Court in and for the County of Sonoma, to file and to set for hearing protests in proceedings under the Bridge and Highway District Act of 1925 (St. 1925, p. 714). Peremptory writ granted.

Charles H. Brennan, of San Francisco, and George H. Harlan, of San Rafael, for petitioners.

Casper A. Ornbaun, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent county clerk to file and set for hearing protests forwarded to him by the secretary of state as required in proceedings taken under the Bridge and Highway District Act of 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 714), without exacting any filing fee therefor. The statute referred to requires the secretary of state to forward said protests to the respondent, and the respondent is required to file said protests and set the same for hearing in the manner therein prescribed. The acts herein required to be performed are duties enjoined by law on the respondent on behalf of an agency of the state, and under section 4300a of the Political Code, as amended (Stats. 1921, p. 239), we think it is clear that no filing fee is required or may be demanded for the service to be so rendered by the respondent.

Let the peremptory writ issue as prayed.

PEOPLE v. HENNESSEY et al. (Cr. 2975.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 2, 1927.

Rehearing Denied August 1, 1927.

I. Criminal law ⚡1159(2)—Reviewing court cannot disturb verdict for lack of evidence if it is supported by any legal evidence.

Reviewing court must accept findings of jury on disputable questions of fact supported by direct evidence or inferences, or both, and can disturb a verdict only if there is no legal evidence supporting it.

2. Criminal law ⚡1144(13)—Reviewing court must assume in favor of verdict every fact reasonably deducible from evidence.

In determining the sufficiency of the evidence, reviewing court must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence.

3. Larceny ⚡68(1)—Whether defendants charged with grand larceny referred to specified railroad in making alleged false representations by which they secured money stolen held for jury.

In a prosecution for grand larceny, whether defendants, alleged to have obtained money stolen by fraud, referred to a specified railroad in making the alleged fraudulent representations that a certain railroad had possession of contract, held question for jury.

4. Larceny ⚡65—Convictions of grand larceny held sustained by evidence (Pen. Code, § 484).

In prosecution for grand larceny under Pen. Code, § 484, evidence held to sustain convictions of defendants on 30 counts.

5. Larceny ⚡57—Finding that defendants, who obtained money by false representations, had larcenous intent, held sustained by evidence.

In a prosecution for grand larceny, evidence held to sustain the implied finding that defendants, who obtained money by false representations, had larcenous intent.

6. Larceny ⚡63—Evidence that defendants charged with larceny obtained money stolen by false representations made directly, or designedly put in circulation by them, held to sustain finding as to each count that money was obtained fraudulently.

In a prosecution for grand larceny, evidence that the money stolen was obtained by false representations respecting commission contract made directly, or as direct result of false representations respecting commission contract circulated under general plan to obtain money, held to sustain finding that money was obtained by fraud, as to each count; it being unnecessary to show distinct representation under each count.

7. Criminal law ⚡370—Other similar offenses held admissible against defendants charged with larceny of money secured by false representations to show scienter.

In a prosecution for grand larceny against defendants who secured possession of the stolen money by trick or artifice, evidence of other similar offenses held admissible to show scienter.

8. Larceny ⚡14(1)—Where owners surrendered possession of money to defendants, charged with larceny, for specific purpose, and it was not used therefor, title did not pass.

Title to money did not pass to defendants charged with larceny, where the owners surrendered it to the defendants to be used by them to accomplish a specific purpose and it was not so used.

9. Criminal law ⚡400(6)—Testimony of corporation officers to show corporation had no contract with defendants charged with larceny of money on representation of existence of contract held admissible.

In a prosecution for larceny of money secured on representations that a certain contract with a corporation existed, the treasurer and secretary of the corporation might testify that he had examined the records of the corporation to determine whether it had a contract with defendants, in order to show that no contract or reference thereto was in its possession, since keeper of records may give negative testimony under such circumstances.

10. Criminal law ⚡159(5)—Whether consecutive sentences on 30 counts of larceny was excessive punishment held not matter for Supreme Court.

In a prosecution for grand larceny where the defendants were each convicted on 30 counts, whether the imposition of consecutive sentences imposed excessive punishment held not a matter for the Supreme Court.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Thomas M. Hennessey and another were convicted of grand larceny, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck and Leo V. Silverstein, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

SEAWELL, J. By the indictment filed against them, the defendants were jointly charged under 46 counts with the commission of a like number of separate and distinct crimes of grand larceny, aggregating $158,000 in money or its equivalent. Thirteen of said counts were withdrawn from the jury's consideration. As to the remaining counts defendants were convicted under 30 and acquitted under three. The total amount of money set out in the several counts upon which convictions were had is $87,000. The judgment pronounced by the court under each count upon which a conviction was obtained provides that the sentences shall run consecutively. Both defendants have appealed from the judgments of conviction and from the order denying the motion of each for a new trial.

The most forceful argument pressed by appellants is that granting for the purpose of argument, but by no means conceding as an established fact, that the evidence is sufficient to establish the commission of some crime—obtaining money or property by false pretenses, as an example—against the defendants, under no theory or view of the law can it be said that the acts as related by the evidence constitute the crime of larceny as defined by section 484, Penal Code, or as that section has been construed and applied in cases where the possession of the personal property has been obtained in the manner shown by the evidence in the instant case.

The judgments of conviction were affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, upon a very thorough and elaborate discussion of the law and review of the facts. Thereafter a petition presented to this court for a hearing was ordered granted and the cause is before us in compliance with said order.

[1, 2] The record in the case is extensive. We have read the voluminous transcript of testimony, and have given considerable time and care in examination and consideration of the briefs and the several contentions made by counsel as to whether the evidence adduced at the trial is legally sufficient to sustain the convictions of grand larceny obtained under the various counts of the indictment upon the theory that the possession of said property was obtained by resort to fraud, trick, or device, and that possession so acquired, as declared by much respectable authority, is larcenously acquired. The findings of a jury upon disputable questions of fact, if supported by direct evidence or inferences, or both, must be given full faith and credit. It is only where, as a matter of law, there is no legal evidence supporting the charge that a reviewing court may disturb a verdict. The rule, upon an appeal in a criminal case, is that the court must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence and then determine whether or not the guilt of the defendant is deducible therefrom. The question for the court to pass upon is whether there were facts before the jury to justify the inference of guilt. People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 184 P. 389.

The evidence in this case discloses an exhibition of imperturbable credulity on the part of the persons who parted with their money and property that almost passes human understanding. From the record it appears that defendant Thomas M. Hennessey was but slightly known in the city of Los Angeles. Although Harry D. Hibbs, the other defendant, had made the city of Los Angeles his place of residence and headquarters for a number of years, it would seem that he was not widely known in the community. Neither of said defendants was at all prominent in financial or business circles, nor does it appear from the record of the transactions that either was associated or connected with any person or persons known as organizers of industrial or commercial enterprises. Nevertheless, they were able, by resorting to thinly clad deception, to interest a number of persons prominent locally in business and financial affairs in a colossal venture that would have taxed, if not staggered, the nation's best financial geniuses to have financed, organized, and carried forward to completion. The purported plan or enterprise was to consolidate or bring into a merger system a number of the important railroads of the country and their subsidiary lines, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast, and certain other lines which extended into the Southern, Gulf, and Southwestern States. The railroads which were represented by the defendants as being included in the merger scheme were the Missouri Pacific, Western Pacific, Iron Mountain, International & Great Northern, Texas & Pacific, Denver & Rio Grande, St. Louis Southwestern, Rock Island, Cotton Belt Lines, New York Central, Gulf Belt Lines, and other lines not important here, except possibly to illustrate the magnitude of the undertaking and the methods adopted by the defendants in accounting for and lending plausibility to the existence of the contract which defendants fraudulently represented as having been executed and then existing and which, if genuine, would have richly injured to their benefit. The question vital to the maintenance of the prosecution is whether or not the representations of the defendants as to the existence of the commission contract were false. In determining this issue the jury was authorized to resort to a consideration of the whole case as presented by the evidence. The genuineness of the contract is inseparably connected with other features of the case which will later receive the attention of the court. The scheme which furnishes the background of the prosecution, so far as the counts of the indictment disclose, was first put forward in 1922. From that time forward to the month in which the defendants were indicted—March 28, 1925—Hibbs spent most of his time at Los Angeles actively inducing persons to invest in the scheme, while Hennessey, supposedly, was engaged in large eastern commercial centers promoting and bringing to a close the consolidation or merger plan. He frequently visited Los Angeles to stimulate interest in the project and quiet the unrest that occasionally developed by reason of delays in consummating the deal. He frequently reported to the investors that satisfactory progress was being made at the eastern end of the line and explained the difficulties that had caused delay, which were usually characterized as minor matters of detail, and gave full assurances that every obstacle had finally been removed and it was but a matter of a few days when all the investors would receive their money increased at the ratio of 10—and, in some instances, 15 and 20 dollars—for one.

The scheme unfolded by Hibbs and Hennessey to the prospective investors, and doubtless by them communicated to others, was represented to have had its origin several years prior to the year 1922 with a group of capitalists who had subscribed \$50,000,000 to establish a cereal refining plant at San Diego, Cal., which was to be operated in competition with the Corn Products Refinery Company, a middle western concern. As the story was told by them, the cereal refining plant project was abandoned, and railroads which had passed or were likely to pass into the hands of receivers throughout the country attracted the attention of said group of financiers, and they conceived the plan of transferring their subscriptions and activities to purchasing such railroads and consolidating or merging them into groups, a movement that was then receiving the favorable consideration of the President of the United States, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Congress of the United States, and the public press generally by reason of the disturbing conditions that followed the taking over of the railroads during the World War. A system of consolidation or merger that was receiving practically unanimous approval was the one formulated and promulgated by Professor Ripley of Harvard College. The interest of the government in the railroad situation and its disposition to aid in the matter was well known to the public and was used by the defendants to give their project a "goodly appearance." Hibbs gave out the word that the \$50,000,000 that had been subscribed to finance the cereal refining project had been diverted to the purchase of the Western Pacific Railway, with Hennessey and himself as brokers in the transaction. It was represented that the Western Pacific had been purchased, and it, with the acquisition of the Denver & Rio Grande, which was in litigation and was to form a part of the merger group, would give the Missouri Pacific a coast terminal. It was further represented and reported by the defendants to the persons alleged herein as having been defrauded, and who will hereafter be referred to as the "investors," that said group of capitalists had entered into a gentlemen's agreement to raise \$808,000,000 to be used in the purchase of railroads that had become bankrupt as they were offered for sale, and also to acquire control of roads by the purchase of stock and bonds, and that the men who furnished the money on the gentlemen's contract to purchase and who did purchase said railroads were required by the government at the time it took over the railroads to form a corporation that the government might have a definite entity to deal with. Both Hennessey and Hibbs separately and together stated to said investors upon a number of occasions that said group of financiers behind the merger project had caused a contract to be executed by the Western Pacific Corporation of Delaware, the entity conducting the transaction for said capitalists, with Hennessey, by the terms of which the defendants as brokers acquired a large financial interest; that certain big interests had made several unsuccessful attempts to invalidate said coveted contract; that defendants were to receive a commission of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon \$6,000,000,000, that sum being the sales prices of said roads which would yield them in commissions \$210,000,000; that Hibbs, by an agreement with Hennessey, was to receive as his share of said commission approximately \$60,000,000 and Hennessey was to retain the overplus, something like \$150,000,000. In some instances the commissions were represented to be 3 per cent. on \$4,000,000,000 sales prices. This sum expanded as time went on. They also represented to said investors that the contract entitling them to said commission provided that said defendants should bear a certain percentage of the overhead charges and expenses, which included attorney's fees, costs of transferring stocks, and other charges which had been known to reach a figure as great as \$3,000 or \$4,000 per day. It was further represented by the defendants that they had put into the scheme a very large sum of money, but the time had come when they were no longer able to continue to carry the heavy overhead charge, and they were in immediate need of money; that they had resolved to sell to said investors an interest in their brokers' contract, and because of its generous terms they were amply able to pay ten dollars for every one dollar invested by third parties. In a few instances the bonus or return for the use of the money agreed upon was 15 and 20 dollars for 1 dollar. Upon receipt of every sum of money or check given them a receipt was given in return of which the following is an exact copy except as to dates, names, and amounts:

"Los Angeles, California.

"[Date]

"For the sum of ten thousand no/100 dollars ($10,000.00) received I agree to pay you in return at the rate of ten to one (10-1) making a total of one hundred thousand and no/100 dollars ($100,000.00) this sum to be paid you at the time of closing deal known to us as a merger deal. Should said merger deal fail to be consummated and I fail to receive the commission due me from it I am held free and exempt from future liabilities (principal or principal and bonus) by you.

"[Signed—Either Hibbs or Hennessey.]

"Made and signed in duplicate

"[Signature of the person advancing the money.]"

Two or three of the investors delivered in to the possession of the defendants as much as $30,000 in $10,000 installments with the expectation and understanding that they would receive in a short time thereafter $300,000 or more to be paid out of the commissions which the defendants represented themselves entitled to receive under said contract. The Western Pacific Corporation of Delaware was represented to be the holding corporation, and the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation of Delaware the purchasing corporation.

The existence of the contract made with said group of capitalists was discussed by Hibbs and Hennessey both jointly and separately with each investor prior to the making of said investment, and in each case the prospective investor was assured of the existence and validity of said contract, but was impressively reminded that the clause therein contained enjoining secrecy was to be strictly observed for the protection of the enterprise against the manipulation of the bond and stock markets by Wall Street and the "big interests." In fact, prospective investors were informed that under no circumstances would any person be permitted to inspect said contract, and if an inspection of it was made a condition precedent to investing in the project the deal would not receive consideration. Defendants represented on occasions that the Interstate Commerce Commission had approved the merger plan in which they were interested, and that the contract was in the hands of said commission and was held by it in escrow to secure the payment of the commission to Hennessey, who had been appointed a "master" by the Treasury Department in order that the commission upon the consummation of the deal would come into his hands.

[3-5] Appellants make the point that in relating certain alleged false representations made by Hennessey and Hibbs, all but one witness testified that defendants referred to the corporation which held possession of said contract as the Western Pacific Corporation of Delaware," and that the only witness called to disprove this representation was the treasurer and assistant secretary of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation of Delaware, who testified that there was no record in that corporation's possession of any such contract, and that neither of the defendants or the persons claimed to have been associated with them had ever had any transactions with said corporation during the eight or nine years that he had been employed by said corporation, and that none of said persons were known to him or to the corporation officers so far as he knew. One witness, however, gave the name of the corporation fully and correctly. While the fact is as stated by counsel for appellants with reference to the name of the corporation used in making the said false representations, a doubt was manifested by some of said witnesses as to whether the defendants stated the name of the corporation to be the Western Pacific Corporation of Delaware or the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation of Delaware. The variation was but slight. However this may be, it is very convincing from the evidence, without resorting to the testimony of said one witness who stated that the name of said holding corporation was represented by the defendants to be the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation of Delaware, that the corporation which defendants had in mind and intended to identify, if indeed they did not actually do so, was the corporation last above named. The relation of the Western Pacific Corporation of California with the corporation last named, and in fact the entire proposed scheme of consolidation as explained in detail by the defendants, together with the concurrence of the same periods of time as to the identical subject-matter, show beyond a reasonable doubt that the corporation intended to be identified was the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation of Delaware. The record shows occasional inadvertent omission of a part of the corporate name of said corporation when referred to by certain witnesses. The fact was clearly one for the jury's determination under all the evidence in the case. As a part of the conspiracy to obtain large sums of money by fraudulent methods, the defendants, with a purpose of inspiring confidence in their project, represented that Fred Grant, a lawyer and nephew of General U. S. Grant, former President of the United States, was the attorney in charge of all legal matters, and he was represented as having appeared as their representative upon several occasions before the Interstate Commerce Commission and having represented them at Washington in matters of legislation and in large eastern banking and financial matters. The investors were informed of his arrivals in and departures from Los Angeles. Neither Hibbs nor any of the investors ever saw him. Mrs. Marian Grant Macy, a granddaughter of former President U. S. Grant, for some time past a resident of San Diego, had never heard of such a person as described by the defendants. Franklin F. Grant, a San Diego attorney, who has been in the practice of the law at San Diego for many years, had never heard of such a person. He never appeared in any proceeding or in any capacity before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The only person that claimed to have known Fred Grant was Hennessey. Hibbs, who had represented to the investors during the period covered by the conspiracy that he had met Grant, in a statement made by him after his arrest, stated that he had never seen Grant and all the information he had concerning Grant came from Hennessey. The same conditions existed as to the identity of the members of the "executive board," Coleman, Hickelman, Rohrer, Callahan, and others. Not one of the investors had met any one of said executive heads, who were represented to be holding frequent executive sessions in Los Angeles. Hennessey, in a statement made by him after his arrest, was not able to give the address or whereabouts of Grant or any member of his "executive board." In fact, he did not know the Christian names of said persons. Hibbs, who affected an acquaintance with the members of said board during the period of the conspiracy, admitted that he had never seen or met any member of the "executive board."

Hennessey, in talks made at "get together" and "jollification" banquets and meetings, represented himself to be connected by blood with well-known wealthy New York families and an heir to large eastern estates from two lines of collateral kindred. He stated that he was a nephew of the late George B. McClellan, former mayor of New York City. At one of the investors' meetings, held for the purpose of reviving confidence, he stated that rather than have the investors lose one dollar he would pay them every dollar that they had put into the enterprise out of his private fortune. Hibbs also gave out reports as to the princely possessions of Hennessey. Upon one occasion two or three of the investors with their families accompanied Hennessey and Hibbs to New York City to witness the closing of the deal. They remained in New York City for two months awaiting the final adjustment of affairs. The "executive board" was represented to be in daily sessions at the Hotel McAlpine. The investors and Hibbs daily accompanied Hennessey to said hotel. Hennessey was supposed to then go into session with the board, whereupon Hibbs and the investors would go their way. Hennessey later reported to them the progress that had been made. No investor saw or met a member of the board. After the lapse of two months, Hennessey and Hibbs said matters had arisen that made it necessary for all interested to leave at once for Los Angeles. Accordingly, the meeting place was transferred to Los Angeles. The "executive board," it was represented by Hennessey and Hibbs, would follow on a special train or a second division of the same train carrying Hennessey, Hibbs, and the investors. It was represented that injunction suits in some of the states through which the consolidated lines passed and some matters of inside detail were delaying the closing of the project, but all difficulties were certainly to be settled in a few days. Shortly after the arrival of the party in Los Angeles, Hennessey and Hibbs announced the arrival of the executive board and Attorney Grant. No investor met or had any communication with any member of the board or with Grant. Reports of the proceedings were generally communicated by Hennessey to Hibbs and by the latter to the investors. On December 20, 1924, a meeting of the investors was called and the news was broken to them that the deal had been closed and a check made out to Hennessey for $1,950,000,000 had been deposited by Grant and Hennessey with the Los Angeles branch of the Federal Reserve Bank. Hibbs remarked that this was the largest "cash transaction in the history of railroad finance." The mental exhilaration produced by this announcement was somewhat reduced by another announcement which followed, to the effect that a court injunction had stopped payment on said check.

Of course, the representations as to the deposit of said check or any check were shown by the evidence to be monstrously false. The defendants continued their activities for several months longer. We have not recited or referred to all acts resorted to by the defendants in the furtherance of their conspiracy to obtain money and property by fraudulent methods. To do so would extend a discussion of the machinations employed by them to an unreasonable length. Upon a review of the transactions as disclosed by the record, the wonder is that persons who possess ordinary care for the affairs of life could have been so grossly deceived. Neither defendant testified in the trial of the case, but both made statements after arrest. Hibbs admitted that he collected as his part in the transaction $300,000, in Los Angeles. Hennessey stated that he personally collected $20,000 in Los Angeles and $30,000 in an eastern city. Hennessey, in his statement, claimed to have been an heir to an estate to the extent of $20,000,000 and in another to the extent of $3,000,000. He claimed that his income amounted to $20,000 per month. Neither seems to have had any money on deposit with the banks in which they presumably dealt in Los Angeles. Much of the money collected or received by Hibbs was paid to Hennessey. Hennessey claims that he forwarded all that came into his hands to Grant, who used most of it in paying "lobbyists" to put the scheme over.

The evidence overwhelmingly establishes the fraudulent purposes of the defendants. At the times the defendants were operating, the policy of railroad consolidation was in high public favor and was receiving the serious consideration of the national government. Consolidations such as defendants represented themselves to be interested in were brought about. But they were consolidations with which neither of the defendants had the slightest thing to do. The question is whether the defendants or either of them had a part in any consolidation or merger plan. Every representation they made as to the existence of a material fact capable of being established by proof was shown to be false. The whole plan or scheme was built upon deceit and falsehood. Fictitious personages, absurd and inherently improbable statements with reference to fabulous sums of money which were represented as playing a part in the transaction, and recourse made to every form of extravagant exaggeration which might tend to operate upon the minds of those sought to be influenced to the advantage of the defendants, form the woof and warp of the defendants' representations. This is not a case built up by inference upon inference, but of facts which are sufficient in law, as in the affairs of human transactions, to direct the understanding and support conclusions.

The persons who were held out to the investors as constituting the executive board of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation of Delaware were not members thereof in point of fact and were unknown to that corporation, and no such contract as the defendants represented themselves to be interested in was ever made with it or held in its possession. Neither Hennessey, Hibbs, Grant, nor any member of the "executive board," or any person acting for it or any of them, ever had any transaction whatsoever with said corporation. Neither did the Interstate Commerce Commission ever have custody or knowledge of said contract, or any acquaintance with or knowledge of Hennessey, Hibbs, Grant, or said "executive board." This being so, in the absence of evidence tending to establish a contrary conclusion, the inference is irresistible that the contract never existed. Besides, there is much other evidence in the case that tends to destroy all claim as to the existence of said contract. The whole subject-matter was fictitious. The representations as to the existence of the contract caused the investors to part with their money. Without those representations they would not have delivered their money into the possession of the defendants. This being so, the argument that the investors were willing to win or lose with the defendants is without force. The investors may have been willing to chance their money upon the success or failure of the enterprise, but, of course, it was upon the understanding that there was something to support the possibility of gain. The thing that was represented as furnishing the basis of the transaction did not in fact exist.

While the indictment in this case may well have alleged that the acts charged therein constituted obtaining money or property by false pretenses, we are not prepared to say that they do not constitute grand larceny. Unquestionably, the evidence is sufficient, and we must assume the jury found that the defendants entered into an agreement to obtain the possession of money and property by resorting to fraudulent methods which bear the appearance of trick or device. There can be but little doubt that the investors parted with the possession of their money influenced by the representations that it would be used by the defendants in promoting the enterprise to a conclusion in good faith. The money unlawfully obtained could not have been used for the purpose for which it was supposedly acquired, and as the investors believed it would be used for the reason that there was nothing upon which it could have been expended. There being no contract in existence, a fact well known to the defendants, the moneys that came into their possession were not expended in carrying forward the enterprise which the investors intended it should aid. We are satisfied that the jury was warranted in finding a preconceived design on the part of the defendants to appropriate said moneys to their own use in furtherance of a plan and system at the time they obtained possession thereof, accomplished by means of trick and device, and therefore their acts may be classed with that species of crimes denominated larceny. People v. Delbos, 146 Cal. 734, 81 P. 131; People v. Shwartz, 43 Cal. App. 696, 185 P. 686; People v. Edwards, 72 Cal. App. 102, 236 P. 944; 17 R. C. L. 13 and 14.

[6] Where a false representation is made under a general plan and purpose to obtain property, it is not necessary to show that a distinct representation was made in each following act if it appears or can fairly be inferred that the first false representation was still operating upon and influencing the mind of the person imposed upon. It is only in those cases where it may be fairly presumed that the first false representation has ceased to operate upon the mind of the person thus imposed upon, or where there is some evidence tending to show that the first false representation had been removed, that full proof of the representation must again be made. In the instant case there is no doubt that under each count the possession of the money furnished by the person alleged to have been defrauded was obtained by the representation of the defendants, made either directly by them or as a direct result of the false representations which they designedly caused to be put into circulation, as to the existence of the commission contract. Other false representations shown by the evidence were made as an aid to the accomplishment of the main purpose.

[7, 8] That other offenses similar to the one charged in the indictment are provable against a defendant to show scienter in cases where the criminal intent is the gravamen of the charge, as in cases of fraud, is too firmly established by the decisions of this state to require a citation of cases. In the instant case we must assume that the possession of money was obtained with a criminal intent by means of trick and device. The owners of the property surrendered possession of their money with the understanding that it was to be used in the accomplishment of a definite object by the defendants. It was not so used. In such cases the title does not pass. The implied finding as to the intent of the defendants cannot be disturbed by this court.

[9] We think the court did not err in permitting the witness Matthews, treasurer and assistant secretary of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, to testify that he had made an examination of that corporation's records for the purposes of determining whether or not it had made or had in its possession a contract with the defendants or either of them. The purpose was to show that no such contract or reference thereto was to be found in its possession or was disclosed by its records. It is permissible for the keeper of records under such circumstances to give what is termed "negative testimony."

We find no error in the court's ruling with respect to this witness' testimony that would justify a reversal of this case.

It is conceded by appellants that if the acts committed by defendants and described by the evidence are sufficient to constitute larceny, there can be no legal objection to certain instructions given by the court and objected to by the defendants. Our holding that said acts do support the judgment disposes of the objections made to said instructions.

[10] The imposition of consecutive sentences pieces out a long term of imprisonment to which the defendants are sentenced. Whether the terms of imprisonment are disproportionate to the crimes committed is a matter that may properly be considered by another branch of our state government.

The judgments and orders appealed from are affirmed.

SMITH v. LOMBARD et al. (L. A. 8357.)

Rehearing Denied July 28, 1927.

1. Husband and wife —Presumption of undue influence arises in transaction between wife and husband gaining advantage therefrom, which is rebuttable by proof of full disclosure to wife (Civ. Code, § 2235).

Under Civ. Code, § 2235, transaction between husband and wife, whereby husband gains an advantage, raises presumption of undue influence, which may be overcome by proof of full and fair disclosure of all that wife should know for her benefit concerning nature and effect of transaction.

2. Husband and wife —Proof of independent advice to wife is not indispensable in rebutting presumption of undue influence in transaction by wife benefiting husband.

Finding contrary to presumption of undue influence in transaction by wife, benefiting husband, can be supported by proof other than that of independent advice to wife, which is but one circumstance in determining question of undue influence.

3. Deeds ⚡196(3)—Presumption of undue influence in transaction by wife, benefiting husband, held sufficiently overcome, though only advice to wife was by attorney acting for both parties.

Conclusion that wife acted independently, with full knowledge of effect of deed to her property conveyed through trustee to herself and husband jointly, held sufficient to overcome presumption of undue influence, notwithstanding lack of advice to wife other than that given by attorney employed by her, and acting for both husband and wife.

4. Appeal and error ⚡1010(1) — Conclusion supported by evidence that wife intended to create joint tenancy with her husband in her property cannot be disturbed on appeal.

Conclusion that it was intention of wife to part with title to her property in order to create joint tenancy therein with her husband, supported by evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

5. Joint tenancy ⚡4—Joint tenant, transferring interest to another, severs tenancy.

Transfer of interest by joint tenant to another severed joint tenancy.

6. Husband and wife ⚡48(2)—Wife, transferring interest to trustee to convey property to herself and husband jointly, cannot revoke transfer without consent of husband (Civ. Code, § 2280).

Transfer by wife of interest in joint tenancy to trustee, who was to reconvey property to husband and wife jointly, could not, in absence of fraud, mistake, or undue influence, have been revoked by wife without consent of husband, in view of Civ. Code, § 2280.

7. Husband and wife ⚡48(2)—Rights of husband as joint beneficiary with wife of transfer by wife of her property to trustee are not affected by refusal of wife to accept conveyance from trustee or failure of trustee to make delivery.

Where wife transferred property to trustee, to be reconveyed to herself and husband jointly, in absence of attack on validity of transfer, wife's refusal to accept delivery from trustee, or failure of trustee to make delivery, would not deprive husband of rights as beneficiary or remedy in equity for their enforcement.

8. Deeds ⚡57—Delivery of deed to one joint owner is delivery to both.

Delivery of deed to one of two persons who in equity are joint owners is delivery to both.

9. Deeds ⚡194(1)—Assent of wife to delivery to her attorney of deed conveying her property to trustee to be reconveyed to herself and husband will be presumed.

Where wife transferred property to trustee, to be reconveyed to herself and husband jointly, and trustee acted for both beneficiaries, assent of wife to delivery of deed to attorney will be presumed.

10. Appeal and error ⚡1052(4)—Testimony as to loss of memorandum held to cure error in admitting prior testimony of its contents.

Error in admitting testimony of contents of memorandum, without showing its loss, held cured by subsequent testimony sufficiently showing loss of memorandum.

11. New trial ⚡99—New trial, based on newly discovered testimony which was incompetent and cumulative, held properly refused.

New trial for newly discovered evidence on affidavits showing that witness was without knowledge of transaction in question other than related to her several weeks after event, and otherwise containing cumulative testimony, held properly refused.

12. Trusts ⚡42—Evidence that defendant's wife was made joint tenant with parents under agreement to give parents life estate raised trust and was competent in action to quiet title.

In action to quiet title, evidence showing that property claimed by defendant through his wife was conveyed to wife as joint tenant with parents under agreement to allow parents to retain exclusive use and possession of property during their lifetimes was competent and tended to prove trust in favor of parents, and, on their death, in favor of defendant's wife, and was erroneously excluded.

13. Quieting title ⚡34(5)—Allegation that defendant's wife was made joint tenant with parents of property in dispute under agreement to give parents life estate raised confidential relationship.

In action to quiet title, allegation that property claimed by defendant through his wife was conveyed to wife as joint tenant with parents under agreement to allow parents to retain exclusive use and possession of property during their lifetimes raised confidential relationship between parties and showed that only consideration for transfer to wife was such agreement.

14. Trusts ⚡35(1)—Parol agreement by grantee in confidential relationship with grantor to hold property for benefit of third person raises trust by operation of law for grantee or third person.

Where confidential relationship exists between two parties, and one of them executes conveyance of realty to other on parol promise of such other that he will hold it for benefit of third person in whom grantor is interested, there being no other consideration for conveyance, trust arises by operation of law in favor of grantor or third person for whom property is held.

15. Trusts ⚡35(1)—Breach by grantee in confidential relation with grantor of parol promise to hold property for benefit of third person raises trust, though promise is performed for time.

Where grantee standing in confidential relationship with grantor orally promises to hold property for benefit of third person, there being no other consideration, violation of parol promise constitutes fraud on which trust arises for grantor or third person, and, if parol agreement is of continuing nature, performance thereof for time does not prevent trust from arising when it is broken and repudiated.

16. Appeal and error 1178(6) — Case in which no error appeared, except for ruling on special defense, should be remanded for findings on such defense alone.

Where no prejudicial error appeared in rulings of trial court, other than that on special defense, case should be remanded for findings on such defense, leaving other findings to remain as part of record.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by D. B. Smith, as executor of the will of Mary E. Scott, deceased, substituted as plaintiff in the place and stead of said Mary E. Scott, against Charles E. Lombard and another, in which the defendant Lombard filed a cross-complaint, and in which A. C. Maple intervened against plaintiff and defendants. Judgment for the defendant Lombard, and plaintiff and intervener appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part, with directions.

Frank G. Swain, of Whittier, Henry G. Bodkin, Wm. H. Neblett, and McAdoo, Neblett & O'Connor, all of Los Angeles, and W. A. Keleher, of Albuquerque, N. M., for appellant Smith.

Flint & MacKay and Robert B. Jackson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant Maple.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. This appeal was originally heard by the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, First Division, and thereafter a petition for a hearing in this court was made by appellant. Upon the consideration of this petition, we were not satisfied with that portion of the opinion dealing with the refusal of the trial court to permit appellant to prove the allegations of the second separate defense of the second amended answer of appellant Mary E. Scott to the cross-complaint of Charles E. Lombard, and, for that reason, we granted said petition. No objection was then entertained to that portion of said decision, as prepared by Mr. Justice Cashin, dealing with the other questions considered therein. We are still of the opinion that such portion of the decision contained a correct exposition of the law, and we approve and adopt the same, which is as follows:

"An action to quiet title to certain real estate and personal property was brought by Mary E. Scott against Charles E. Lombard, the surviving husband of Dolle Scott Lombard, deceased, and M. E. Dodson, in which A. C. Maple, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of the deceased, intervened. Mary E. Scott, following the entry of judgment in the action, died and D. B. Smith, as executor of her last will and testament, was substituted as a party thereto. The original plaintiff was the wife of Rial Scott, who died prior to the events which led to the instant action, and Dolle Scott Lombard was their daughter. At the commencement of the trial the parties stipulated as follows: 'That on or about May 27, 1915, the real estate described in the complaint was owned by Rial Scott, who was the husband of plaintiff Mary E. Scott and the father of Dolle Scott Lombard; that on or about the 27th day of May, 1915, Rial Scott and Mary E. Scott, his wife, conveyed this real estate to A. C. Maple, who in turn reconveyed it on or about the same date to Rial Scott, Mary E. Scott, and to Dolle Scott, she being then unmarried, as joint tenants with right of survivorship; that Rial Scott, on or about April 8, 1921, died, whereupon Mary E. Scott and Dolle Scott (hereinafter called Dolle Scott Lombard) obtained by right of survivorship the entire interest in the said real estate, and that they held the record title to said property as joint tenants with right of survivorship on December 29, 1922; that Dolle Scott is the same person as Dolle Scott Lombard, and that she died on March 9, 1923; that the record title to all of the personal property described in the complaint herein was on the 29th day of December, 1922, in the names of Mary E. Scott and Dolle Scott Lombard as joint tenants; that the Edison stock described in the complaint was first issued in the name of Rial Scott and Mary E. Scott as joint tenants with right of survivorship, and that after the death of Rial Scott on or about the 23d day of April, 1921, it was transferred by Mary E. Scott, who was then the sole owner thereof by right of her survivorship of Rial Scott, to herself and Dolle Scott Lombard as joint tenants with rights of survivorship.'

"In addition to the answers of defendants Dodson and Lombard the latter filed a cross-complaint alleging title in himself to an undivided one-half interest in the real property and an interest to the same extent in the personal property by virtue of certain conveyances executed prior to the death of his wife. To this pleading the plaintiff answered, denying the execution of the alleged conveyances by Dolle Scott Lombard, and alleging in substance that the latter was mentally incompetent, and that her signatures thereto were obtained by the exercise of undue influence by defendant Lombard.

"In addition to the foregoing the answer to the cross-complaint as a separate defense alleged that at the time of the transaction mentioned in the stipulation by which the Scotts and their daughter became joint tenants in the real property the latter, in consideration of the transfer, agreed that during the lives of her parents they or either of them should remain in possession, collect and expend the income therefrom, and that the daughter should not have an interest therein or the right to the possession thereof unless she survived both her parents; that Mary E. Scott, following the death of her husband, continued in the possession and control of the property, collecting and expending the income; and that defendant Lombard at all times had notice and knowledge of the agreement and the acts of plaintiff thereunder. The plaintiff in intervention alleged title in the estate of Dolle Scott Lombard to an undivided interest in the property described in the original complaint, and sought to quiet the title thereto as against the other parties to the action.

"The court found that Dolle Scott Lombard transferred to defendant Dodson her interest in the real and personal property mentioned and that the latter in turn conveyed this interest of Dolle Scott Lombard and defendant Lombard, her husband, as joint tenants with right of survivorship, and, further, that Dolle Scott Lombard, at the time of her execution of the transfers mentioned, was competent; that the transfers were freely and voluntarily made and were not induced by fraud or undue influence.

"Judgment was entered on the findings adjudging defendant Lombard to be the owner of an undivided one-half interest in the property in common with the original plaintiff, and entitled to an accounting from the latter for one-half of the income received therefrom since the death of Dolle Scott Lombard, and that the intervenor take nothing by his complaint.

"Following the denial of motions for a new trial made by them, appeals from the judgment were taken by Mary E. Scott and the intervenor and are presented on the judgment roll with a bill of exceptions. The grounds for reversal urged are the rulings of the court in admitting and rejecting offered testimony, insufficiency of the evidence to sustain certain findings and the denial of the motion for a new trial.

"It is conceded by appellants that the evidence as to the competency of Mrs. Lombard to execute the instruments in question being conflicting, the findings on that issue cannot be disturbed; but it is urged that, the respondent having gained an advantage by their execution, it was incumbent upon him, in order to overcome the presumption of undue influence and as a condition precedent to their admission in evidence, to show that his wife had independent advice, and that in the absence of such advice the finding against the allegations of undue influence cannot be sustained, citing in support of their contention the following cases: Ross v. Conway, 92 Cal. 632, 28 P. 785; Cox v. Schnerr, 172 Cal. 371, 156 P. 509; Piercy v. Piercy, 18 Cal. App. 751, 124 P. 561; Hilton v. Hilton, 54 Cal. App. 142, 201 P. 337.

[1] "It is the rule that in transactions between husband and wife whereby the former gains an advantage a presumption of undue influence arises (Civ. Code, § 2235), but the presumption is disputable and may be overcome by proof of a full and fair disclosure of all that the wife should know for her benefit and protection concerning the nature and effect of the transaction (Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 204 P. 583).

"The ultimate fact to be determined in this class of cases is whether the act was induced by such influence, the fact being taken for granted prima facie where it appears that the husband gained an advantage by means of the transaction.

"In the cases relied upon by appellants the findings were fully sustained by evidence other than that of a lack of independent advice, the latter fact being but one of the circumstances leading to the conclusion that the acts in question were induced by undue influence.

[2] "Notwithstanding the expressions in the opinions cited which support the contention that proof of independent advice is indispensable it is clear that it was not the intention to adopt a rule which, in cases where such proof is lacking, would render immaterial all other facts however cogent their tendency to negative the presumption, or to decide that a finding contrary to the presumption cannot be supported by proof other than that of independent advice. Broadus v. James, 13 Cal. App. 464, 110 P. 158.

[3] "While it appears that the attorney who prepared the conveyances had been consulted by respondent in previous transactions, the court found that in the instant case he was acting for both, and that he was employed at the instance and request of Mrs. Lombard; that the latter was fully advised as to the nature of the transaction and fully understood the purpose and legal effect of the instruments here in question; that their execution was the result of an idea conceived by her and not the result of any suggestion or act on the part of her husband or the attorney; and, further, that she freely and voluntarily executed and delivered the conveyances.

"The conclusions of the trial court were supported by evidence which, notwithstanding the lack of advice other than that given by the attorney mentioned, was in our opinion sufficient to overcome the presumption.

[4] "It is further contended that the evidence fails to support the finding that the conveyances were executed by Mrs. Lombard with the intention that the title should pass, and that the transaction was in effect an attempt to make a testamentary disposition of her interest in the property.

"While inferences supporting this conclusion might have been drawn from the evidence, the conclusion of the court that it was her intention to part with the title to the property in order to carry out her plan to create a joint tenancy therein with her husband finds support from the evidence, and cannot be disturbed. Waer v. Waer, 189 Cal. 178, 207 P. 891.

"Defendant Dodson, following the execution of the conveyances by Mrs. Lombard, signed and acknowledged deeds in terms conveying the same property to the latter and to her husband as joint tenants with the right of survivorship. These instruments were delivered to the attorney above mentioned for the use of the grantees, and remained in his possession until March 7, 1923, on which date these deeds affecting the real property were recorded.

[5-9] "Appellants contend that the latter's assent to a delivery to the attorney was not shown and that the act of Dodson was consequently ineffectual to create a joint tenancy as between Mrs. Lombard and respondent.

"The object of Mrs. Lombard was to sever the original joint tenancy, which was accomplished by the transfer of her interest to Dodson (Green v. Skinner, 185 Cal. 435, 197 P. 60), and to create therein a joint tenancy between herself and respondent by means of transfers from Dodson, the latter assuming the duty as trustee to execute the necessary conveyances. The transfers to Dodson could not, in the absence of fraud, mistake, or undue influence, have been revoked by Mrs. Lombard without the consent of respondent. Civ. Code, § 2280. In the absence of grounds for an attack upon the validity of these transfers her refusal to accept delivery of the conveyances from the trustee, or the failure of the latter to make such delivery, would not deprive respondent of his rights as a beneficiary, or of his remedy in equity for their enforcement. It is not contended that respondent failed to assent to the delivery to the attorney, but that the assent of Mrs. Lombard was not shown. As held in Eshleman v. Henrietta Vineyard Co., 102 Cal. 199, 36 P. 579, the delivery of a deed to one of two persons who in equity are joint owners is a delivery to both, and, while in the instant case the express assent of Mrs. Lombard does not appear, the acts of the trustees were designed to carry out the agreement with her and were for the benefit of both beneficiaries, to which her assent, if necessary, in view of the facts, will be presumed. 18 C. J., 'Deeds,' § 494, p. 416; De Levillain v. Evans, 39 Cal. 120; Neely v. Buster, 50 Cal. App. 695, 700, 195 P. 736.

[11] "Appellants' motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was properly denied; it being shown by the affidavit of the witness upon whose testimony they relied that she was without knowledge of any of the facts of the transaction in question other than as related to her by Mrs. Lombard several weeks after the event, and that her testimony as to other facts within her personal knowledge would have been cumulative."

[12, 13] Appellant offered to prove, by the testimony of Mary E. Scott and A. C. Maple, the facts alleged in the second separate defense of the second amended answer of Mary E. Scott to the cross-complaint of Charles E. Lombard. The allegations of this pleading, as above referred to, were to the effect that at the time of the conveyance of said real and personal property to Dolle Scott Lombard she agreed, in consideration of such transfer, that, during the lives of her parents, they, or either of them, would collect and expend the income therefrom, and that she, the said Dolle Scott Lombard, should not have any interest in said income, or any right to the possession of, or any interest in, either said real or personal property unless she survived both her parents. An objection to this offered testimony, on the ground of its incompetency, was sustained. This action of the court was undoubtedly erroneous. The proffered evidence was competent and tended to prove a trust as to said real and personal property in favor of Rial Scott and Mary E. Scott, and, upon the death of Rial Scott, in favor of Mary E. Scott alone. The said defense sufficiently alleged facts which, if proven, would show a confidential relation between the parties (Robins v. Hope, 57 Cal. 493, 497; Hemenway v. Abbott, 8 Cal. App. 450, 463, 97 P. 190; Bacon v. Soule, 19 Cal. App. 428, 126 P. 384), and the only consideration for the transfer to Dolle Scott Lombard was the agreement on her part that her parents should retain, during their lifetime, the exclusive possession and use of said real and personal property, and that said Dolle Scott Lombard should only succeed to the possession, use, and ownership of said real and personal property in case she survived both her parents.

[14, 15] "It has been established by a number of decisions in this state, that where confidential relations exist between two parties and one of them executes a conveyance of real estate to the other, upon a parol promise by the other that he will hold it for the benefit of * * * some third person in whom the grantor is interested, there being no other consideration for the conveyance, a trust arises by operation of law in favor of the grantor, or in favor of the third person, for whom the property is to be held. It is the violation of the parol promise which constitutes the fraud upon which the trust arises. If made in good faith, and if it is of a continuing nature, the performance of it for a time does not prevent a trust from arising when it is broken and repudiated." Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 587, 108 P. 506, 508. This principle is restated and approved in a long line of well-considered decisions of this court, which undoubtedly establish the law in this regard in this state. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 P. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 P. 186; Nordholt v. Nordholt, 87 Cal. 552, 553, 26 P. 599, 22 Am. St. Rep. 268; Hays v. Gloster, 88 Cal. 560, 562, 26 P. 367; Becker v. Schwerdtle, 141 Cal. 386, 74 P. 1029; Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 P. 430; *Taylor v. In the Tench Cases, cited above, a brother conveyed real and personal property to his sister for the purpose of their joint support during their lives, but with the understanding that the sister would take title to the property only in case she survived him. Before her death the sister conveyed said property, without consideration, to the defendant in said actions, she taking said property with notice of the agreement between the brother and sister. Thereafter the sister died before the brother, and the latter conveyed said property to his wife. After his death the wife instituted the two actions against the grantee of the sister, one to recover the real property and the other the personal property. The conveyances of the real and personal property were in writing and purported by their terms to convey the absolute title to the real and personal property to the sister. The agreement between the brother and sister that the latter should hold the property for the joint support of herself and brother, and that no title to said property would vest in her unless she survived her brother, was entirely oral. The District Court of Appeal held that a constructive trust was created in favor of the brother and against the sister; that the grantee of the sister, having acquired the property without consideration and with notice of said agreement, took the same subject to said trust; and that parol evidence was admissible to prove the existence of said trust. It accordingly affirmed the judgment of the trial court directing conveyances of said real and personal property to be executed by the grantee of the sister in favor of the grantee of the brother. This court denied petitions for hearing herein in each of said cases. Under the rule enunciated in these decisions, we think there is no question as to the admissibility of the proffered evidence.

There is nothing in the stipulation of the parties, entered into at the commencement of the trial of said action, that would in any way affect the admissibility of this evidence. This stipulation refers to certain conveyances of the real and personal property during the time it was owned by the Scotts and to the condition of the record title to said property during the time of their ownership. It contains no stipulation as to the true ownership of any of said property, except that Rial Scott was the owner of the whole of said real and personal property at the time of the first conveyance thereof, and that after his death Mary E. Scott was the sole owner of certain of the personal property.

[16] No prejudicial error in the rulings of the court other than that just considered being disclosed by the record, the case is one wherein it is proper that the trial court should find on the issues presented by the special defense, leaving the other findings to remain as part of the record. Coleman v. Coleman, 23 Cal. App. 423, 138 P. 362; Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 118, 125, 90 P. 521.

The judgment as to appellant A. C. Maple, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Dolle Scott Lombard, deceased, is therefore affirmed, and as to the appellant D. B. Smith, as executor of the last will and testament of Mary E. Scott, deceased, is reversed, with directions to the trial court to hear and determine the issues presented by the special defense mentioned, and, upon the findings thereon and the remaining findings now a part of the record, to render and enter the appropriate judgment.

STRONG v. HANCOCK et al. (L. A. 8555.)

Supreme Court of California. July 2, 1927.

1. Covenants $\S$ 72—Deeds to lots in tract restricted to residential uses, permitting construction of electric railway, did not abrogate restrictions as to other lots.

Deeds to certain portions of tract, remainder of which was restricted to residential uses, which permitted such portions of tract to be used for electric railway, held not to have effect of abrogating restrictions as to other lots in tract, in absence of showing that construction and operation of railway or its approaches thereto would render the other lots less desirable or available for restricted residential uses.

2. Evidence $\S$ 25(2)—It is common knowledge that boulevards for use of vehicles usually traverse suburban areas devoted to residential purposes.

It is common knowledge that boulevards, avenues, and broad highways best suited for use of vehicles usually traverse suburban areas devoted to and favored for residential purposes.

3. Covenants $\S$ 49—Owner of lot restricted as to use indefinitely could not complain that restrictions on other lots in tract ran only until 1955, until that time arrived.

Where restriction as to use in conveyance to plaintiff's predecessor had no limitation as to time, plaintiff could not complain that deeds to certain lots in same tract contained similar restrictions which ran only until 1955, until that time arrived, when for first time whatever injurious difference there might be from operation of restrictions will arise.

4. Covenants $\S$ 69(2)—Uniform restrictions in deeds to lots are in nature of easements for benefit of each parcel in tract and run with land.

Where deeds to all lots in tract contain uniform restrictions, covenants, and conditions subsequent restricting use to residential purposes, such covenants, restrictions, and conditions subsequent are in nature of easements or servitudes for benefit of each and every other parcel of land in such tract and run with the land.

5. Covenants $\S$ 108(1)—Changed conditions in property outside tract restricted to residential uses did not make it inequitable to enforce restrictive covenants.

Changed conditions existing in and about property outside of tract in which lots were restricted to residential uses held not to make it inequitable to enforce restrictions, conditions, reservations, and covenants, or any of them.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 949—Discretion exercised in granting equitable relief should not be disturbed on appeal, in absence of clear abuse.

Discretion exercised by trial court in granting equitable relief by enforcing restrictions, conditions, reservations, and covenants regarding use of property should not be disturbed, except in case of clear abuse.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 1051(1)—Excluding evidence of zoning ordinance held not reversible error in suit to enjoin enforcement of restrictive covenants, where conditions in neighborhood were shown by abundance of direct evidence.

In action to quiet title as against certain restrictions as to use of property, excluding evidence of zoning ordinance affecting property, if error, did not require reversal, where actual conditions and changes in conditions which had taken place in and in neighborhood of area covered by restrictions were shown by abundance of direct evidence.

PER CURIAM. The following opinion, prepared by Mr. Justice RICHARDS, is hereby adopted as the opinion of the court:

This action was originally instituted by W.

A. Strong, the owner of a certain lot in a certain tract of land known as "Shatto place," in the city of Los Angeles, against one Clara E. Shatto, the original owner of the entire tract and grantor of said specific lot to a predecessor of said plaintiff, the object of said action being that of having the title of said plaintiff to said lot quieted as against certain restrictions and conditions subsequent contained in said deed to the plaintiff's said predecessor. The plaintiff in his first amended complaint set forth specifically the restrictions contained in said deed, which were, in brief, that the premises conveyed were to be used for residence purposes only, and that no part thereof was to be used for business purposes or for any structure whatever other than one first-class private residence of at least two stories in height, with the customary outbuildings, such residence to cost and be fairly worth not less than $10,000, and to occupy a certain place upon the premises with reference to the front line thereof; that no oil well should ever be drilled upon the property nor any derrick, machinery, or appliances for such drilling ever be erected thereon. Certain other restrictions, not necessary to be herein related, were embraced in said deed. The conditions subsequent contained therein were to the effect that a breach of the conditions and restrictions of said deed should work a forfeiture of said grant and cause said premises to revert to the grantor, her heirs, successors, and assigns. The plaintiff proceeded to set forth that the original grantee of said deed subjected said premises to a trust deed to secure a certain indebtedness and that having defaulted in the payment of which said premises were sold under the terms of said trust deed and were purchased by the plaintiff at such trustee's sale; and that said plaintiff thereby became the owner in fee simple of the premises free and clear of the restrictions subsequent contained in said original conveyance, notwithstanding which the said defendant asserts and claims that said restrictions and conditions are still in full force and effect and threatens that in case the plaintiff shall fail to comply with the same or shall cause or permit any breach thereof she will declare a forfeiture of the said plaintiff's title to said premises and will remove the plaintiff therefrom; that said claim constitutes a cloud upon the plaintiff's title, which he prays the court to remove by its judgment declaring that said claims are void, and decreeing that the said defendant be enjoined from further asserting the same. The defendant in her answer to said amended complaint denied those averments thereof that her aforesaid claims were void or that she had no interest in said premises arising out of the provisions of her said deed to the plaintiff's predecessor; and for a further defense and as a cross-complaint she reasserted the making of said deed to plaintiff's predecessor and the covenants, restrictions, and conditions therein contained. She further alleged that she had from time to time made similar conveyances to diverse persons of other lots in said Shatto Place tract containing provisions similar to those contained in her said deed to plaintiff's predecessor, and upon which many costly residences had been erected by her grantees; that said defendant still remained the owner of a number of lots in said tract, and that both she and her grantees had, by virtue of such grants and holdings, the interest or easement respectively created in and still affecting the plaintiff's said premises; wherefore she prayed the decree of the court that said restrictions, covenants, and conditions subsequent, as set forth and contained in her deed to plaintiff's predecessor of said premises, constitute covenants binding upon said plaintiff as the present owner of said premises, and that the defendant be declared entitled to have the plaintiff's said premises used for the purposes set forth in said covenants and conditions, and for no other purpose; and for general relief.

It may clarify the issues presented to the trial court upon the first and second trials of said cause to define the area, location, and boundaries of Shatto Place tract. The tract embraces about 35 acres of land, lying in the westerly portion of the city of Los Angeles and bounded by Wilshire boulevard, Vermont avenue, Fourth street, and Westmoreland avenue. In the course of its subdivision it was intersected by Sixth street, and also in part by Fifth street, each running westerly, and had laid out through its center, running northerly and southerly, an avenue known as Shatto place. It was subdivided by its owner, Clara R. Shatto, in about the year 1904 and was laid out with the idea of forming an exceptionally high-class restricted residential district, and since its subdivision lots therein have been sold to various purchasers, who have improved the same by the erection of costly residences conforming to the conditions and restrictions contained in the conveyances of said lots. The region which lies contiguous to this tract and in its general neighborhood has also been largely subdivided, sold and improved in the manner described by the trial court in its findings made and filed upon the first and subsequent trials of this cause.

The cause proceeded to its first trial before the court on or about the 7th day of June, 1916, upon the issues as thus framed, and, being submitted, the court filed presently its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein it recited that the facts set forth in plaintiff's amended complaint with relation to his source of title to the premises in question were true, and referred in general terms to the restrictions, covenants and conditions contained in the original deed thereto. The court also found that the averments in the defendant's answer respecting her conveyances to divers persons of other lots in said Shatto Place tract and to the erecting by her grantees of costly structures thereon were true. The trial court then proceeded to make certain other specific findings touching matters, which it becomes important to consider on account of the future history of the cause, and which further findings are as follows:

"That when said tract known as Shatto place was platted and laid out for sale, and the map thereof filed for record, to wit, December 8, 1904, there were then no flats, hotels, apartment houses, stores, or other places of business or business houses in the immediate vicinity thereof; that there were no street car lines running to or through said Shatto place, and no paved streets therein or bounding same; that since said December 8, 1904, there have been constructed two separate double track street railway lines now belonging to the Los Angeles Railway Company (which company is a passenger carrying public utility corporation covering practically the whole city of Los Angeles with passenger car service), serving said Shatto Place tract as well as other parts of said city, one of said lines running through said tract in an east and west direction on Sixth street, which was constructed prior to September 5, 1912, and the other running in a north and south direction on Vermont avenue, which avenue is the west boundary of said tract; franchise for which was issued prior to September 5, 1912, but same was constructed after said date; that on said double tracks at least three separate lines of cars are operated; that the intersection of said Sixth street and Vermont avenue is a transfer point for all of said lines, with cars passing said point on an average of once every minute during the day and a large portion of the night; that the said intersection has become and is now a noisy and a much traveled place; that since December, 1904, many of the streets in said tract and in the immediate vicinity thereof have been paved with asphalt or other like material, including both said Sixth street and Vermont avenue and Wilshire boulevard; that between December, 1904, and September 5, 1912, a three-story, with basement, apartment house was built on Virgil avenue, between Wilshire boulevard and Sixth street, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ blocks from the corner of Sixth street and Vermont avenue, but only $1\frac{1}{2}$ blocks easterly of the east boundary of said Shatto Place tract; and that several flats were built on both the east and west side of Westmoreland avenue between Sixth street and Wilshire boulevard, about $2\frac{1}{2}$ blocks from said corner, but that the property on the west side of Westmoreland avenue in said block abuts in the rear upon the east line of said Shatto Place tract; that several stores and apartment houses have been built in the vicinity of Tenth street and Vermont avenue, about 7 blocks southerly from said corner of Sixth street and Vermont avenue; that all of said flats, apartment houses, and stores are now in use as such and have been so used ever since their erection.

"That since September 5, 1912, another flat has been built and is now occupied as such, on Westmoreland avenue, between Sixth street and Wilshire boulevard, and a large store building has been erected at Ninth street and Vermont avenue, and within 6 blocks of the property in suit, and there are now in the course of construction three flat buildings at the corner of Seventh street and Vermont avenue, about 1,200 feet southerly from the property in suit; that a place of business known as a gasoline station, being a light frame building about 14 by 20 feet in size, has been constructed and is now, and for a long time past has been, in use as such, on the south side of Wilshire boulevard immediately opposite said Shatto Place tract, and at a point about 20 feet west of the point where the principal street of said tract, to wit, Shatto Place street, would intersect the south line of Wilshire boulevard if said Shatto Place street were prolonged across Wilshire boulevard; that Wilshire boulevard is the south boundary of Shatto Place tract, and that a line midway between Shatto Place street and Westmoreland avenue is the eastern boundary of said tract; that the property described in the amended complaint herein is situated at the southeast corner of Sixth street and Vermont avenue, fronting 100 feet on Vermont avenue and 217 feet on Sixth street; that on the northwest corner of said Sixth street and Vermont avenue there has been erected a place of business known as a gasoline station, where gasoline, coal oil, and like products, including lubricating oils and greases, are sold and kept in stock for sale; that said building is about 14 by 20 feet in size, and of light frame construction, and sets back about 12 feet from the streets; that said place of business is now in operation and has been for about 2 years; that the property on the west side of Vermont avenue north of Sixth street up to Fifth street is free from all restraints, conditions, or restrictions concerning the use and occupation thereof; that the property on the west side of Vermont avenue in the block between Sixth street and Wilshire boulevard is limited, restricted, and conditioned in its use and occupation by terms and conditions subsequent contained in various deeds of grant to the said property made at about the time the said Shatto Place tract was laid out, which said restrictions and conditions subsequent are identical with the conditions subsequent contained in the deed as alleged in the pleadings herein, except that the restrictions and conditions subsequent to the said property on the west side of Vermont avenue expire and become ineffective for any purpose by direct stipulation and provision contained in the said deeds creating said conditions subsequent on and after January 1, 1920.

"That said Vermont avenue is one of the main north and south thoroughfares of the western portion of the city of Los Angeles, and extends from the foothills on the north of said city to the ocean front at San Pedro, a distance upwards of 30 miles; that said Sixth street is one of the main east and west thoroughfares of said city extending from the eastern city limits to the western city limits, a distance of upwards of 10 miles; that both of said streets are extensively traveled throughout their whole lengths."

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the trial court made and filed its conclusions of law: (1) That the plaintiff was the owner in fee-simple absolute of the premises described in his amended complaint; (2) that the defendant Clara Shatto had no right, title, or interest whatever in said premises by reason of the conditions and covenants set forth in said amended complaint, and also in her answer thereto; (3) that said covenants and conditions subsequent are void and of no effect; (4) that said plaintiff is entitled to a decree of said court to that effect and relieving his said property from the cloud thereof, and that the said defendant be debarred, enjoined, and prohibited from asserting or causing to be asserted any title, claim, interest, or right of forfeiture on account of said covenants or conditions subsequent or of any breach thereof. Judgment was accordingly made and entered by said court on or about September 19, 1916. The defendant took and prosecuted an appeal from such judgment to the Supreme Court, which in due course transferred said cause for hearing and determination to the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, Division 2, and said cause was thereafter heard and decided by said appellate tribunal upon said appeal. Strong v. Shatto, 45 Cal. App. 29, 187 P. 159. In its decision the appellate court gave its consideration to two main questions as being presented upon said appeal. The first of these was the contention urged by the plaintiff and respondent in the case that the conditions subsequent contained in the defendant and appellant's deed to his predecessor were void as violative of the statutes against perpetuities. The appellate court held against this contention, and the correctness of its ruling in that regard is not brought in question upon the instant appeal. The second question to which the said court gave consideration was as to whether the plaintiff had sufficiently shown that the character of the property involved and of the tract affected by said restrictions and conditions subsequent and of the region had been so far changed since the creation of the restrictions and conditions contained in the appellant's deed to plaintiff's predecessor that the same has become more valuable for business than for residence purposes to such a degree as that a court of equity would no longer enforce a covenant or condition for forfeiture of title.

Upon this branch of the case, the court held (1) that the authorities seemed to support the appellant's contention that the conditions in the deeds to the properties in question were reservations in the nature of easements or servitudes for the benefit of the remaining lands of the grantor, citing Whitney v. Union Ry. Co., 11 Gray (Mass.) 359, 71 Am. Dec. 715; Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen (Mass.) 341, 83 Am. Dec. 632; Evans v. Foss, 194 Mass. 513, 80 N. E. 587, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, 11 Ann. Cas. 171; Dawson v. Western M. R. Co., 107 Md. 70, 68 A. 301, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 126 Am. St. Rep. 337; and (2) that the doctrine that equity will not enforce restrictions on the use of property only applies to cases where it is sought to enforce such restrictions when the reason and justification for them has failed through changed conditions, but that the rule does not go to the extent of permitting parties whose land is subject to the legal restraint of such limitations to bring an action to quiet their title against such contractual obligations because of changed conditions. Contractual obligations do not disappear as circumstances change. It is only the granting of equitable relief and not the binding force of the restrictive covenant that is affected by a change in the conditions, citing Brown v. Huber, 80 Ohio St. 183, 88 N. E. 322, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707, and note; Welch v. Austin, 187 Mass. 256, 72 N. E. 972, 68 L. R. A. 189; Coudert v. Sayre, 46 N. J. Eq. 386, 19 A. 190; Kountze v. Helmuth, 67 Hun, 343, 22 N. Y. S. 204; (3) that the mere fact that property has become more desirable or valuable for business than for residence purposes where the restrictions, notwithstanding the change in conditions, still are of substantial benefit to the dominant estate will not necessarily defeat application for equitable relief, citing Pagenstecher v. Carlson, 146 App. Div. 738, 131 N. Y. S. 413; Landell v. Hamilton, 175 Pa. 327, 34 A. 663, 34 L. R. A. 227; Spahr v. Cape, 143 Mo. App. 114, 122 S. W. 379. The appellate court accordingly reversed the judgment of the trial court upon said first appeal; and, a petition for hearing having been presented and denied in this court, the cause was returned to the superior court for further trial.

Thereupon, one George G. Albert, who had acquired the interest of the plaintiff, Strong, in the lot in said tract involved in the action as originally brought, and who had also acquired the interests of certain other grantees of the defendant Shatto in certain adjoining lots, and who had been substituted for the plaintiff, Strong, by order of court, filed, by leave of the court, a supplemental complaint wherein he joined as codefendants with said defendant Shatto in said action the owners, individual and corporate, of all of the lots in said tract who held the same immediately or mediately under deeds from said defendant Shatto, containing similar covenants, restrictions, and conditions subsequent to those embraced in the deed to Strong and also to the other persons to whose interests in those certain lots in said tract the said substituted plaintiff had succeeded. In his said supplemental complaint said substituted plaintiff again set forth specifically the restrictions contained in the original deed to his predecessor and also, with certain exceptions, in the original deeds of the added parties to the action. He, however, averred upon information and belief that the original grantor of the lots in said tract had made conveyances of lots therein upon other conditions, restrictions, and reservations than those generally employed in her transfers; and, also, that she had sold lots therein without any conditions, restrictions, or reservations being imposed thereon. In his supplemental complaint the substituted plaintiff also proceeded to set forth with much of detail, following in many respects the findings of the court upon the former trial, the changes in character as to being residential, business or semibusiness districts of the region surrounding, adjacent to, and in the vicinity of the Shatto Place tract since its original subdivision, including also in his averments certain further changes therein which were alleged to have occurred since the former trial. He also alleged that the said original grantor of said tract had given certain grants and permissions to certain electric railway corporations to construct and operate electric railroads upon certain surface or subsurface roadways within and across said tract, including the right to erect and maintain a station thereon for access to such railways. He also proceeded to allege that subsequent to the creation of said tract as a restricted residential area the city of Los Angeles had adopted certain zoning ordinances creating five zones, consisting of various districts, and prescribing the classes of buildings, structures, and improvements which were to be permitted therein, respectively; that said Shatto place was partly within and partly without two of said zones; that the plaintiff's said lots are embraced within the area of "C" zone as defined by said ordinance, and that by the terms thereof, upon the lots within said zone, no buildings or structures are to be erected or used for other than certain classes of business as specified in said ordinance and set forth in said complaint; that by the terms of said zoning ordinance within the area embraced in "B" zone as described therein only such buildings, structures, or improvements are to be erected, constructed, or used therein as are to be occupied as dwellings, tenements, hotels, lodging or boarding houses, churches, clubs, educational, or eleemosynary institutions, etc. The plaintiff alleges that by the adoption of said zoning ordinance the changed conditions affecting said Shatto place and the lots therein have been so recognized and established by law as to destroy the previous restrictions, reservations, and conditions imposed by the original grantor thereon, and as to render him entitled to have the cloud of such restrictions removed from his said property, and also as to entitle the trial court to render a declaratory judgment affecting all of the lots and property owners within said tract. Wherefore the said plaintiff prays for such relief.

The aforesaid supplemental complaint with the process issued thereon was served upon all of the parties to said action named or added as defendants therein. Certain of said defendants failed to appear and answer said supplemental complaint, and in due course their and each of their defaults were entered in accordance with law. Others of the said defendants thereafter appeared and answered said supplemental complaint. Some of these joined with the said substituted plaintiff in asking for the same relief. Others of said defendants also answered, denying in varying responses the essential averments of said supplemental complaint and asking that said restrictions, reservations and conditions subsequent be maintained and enforced. Among these was the original defendant Clara R. Shatto, who, in addition to the denials in her answer, presented a cross-complaint against said plaintiff, wherein the averments of her said answer were affirmatively set forth and wherein also she averred that said substituted plaintiff had violated the terms, covenants, and conditions subsequent of the original deed to his predecessor by the erection of an oil station upon one of his said lots, which said cross-plaintiff prayed should be ordered removed, with the alternative that if not so removed the right, title, and interest of said plaintiff be declared forfeited to said cross-plaintiff by reason of such violation. The substituted plaintiff answered said cross-complaint, denying the material averments thereof, and also answered the affirmative matter set forth in the answers of certain other of said defendants who had united with said original defendant Clara R. Shatto in asking that the restrictions, covenants, and conditions subsequent contained in the original deed to plaintiff's predecessor be maintained. The answer and cross-complaint of Clara R. Shatto, as well as the said answers of her codefendants who did answer the said substituted complaint, were not served upon the defendants who had defaulted, nor was the answer of said substituted plaintiff to said answer and cross-complaint of Clara R. Shatto and to the said answers of her several codefendants served upon said defaulting defendants. The objection of the latter to the absence of service upon them of the foregoing pleadings, filed after their defaults for not appearing to the substituted plaintiff's supplemental complaint, has been made the subject of another and independent appeal. The cause went to trial for a second time upon the issues as thus reframed and after a prolonged hearing was again submitted to the trial court for its decision. The court thereupon filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law therein.

In so doing the trial court did not apparently deem it necessary to deal with the question as to whether the substituted plaintiff had, by the additional matters set forth in his supplemental complaint or by the inclusion in said action thereby of all the owners of property within the area of Shatto place, taken himself or the action outside of the principle announced upon the former appeal to the effect that an owner of a portion of an area affected by restrictions, reservations, and conditions subsequent, similar to those embraced in the original deeds to the lots in Shatto place, could not maintain an action to quiet his title as against covenants of his predecessor in accepting such deed. Neither did the trial court apparently deem it necessary to consider the question as to whether the substituted plaintiff was entitled to seek a declaratory judgment against parties and in an action such as were embraced in his supplemental complaint. It would seem that the reason why the trial court did not rest its decision upon either of these issues is to be found in the fact that the original defendant Clara R. Shatto had presented to said supplemental complaint an answer and cross-complaint upon which, if the facts so warranted, she would be entitled to affirmative equitable relief, rendering it unnecessary, in view of its findings and conclusions in that regard, to determine what remedies the said substituted plaintiff would have been entitled to had the court arrived at another conclusion upon the facts and law of the case. We think the trial court correct in this regard, and, in view of the conclusions as to the issues in the case presented by the said defendant's cross-complaint, we do not find it necessary to consider what the said plaintiff's remedies might have been had we arrived at the conclusion that the cross-plaintiff was not entitled to the relief which the trial court accorded her. We have thus dealt with this subject for the reason that a brief has been filed by certain counsel, as amicus curiæ herein, urging that this is in form a proper action calling for a declaratory judgment, under the provisions of sections 1060-1062 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The trial court in its aforesaid findings of fact found that the averments of the supplemental complaint were true as to the derivation of the substituted plaintiff's title to the lots in the Shatto place, of which he declared himself to have become the owner from certain original grantees of the defendant Clara R. Shatto; and also found that the deeds of the latter to the substituted plaintiff's respective predecessors contained the restrictions, covenants and conditions subsequent set forth in said supplemental complaint. In this connection the trial court further found that, by the terms of said deeds:

"The said conditions are and shall be covenants running with the land for the benefit of the grantor herein, and for the benefit of each and all of said lots in said tract and of the owners of said lots and their respective successors in interest."

The trial court further found that the title of said plaintiff is and at all times has been subject to the interest and estate therein of defendant and cross-complainant Clara R. Shatto, which interest and estate is in the nature of a reversion, to wit, a right of re-entry for condition broken, and is subject, also, to the easement imposed upon said property by virtue of the provisions, conditions, and restrictions contained in the deeds in the pleadings herein referred to, which easement inures to the benefit of each and every other lot in said Shatto place. It may be said, in passing, that in so finding the trial court was but following the interpretation of said deeds and of the restrictions, covenants, and conditions subsequent contained therein which had been placed upon them by the decision of the appellate court upon the former appeal, the substance of which has been above set forth. The trial court further found that the allegations of the supplemental complaint as to the changes in uses which had taken place in the areas surrounding and adjacent to Shatto place were true, except that it was not true that:

"The change in uses to which the land surrounding and adjacent to Shatto place has been put has been complete; nor is it true that any of said changes in use of property have taken place within the said Shatto place; nor is it true that any of said changes of use of property have made the property within Shatto place or any of the lots contained therein wholly unadapted or undesirable for residential purposes. And in this connection the court finds that the changes in use of property outside of but adjacent to and in the vicinity of Shatto place, herein found to have taken place, are the same sort and character of changes of use which the court found to have taken place in and by its written findings of fact filed herein upon the first trial of this cause, and that the difference in the said change of use and in the conditions affecting the property in the vicinity of the said Shatto place is one of degree, but not of kind."

With respect to the averments of the supplemental complaint in support of the substituted plaintiff's claim that the defendant Clara R. Shatto, as the original grantor of lots in said tract, had imposed restrictions, conditions, or reservations upon some lots therein varying in character from those impressed upon the said plaintiff's property, the trial court found that:

"It is not true that defendant Shatto has imposed any other conditions, restrictions, or reservations upon any lot or lots in Shatto place varying in character from the restrictions hereinabove referred to; nor is it true that said or any conditions, restrictions, or reservations have been imposed without any general plan for the entire subdivision; nor is it true that any of said conditions, restrictions, or reservations have expired by limitation of time, or otherwise, or at all; nor that any lot or lots within said tract have been sold, transferred, or conveyed by defendant Shatto without any conditions or restrictions or reservations. But it is true that the said tract was laid out upon a general plan for the entire subdivision as a first-class residence tract, and the only variation in the conditions, restrictions, or reservations upon which said lots were sold are those relating to the cost of houses to be erected on the corner lots and the inside lots and the character and cost of residence allowed in the low ground in lot 19, of block 4 of said tract, and also relating to the difference in the distances that residences are required to be set back from the street, as to lots upon different streets in said tract."

With respect to the averments in said supplemental complaint as to the passage and content of certain zoning ordinances by the city of Los Angeles, the trial court made no findings for the reason that it had excluded the evidence thereof offered by the said plaintiff at the trial. Whether or not it was in error in so doing is presented upon another phase of this appeal. In addition to the foregoing findings negating or modifying the averments of the substituted plaintiff's supplemental complaint, the trial court expressly found that:

"Each and all of the allegations contained in the cross-complaint of the defendant Clara R. Shatto are true."

In so doing the trial court found that the said substituted plaintiff, by the placing of an oil station upon one of his said lots affected by the foregoing restrictions, was engaged in violating the covenants, restrictions, and conditions subsequent of the deed in which his predecessor was the grantee of said lot, and was subject to the penalties of such violation. The court also found in favor of certain of the codefendants of the said cross-complainant as to the truth of certain averments in their respective answers which accorded with the findings favorable to said cross-complainant upon her answer and cross-complaint. As conclusions of law based upon the foregoing findings of fact, the trial court found that the covenants, reservations, restrictions, and conditions subsequent contained in said deeds were legal, valid, and enforceable; that the owner of each lot and parcel of land in said Shatto place owns the same subject to said covenants, reservations, restrictions, and conditions subsequent; that the changed conditions in and about the property outside of said Shatto place have not made and do not make it inequitable to enforce said covenants, reservations, restrictions, and conditions, or any of them; that the plaintiff has violated and is violating said "conditions, reservations, restrictions, and covenants, and that the defendant and cross-complainant Clara R. Shatto is entitled to an interlocutory decree that the title of plaintiff in and to lot 15, block 2, of said Shatto place be forfeited, and that the same be revested in her, unless the structure maintained on said lot be removed within 10 days after entry of said decree, and that if it be not so removed within said period then said Clara R. Shatto shall be entitled to a final decree declaring plaintiff's title to said land forfeited and the whole title thereto re-vested in her." From the judgment of the court in accordance therewith, the said plaintiff has prosecuted this appeal. The main issue litigated upon this appeal is as to whether certain changed conditions affecting the uses of property within the area of the Shatto place have operated to abrogate the covenants, restrictions, and conditions subsequent in the deed of plaintiff's predecessor in title to the property described in his supplemental complaint, or, if not entirely to abrogate these, to at least render their enforcement inequitable; and also, whether certain changed conditions in respect to the uses of property and in the movement of traffic in the near neighborhood of said tract operated and are operating to render it no longer equitable to enforce against said plaintiff and his said properties the burden and the penalties of said covenants, restrictions, and conditions subsequent.

In presenting the foregoing phases of this main issue the appellant urges that the findings of fact of the trial court do not support its conclusions of law and its judgment based thereon; that the said findings of fact of the trial court are not supported by the evidence in the case; and that the trial court erred in the exclusion of certain evidence bearing materially upon the issues of fact presented by the pleadings in the cause. In support of the first phase of the foregoing contentions the appellant insists that the uncontradicted evidence in the case shows that the defendant Shatto, in the making of certain conveyances subsequent to the laying out by her of Shatto place as a restricted residential tract, departed from the rule of uniformity in respect to the uses to which the properties therein to be conveyed should be put, and also in respect to the length of time during which such restrictions, etc., upon such other properties were to be operative. The appellant refers specifically to four deeds, three of which were to Los Angeles Pacific Land Company, a corporation, and the other of which was to one Hazel Kibby. These deeds contain in addition to the restrictions, etc., found in the deed to plaintiff's predecessor two variations not contained therein. By one of these permission was expressly granted to operate an electric railway with tracks over and subways under the particular lots so conveyed, and also permission to said Pacific Land Company to provide a proper station and access to such railway. The other variation consisted in the provision that the restrictions, etc., contained in all of the grantor's deeds and which were otherwise to be perpetual, should, in respect to these four particular conveyances, cease and terminate in the year 1955 and be of no further force and effect. The evidence educed upon the trial disclosed that these four deeds were made about three years prior to the conveyance of said plaintiff's lots to his predecessors in title; that the deed to said Pacific Land Company (which is, in fact, a corporation operating electric railways) covering a portion of block 19 in said tract, conveyed to it lands lying in low ground formed by the valley of a little stream which ran across that portion of said tract, which lands had not been subdivided into residence lots but remained in one large tract apparently because not suited to residential uses. The said corporation planned to run a railway to the beach, the route of which would lie across Shatto place and upon and along this particular low-lying plot of ground with subway approaches underlying certain other lots also granted to it and to said Hazel Kibby. It would, of course, be beneficial to said entire tract to have a station and means of access to such railway, in case permission was given in these grants to construct the same, and it would require no straining of reason to conclude that the construction and operation of such a railway with convenient station and approaches would be a benefit to said tract and to the subsequent purchasers of residential lots therein. Some such benefit might well have been contemplated by the original owner of said tract in the adoption of a general plan for the devotion thereof generally to restricted residential uses; and that some such purpose was in her contemplation at the time of the subdivision of said tract and of its devotion to such restricted uses seems to have been agreed to by the parties to this action in the course of the trial thereof by a stipulation wherein such general plan was conceded, and wherein the specific portion of block 19 of said tract described as low-lying ground was specifically referred to.

[1] It would thus seem that a variation in the otherwise uniform restrictive uses to which the lots generally in said tract were to be subjected, which would permit these particular portions of said tract to be utilized for an electric railway, ought not to be held to be such a variation as would in any way injuriously affect the lots which the plaintiff's predecessors subsequently acquired, especially in the absence of any showing that the construction and operation of such railway or of the station and approaches thereto would render the plaintiff's said lots less desirable or available for the restricted residential uses to which by the terms of the deeds to his predecessors they were to be confined. No such showing was made or attempted on the part of the appellant. The only case which is cited by appellant's counsel as sustaining his contention that the construction and operation of a railway along or across a tract set apart to restricted residential uses would have the effect of abrogating such restrictions as to the other lots in said tract is the case of Columbia College v. Thacher, 87 N. Y. 311-317 (41 Am. Rep. 365). In that case the court found that an elevated steam railway had been built and was being operated past the premises and that "not only large depreciation in rents when occupied, but also frequent vacancies have followed the construction of the road"; and further found "that the construction of this road and its management have rendered privacy and quiet in the adjacent buildings impossible, and so affected the premises of the defendant, and all those * * * who, with the plaintiff, entered into the covenant, that neither their better improvement nor permanent value can be promoted by enforcing its observance." The conclusion of the court upon appeal in that case is well founded upon the foregoing findings of fact, but it is obvious that they afford no comfort to the appellant in the instant case by reason of the difference in the facts and of the findings and conclusion of the trial court thereon.

[2] As to the appellant's contention that vehicular traffic and travel other than by railways along or even across Shatto place has rendered undesirable residence therein, he cites no authority to support such a theory. It is a matter of common knowledge that boulevards, avenues, and broad highways best suited for the use of vehicles usually traverse suburban areas devoted to and favored for residential uses. To hold that the several broad boulevards and avenues which lead from Los Angeles to the sea have by their increasing travel destroyed restricted residential uses of property along their route would be contrary to both reason and experience; besides, the trial court has found to the contrary.

[3] The appellant's second contention upon this phase of his appeal is that the fact that the restrictions in the four deeds above referred to, which are similar to those in the conveyance to his predecessor, run for a limited time, viz., until 1955, while the restrictions, etc., in his predecessor's deed have no such limitation. The reply which the respondents make to this contention, and the one which the trial court apparently adopted is that this claim will not be available to the plaintiff until the year 1955, when, for the first time, whatever injurious difference there might be from the operation of these restrictions will arise. In the meantime, their operation is uniform upon all of the lot owners whose deeds contain them, and they are, therefore, equally binding upon all. We are satisfied with this contention.

[4-6] The next and in fact the main and most serious contention which the appellant urges upon this appeal is that the changes in the westward movement of business in the city of Los Angeles and in the consequent uses of property in the neighborhood of Shatto place have been such as to render it inequitable to enforce the restrictions and conditions subsequent contained in the deeds to the original grantees of the lots in Shatto place against the present owners of any and all of the lots therein affected thereby, and particularly against the plaintiff as the present owner of the particular lots described in his supplemental complaint. At the outset of the discussion as to the merits of this contention it is to be noted that the appellant does not contend that any changes have occurred in the uses of lots within Shatto place other than those connected with the building and operation of the electric railway with its station and approaches, the effect of which has already been discussed and the change which he is attempting to make in the use of one of his own lots therein through the erection of an oil station thereon. Otherwise Shatto place remains the exceptionally high class residential district, having an area of about 35 acres, which its original owner through its subdivision and sale of its lots with the restrictive covenants above referred to designed it to be. It is contended by the respondent herein and is not denied that there is no like area in the city of Los Angeles so uniformly occupied with palatial homes as is this district. With respect to the changes, which, since its original subdivision, have occurred in the neighboring region, these were originally found upon specifically by the trial court, as hereinabove set forth, upon the first trial of this cause. Upon the second trial thereof the court, in substance, adopted the detail of its former findings in the foregoing regard, and as to whatever additional evidence was presented upon that issue upon the second trial, the trial court found:

"That the changes in use of property outside of but adjacent to and in the vicinity of Shatto place herein found to have taken place are the same sort and character of changes of use which the court found to have taken place in and by its written findings of fact, filed herein upon the first trial of this cause, and that the difference in the said change of use and in the conditions affecting the property in the vicinity of said Shatto Place is one of degree, but not of kind."

The trial court further found:

"That it is not true that the change in uses to which the land surrounding and adjacent to Shatto place has been put has been complete; nor is it true that any of said changes in use of property have taken place within said Shatto place; nor is it true that any of said changes of use of property have made the property within Shatto place, or any of the lots contained therein wholly unadapted or undesirable for residential purposes."

These findings, taken in connection with the express averments of the cross-complaint of the defendant and respondent Clara R. Shatto and of the further finding of the trial court, "That each and all of the allegations of the cross-complaint of the defendant Clara R. Shatto are true," amount to a finding by the trial court that whatever changes it may have found to have occurred in the uses of property adjacent to, in the vicinity of, or in the near neighborhood of Shatto place have not, thus far at least, affected the availability, desirability, or value of all or any of the lots within its area for such restricted residential uses as were contemplated and provided for in the deeds to the original grantees thereof. We are of the opinion that the evidence introduced before the trial court upon the second trial of this cause was and is sufficient to justify the foregoing findings of fact by the said court; and, this being so, we are further of the opinion that the conclusions of law which the trial court based upon its aforesaid findings of fact are fully supported by the great weight of authority upholding the validity and sustaining the enforcement of like covenants and conditions subsequent entered into between the owners and their grantees of lots within areas devoted to strictly residential uses. The trial court held, conformably to the decision of the appellate tribunal in Strong v. Shatto, supra, and the cases cited therein, and also consistently with the decision of this court in the case of Martin v. Holm, 197 Cal. 733, 242 P. 718, that the covenants, restrictions, and conditions subsequent in the deeds of said grantor to her grantees are in the nature of easements or servitudes for the benefit of each and every other parcel of land in said tract, and that such covenants, restrictions, and conditions subsequent run with the land. The trial court was also correct, in conformity with the ruling in the case of Miles v. Clark, 44 Cal. App. 539, 549, 187 P. 167, in holding that the changed conditions which it found to exist in and about property outside of Shatto place "have not made and do not make it inequitable to enforce said conditions, reservations, restrictions, and covenants, or any of them." The cases cited by the appellant himself, such as the case of Columbia College v. Thacher, supra, and Jackson v. Stevenson, 156 Mass. 496, 31 N. E. 691, 32 Am. St. Rep. 476, recognize the rule that restrictions upon the uses of residential areas which are interbinding upon each and all of the purchasers of lots within such areas, and which have for their purpose that of making the locality a suitable one for residences, will be enforced in equity unless and until, "owing to the general growth of the city, and the present use of the whole neighborhood for business, this purpose can no longer be accomplished." In the last above-cited case from which the foregoing excerpt is taken, the court aptly says that whether the right to equitable relief exists "depends upon the circumstances of each case." These are reflected in the findings of the trial court and if there is sufficient evidence to sustain them the discretion exercised by the trial court in granting or refusing such equitable relief ought not, except in case of clear abuse, to be disturbed upon appeal. This rule was given application in the majority opinion of this court in the case of Downs v. Kroeger, 254 P. 1101, wherein the trial court upon a somewhat different state of facts had refused to grant equitable relief. It should for a like reason be given application to the instant case wherein the trial court has, upon the facts found, exercised its discretion in favor of granting to the cross-complainant the equitable relief prayed for in her cross-complaint.

[7] The appellant makes the final contention that the trial court was in error in the refusal to admit in evidence certain zoning ordinances of the city of Los Angeles which affected property in the neighborhood of and in part within said Shatto place, including the lots owned by the substituted plaintiff herein, and which ordinances had been pleaded in his supplemental complaint. The ground given by the trial court for such refusal was that the enactment by the city of such ordinances could not be claimed to directly affect the covenants, conditions, or transfers between private parties relating to their rights and obligations respecting the property in question; and that the intimations or recitals in such ordinances as to the existence of changed conditions in or in the neighborhood of the property under consideration as being a restricted area were not to be considered evidence of the existence or non-existence of the actuality of such changed conditions. It may be that the adoption of such ordinances by the municipality affecting property subjected to residential restrictions would shed some light upon the question as to whether, in the course of civic growth, changed conditions had arisen in the neighborhood of such property which would render the application of such zoning provisions advisable, and hence render the admission in evidence of such ordinances proper in a litigation between strictly private parties involving their contractual rights and obligations.

The appellant has, however, furnished us with no authority supporting this view; but even assuming it to be correct, we do not consider that the error, if it be such, of the trial court in the exclusion of such indirect evidence would be sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal in view of the fact, as shown by the record herein, that the respective parties to this action presented an abundance of direct evidence with respect to the actual conditions and changes in conditions which had taken place in and in the neighborhood of the area covered by the restrictions in question. Reviewing this record as a whole, we conclude that the findings of fact of the trial court are sufficiently supported by the direct evidence in the case; that its conclusions as to the law applicable to such a state of facts are correct; and that it did not abuse its discretion in awarding to the cross-complainant herein the relief sought in the prayer of her cross-complaint.

SHENK, J. I concur in the judgment for the reason that, under the pleadings and evidence on the second trial, it may rightly be said (1) that it was competent for the trial court to grant the relief prayed for in the cross-complaint of Clara R. Shatto, and (2) that there was evidence to support the finding that the conditions in and surrounding said tract had not so changed as to render it inequitable to enforce said restrictions. It may also be said that if said finding had been the other way likewise it would have had sufficient evidentiary support. Under these circumstances, this court may not properly disturb the finding now made on that subject. Downs v. Kroeger (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 1101; Miles v. Clark, 44 Cal. App. 539, 187 P. 167. The finding on this issue was favorable to the plaintiff on the first trial. The judgment on that trial was reversed for the reason, as I understand the decision in Strong v. Shatto, 45 Cal. App. 29, 187 P. 159, that an action brought by a lot owner in the tract to quiet his title against such restrictions could not prevail when it appeared that there had been no breach of the restrictions nor any attempt by an interested property owner to enjoin a breach or to enforce a forfeiture. It was held on the former appeal, following a recognized and controlling line of authorities, that a landowner in the tract had no standing in court in his endeavor to quiet his title against and to have declared void the restrictions on his lot, and that it was only when it was sought to enjoin a breach of such restrictions or to declare a forfeiture that equity would refuse, because of changed conditions, to lend its aid in the enforcement thereof. It was further held on the former appeal that it was "premature, at least, to determine the equities of the parties as they might exist at some future time in the event of such breach." This action was commenced prior to 1921. In that year sections 1060, 1061, and 1062, relating to declaratory relief, were added to the Code of Civil Procedure. The supplemental complaint was filed after those additions to the Code. This change in the law was, in my opinion, sufficient to enable the substituted plaintiff to proceed thereunder and to have his status declared under the conditions as were then shown to exist, and this, notwithstanding the old rule which required him to be hazardingly active in the breach of such restrictions and passive in litigation. The history of this case would indicate that on the second trial undue importance was given to the decision on the former appeal. As stated, the finding as to changed conditions was favorable to the plaintiff on the first trial. On the second trial the court found that the changes in the use of property adjacent to and in the vicinity of Shatto place, "herein found to have taken place, are the same sort and character of changes of use which the court found to have taken place in and by its written findings of fact filed herein upon the first trial of this cause, and that the difference in the said change of use and in the conditions affecting the property in the vicinity of said Shatto place is one of degree, and not of kind." Nevertheless the court proceeded to and did deny the substituted plaintiff any relief when not only the same business conditions surrounding the tract were proved as were shown to exist at the former trial, but also further development of business adjacent to the tract was shown to have taken place. It cannot be disputed that, notwithstanding the findings on the first trial, the trial court on the second trial had the right to weigh the evidence and to find either way on the conflicting evidence then presented, but it seems to me that the result of this litigation has become abortive if the decision on the former appeal was considered, as it must have been, as in any way establishing the law of the case. In view of the fact that the conditions surrounding the tract are or may be continually changing, no question of the law of the case could properly arise as affecting the substituted plaintiff's standing in court unless it be true, which I think it is not, that the declaratory relief sections of the Code have no application to this sort of an action.

The trial court also found that, although the changes in the use of the property surrounding the tract had taken place as alleged in the supplemental complaint, yet "it is not true that the change in uses to which the land surrounding and adjacent to Shatto place has been put has been complete." The main opinion quotes this finding as apparently having some bearing on the case. If from such finding it may be concluded that the tract in question must be entirely surrounded with skyscrapers or other business establishments in order that the rule of changed conditions be made applicable, I am not prepared to subscribe to that doctrine. If the finding points to any other conclusion, I am not able to discover it. However, disregarding said finding, whatever it may mean, the judgment appealed from seems to be immune from successful attack in the light of the record on which it is based.

STRONG v. SHATTO et al. (L. A. 8530.)

Supreme Court of California. July 2, 1927.

1. Action $\S$ 6—In action to quiet title and for declaratory judgment defining rights of parties in tract, court could render judgment binding upon all defendants served.

In action to quiet title as against certain restrictions and conditions subsequent, in which plaintiff sought declaratory judgment defining rights and interests of all parties to said action in and to properties within tract, trial court had power to render whatever judgment, binding upon all defendants who had been served, defining and determining their respective rights in tracts, as was fairly within issues tendered by complaint.

2. Judgment $\S$ 112—Default of defendants in action to quiet title and for declaratory judgment declaring rights of parties in tract, admitted every material fact essential to judgment.

In action to quiet title against restrictive covenants and for declaratory judgment defining rights of all parties to action in properties within tract, default of defendants, who, being duly served, did not appear and answer, constituted admission of every material fact essential to such judgment.

3. Judgment $\S$ 113—In action to quiet title, defaulting defendants were not entitled to service of answers of codefendants wherein no additional relief was sought.

In action to quiet title against restrictive covenants and for declaratory judgment declaring rights of all parties in certain tract, defaulting defendants were not entitled to be served with answers of codefendants wherein no further relief was sought than that grantable under terms of complaint.

4. Judgment $\S$ 113—Codefendant's cross-complaint relating to property of plaintiff in action to quiet title need not be served on defaulting defendants (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 442).

In action to quiet title against restrictive covenants and for judgment declaring rights of all parties in certain tract, codefendant's cross-complaint, in which only remedy sought related to property of plaintiff and did not affect in any degree rights and interests of any other defendant, need not have been served on defaulting defendants, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 442.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 151 (2)—Defaulting defendants held not entitled to appeal from judgment entered on cross-complaint, which did not affect them (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 938).

In action to quiet title against building restrictions and for declaratory judgment declaring rights of all parties in certain tract, in which one defendant filed cross-complaint relating only to property of plaintiff, defaulting defendants were not entitled to appeal from judgment entered on cross-complaint, since they were not aggrieved thereby, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 938.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action to quiet title as against certain restrictions and conditions subsequent in deed to plaintiff's predecessor by W. A. Strong, in which George C. Albert was substituted as plaintiff, against Clara R. Shatto, John G. Bullock, and others. From the judgment, John G. Bullock and other defendants not named appeal. Affirmed.

Frank Karr and C. W. Cornell, both of Los Angeles, for appellant Pacific Electric Land Co.

S. F. McFarlane, of Los Angeles, for appellant Bullock.

B. Rey Schauer, of Los Angeles, for appellants Heffner.

Shaw & McDaniel, Bradner W. Lee, Bradner W. Lee, Jr., and Kenyon F. Lee, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The following opinion, prepared by Mr. Justice Richards, is hereby adopted as the opinion of the court:

This appeal is by certain defendants in the case of Strong v. Hancock, 258 P. 60, wherein the decision of this court upon the main appeal has been this day filed. The facts upon which the present appeal is predicated are fully set forth in said decision. The appellants herein were brought into this case after it had been for the first time tried in the superior court, and after the judgment of said court rendered and entered upon said first trial had been reversed by the District Court of Appeal (45 Cal. App. 29, 187 P. 159), and after the substituted plaintiff in the action had filed a supplemental complaint amplifying the issues in the cause and making all of the lot owners in Shatto place parties to the action prior to the second trial thereof. Said supplemental complaint having, with proper process, been served upon each and all of said added defendants, those of said defendants who are the appellants herein defaulted. After their said defaults had been duly entered, the others of said new-made defendants who had not defaulted filed their respective answers to said supplemental complaint wherein they each set forth their respective claims as to their and each of their ownership and interest in their respective lots in said Shatto tract and generally in the properties embraced within said tract. Their said answers were not served upon those of their codefendants whose defaults had been entered. The original defendant, Clara R. Shatto, also answered the said supplemental complaint with similar denials and averments to those of her codefendants who had answered, and also filed and served upon said substituted plaintiff and upon her codefendants who had not defaulted her said answer and cross-complaint, but did not serve either her answer or her said cross-complaint upon said defendants who are the appellants herein and whose defaults had prior thereto been duly entered. The appellants herein contend that they were entitled, notwithstanding their aforesaid defaults and the due entry thereof, to be served with their codefendants' said answers, and especially with the answer and cross-complaint of their codefendant Clara R. Shatto, and hence urge upon this appeal that the judgment herein should be reversed. We find no merit in this contention. This action in its original inception was an action to quiet title and it retained this character throughout, notwithstanding its amplification both as to parties and as to the relief sought through the filing and service of the substituted plaintiff's supplemental complaint. This being so, these appellants upon their introduction into this action became actors therein and were called upon to set forth their own respective rights with reference not only to the lot owned by each in said tract, but with reference to the lots, ownerships, and interest generally in said tract not only as against the plaintiff, but also as against each and all of their codefendants in said action.

[1, 2] This is true not only because of the nature of the action but doubly so because of the amplitude of the averments of the supplemental complaint as to the source and limitations upon the titles of each and all of said defendants in relation to their own particular property and the properties of each of the parties to said action, but also because of the fact that a declaratory judgment was sought by said substituted plaintiff defining the rights and interests of each and all of the parties to said action in and to the properties within the area of the entire tract. The trial court was thus invested with power to render whatever judgment, binding upon all of said defendants who had been duly served, defining and determining their and each of their respective rights and interests in said tract as was fairly within the issues tendered by said supplemental complaint, and the default of said defendants, who being duly served, did not appear and answer, constituted an admission of every material fact essential to such judgment. Rowe v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 441; Hutchings v. Ebeler, 46 Cal. 557; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. King, etc., Co., 162 Cal. 44, 120 P. 1066.

[3] Having defaulted, these defendants and appellants were no longer entitled to be served with pleadings thereafter filed, which did not broaden the scope of the relief to which the plaintiff or their codefendants would be entitled as against them or any of them under the averments of the supplemental complaint, other than those specially excepted to by the terms of sections 650 and 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The answers therefore of their codefendants, wherein no further relief was sought than that grantable under the terms of the said supplemental complaint, were not required to be served upon such defendants in default, and hence as to these the appellants herein are entitled to no consideration upon this appeal. This conclusion applies as well to the answer of the defendant Clara R. Shatto as to the like answer of her codefendants who did not default. This leaves as the only remaining problem upon this appeal the question as to whether said defaulting defendants were entitled, notwithstanding the prior entry of their and each of their said defaults, to be served with their codefendant Shatto's cross-complaint. Section 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "The cross-complaint must be served upon the parties affected thereby."

[4, 5] An examination of the cross-complaint of Clara R. Shatto in this action discloses that the only remedies which she sought thereby related to the property of the substituted plaintiff herein within said Shatto place and did not affect in any degree whatever the rights and interests of any other defendant therein. These appealing defendants were, therefore, in no wise injuriously affected by the averments of said cross-complaint, nor by the limited relief sought therein, nor by the judgment of the trial court in favor of said defendant Clara R. Shatto upon her said cross-complaint. They were therefore neither entitled to be served with said cross-complaint, nor were they entitled to appeal from the judgment entered thereon, for the reason that they were not "aggrieved thereby." Code Civ. Proc. § 938. The appellants, however, claim that they were aggrieved by the portion of such judgment, wherein it was decreed "that the owner of each lot and parcel of land in said Shatto place is the owner of an easement in each and every other lot or parcel of land in said tract to the extent of and as provided in and by said conditions, restrictions, and covenants for the benefit of the parcel of land which he owns." The answer to this contention is that already suggested herein, viz., that since the terms, restrictions, reservations, and conditions subsequent of each and all of the deeds of each and all of the defendants to this action were fully set forth in the supplemental complaint filed herein, and the court was thereby asked to determine the respective rights and interests of each and all of said defendants thereunder and to render a declaratory judgment so doing, the court in the judgment it did thereafter render did not, in the particular aspect thereof above complained of, go beyond the issues tendered in said supplemental complaint and which said defendants by their and each of their defaults consented that the said court should so determine.

The judgment is, as to these defendants, affirmed.

CHAPPELL v. SAN DIEGO & ARIZONA RY. CO. (L. A. 7642.)

Supreme Court of California. July 2, 1927.

1. Negligence ⇨83—Doctrine of last clear chance presupposes plaintiff's negligence, resulting in imminent danger, and defendant's failure to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury.

The doctrine of the last clear chance presupposes plaintiff, as result of own negligence, is in situation from which she cannot escape by exercise of ordinary care, and defendant, though realizing situation, fails to utilize clear chance by ordinary care to avoid injury.

2. Negligence ⇨83—Doctrine of last clear chance applies where defendant perceives peril in time to avoid accident by ordinary care.

Doctrine of last clear chance applies where defendant actually perceives perilous position of plaintiff in time to avoid accident by exercise of ordinary care.

3. Railroads ⇨350(33)—Whether motorman perceived peril of passenger in automobile on tracks and failed to exercise ordinary care to stop held for jury.

Whether motorman perceived perilous position of passenger in automobile stalled on track at crossing in time to stop and failed to exercise ordinary care to do so held, under the evidence, for jury, under doctrine of last clear chance.

4. Appeal and error ⇨978(3)—Supreme Court may not disturb finding on affidavits on motion for new trial, of plaintiff's prejudicial conduct, in absence of abuse of discretion.

The Supreme Court may not disturb finding on affidavits and counter affidavits, filed on motion for new trial, of plaintiff's prejudicial conduct in seeking to influence women jurors by conversation during recess, in absence of abuse of discretion.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Error in permitting testimony of railway car's speed at other times held not reversible under other evidence of speed at time of accident.

Error in permitting testimony of speed of defendant's railway car at dangerous curve on days other than day of accident held not reversible, where there was other evidence of speed of car at the time of the accident.

6. Damages $\approx$ 130(3)—\$3,000 held not excessive for woman's injuries consisting of pain, fracture of breastbone, and traumatic neurosis.

$3,000 held not excessive for personal injuries confining woman to bed for 27 days, resulting in continual pain, numbness, fracture of breastbone, and definite traumatic neurosis, even though plaintiff falsely testified concerning injuries, where jury was fully advised of the falsity.

7. Appeal and error $\approx$ 1004(1)—Supreme Court would not set aside verdict for damages for personal injuries as excessive unless so excessive as to raise presumption of passion or corruption.

The Supreme Court would not be warranted in setting aside verdict for damages for personal injuries as excessive unless the award is so grossly disproportionate to compensation reasonably warranted as to raise a presumption that it was the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by Anna R. Chappell against the San Diego & Arizona Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment on a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in an action for damages for personal injuries. The collision involved occurred on May 12, 1921, at a point in the outskirts of the city of San Diego where Francis street, a north and south street, crosses the tracks of the defendant railway company at right angles. The defendant company operates a line of railroad, from San Diego to Lakeside, about 17 miles in length. On this line steam trains are operated for the carriage of passengers and freight. The company also operates thereon a heavy type of passenger and freight car, the motive power of which is distillate. Before the Francis street crossing is reached on the course outwardly from San Diego the cars of the railroad company proceed over a reverse or horseshoe curve. The view to the west of Francis street is in part obstructed by a hill and at the time of the accident was further partially obstructed by a growth of brush bordering the right of way. The grade of the curve is slightly upward as the tracks approach and cross Francis street. Just before the accident one of the gas motorcars of the defendant was nearing the Francis street crossing from the west. It was proceeding through the cut in the hill, which cut is from 5 to 9 feet in depth. The hill slopes downwardly to the level of the tracks at a point about 100 feet westerly from the crossing.

The plaintiff resides in the vicinity of said crossing. She has a son who was living at home at the time. He was employed in San Diego, usually not returning to his home for his noonday meal. On the day of the accident the plaintiff requested her son to return home at midday and as driver convey her to San Diego in a Ford automobile owned by the plaintiff. As the two proceeded along Francis street the automobile slowed down at a point about 8 or 10 feet from the tracks. It then proceeded slowly to the center of the railway track, where its motor stalled and the automobile stopped. The gas motorcar of the defendant struck the automobile and "dragged" it for some distance away from the crossing. Just before the impact the plaintiff's son jumped from the automobile, but the plaintiff remained therein, receiving as the result of the collision the injuries alleged in the complaint. The plaintiff charged the defendant with negligence, which the defendant denied. In a special defense the defendant charged the defendant with contributory negligence.

The court instructed the jury on the doctrine of the last clear chance, and from a survey of the record the jury must have applied that doctrine to the facts presented. Numerous specifications of error are advanced by the defendant. The first one to be discussed is that the facts presented to the jury were not such as to justify the instruction on last clear chance and that the giving of that instruction was prejudicial error. Without reviewing the evidence in detail it may be said from an examination of the record that there was sufficient evidence upon which the jury could find negligence on the part of the defendant. One witness testified that as the gas motorcar of the defendant was immediately approaching the crossing it was going 30 miles per hour. Another witness testified that it was going 45 miles per hour. Another witness testified that as the said car was approaching the crossing there was no signal or alarm given by the operator of the car. The civil engineer of the defendant testified that if the motorman was running his car faster than 25 miles per hour at the time in question he was going faster than the track at that point was built for. It was in evidence that the crossing was a very dangerous grade crossing especially by reason of the cut and the curve. There was also sufficient evidence upon which the jury could find contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. She was familiar with the dangerous character of the crossing and was in practical control of the car at the time of the accident. The approaching gas motorcar was observable for a distance of approximately 200 feet as it approached the crossing, and the son testified that but for unwarranted physical interference on the part of the plaintiff in driving the car at the crucial moment he would have gotten the car across the track in time to have avoided the collision. With the automobile stalled on the track the plaintiff was in a position of danger from which, it is reasonable to conclude, she could not, with the exercise of ordinary care, extricate herself.

[1-3] The doctrine of the last clear chance presupposes "that the plaintiff has been negligent; that as a result thereof she is in a situation of danger from which she cannot escape by the exercise of ordinary care; that the defendant is aware of her dangerous situation under such circumstances; that he realizes, or ought to realize, her inability to escape therefrom; that he then has a clear chance to avoid injuring her by the exercise of ordinary care, and fails to do so. If all of these elements are present the rule applies and enables the plaintiff to recover, notwithstanding her own negligence. But if any of them be absent the rule does not apply and the case is governed by the ordinary rules of negligence and contributory negligence." Palmer v. Tschudy, 191 Cal. 696, 700, 218 P. 36, 37. The doctrine is applicable when the defendant actually perceives the perilous position of the plaintiff in time to avoid the accident by the exercise of ordinary care. New York L. Oil Co. v. United Railroads, 191 Cal. 96, 101, 215 P. 72; 19 Cal. Jur. 651. The motorman testified that he was proceeding around the curve toward the crossing at about 25 miles an hour; that when he got within 55 or 60 feet of the crossing he saw the plaintiff's automobile moving slowly 6 or 8 feet from the track, and it looked as though it was trying to stop; that he immediately applied the emergency brake and, "did everything he could to stop." There was evidence that the automobile was "dragged" 70 feet east of the crossing where it stopped in a position parallel with that of the gas motorcar, and that the latter car, which was 72 feet long, then proceeded about half its length beyond the automobile with its front end approximately 106 feet from the center of the crossing. The motorman testified that as he approached the crossing he first saw the automobile from a point 50 or 60 feet from the crossing, at which time he was going about 20 miles per hour. The conductor testified that at the time of the impact his car was going about 12 miles per hour and that a car of that size going at the rate of 25 miles per hour would, with the emergency brakes applied, stop in 70 feet.

The jury had the right to believe from the testimony of the motorman and the conductor that the car could have been stopped before it reached the crossing. Under the evidence it could also have concluded that the car actually stopped with its front end about 166 feet easterly from the point where the motorman first observed the plaintiff in her perilous position. The conclusion of the motorman that he did everything he could to stop was not, under the evidence, binding on the jury. Independently of the speed of the car the jury could find negligence on the part of the defendant by reason of a lack of sufficient warning signal. True, there was abundant evidence upon which a contrary conclusion could have been based on the issue of defendant's negligence, but from what has been said as to the evidence favoring the plaintiff it is seen that from the proximity of one evidentiary fact to another it was the province of the jury to determine their relation. The verdict must be taken as a finding that the defendant's car failed to stop as soon as it was possible for it to have done so in the exercise of due care, and that the last act of negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the injury. This it was the province of the jury to find under the instructions of the court relating to the doctrine of the last clear chance. There was no error in giving the instruction complained of on that subject.

We have examined and considered the other points elaborately briefed by the defendant and orally argued. Certain remarks made by counsel for the plaintiff in the closing address to the jury commenting on the stop, look, and listen rule were highly improper, and standing alone might call for a declaration of prejudicial misconduct if it were not for the fact that the trial judge's reprimand and strictures on the argument, in our opinion, fully offset any possible damage which the remarks otherwise might have had.

[4] Prejudicial misconduct is charged against the plaintiff herself. It was averred in affidavits filed on the motion for a new trial that the plaintiff sought to influence certain women jurors during the course of the trial and when the court was in recess by voluntarily addressing said jurors and representing to them her serious physical condition. These statements were denied by the plaintiff in counter affidavits filed on the hearing of the motion. The conflict in the evidence thus presented was resolved in plaintiff's favor in the denial of the motion, and we are not at liberty on appeal, in the absence of an abuse of discretion, and none appears, to disturb the court's conclusion thereon.

[5] Certain rulings of the court are challenged. Over the objection of defendant's counsel a witness on behalf of the plaintiff was permitted to testify concerning the speeds at which gas motorcars of the defendant had been observed by him to be operated around said curve on occasions other than upon the day and at the time of the accident. Clearly it was error to permit this testimony to go to the jury (Starr v. Los Angeles Ry.

Corp., 187 Cal. 270, 281, 201 P. 599), but in the light of other evidence concerning the speed of the car at the time in question it cannot be said that but for said improperly admitted evidence the verdict would have been for the defendant. Objections to other rulings of the court have been examined. Many of them are without merit, and none of them is deemed of sufficient importance to warrant a reversal of the judgment. Nor do we find any valid objections to the charge to the jury.

[6] Finally, it is contended by the defendant that the verdict was excessive. The plaintiff sued to recover $274 for expenses incurred for medical attention, medicines, and nurse hire, and $40,000 for personal injuries. The verdict was in a lump sum of $3,000. The claim of excessive damages is based largely on the admittedly false swearing of the plaintiff as to matters bearing on her physical condition. It is beyond question that she received substantial injuries. She testified that she was confined to her bed for a period of 27 days; that when she was able to get up from her bed she had to have help to get around; that she was hurt from head to foot; that she was a mass of black and blue bruises; that she was unable to do her housework for a long period of time, and that at the time of the trial she was not able to do all of it; that she had not recovered and is in continual pain; that her chest and her arm are numb and that she could not raise her hand with which to comb her hair; that she could not carry her foot in walking; that she gets numb and is continually falling; that she had no appetite and does not care to eat and has indigestion; that her outlook on life has changed and she does not want to go any place; that she is very easily excited and is tired all of the time; that there are permanent marks on her body; that there is a large lump on her back; that there is a fracture of the breastbone with a lump thereon about the size of an egg; that there is a lump on her ear; that there is a large place on her shoulder and that she has severe trouble with her eyes.

On cross-examination, she admitted that she had gone for an automobile ride on the day after the accident. She denied that she had gone about 10 months after the accident, to Tiajuana to attend the races; she denied that she had taken automobile trips during the time that she claimed to have been disabled; she denied that she requested a friend on one of said trips to introduce her as Mrs. Caudell, so that her identity might not be known; she denied that she had gone to numerous cafés, saloons, and cabarets on a trip to Tiajuana, drinking and dancing therein; she denied that she had endeavored to influence certain witnesses who might be called to testify; she denied that she had told her friends that she was going to lengthen her dress and wear the same with an old coat and shoes at the trial because she had been told that the jurors on a former mistrial of the cause had said that she looked too "young and catfish" to be injured to the extent she claimed, and that she could afford to wear these old clothes for a few days because of the large verdict she expected to get. She made the foregoing and similar denials on her cross-examination. Subsequently she returned to the witness stand and admitted that said denials were not true. This she did, so she testified, on the advice of her counsel to tell the truth as to all such matters. The record discloses a deliberate purpose on the part of the plaintiff to exaggerate her injuries and to play upon the sympathies of the jurors. Her counsel, in his closing argument to the jury, said:

"I don't want you to believe my client, because I don't believe her, she has lied to me and she has lied to you."

[7] The medical testimony on behalf of the plaintiff did not show any causal connection between the lumps on her breastbone and her ear and the injuries actually received, but there was reliable evidence that she was suffering from a "clear-cut, definite traumatic neurosis." This testimony need not be elaborated upon. It may be said, however, that if the extent of the plaintiff's injuries were to be determined by the testimony of the medical experts and other witnesses produced on behalf of the plaintiff, and entirely independent of her own testimony on the subject, it could not be concluded that the amount of the verdict was disproportionate to the injuries received. Since the plaintiff's exaggerations as to her injuries and physical condition and her false swearing with reference thereto were before the jury on her own admissions at the trial, it is quite probable that the jury took into consideration those factors in fixing the amount of the verdict. On the record we cannot say that the award of damages in this case was so grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted as to be a shock to the sense of justice and raise a presumption that the verdict was the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption rather than of an honest and sober judgment. Unless this may be said, the court on appeal would not be warranted in setting aside the verdict as excessive. Kelley v. Hodge Transportation System, 197 Cal. 598, 610, 242 P. 76.

The judgment is affirmed.

CAPRON v. VAN HORN. (L. A. 8546.)

Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 28, 1927.

1. Public lands ⇨122—Limitation on suits by United States held not to validate patent as against person in possession claiming adverse equitable interest (U. S. Comp. St. § 5114).

Patent issued by United States to patentee selecting land in lieu of school land, on revocation of order withdrawing lands from entry, held not validated, as against adverse equitable interest of person in possession, by Act Cong. March 3, 1891, c. 561, § 8 (U. S. Comp. St. § 5114), limiting suits by United States to vacate and annul patents to period of six years after issuance, as statute constitutes bar as against United States only.

2. Public lands ⇨122—Limitation on suits by United States is effective to validate patentee's title only as against United States (U. S. Comp. St. § 5114).

Act Cong. March 3, 1891, c. 561, § 8 (U. S. Comp. St. § 5114), limiting suits by United States to annul patents to period of six years, merely fixes time within which United States may institute proceedings to vacate and annul patent for mistake or fraud, and running of statutory period does not validate patentee's title except as against United States.

3. Public lands ⇨128—Equitable claimant to land as against patentee must show superior right entitling him to patent.

Equitable claimant who institutes proceedings to have patentee of government lands declared trustee of title in his favor must not only show that patentee should not have received patent, but that claimant's right in land is superior to that of patentee, such as would have entitled claimant to patent.

4. Public lands ⇨29—One occupying public land withdrawn from entry is trespasser, and makes improvements at own risk (Reclamation Act Cong. June 17, 1902 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708]).

Occupancy by private individual of public lands during time order of withdrawal from entry under Reclamation Act Cong. June 17, 1902 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708), is in force constitutes trespass, and occupant's improvements are made at his own risk.

5. Public lands ⇨29—Unauthorized occupancy of public land withdrawn from entry nevertheless became lawful on revocation of withdrawal order "vacant"; "unreserved" (Reclamation Act Cong. June 17, 1902 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708]; Act Cong. May 2, 1914 [38 Stat. 372]).

Though entry on public land was unauthorized, occupancy at time of revocation of order withdrawing land from entry under Reclamation Act Cong. June 17, 1902 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708), became lawful, especially where occupant had applied for desert land entry, and made improvements, and land on revocation of withdrawal order ceased to be "vacant" or "unreserved" land under Act Cong. May 2, 1914 (38 Stat. 372).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Vacancy—Vacant—Vacate.]

6. Public lands ⇨53—Where approval of patentee's lieu selection and revocation of withdrawal order were simultaneous, patentee acquired no rights except as against United States (Reclamation Act Cong. June 17, 1902 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708]; Act Cong. May 2, 1914 [38 Stat. 372]; U. S. Comp. St. § 5114).

Where revocation of order which withdrew land from entry in connection with reclamation project under Reclamation Act Cong. June 17, 1902 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708), and approval of selection of patentee of part of such land in lieu of school land were simultaneous acts, approval of lieu selection took place before land became "unreserved" and "vacant" public land, subject to disposal under Act Cong. May 2, 1914 (38 Stat. 372), and gave patentee no rights therein except as against United States on expiration of period of limitation on patent under Act Cong. March 3, 1891, c. 561, § 8 (U. S. Comp. St. § 5114).

7. Public lands ⇨53—Person in possession on revocation of withdrawal order held entitled to land as against patentee whose lieu selection was approved at revocation (Reclamation Act Cong. June 17, 1902 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708]; Act Cong. May 2, 1914 [38 U. S. Stat. 372]).

In action to recover real property and quiet title, defendant holding possession of government land and making improvements under application for desert land entry during pendency of order withdrawing land from entry under Act Cong. June 17, 1902, commonly known as Reclamation Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708), and at and after time of revocation of such order, held entitled to land as against patentee whose selection thereof in lieu of school land under Act Cong. May 2, 1914 (38 Stat. 372), was approved at time of revocation of order, as defendant in possession and making improvements became rightful occupant when land was thrown open to entry.

8. Public lands ⇨41—Finding that unauthorized possession during period when land was withdrawn from entry was not in good faith held unsupported (Reclamation Act Cong. June 17, 1902 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708]).

In action by patentee to quiet title against person who had possession and made improvements while land was withdrawn from entry under Reclamation Act Cong. June 17, 1902 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708), and who had applied for desert land entry, evidence held insufficient to support finding that defendant's unauthorized possession was not in good faith.

9. Public lands ⇨41—Attempt of person in possession of lands without authority to protect right of settlement against patentee is not evidence of bad faith.

Fact that claimant to property appears holding under government patent, and that person in possession of land, previously withdrawn from entry, seeks by all available means to protect his right of settlement, does not constitute evidence of lack of good faith on part of person in possession.

10. Public lands ⚡116—Acceptance of patent to portion of land in desert land entry held not to estop claimant as against patentee of remaining part.

Fact that person holding possession of tract of government land accepted patent of portion of land included within original application for entry under desert land law held not to constitute estoppel to assert claim to remaining portion as against patentee of United States.

11. Appeal and error ⚡122(2), 1176(4)—Supreme Court has no power to make findings or to direct judgment when existing findings will not support judgment directed (Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, c. 352; Const. art. 6, § 4¾, as added by Const. Amendment No. 16 [see St. 1925, p. 1380]).

Supreme Court has no power to make findings or to direct judgment when existing findings of trial court will not support judgment so directed, as Const. art. 6, § 4¾, added by Const. Amendment No. 16 (see St. 1925, p. 1380), is not self-operative; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, c. 352, not having become effective.

12. Constitutional law ⚡33—Constitutional provision relating to power of Supreme Court to make findings is not self-operative (Const. art. 6, § 4¾, as added by Const. Amendment No. 16 [see St. 1925, p. 1380]).

Const. Amendment No. 16, amending Const. art. 6, by adding thereto section 4¾ (see St. 1925, p. 1380) relative to subject of power of Supreme Court to make findings contrary to those of trial court, is not self-operative.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Irene Elizabeth Capron, individually and as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Sarah F. Donley, deceased, against Erwin Ray Van Horn, in which defendant interposed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, for appellant.

Haines & Haines, of San Diego, and J. S. Larew, of El Centro, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Imperial. Sarah F. Donley, the patentee of the land in controversy, instituted this action for its recovery and to quiet her title thereto. In his answer to the complaint the defendant denied that the patentee had any right, title, or interest in and to said property or any part thereof, and by way of cross-complaint alleged the equitable title to said property to be in himself. The cross-complaint concluded with a prayer that the patentee be required to execute and deliver to the defendant a deed of grant conveying said property to him. After trial the court adjudged the patentee to be the owner and entitled to the possession of the land. An appeal from said judgment was taken by the defendant, which appeal resulted in a reversal of the judgment. Donley v. Van Horn, 49 Cal. App. 383, 193 P. 514. Thereafter, and pending a retrial, the patentee died, and the present plaintiff was, by order of court duly substituted in her personal capacity as grantee of the patentee and in her representative capacity as administratrix of the estate of said deceased patentee. Upon the second trial of the cause judgment was again entered in favor of the plaintiff, whereupon the present appeal is prosecuted by the defendant.

The complicated facts giving rise to this litigation are fully stated in the following portion of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal rendered upon the first appeal:

"The land which is situated in Imperial county has been in the exclusive occupancy of defendant ever since some time prior to December 26, 1911, on which date he filed in the proper office, viz., the local land office at Los Angeles, his application to make entry under the desert land law. The land is a part of a large tract that, on April 2, 1909, was withdrawn from entry by the secretary of the interior in connection with the Yuma reclamation project, pursuant to authority conferred by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stats. at L., p. 388), commonly known as the Reclamation Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4700-4708). This withdrawal was under what is known as the first form of withdrawal; that is, it was the withdrawal of lands that, in the opinion of the secretary of the interior, may be needed in the construction and maintenance of irrigation works. * * *

"On May 10, 1915, while the land still was withdrawn from entry or sale under the secretary's withdrawal order of April 2, 1909, plaintiff, who claimed to be the owner of a certain section of state school land, for which the state had issued to her a patent, made selection of the land in controversy under the act of May 2, 1914 (38 U. S. Stats. 372), in lieu of her school land, and a patent of the lieu land so selected by her was issued to her by the United States on August 9, 1916. The act under which plaintiff made her lieu selection—the act of May 2, 1914—provides that 'the state of California or its grantees may, with the approval of the secretary of the interior, reconvey to the United States any of the lands heretofore granted to said state in the townships authorized to be resurveyed by the act of July 1, 1902, * * * and select in lieu thereof an equal amount of vacant, unappropriated, surveyed, unreserved, nonmineral public lands within said state.' * * *

"Subsequently to the withdrawal of the land from entry on April 2, 1909, under the first form of withdrawal authorized by the act of June 17, 1902, viz., on March 17, 1913, the reclamation service reported to the secretary of the interior that certain of the lands so withdrawn, including the land in controversy, were not necessary to the reclamation project, and recommended the revocation of the withdrawal order. The day following the filing of this report, viz., March 18, 1913, the assistant secretary of the interior indorsed on the report of the reclamation service an order approving the recommendation. This indorsement did not operate as an absolute and immediate revocation of the withdrawal order of April 2, 1909; for, by the express terms of this order of March 18, 1913, so indorsed on the report of the reclamation service, the assistant secretary directed the commissioner of the general land office to ascertain whether the lands included in the report of the reclamation service had been otherwise withdrawn or reserved by law, and, if not, to cause notice to be given that they will be open to settlement and entry at times to be fixed by the commissioner. Before such notice could be given, viz., on April 17, 1913 the order of March 18, 1913, was suspended, after a copy thereof had been forwarded to the register and receiver of the Los Angeles land office. The order that the assistant secretary had so indorsed on the report of the reclamation service on March 18, 1913, was thus suspended 'pending determination of the best method of opening the lands to entry.' At the date of the suspension of the order of March 18, 1913, viz., on April 17, 1913, it was further ordered that the land that plaintiff proposed to select in lieu of her state school land be not restored to entry, in order that the land department might effect the exchange that it was proposed to make with her if and when the bill that later was enacted as the act of May 2, 1914, should become a law. On the same day that this suspension order of April 17, 1913, was made, the assistant commissioner of the general land office sent a telegram to the register and receiver of the Los Angeles land office, notifying the latter that the order of March 18, 1913, revoking the withdrawal of the lands, had been suspended, and to return the revocation order to the general land office in Washington. This was done. Thereafter no attempt was made by the land department to revoke the original withdrawal order of April 2, 1909, in so far as the land in controversy is concerned, until November 3, 1915, on which date the first assistant secretary of the interior approved a report of the commissioner of the general land office, recommending that, as to this land, the withdrawal order of April 2, 1909, be revoked, and that the lieu selection that plaintiff previously had made on May 10, 1915, under the act of May 2, 1914, be approved. The net result of the foregoing is that, as to the land in controversy, the withdrawal order of April 2, 1909, was in full force and effect from the time when it was made until November 3, 1915.

"On December 26, 1911, defendant, as we already have stated, tendered to the local land office in Los Angeles an application to make a desert land entry on the land in controversy. This application was rejected on the ground that the land had been withdrawn from entry by the withdrawal order of April 2, 1909, and that such withdrawal was still in full force and effect. Defendant appealed successively to the commissioner of the general land office and to the secretary of the interior, by both of whom his right to make such entry while the land was withdrawn for irrigation works was denied. During all these times defendant was a citizen of the United States, possessed of all the qualifications essential to qualify him to make entry upon such of the public lands as might be open to entry and legal settlement. At all times since December 26, 1911, the land has been in the exclusive occupancy of defendant, who went upon it and made settlement, with the intention of perfecting a title thereto under the United States land laws, as soon as an application to make entry might be favorably acted upon by the land department. During his occupancy he cultivated the land, and, at considerable expense, made valuable improvements thereon. * * *

"On February 17, 1914, which was prior to the passage of the act of May 2, 1914, and while the land was still withdrawn from settlement or entry under the secretary's withdrawal order of April 2, 1909, plaintiff wrote a letter to the land department, expressing a willingness to select the land in controversy in lieu of her state school land. The first assistant secretary of the interior, in a letter dated March 21, 1914, addressed to plaintiff, informed her that if the bill then pending in congress, and which subsequently was enacted as the act of May 2, 1914, became a law, its provisions would enable her to make the selection. 'In the meantime,' so the letter runs, 'the Commissioner of the General Land Office has been directed to withhold any of the above tract that you desire to select from restoration to entry. Should H. R. 122 be enacted into law, proper steps will be taken by this Department to enable you to make selection of the land in lieu of that claimed by you under the grant from the State of California.' On November 14, 1914, the secretary of the interior notified the commissioner of the general land office that, in view of the fact that the department had knowledge of the character and status of the land that plaintiff desired to select under the act of May 2, 1914, the usual affidavit as to the character and status of lieu land, required by the departmental regulations to be made by persons making such lieu selections, could be waived. The secretary also notified the commissioner to instruct the local register and receiver to transmit to the general land office at Washington, without action on their part, the papers to be filed by plaintiff in the Los Angeles office, when she should make her lieu selection. The commissioner likewise was instructed to take prompt action upon plaintiff's deed of reconveyance and lieu selection, upon receipt thereof. On May 10, 1915, plaintiff filed in the local land office at Los Angeles her lieu land selection, whereby she made selection of the land in controversy, and, at the same time, recorded a deed whereby she conveyed to the United States the base land for the lieu selection, viz., the state school land for which she held a patent from the state.

"On June 27, 1915, the commissioner of the general land office transmitted to the secretary of the interior a written report wherein he recommended approval of plaintiff's lieu selection. This report to the secretary of the interior, after reciting the complications and conflicts involved in plaintiff's school section and stating that plaintiff is willing to reconvey her school land to the United States, and, in lieu thereof, select the land in controversy, and after reciting the facts showing the exact status of the land, including defendant's attempted desert land entry and his occupancy, concludes with the following recommendations: (1) That the withdrawal order of April 2, 1909, be revoked, and the fixing of dates for settlement and entry waived; and (2) that the plaintiff's selection, made May 10, 1915, be approved. On November 3, 1915, these recommendations were approved by the following order indorsed on the commissioner's written report: 'Nov. 3, 1915. Approved; and it is so ordered. Andrieus A. Jones, First Assistant Secretary.' Thereafter, on August 9, 1916, the United States issued to plaintiff the patent under which she claims title to the land in controversy."

The District Court of Appeal on the former appeal decided that title had not passed from the United States under the patent issued to the plaintiff's predecessor in interest, for the reason that the land purporting to have been so patented was not at the time "vacant" and "unreserved" land within the meaning of the act of May 2, 1914, and that there was a period of time, although short, just before the effectual moment of the patent, when the defendant was a legal occupant of the land, with improvements thereon made by him, and not a mere trespasser. The judgment decreeing title to be in the patentee and quieting her title was therefore reversed. Upon the going down of the remittitur the plaintiff, on May 18, 1925, filed in the trial court what is termed a "Supplement to Complaint," wherein it was alleged, among other things, that more than six years had elapsed since the issuance of the patent to plaintiff's predecessor in interest, and that under and by virtue of that certain act of Congress of March 3, 1891, c. 561, § 8 (26 Stats. at Large, 1099 [U. S. Comp. St. § 5114]), the said patent and all said proceedings leading up to it had become absolute, and their validity not open to attack on any ground by the United States. The defendant denied that said act of Congress had the effect of validating the patent issued to the plaintiff's predecessor in interest as against him, and alleged that said congressional act "has no reference to suits by an individual brought by reason of private right."

The act relied upon by the plaintiff in the supplement filed to the complaint reads, in part, as follows:

"Suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent heretofore issued shall only be brought within five years from the passage of this act, and suits to vacate and annul patents hereafter issued shall only be brought within six years after the date of the issuance of such patents." 26 Stats. at Large, 1099 (U. S. Comp. St. § 5114).

It appears that the six-year period prescribed for the institution of proceedings by the United States to annul and vacate the patent under which plaintiff claims title had expired subsequent to the decision herein by the District Court of Appeal upon the former appeal, but prior to the filing of said "Supplement to Complaint." The court on the second trial of the cause found, among other things:

"That more than six years have elapsed after the date of the issuance of said patent as aforesaid, and that the United States never brought any action to vacate and annul said patent, and that by virtue of that certain act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, chapter 561, section 8, of 26 Statutes at Large, page 1099, said patent and all the proceedings in the General Land Office of the United States in all its departments taken and had leading up to said patent have become absolute and valid from the beginning, and are not open to attack on any ground, and that said Sarah F. Donley became the owner of the fee title to said land by virtue of said patent."

In view of this finding, it becomes necessary to determine what effect, if any, the expiration of this statutory period had on the rights of the respective parties.

[1] The decisions of the United States Supreme Court are uniform to the effect that the act of March 3, 1891, supra, merely fixes the period of time within which the United States may institute proceedings to vacate and annul a patent issued by mistake or as a result of fraud, and that the period of limitation therein prescribed may not be availed of by the patentee in defense of other actions bringing into issue the validity of a patent. That this statutory bar may be relied upon by a patentee only in defense of actions commenced by the United States and having for their purpose the annulment of a patent is indicated in the case of United States v. Winona, etc., R. R., 165 U. S. 463, 475, 17 S. Ct. 368, 371 (41 L. Ed. 789) where it is stated that Congress "has distinctly recognized the fact that when there are no adverse individual rights, and only the claims of the government and of the present holder of the title [are] to be considered, it is fitting that a time should come when no mere errors or irregularities on the part of the officers of the land department should be open for consideration. In other words, it has recognized that, as against itself in respect to these land transactions, it is right that there should be a statute of limitations; that when its proper officers, acting in the ordinary course of their duties have conveyed away lands which belonged to the government, such conveyances should, after the lapse of a prescribed time, be conclusive against the government, and this notwithstanding any errors, irregularities or improper action of its officers therein." Further along in the opinion it is declared:

"There can be no question of the power of Congress to terminate, by appropriate legislation, any suit brought to assert simply the rights of the government."

The case of United States v. Chandler-Dunbar Co., 209 U. S. 447, 450, 28 S. Ct. 579, 580 (52 L. Ed. 881) from which the plaintiff attempts to derive some comfort, also holds that:

"This statute must be taken to mean that the patent is to be held good and is to have the same effect against the United States that it would have had if it had been valid in the first place."

In United States v. Whited & Wheless, 246 U. S. 552, 561, 562, 38 S. Ct. 367, 62 L. Ed. 579, it was held that, while the expiration of the six-year period precluded the federal government from annulling the patent therein involved, it did not constitute a bar to the government's right of action to recover the value of the lands fraudulently procured under said patent. In reaching such a conclusion the court stated:

"The statute of limitations did not create the right of action in the government or either of the remedies for enforcing that right. It relates to the remedy, and in terms applies only to one remedy, that for annulling the patent. * * * The statute was passed to promote prompt action for annulling patents where cause therefor was believed to exist and to make titles resting upon patents dependably secure when the period of limitation should expire."

[2] The foregoing authorities definitely establish that the running of the period prescribed in the act of March 3, 1891, supra, has no other effect than to make the title in the patentee good as against the grantor—the United States. That the expiration of said statutory period within which the federal government might proceed to annul a patent does not preclude a person other than the patentee from asserting and enforcing an interest adverse to that of the patentee was decided in the case of United States v. New Orleans Pac. Ry. Co., 248 U. S. 507, 39 S. Ct. 175, 63 L. Ed. 388. That action was instituted by the United States for and on behalf of certain homestead claimants, who were permitted to intervene. It was sought therein to procure the annulment of the defendant's patents to certain lands, or, if that relief be denied, to have the defendant decreed to be trustee of the title to said land for the homesteaders. Construing a statute of limitation similar to the one here involved, the court said:

"As the patents were issued before, and the suits were brought more than five years after, the Act of March 2, 1896, c. 39, 29 Stat. 42 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4901–4903] the prayer that the patents be canceled must be put out of view, and the alternative prayer—that the title under the patents be declared to be held in trust for the homestead claimants and the trust enforced—must be regarded as if standing alone."

It is readily apparent from a reading of that decision that the equitable claimant to patented land may assert and enforce his adverse interest therein even though as against the United States the patent has become valid and conclusive by the running of the period limited for the institution of proceedings by the government to annul such patent.

It follows from what has been said that the expiration of the six-year period prescribed in the act of March 3, 1891, may be availed of by a patentee under the federal government only in defense of an action brought by said government to annul the patent. It does not constitute a bar to the assertion and enforcement of an adverse equitable interest in and to the land so patented. This being so, the trial court's finding, quoted above, to the effect that the plaintiff's patent and the proceedings leading to the issuance thereof "have become absolute and valid from the beginning, and are not open to attack on any grounds" was erroneous, and prejudicially affected the adverse equitable claim advanced by the defendant in his cross-complaint.

[3] That an equitable claim to patented land may institute proceedings to have the patentee declared trustee of the title to said land has been determined upon numerous occasions. The cases indicate, however, that it is not sufficient that such equitable claimant show that the patentee ought not to have received the patent, but it is incumbent upon him to show a better right to the land than the patentee, such as in law should have been respected by the officers of the land department, and, being respected, would have given him the patent. Sparks v. Pierce, 115 U. S. 408, 413, 6 S. Ct. 102, 29 L. Ed. 428; Lee v. Johnson, 116 U. S. 48, 49, 6 S. Ct. 249, 29 L. Ed. 570; Duluth & Iron Range R. R. v. Roy, 173 U. S. 587, 590, 19 S. Ct. 549, 43 L. Ed. 820. In the case of Bohall v. Dilla, 114 U. S. 47, 50, 5 S. Ct. 782, 783 (29 L. Ed. 61) it is recognized that "the system of pleading in civil cases in the courts of California permits an equitable defense to be set up in a special count, by way of cross-complaint, in the answer to an action for the possession of lands. The cross-complaint is in the nature of a bill in equity, and must contain its material allegations, disclosing a case which, if established, would entitle the defendant to a decree * * * directing that the title be conveyed to him." The defendant herein has followed the procedure indicated in the case last cited.

[4-7] It remains to determine whether the defendant has established a better right to the land than the patentee and her successor in interest and a right to the conveyance prayed for. It will be remembered from the statement of facts that the land had been withdrawn by the Secretary of the Interior from entry and selection by an order bearing date April 2, 1909, and that defendant entered and settled upon the land prior to the revocation of said order of withdrawal. The defendant's occupancy of the land during all of the time that the order of withdrawal was in force was, of course, no better than that of a trespasser, and any improvements were made at his own risk. However, the fact that defendant's entry upon the land was unauthorized would not prevent his occupancy from becoming lawful, if, before any right could vest in a third person, the withdrawal order should be revoked and the land again restored to settlement and entry while occupied by the defendant. To preclude the defendant's occupancy from thus assuming the character of lawfulness, the respondent urges that the revocation of the withdrawal order and the approval of the patentee's lieu selection took place at the same instant, without any interval of time intervening. "If the revocation of the withdrawal order and the approval of respondent's lieu selection were so absolutely synchronous that no instant of time whatever, however short, elapsed between the revocation of the withdrawal and the approval of respondent's lieu selection, then it necessarily follows that, at the very instant when the secretary approved respondent's lieu selection, the land still was under the spell of the withdrawal order, and that therefore, when her selection was approved, the land was not 'unreserved' public land subject to disposal by the land department under the act of May 2, 1914." Donley v. Van Horn, supra, page 393 (193 P. 518). Inasmuch as the land in question was not "vacant" and "unreserved" land at the time the plaintiff's predecessor secured approval of her lieu selection, such selection and approval were unauthorized under the act of May 2, 1914, and the patent purporting to grant said land was unauthorized, and plaintiff's predecessor in interest acquired no right or title in or to said land by virtue of the patent except as against the United States upon the expiration of the period of limitation. This being so, the defendant's occupancy, theretofore ineffectual, became lawful, for "at the very instant that the withdrawal order was revoked, the land became open to entry, and appellant, who had occupied the land all this time waiting for the day when he lawfully could make entry under the public land laws, who had made valuable improvements, who, possessing the necessary qualifications, had vainly tried to enter the land under the Desert Land Act, who diligently prosecuted appeals from adverse decisions of the local land officers and the commissioner of the general land office to the Secretary of the Interior himself, and whose every act betokens a patient awaiting of the time when he could make lawful entry under the public land laws, became a lawful settler in actual and lawful occupation, and at that very instant the land ceased to be 'vacant.'" Donley v. Van Horn, supra.

In Moss v. Dowman, 176 U. S. 413, 420, 20 S. Ct. 429, 44 L. Ed. 526, one Doran had made a homestead entry of the land there in controversy on May 7, 1890, without occupying the same. Thereafter, and on September 18, 1890, Dowman went upon said land, built a cabin, and continued to live there. Moss subsequently paid Doran $1,000 for the relinquishment of his homestead entry, which relinquishment was filed in the local land office by Moss on October 24, 1890, and a homestead entry made in her (Moss's) own name. Said Moss thereafter occupied the land. In a contest between Dowman and Moss as to which had the right to acquire title to the land, the Secretary of the Interior determined in favor of Dowman and a patent issued to him. The United States Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, declaring, in part:

"At the moment of filing that relinquishment, Dowman, the defendant, was a settler in occupation of the tract, and Moss, the plaintiff, made her application to enter, and the question is as to the relative rights, at the moment the land becomes open to entry, of one a settler in actual occupation and one making a formal entry in the land office. For reasons heretofore stated, we have no doubt that the settler is entitled to preference. * * * That Dowman had acquired no rights by his settlement prior to Doran's relinquishment, and might as respects Doran have been regarded as a trespasser, makes no difference. When Doran relinquished Dowman ceased to be a trespasser, and was not only an actual, but a lawful settler. There was no evidence of mala fides about Dowman's settlement which should affect its legality when the time came for a right to attach to it under the land laws. Neither Doran nor any of the long line of speculative homesteaders who had kept up holdings by entries and relinquishments every six months had ever appeared on the land. The object of the homestead laws is not to encourage speculation, but settlement, and if Dowman knew all the antecedent facts he might well expect that an actual settler would acquire the right to the land, lawfully, upon the next relinquishment, and make his settlement as the Secretary finds as a fact that it was made—in good faith."

In the case of Svor v. Morris, 227 U. S. 524, 527, 33 S. Ct. 385, 57 L. Ed. 623, the defendant had settled upon land not then open to entry because of a prior indemnity withdrawal. The court assumed, without deciding, that such original and wrongful entry established no right in the defendant, but concluded that "he was not disqualified by reason of what he had done before" from acquiring the land, and that "it was not necessary that he should go through the idle ceremony of vacating the land and then settling upon it anew."

[8-10] The record on this appeal consists of the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. In addition to the finding that the patent was valid as against the defendant by reason of the lapse of the six-year period from the issuance thereof, the court also found that the possession, use, and occupation taken, made, and held by the defendant was not in good faith. Aside from the documentary evidence above referred to, the only evidence appearing in the bill of exceptions bearing on the subject of good faith is that of the defendant himself. He testified that he went upon the land in 1912. At that time it was in its desert state, with no improvements upon it whatsoever. He bought water stock, which is now appurtenant to the land. He cleared, leveled, and fenced the entire tract. He ditched and bordered the land, and installed cement headgates. He built a house and constructed other permanent improvements. He moved on the land with his family in 1912, and lived on the same continuously from that time until 1919, conducting farming operations thereon during all of that time. This action was commenced on February 1, 1917. The defendant went on the land when no other claimant was in sight or apparently in being, and at all times intended to, and did, reclaim it at great expense. There is in the record no evidence of lack of good faith and the finding is unsupported. The fact that a claimant later appeared and that the defendant has sought by all available means to protect his right of settlement under the law do not constitute evidence of lack of good faith. There was never a time when the plaintiff's predecessor in interest could have legally made an entry on the land owing to the fact that, by the terms of the act of Congress under which the plaintiff claims, the occupancy of the defendant at the very time such entry was attempted to be made precluded such entry. The defendant made application for the land under the desert land law, and made his payment as required by law. After rejection of his original application, he renewed the same, and the land department still retains the money. On the record before us it is clear that his claim should have been recognized. We attach no controlling importance to the fact that he accepted from the government a patent to a portion of the land included within his original application, which portion was not sought to be patented by the plaintiff's predecessor in interest. He thereby merely took what he was lawfully entitled to take, and was not estopped from claiming what was further due him.

By reason of the trial court's erroneous conclusion that the statute of limitation had in effect confirmed the patent here involved in the plaintiff's predecessor in interest, and was a bar to any relief to the defendant on his cross-complaint, and further by reason of the fact that the findings are otherwise unsupported, as above indicated, the judgment must be reversed.

[11, 12] We are asked, in the event of a reversal, to direct the trial court to enter a judgment in favor of the defendant on his cross-complaint. The legal title to the land in suit is unquestionably in the plaintiff. The federal government appears to have no further interest in the same. This litigation is now resolved into a controversy between the plaintiff and the defendant, and, as the facts are undisputed, the situation might present a case wherein this court could make its own findings consistent with and in support of the judgment sought to be ordered, if the legislation designed to authorize courts on appeal to make findings of fact contrary to those made by the trial court were now effective. But bearing on this subject constitutional amendment number 16, adopted at the last general state election amending article 6 of the Constitution by adding thereto section 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ (see St. 1925, p. 1380), is not self-operative. Nor is chapter 352 of the laws of 1927, adding section 956a to the Code of Civil Procedure, and providing for such findings of fact on appeal, yet in effect. When that section becomes a law by reason of the constitutional lapse of time it will not even then be self-operative, for the reason that rules of this court must thereafter be promulgated in order to effectuate the purpose of the legislation. At the present time this court has no power to make findings; nor has it the power to direct a judgment when the existing findings of the trial court would not support the judgment so directed. Bank of British Columbia v. Frese, 116 Cal. 9, 16, 47 P. 783; 2 Cal. Jur. 993. This case does not, therefore, present a situation where the court would now be justified in directing a judgment as requested. Accordingly the only appropriate order is an order of reversal.

The judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, for appellant. Haines & Haines, of San Diego, and J. S. Lawren, of El Centro, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Imperial in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant. The facts are the same as those involved in the case of Capron v. Van Horn (L. A. No. 8546), 258 P. 77, this day decided, with the exception of the name of the defendant and the description of the land. On the authority of said case this day decided it is ordered that the judgment be, and the same is hereby, reversed.

MONTEZUMA MOUNTAIN RANCH SCHOOL et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 12402.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 15, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 11, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⚡403—Burden was on employer and insurer to show compensation claimant was employee of independent contractor (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 19d).

Where a compensation claimant was at the time of the injury actually performing services for the alleged employer, the alleged employer and its insurer had the burden of proving their claim that the claimant was an employee of an independent contractor and not a compensable employee, under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 19d (St. 1917, p. 831).

2. Master and servant ⚡405(2)—Finding of Industrial Accident Board that claimant was compensable employee held sustained by evidence (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 19d).

In compensation proceedings, evidence held to sustain finding of Industrial Accident Board that the alleged employer and its insurer did not sustain the burden imposed by Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 19d (St. 1917, p. 831), of proving their claim that the compensation claimant was an employee of an independent contractor and not a compensable employee.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Forrest Wilder, opposed by the Montezuma Mountain Ranch School, a corporation, employer, and the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, insurer. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation, the employer and the insurer bring certiorari. Award affirmed.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This is a petition for a writ of certiorari in the matter of an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission to Forrest Wilder, who lost his foot while engaged in operating a gasoline motor saw. J. A. Wilder, the father of the compensation claimant, a rancher, purchased a gasoline wood-sawing outfit to be used by him in cutting or sawing timbers into fuel wood lengths for his own use. The saw required a crew of three in its operation. H. J. Lloyd, the business manager of the Montezuma Mountain Ranch School, located in the county of Santa Clara, requested said J. A. Wilder to bring his outfit to the school grounds and saw into stove wood lengths certain wood upon the premises. An oral contract was made whereby Wilder was to receive $1.50 and $1.75 per cord, respectively, according to the lengths of the cuts. Wilder, Sr., was assisted in this work by his son, a young man 22 years of age, and another workman. At the conclusion of his employment, Mr. Lloyd took up with Wilder the proposition of sawing into usable sizes old materials taken from wrecked buildings, which had been piled in disorderly fashion upon the premises. Said old materials consisted of old doors, frames, window sashes, and other used materials. Iron locks, hinges, and nails were fastened to or imbedded in much of the old materials, which made it impractical to undertake the job upon a cord basis. Consequently it was agreed that the compensation should be $1.50 per hour for Wilder's services, including the use of the sawing outfit, and 50 cents per hour each for Wilder's son and the other man, who had worked with Wilder, Sr., and son in the first instance. The third man refused employment on the theory that the character of the materials to be handled was attended with more or less danger. Another man was furnished by Mr. Lloyd, the business manager of said Montezuma Mountain Ranch School. Several other employees of the Montezuma Mountain Ranch School were also put upon the job by Mr. Lloyd to assist in assorting and arranging the material to the end that the task might be finished as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Lloyd admitted that he reserved the right to terminate the work at will. He also reserved and exercised the right of placing more men at work on the job than was necessary to complete the crew complement of three men, and the amount of compensation that the elder Wilder and his son and any other person who might render service was to receive was discussed by Wilder and Lloyd, and the reasonable value of such services was understood to be $1.50 per hour and 50 cents per hour, respectively. In other words, $2.50 per hour or $20 per day (8-hour day was the basis of the employment. The most that can be said in this case is that there is an admixture of elements from which either of two conclusions may be drawn as to whether Forrest Wilder was an employee of the Montezuma Mountain Ranch School or an employee of his father, being an independent contractor.

[1, 2] The burden of proving that claimant was an employee of an independent contractor and not a compensable employee was upon petitioners. Section 19d, Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (Stat. 1917, p. 831); Hillen v. Industrial Accident Commission, 199 Cal. 577, 250 P. 570. This burden they did not fully overcome, in the view of the commission, and we are not convinced that the award stands wholly unsupported by proof. The fact that the check handed the father as full payment for the services rendered also included his son's earnings at 50 cents per hour, and was deposited in a bank to the credit of said son, has no significance in the circumstances of the situation.

The award is affirmed.

FINN v. GOLDSTEIN. (S. F. 11321.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 15, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 11, 1927.

1. Frauds, statute of §103(1)—Specific performance §25—Memorandum for sale of real property in form of receipt held sufficient within statute of frauds and for specific enforcement.

Memorandum for sale and purchase of real property, in form of receipt by the vendor, of "deposits on three flats and four stores located on Twenty-Fourth street, known as Nos. 3257-3269," stating "cost of property—$11,500," with signed acceptance by purchaser, held sufficient under the statute of frauds and sufficiently certain for specific enforcement.

2. Specific performance §114(2)—Allegation in complaint for specific performance that purchase price was not disproportionate to value held technically insufficient to show contract equitable.

Allegation of complaint for specific performance that the purchase price was "not disproportionate to the value of the property" held technically insufficient to show that the contract was equitable.

3. Appeal and error §1039(2)—Supreme Court will not reverse judgment for specific performance for technical insufficiency of complaint to show contract equitable, where plaintiff was not given opportunity to amend.

The Supreme Court will not reverse a judgment for specific performance of agreement to sell real property for reason that allegation of complaint, that the purchase price "is not disproportionate to value," is insufficient to show that the contract was equitable, where plaintiff was not given an opportunity to amend.

4. Appeal and error §907(3)—Intendments are in favor of judgment on appeal on judgment roll.

On appeal on the judgment roll, where the evidence is not before the Supreme Court, all intendments are in favor of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action for specific performance by Joseph T. Finn against Rose Goldstein. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Milton T. U'Ren and Albert Jacoby, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

R. M. J. Armstrong and Daniel A. Ryan, both of San Francisco (George F. Snyder, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an action brought to compel specific performance of a contract for the purchase and sale of certain real property in San Francisco, Cal. The written agreement pleaded and proved reads as follows:

"San Francisco, March 19, 1923.

"Received from Mr. Joseph Finn $50. Deposit on three flats and four stores located on Twenty-Fourth street. Known as Nos. 3257 to 3269—Twenty-Fourth Street.

"Cost of property—$11,500.

"Deposit to stand good until April 2, 1923.

"[Signed] Rose Goldstein.

"I accept above agreement.

"[Signed] Joseph T. Finn."

[1] The only serious question involved upon appeal is the sufficiency of this memorandum. The trial court held it sufficient and gave judgment for the plaintiff. We think it meets the test laid down in Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 529, 535, 21 P. 179, 181, as follows:

"But the memorandum must contain all the material elements of the contract; that is, it must show who is the seller and who is the buyer, what the price is and when it is to be paid, and must so describe the land that it can be identified."

Fritz v. Mills, 170 Cal. 449, 150 P. 375, announces the same rule. In the instant case, the buyer is the plaintiff and the seller the defendant; the price is $11,500; and the time of payment is April 2, 1923. The land is described sufficiently for identification.

In the case of McKevitt v. City of Sacramento, 55 Cal. App. 117, 127, 203 P. 132, 137, it was said:

"The property might be readily identified by a competent surveyor, with reasonable certainty. When that is possible, either with or without the aid of extrinsic evidence, the description is sufficient [citing cases]. If it ever became necessary to establish the sufficiency of the description it might be shown by extrinsic evidence, not for the purpose of adding to or varying the description contained in the contract, but for applying the description to that part of the surface of the earth which is the subject-matter of the agreement. In such cases, whether or not such evidence is sufficient to show that the land can be identified with reasonable certainty, is a question of fact for the trial court [citing cases]."

In the instant case, the trial court, by extrinsic evidence, obtained the description of the land by metes and bounds and set the same out in its findings of fact. The appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone, and there is no contention that the evidence was insufficient to identify the property designated in the memorandum as Nos. 3257 and 3269, Twenty-Fourth street, as that described in the findings by metes and bounds.

This conclusion meets the two attacks made by the appellant, i. e., that the memorandum is insufficient under the statute of frauds, and that it is too vague and uncertain to be specifically enforced.

[2, 3] The remaining contention upon appeal is characterized by appellant as a minor one, and is to the effect that the allegation of the complaint, "that the sum of $11,500 is not disproportionate to the value of the property," is insufficient to show that the contract sought to be specifically enforced was in all respects just, fair, and equitable. Technically, the allegation is insufficient, but we think, under the circumstances of this case, that fact would not warrant a reversal of the judgment. The answer to the amended complaint denied "that the sum of $11,500 is not disproportionate to the value of said property, but, upon the contrary, alleges that the sum of $11,500 is wholly disproportionate to the value of said property and that the sum of $11,500 is an inadequate and unfair consideration for said property and in this connection, defendant alleges that upon the 19th day of March, 1923, and upon the 13th day of April, 1923, and at the present time a fair and adequate value of and for said property was and is the sum of $15,000." The trial court found that the consideration mentioned in the contract was an adequate consideration for the property.

While a demurrer to the amended complaint was filed, together with the answer thereto, the record shows no ruling upon said demurrer, and, apparently, the matter was never called to the attention of the court and the plaintiff was not given an opportunity to amend his complaint to meet the technical requirements of a pleading in specific performance. Under such circumstances, this court will not reverse a judgment for this defect in the pleading. Regarding a similar situation, this court said, in Baker v. Miller, 190 Cal. 263, 212 P. 11:

"Viewed as a whole, we feel there is no escape from the conclusion that the complaint is insufficient and the general demurrer interposed by the defendant should have been sustained. We are not inclined, however, to reverse the judgment for that reason. Whether the defendant called the attention of the court below to the infirmity of plaintiff's complaint, or only demurred as a matter of form, does not appear. After the demurrer was overruled, however, she answered, denying generally and specifically the averment of the complaint attempting to allege the adequacy of the consideration and the fairness of the contract. * * * With all of the evidence before it, the trial court found that the contract between the parties was fair and just and liberal in its provisions in favor of the defendant. * * * The case presented is one which falls squarely within the constitutional inhibition that no judgment shall be set aside for any error as to any matter of pleading, unless after an examination of the entire case, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

[4] In the instant case, the evidence is not before us, as the appeal is upon the judgment roll and all intendments are in favor of the findings and judgment.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

SAN FRANCISCO & S. RY. CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 12403.)★

Rehearing Denied Aug. 11, 1927.

Master and servant §375(1)—Injury to ferryboat captain repairing electric line outside scope of employment without employer's consent, and not in emergency, held not compensable.

Compensation could not be allowed for death of captain of ferryboat who had been specifically instructed to report any damage to electric line to repair station, and who was killed while repairing electric line, not in emergency case, since he was working beyond scope of his employment without knowledge or consent of employer, and not in emergency.

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act for death of Captain Ough by Jack M. Ough and George R. Ough, minors, by their guardian ad litem and trustee, Clark A. Ough, claimants, against the San Francisco & Sacramento Railway Company, employer, and others. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation for death, and the employer and another bring certiorari. Award annulled.

Jesse H. Steinhart and R. P. Wisecarver, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner and W. A. Breen, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. A petition for hearing herein was granted by this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal. A more thorough consideration, however, of the legal question presented in the petition has convinced us that the law of the case is correctly expressed in the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Nourse of the District Court of Appeal. It is, therefore, adopted as the opinion of this court. It is as follows:

"Certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission. The petitioner owns and operates the ferryboat Ramon, used for the purpose of transporting its electric trains over the San Joaquin river. These trains are operated by means of an overhead electric trolley terminating at each wharf in a V-shaped contact point, so that when the ferryboat is docked the train can readily take up the electric current and proceed on its way. These contact points had frequently been bent out of place through careless docking of the ferryboat, and the captains had been specifically instructed to 'log' the damage and to immediately report it to the line repair staff for repair. Captain Ough was one of three captains working on separate shifts and, as such, was in full charge of the ferryboat during his period of service. One of these contact points having been 'jammed,' Captain Ough left his boat and went on the wharf to repair it. He failed to take the precaution of turning off the current, but climbed a ladder to the place where the live wires were attached and coming in contact with the current, was thrown to the wharf and killed.

"At the hearing before the commission the defendant (petitioner herein) contended that, because the work of repairing the electric lines was of a technical and hazardous character, it had provided a specially trained staff of electric linemen for that work; that the captain had been given express orders to call upon these linemen when repairs were needed; and that when he left his ship and attempted to repair the contact point on the wharf, he was acting beyond the scope of his employment. At the close of the hearing a continuance was granted at the request of those seeking compensation for the death of the captain to enable them to produce some evidence tending to show that the captain was acting within the scope of his employment when the accident occurred. Some time thereafter the parties reached an agreement of compromise for the sum of $1,000. When this was filed the commission forthwith ordered the cause submitted, and, without notice or hearing, entered judgment against the defendant for the sum of $5,150. A rehearing was denied the defendant, and it prosecutes this application on the ground that there is no evidence to sustain the award.

"The evidence is without conflict and shows beyond question that the captain was killed while engaged in work entirely beyond the scope of his employment; that it was done without the knowledge or consent of the employer, and was not a case of emergency which called the captain in his employer's interest to go beyond the scope of his employment. The case is covered by the rule of Williamson v. Industrial Acc. Com., 177 Cal. 715, 718, 171 P. 797, 798, where the Supreme Court say: 'It would be an unwarranted extension of the statute to give it application to acts done without the knowledge or consent of the employer, which, however commendable from the viewpoint of loyalty to one's employer, are not only outside of the employee's specific employment and duty, but which are in themselves of such a hazardous character as that the employee ought not to be reasonably expected or required to do them.'

tion Law, vol. 1, p. 696, where it is said: 'Notice must be taken that a factory of today usually includes within the field of its operations many fairly distinct lines of work, from that of the roustabout engaged in the ordinary labor that almost any one may perform, to that of the expert mechanic, which can be done safely by those only with skill and experience. The difference between these various kinds of work was always recognized by the common law, and it was held to be negligence for the master to require of the servant, without warning and instructing him, the performance of work outside and more dangerous than that which the latter had contracted to perform. Such classification of work exists in the very nature of things, and as much under the statute as at common law. Its recognition is required by any organization of a factory, not only for efficiency, but as well for the purpose of guarding against accident and injury. And if a workman, when there is no emergency, should of his own volition see fit to intermeddle with something entirely outside the work for which he is employed, he ought not to be allowed compensation upon the mere plea that he thought his act would be for the benefit of his employer.'

Our research has brought to light many authorities, other than those cited in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, which tend to indicate the incorrectness of the award made herein by the respondent commission. The following cases would seem to be pertinent: Losh v. Evans & Co., 5 W. C. C. 17, 19 T. L. R. 142; Wilson v. Dakota L. & P. Co., 45 S. D. 175, 186 N. W. 828; Dietzen Co. v. Industrial Board of Ill., 279 Ill. 11, 116 N. E. 684, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 764; Mephram & Co. v. Indus. Com., 289 Ill. 484, 124 N. E. 540; Bischoff v. Amer. Car & Foundry Co., 190 Mich. 229, 157 N. W. 34.

This court has upon earlier occasions recognized that an employee may go outside the sphere of his employment by doing work he was not engaged to perform. Assur. Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 182 Cal. 612, 614, 187 P. 42; Sherer & Co. v. I. A. C., 175 Cal. 615, 618, 166 P. 318. In our opinion, neither the evidence adduced before the respondent commission nor any inference that might reasonably be drawn therefrom tends to in any manner support a finding that the injury resulting in the demise of the deceased was one "arising out of and in the course of the employment," or that the deceased was, at the time of injury, "performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment" or "acting within the course of his employment." As we read the record herein, it was no part of Captain Ough's marine duties to repair the bent contact point referred to above. Such hazardous repair work was unmistakably and unquestionably within the range of duties of the line crew. The express instructions of the deceased's employer required that he communicate the necessity for such repair work to the line crew.

For the foregoing reasons it is ordered that the award of the respondent commission be and the same is hereby annulled.

MOSS v. CHRONICLE PUB. CO. et al.
(MARYLAND CASUALTY CO., Intervener). (S. F. 11314.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 18, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 15, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⇨330(3)—Finding that newspaper company's employee, causing injuries while aiding independent contractor in unloading newspapers, was acting as servant of company held sustained.

In an action for personal injuries caused by the negligent act of the employee of a newspaper company while he was aiding an independent contractor in unloading newspapers from a truck at a pier, held that the evidence sustained the jury's finding that, at the time of the accident, the servant was acting as the servant of the newspaper company within the scope of his employment, and was not a general servant loaned to an independent contractor for a specific service, and not the servant of the independent contractor.

2. Master and servant ⇨301(4)—Where two servants engage in joint work, each is servant of own master, though one takes orders as to details from other.

Where the servants of two masters in an emergency or otherwise jointly engage in a work of mutual interest, each employee is the servant of his own master, and neither employee is the servant of the other's master, even though one master's servant takes orders as to details of work from the other master's servant.

3. Master and servant ⇨301(4)—Servant may be loaned so that only new master is liable for his acts.

A servant may be loaned by his master to another so that the act of the servant becomes the act of the one to whom he has been loaned and so that the master loaning him is not liable therefor.

4. Master and servant ⇨301(4)—Doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply where special employer has no voice in selection or retention of negligent subordinate.

The application of the doctrine of respondeat superior depends upon the power of control which the superior possesses over the conduct and activities of his subordinates, and which he is required to exercise for the protection of third persons and the doctrine has application only where the power of control exists and does not apply where the special employer has no voice in the selection or retention of the negligent subordinate.

5. Master and servant ⇨301(4)—To escape liability for negligence of servant loaned to another, master must have resigned full control of servant.

In order that a master may escape liability for the negligent act of his servant on the ground that the servant was loaned to another, the original master must have resigned full control over the servant for the time being; it not being sufficient that the servant be partially under the control of another, and it being necessary to distinguish control and mere suggestions as to details and the necessary co-operation where work is part of larger operation.

6. Evidence ⇨590—Jury has large latitude in accepting testimony, particularly that of negligent servant as to which defendant was employer.

In accepting or rejecting the testimony of witnesses in an action against alleged master for the negligent act of a servant, and particularly as to the testimony of the negligent servant as to which defendant was his employer, the jury has a large latitude.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action for personal injuries, brought by Charles Moss against the Chronicle Publishing Company and Charles A. Mowry, in which the Maryland Casualty Company intervened as plaintiff. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff against defendant the Chronicle Publishing Company, and against plaintiff as to defendant Charles A. Mowry. The Chronicle Publishing Company appeals. Affirmed.

Percy E. Towne, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan, Theo J. Roche, Edward I. Barry, and William A. Kelly, all of San Francisco, for plaintiff respondent.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondent Mowry.

John Ralph Wilson, of San Francisco, for intervener.

PRESTON, J. [1] This is an action by plaintiff for personal injuries received by him in June, 1922. Said injuries were caused by the act of one Robert Miotti, and the question of negligence is not an issue on this appeal. Plaintiff alleged a cause of action against each of the defendants, Charles A. Mowry and the Chronicle Publishing Company, a corporation, under the rule of respondeat superior. The trial developed into a contest between these two defendants as to whose servant Miotti was in the doing of the act out of which plaintiff's cause of action arose. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant Mowry and against the defendant Chronicle Publishing Company. The latter has appealed, and presents as the sole issue for our determination a question which may be stated thus: Was the evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that Miotti, at the time and place in question and in the doing of the act causing the injury to plaintiff, was the servant of appellant and acting within the scope of his employment?

Appellant, at the time in question, and for many years prior thereto, owned, published, and distributed a large metropolitan daily morning newspaper. It is admitted that the distribution of this paper to the various carriers to be delivered over the state and elsewhere was under the jurisdiction and control of one Pirie, a servant of appellant, called the superintendent of the mailroom. To facilitate the daily delivery of papers to the carriers for distribution, Mowry and appellant in the year 1919 entered into a written hauling contract which was to be in existence for the period of one year; the essence of which was that Mowry was "to do all of the hauling of newspapers from their mailroom in the Chronicle building to ferries, depots, or post offices for transportation outside the city of San Francisco, also two loads to Oakland each, week. * * *" The contract then named the compensation and concluded with these clauses:

"This agreement to remain in effect for one year from August 10, 1919, at which time I (meaning Mowry) am to have the option of renewing this agreement for two years.

"It is understood that the Chronicle Publishing Company may terminate this agreement at any time should the service rendered not be satisfactory to them. It is also understood that I am to carry adequate compensation, public liability, and property damage insurance."

The evidence shows that no additional written contract was ever executed by the parties, but that from time to time the compensation of Mowry was increased. It is also admitted that Pirie had the right to employ and discharge all help in connection with the mailroom department. It is also admitted that on the day in question and for several years prior thereto said Robert Miotti was and had been in the general employ of the appellant and under the direction of said Pirie, and that his wages were exclusively paid by appellant. It is also admitted that on an average of three nights per week, and at times when the issue of said paper was of more than 26 pages, pursuant to the direction of said Pirie, said Miotti, between the hours of 10 o'clock p. m. and 5 o'clock a. m. of the same night, had as his exclusive duty the work of assisting Mowry's servant in loading papers at the mailroom, accompanying said truck to the place of discharge, and there assisting in unloading said papers, in order that they might be delivered on schedule and reach the place of distribution at the time desired by appellant. It was in so unloading certain bundles of papers at the pier that the accident happened which resulted in injury to plaintiff. It is also conceded that Mowry's interest in the transaction ceased when the delivery of the papers had been made at the various points specified by appellant, but appellant's interests did not cease at that time. It was scrupulously solicitous and active in seeing that the papers reached the various carriers on schedule and arrived at the various points at the time they were expected. The object in ordering Miotti to assist Mowry was to insure this prompt dispatch of the papers so that no delay might result in their delivery. The greater the size of the paper, the greater the weight, and, the item of time being of the essence, the need for assistance in order to meet the schedule for delivery was imperative and in reality an emergency.

Appellant, however, strongly insists that Miotti at the time and place in question occupied the status of a general servant loaned to an independent contractor for a specific or special service, and that Miotti was therefore, in the doing of the act causing plaintiff's injury, the servant of Mowry and not its servant.

[2] The fact is that for many years prior to the happening of this accident, and before the contract with Mowry, appellant had used Miotti for the identical work in which he was engaged on the night of this accident. As pointed out above, it is also true that on the nights in question Miotti performed no other work whatsoever for appellant except the work of assisting the delivery of these papers. It is also true that this service was performed by Miotti upon the orders of Pirie, except in a few cases when Pirie would neglect or forget to issue the order and Mowry or his servant would make a request for Miotti's help. Inasmuch as no additional written contract was ever executed by the parties, the presence of Miotti on the truck and the fact that for three nights each week he was exclusively engaged in aiding the dispatch of this work, coupled with the further fact that Mowry exercised the right to demand a helper on these special nights, in case it was forgotten or neglected by Pirie, would warrant the jury in believing that by the conduct of the parties, if not expressly, they had contracted that appellant should furnish a man to aid in the work, which said work was of interest to both parties. The jury could even have found under the evidence that Miotti was at the time, pursuant to the orders of Pirie, really in charge of the deliveries. Certain it is that appellant was so vitally interested in the dispatch of the work that the jury could have found that appellant's servant and Mowry's servant were at the time of the accident jointly engaged in a work of mutual interest to the parties, and this is true even if it be conceded that Miotti, after being ordered to this service, thereafter took his orders as to the details thereof from the servant of Mowry. It is a well-recognized principle that, where the servants of two parties are jointly engaged in a work of mutual interest, each employee is the servant of his own master and neither of the employees is the servant of the other's master. This principle has been stated as follows:

"Servants of separate masters, although engaged in a common undertaking, are not fellow servants. To constitute that relation, servants must be in the employ of, or controlled by, a common master.

"If, with a view to expediting the business or furthering the interests of his general master, the servant assists the servants of another in their work, he is not the fellow servant of those whom he is assisting, although, acting under general orders from his employer to assist such servants, he does so at their request." 39 Corpus Juris, § 668, pp. 557, 558.

The case of Cannon v. Fargo, 222 N. Y. 321, 326, 118 N. E. 796, 798, is in point, as follows:

"The New York Central Railroad operated trains over a line. * * * The defendant carried on a general express business using for that purpose cars connected with the trains of the railroad company. It may be assumed that * * * it was to the interest of the railroad company to have its trains, as far as possible, adhere to the schedule and arrive and leave on time. Likewise, it may be assumed that it was to the interest of the railroad company to have express matters and baggage transported and delivered for the accommodation of its patrons and the shipping public. In order to facilitate the movement of trains and their speedy dispatch, the railroad company could have employed a man, * * * to remove or take out express matter * * * so that there might be no delay or difficulty in shipment. While such a man, with no other duties to perform, might thus incidentally be of assistance and help to the express company and relieve it from some of its work, yet the widest stretch of the ad hoc doctrine would never make such an employee a servant of the express company. * * * Only one step further and we have the case at bar. * * * This railroad company, * * * upon a line which was not so busy as to keep a gate-man constantly at his post, gave him the additional duty of a baggageman or express helper instead of employing another man for that sole purpose. * * * It was part of his duties for his employer and for his employer's benefit, and the fact that in doing this work he assisted the express company did not make him the servant of the express company in the doing of it. No authority can be found to sustain such a proposition. Otherwise we would have it as the law that, whenever the master sent his servant in his own interests to do a bit of work which also benefited others, the servant, for the time being, ceased to be his employee."

In the case of Mandala v. Wells, 212 App. Div. 370, 374, 209 N. Y. S. 35, 39, in discussing the question of a servant loaned to another, it was said:

"Nor should the case at bar be confused with cases where the servant of one master in an emergency assists the servant of another in the mutual interest of both masters, because in such a case there is implied authority in the defendant's servant to procure his assistance, but he still remains the servant of his original master and does not become a fellow servant."

658; Sandon v. Kendall, 233 Mass. 292, 123 N. E. 847; Sprague v. General Electric Co., 213 Mass. 375, 100 N. E. 628, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 962, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 431; and Mayer v. Kenyon-Rosing Mach. Co., 95 Minn. 329, 104 N. W. 132. See, also, Labatt's Master and Servant (2d Ed.) vol. 1, § 48, p. 159, where it is said:

"A servant who is engaged, together with the servants of a third person, in loading or unloading or otherwise handling goods, is regarded as acting in behalf of his own master with respect to whatever he does in the course of the work, unless some specific evidence is produced of his having been temporarily placed under the control of the third person."

Under the principle announced above, the fact that one servant may have taken orders as to details from the servant of the other employer would not affect this rule. "A servant of one employer does not become the servant of another for whom the work is performed merely because the latter points out the work to the servant, or gives him signals calling the service into activity, or gives him directions as to the details of the work and the manner of doing it." 39 Corpus Juris, § 1462, p. 1275. See, also, Quinby Co. v. Estey, 221 Mass. 56, 108 N. E. 908; McNamara v. Leipzig, 227 N. Y. 291, 125 N. E. 244, and Flori v. Dolph (Mo. Sup.) 192 S. W. 949.

[3] Moreover, under the evidence, it may well be doubted whether the jury would have been justified had it found that the services of Miotti had been loaned to Mowry under such circumstances as to make Miotti the servant of Mowry and not the servant of appellant. It is, of course, well recognized in this state that a servant may be loaned by his master to another so that the act done by the servant becomes the act of the master to whom he has been loaned and for the time being the general master is not responsible for his acts. Burns v. Jackson, 59 Cal. App. 662, 668, 669, 211 P. 821, hearing in this court denied; 18 R. C. L. § 244; Pruitt v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 189 Cal. 459, 209 P. 37.

[4] In the recent case of Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 189 Cal. 477, 483, 209 P. 241, 243, this court stated the governing principle as follows:

"In other words, the application of the doctrine of respondeat superior in any given case depends upon the power of control which the superior possesses, and which for the protection of third persons he is required to exercise, over the conduct and activities of his subordinates. Consequently the doctrine has application only in cases where the power of control exists, and such power does not exist in a situation where the special employer has no voice in the selection or retention of the negligent subordinate. Du Pratt v. Lick, 38 Cal. 691; Higham v. Waterman, 32 R. I. 578, 80 A. 178; Quinn v. Complete Electric Const. Co. [C. C. A.] 46 F. 506."

"To escape liability, the original master must resign full control of the servant for the time being, it not being sufficient that the servant is partially under the control of a third person; and it is necessary to distinguish between authoritative direction and control and mere suggestions as to details or the necessary co-operation where the work furnished is part of a larger operation."

A familiar illustration of the lack of full control is found in the case of Chamberlain v. Lee, 148 Tenn. 637, 257 S. W. 415, 417. There the servant of an independent contractor went to the building of another master to repair the elevator. There the operator of the elevator, the servant of the owners of the building, was told to operate the cage in such way and manner as he might be directed by the servant of the independent contractor. In manipulating the elevator, the latter servant was injured. The owners of the building were held liable upon the ground that, although their servant was directed to place himself for certain purposes under the control of the independent contractor, nevertheless their control over said servant was not completely resigned, and the cause of action by the employee of the independent contractor against them was sustained, the court saying:

"This does not make out a case of lending a servant. The servant was put under the control of plaintiff for one purpose alone; that is, to move the car up and down as plaintiff desired while the particular job was being done. The elevator car was put under the control of the plaintiff for the time, but it was put under his control along with its attendant, who remained in the service of the defendants. There is nothing to show that plaintiff could have discharged this boy, and put another boy to running the elevator at this time. Plaintiff certainly had no right to use this elevator boy for any purpose in connection with the work other than running the elevator up and down. The plaintiff could not have required the elevator boy to remain on duty for a longer period than his regular hours under his contract with defendants. In order to escape responsibility for the negligence of his servant on the theory that the servant has been loaned, the original master must resign full control of the servant for the time being."

See, to the same effect, Flori v. Dolph, supra, and Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, opinion on rehearing.

[6] It must be borne in mind that the jury had a large latitude in accepting or rejecting the evidence of the witnesses, and particularly that of Miottl. Burns v. Jackson, supra. And, when this latitude is allowed the jury, the evidence was such as to render it impossible for us to say as a matter of law that the verdict was unwarranted.

BOYER et al v. MURPHY. (Civ. 3199.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 24, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 22, 1927.

1. Deeds ⇐100—Testimony of conditions surrounding and relating to execution of deed is considered only for aid in construing deed.

In action to quiet title in which principal issue is construction of deed, testimony concerning conditions surrounding execution of deed will be considered to extent only of assistance it affords in construing deed.

2. Deeds ⇐143—Whether grantor, sole owner of fee, reserved life interest for benefit of husband out of grant is determined by parties' intention.

In construing deed to determine whether sole fee owner could create, by reservation or otherwise, life interest for benefit of husband who was stranger to title, is to be determined chiefly by grantor's intention, regardless of common-law rule that granting clause overruled repugnant habendum clause.

3. Deeds ⇐143—Deed by grantor and sole owner of fee, reserving to herself and husband ownership and possession during their lives and life of survivor held to establish life estate in grantor's surviving husband (McEnerney Act).

Where wife, declared sole fee owner in proceeding under McEnerney Act (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78, as amended), granted remainder of fee, reserving to her and her husband ownership and possession during their lives and life of survivor, life estate was reserved to grantor's husband surviving her.

4. Exceptions, bill of ⇐8—Objection that failure of bill of exceptions to specify particulars in which findings are unsupported precludes review of evidence is unavailing, where findings are based entirely on construction of deed (Code Civ. Proc. § 648).

Although Code Civ. Proc. § 648, requiring bill of exceptions to specify particulars in which it is claimed findings are not supported by evidence, should generally be followed, in action to quiet title where decision on trial and on appeal was predicated entirely on construction of deed and there was no conflict in evidence, objection that sufficiency of evidence to support findings of fact could not be reviewed for failure of bill of exceptions to contain specification of particulars in which findings were not supported by evidence is ineffectual on appeal, since they were in reality conclusions of law following construction of deed.

5. Quieting title ⇐47(2)—Where conclusion depended on deed, finding that defendant's claim was without right held unsupported conclusion of law subject to reversal.

In action to quiet title, where conclusion arrived at on merits was solely founded on deed, which was wrongfully construed, finding that defendant's claim was without right amounted to no more than unsupported conclusion of law which could be reversed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Action by Alice M. Boyer and another against Edward F. Murphy to quiet title. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a motion to vacate it and to enter judgment for defendant, the defendant appeals. Reversed with direction.

Herman J. Widman, Wm. M. Madden, and Charles J. Heggerty, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ivan T. Crase, of San Francisco, and Fred C. Peterson, of Oakland, for respondents.

HART, J. [1] This is an action by the plaintiffs to obtain a decree quieting their alleged title to certain improved real property situated in the city of San Francisco, as against the alleged claim of defendant to an interest or estate therein "adverse to the said plaintiffs."

The complaint alleges that the claim so made by the defendant "is without any right whatever, and that said defendant has not any estate, right, title, or interest whatever in said land or premises, or any part thereof." The prayer, besides asking for an adjudication that defendant has no interest, etc., in said real property and that he be enjoined from asserting such claim, asks that "an account be taken of all the rents, issues, and profits of said property, which have accrued to the defendant since the first day of April, 1919, and for such other relief," etc., as may be justified in equity.

The answer consists of specific denials of the material allegations of the complaint.

The court found (finding No. 2) that defendant "claimed an interest or estate therein (the real property specifically described in the complaint and the findings) adverse to plaintiffs, but that said claim was without right by said defendant, and said defendant had no right, title, or interest of any kind, character, or description in and to said described premises, either as set out in defendant's answer or otherwise"; that (finding No. 3) "on the 21st day of March, 1919, the premises described in such complaint was the separate property of Teresa Doyle Murphy, and that at said time defendant, Edward F. Murphy, did not have any right, title, or interest in and to said property of any kind, character, or description"; that (finding No. 4) "on the 21st day of March, 1919, the said Teresa Doyle Murphy, and Edward F. Murphy, defendant herein, executed and delivered to the plaintiffs, James E. Murphy and Alice M. Boyer, a certain indenture in writing, which indenture in writing is in certain words and figures, as follows, to wit," following which is a deed executed by Teresa Doyle Murphy and Edward F. Murphy, conveying the fee in said property (therein specifically described) to the plaintiffs herein, the habendum clause of said deed reading as follows:

"To have and to hold the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the parties of the second part, and to their heirs and assigns forever, reserving to the parties of the first part the ownership and possession thereof during the lifetime of the parties of the first part and the survivor of them."

The court further found: That Teresa Doyle Murphy died in the city and county of San Francisco on April 1, 1919; "that in and by virtue of said instrument in writing the said Edward F. Murphy did not take a life estate in and to the premises described herein, or take any interest of any kind or character in and to the premises described therein."

The conclusions of law are in accord with the findings, and judgment was entered for the plaintiffs in conformity to the prayer of the complaint. Defendant made a motion for a new trial and also a motion to vacate the judgment made and entered and to give and enter a judgment in favor of the defendant. Both motions were denied.

The defendant appeals from the judgment and also from the order denying his motion to vacate the judgment made and entered and in lieu thereof to make and enter a judgment in his favor. The appeals are supported here by a record made up in the form of a bill of exceptions.

From the testimony it appears that the defendant Edward F. Murphy and Teresa Doyle Murphy were husband and wife, and were the parents of the plaintiffs; that, in the month of April, 1906, the records pertaining to the title to real property in controversy, as were all the public records of the city and county of San Francisco, were destroyed by fire; that thereafter, and on December 30, 1912, Teresa Doyle Murphy, separately and alone, in pursuance of the provisions of an act of the Legislature popularly known as the "McEnerney Act" (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.], p. 78, as amended), instituted an action in rem, "against all the world" in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, to secure a decree restoring the records pertaining and also quieting her title to the real estate in dispute; that, after due proceedings had under said act, said superior court, on April 30, 1913, rendered its judgment in said action restoring the records affecting said property and quieting Teresa Doyle Murphy's title thereto as follows:

"(a) That plaintiff was at the time of the commencement of this action the owner in fee simple absolute, and in the possession of the real property above described and of the whole thereof.

"(b) That her title thereto be and the same is hereby established and quieted against all the world as of said date.

"(c) That at said time no other person had any estate, right, title, interest, or claim in or to said property or any part thereof, either legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent."

On March 25, 1919, Teresa Doyle Murphy and Edward F. Murphy, her husband, executed a deed granting and conveying to their son and daughter, the plaintiffs herein, the fee in the real property in question. On the 1st day of April, 1919, Teresa Doyle Murphy passed out of this life, and said deed was, subsequent to the date of her death, duly recorded in the official records in the office of the county recorder of said city and county.

The defendant testified that the deed referred to in the complaint and the findings was jointly executed by him and his wife; that he and his wife bought the property at a probate sale in 1897 or 1898, and was acquired 10 years after their marriage; that when they acquired the property "in 1898, there was a little cottage and two flats thereon. Sometimes," defendant continued, "the flats were rented, and sometimes I would collect the rents and sometimes my wife would. When I did, I would give them to my wife. We were living in the cottage in the rear during this time. After the fire in 1906, we constructed two flats on the property, that is, the cottage on the rear was moved to the front and became a part of those two flats, and my wife and I lived in one of the flats, and rented the other. Sometimes I would make payments to the bank on the mortgages (the property having been mortgaged to secure a loan of $2,000 to be used as in part payment of the purchase price of the property), and sometimes my wife would. I have taken rent money and paid it to the bank on these mortgages." He further testified that "up to the fire and earthquake in 1906, the property in question was occupied by myself and wife, a part of it, a little cottage, and from that time until the death of my wife, my wife and I were in possession of the property." He testified that his wife "did not receive any gifts of any property—not a dollar of money or anything else that I ever knew of. She never inherited any property from any relative." Defendant proceeded to testify, without objection, that some of the money—about $1,000, which he had earned as wages prior to his intermarriage with Teresa Doyle Murphy and which he had on deposit in a bank—was contributed to the payment of the purchase price of the property, and that, from time to time after his said marriage, he contributed portions of his wages to the same purpose; that the money received by him and his wife for rent of certain parts of the premises and such of his wages as he intended should be applied to the extinguishment of the mortgage debt on the property were placed in a single deposit in the bank, and the two funds were therefore commingled. All this testimony—that is, all of the defendant's testimony to the effect that much of his earnings as a laborer or mechanic had been used as in part payment of the indebtedness against the property or the purchase price thereof—was, on motion of counsel for the plaintiffs, at the close of defendant's direct examination, stricken out upon the theory that such testimony would involve a collateral attack upon the judgment obtained by Mrs. Murphy under the McEnerney Act.

The foregoing constitutes a statement in substance of all the testimony received respecting the defendant's connection with or relation to the property here in dispute; and, while it is set forth herein, it is to be understood that we attach importance to the testimony to the extent only of whatever assistance it may afford and has afforded in the construction of the deed in question and may lend support to the result at which we have arrived as to the effect of said deed with respect to any interest in the property therein described which Mrs. Murphy thereby sought to vest in her husband, the defendant herein.

[2] The theory upon which the case was tried and decided below is that, inasmuch as Mrs. Murphy was the sole owner in fee of the property described in the deed, it was not legally competent for her to create, by way of a reservation or otherwise, out of the fee in said property, which she at the same time granted to the plaintiffs in remainder, a life interest therein to and for the benefit of her husband, he being a stranger to the title. The polestar in the determination of this question is the intention of the parties to the deed, particularly that of the deceased wife of the defendant, to be ascertained by a consideration of the deed itself and, if necessary, the circumstances surrounding the execution thereof, by the light of the rules by which any other contracts are construed or interpreted, where construction or interpretation is necessary to ascertain the intention of the parties to such instruments as to the scope and effect thereof as intended by the parties thereto. Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 300, 301, 37 P. 1049; Pavkovich v. Southern Pac. Co., 150 Cal. 39, 45-47, 87 P. 1097; Parks v. Gates, 186 Cal. 151, 155, 199 P. 40; Duncan v. Wolfer, 60 Cal. App. 120, 212 P. 390; Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) §§ 843, 843a, 844a and 850. In 17 Ruling Case Law, § 6, p. 619, the rule now generally followed in the construction of deeds is thus stated:

"It was a rule of the common law that if the habendum or any later clause in a deed was repugnant to the granting clause, the granting clause would override the repugnant clause or clauses, and under this rule if a grant is to one and his heirs and the habendum clause or a later clause is to the grantee for his life, or life of another, the habendum or later clause is considered void as being repugnant to the meaning conveyed by the words 'his heirs' as previously used. The modern tendency, however, is to abandon the strict common law rule of construction, the broad doctrine being asserted that in the construction of deeds as in the construction of other instruments the intention of the parties thereto as gathered from the whole instrument must govern. In jurisdictions which adhere to this doctrine it is held that where a deed appears from the premises to give a fee, but the habendum makes it clear that a life estate is intended, the grantees will take a life estate only. And where the granting part of a deed creates a life estate only, it has been decided that the use of the word 'heirs' in the warranty clause is not sufficient to show that the real intention was to convey a fee."

Referring to the same subject, our Supreme Court, in Barnett v. Barnett, supra, approves the rule as it is above declared in Ruling Case Law. It is there said:

"A grant is to be interpreted in the same manner as any other contract (section 1066 [Civ. Code]), so as to give effect to the intention of the parties, if that intention can be ascertained (section 1636); and for the purpose of ascertaining that intention 'the whole of the contract is to be taken together, so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other' (section 1641). The intention, it is sometimes said, is to be gathered from the four corners of the instrument, and in case of a grant the habendum, as well as any other portion of the instrument, is to be considered. The ordinary use of the habendum is to define or limit the quality of interest, or the estate which the grantee is to have in the property granted, and, although usually made a separate portion of the instrument, is not necessarily so, but may be wholly omitted, and the interest or estate granted may be defined or limited in the premises or granting part of the conveyance. Montgomery v. Sturdivant, 41 Cal. 290. The rule that if the habendum is repugnant to the premises it is to be disregarded, is only another form of the rule that 'if several parts of a grant are absolutely irreconcilable the former part prevails.' Civ. Code, § 1070. The intention of the parties to the grant is to be gathered from the instrument itself, and determined by a proper construction of the language used therein, but for the purpose of ascertaining this intention the entire instrument, the habendum as well as the premises, are to be considered, and, if it appear from such consideration that the grantor intended by the habendum clause to restrict or limit or enarge the estate named in the granting clause the habendum will prevail over the granting clause. Faivre v. Daley, 93 Cal. 670 [29 P. 256]; Pelissier v. Corker, 103 Cal. 516 [37 P. 465]. 'It is in such case to be considered as an addendum or proviso to the conveyancing clause, which by a well-settled rule of construction must control the conveyancing clause or premises, even to the extent of destroying the effect of the same.' Bodine v. Arthur, 91 Ky. 53 [14 S. W. 904], 34 Am. St. Rep. 162."

[3] It will not be questioned that Teresa Doyle Murphy intended to convey the fee in the premises to the plaintiff as a remainder over after the determination of a life estate therein to herself and her husband "and the survivor of them." The language of the habendum clause of the deed so plainly and unequivocally confirms this proposition as to remove it beyond the realms of disputation. This conclusion is not only clearly warranted by the language itself of said clause of the deed, but is reinforced by the uncontradicted testimony of the defendant. Thus it was shown (and this particular part of the defendant's testimony did not fall within the scope of the motion to strike and the order striking out certain of the testimony given by him) that the premises in controversy were acquired jointly by him and his wife some ten years after the date of their intermarriage, and that the couple jointly held continuous actual possession thereof and together resided thereon down to the date of the death of the wife on April 1, 1919. Under these circumstances, it was only natural that the wife, having, long after they acquired the property, obtained a decree under the McEnerney Act, adjudging her the sole owner in fee of the property, should not only desire but intend to provide for her life companion, to be enjoyed during the remaining years of his rapidly waning life, at least such an interest in the premises as would assure him an abiding place at the "old homestead" and, peradventure, vouchsafe to him, in his old age, protection against want of the common necessities of life. There is, however, no serious claim here that the deceased wife of the defendant did not intend and attempt to carve out of the fee in the property a life interest therein for the benefit of herself and husband "and the survivor of them." The point urged here by the plaintiffs is, as stated, that Mrs. Murphy utterly failed legally in whatever attempt she might have made to provide for a life estate in her husband, to be enjoyed by him after her death, if she predeceased him. In other words, we may pardonably repeat, the contention of the plaintiffs is that the defendant being a stranger to the title to the property, his wife, the sole owner of the fee therein, could not legally create in him a life interest or estate in the premises, and that therefore the instant she died the life estate reserved in the property to herself terminated and simultaneously therewith the right of the plaintiffs to the enjoyment of the estate passing to them, under the terms of the grant, inured to them. Obviously, in so far as the habendum clause of the deed applied to the wife of the deceased, there was a reservation of a life estate out of the fee. Undoubtedly, as before stated, Mrs. Murphy intended and undertook to create a life estate in her husband (the defendant).

But, whether the life interest which Mrs. Murphy sought to withhold from the fee for the benefit of her husband constitutes a reservation, in the technical sense of that term, is a matter of no particular consequence in determining the rights of the defendant herein, although it may be well enough to say that the authorities generally, to which our attention has been called, in considering whether the attempted creation, for the benefit of a third party, of a life estate out of the fee in real property which has been granted by the owner of the fee to another, declare that, to create a life estate by way of a reservation, the party for whom such estate purports to be created must be a party or not a stranger to the deed or grant (they do not say to the title) conveying the fee in remainder. See Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) § 222, p. 318; 18 Corpus Juris, § 339, p. 342, and cases named in the footnotes; 8 R. C. L. § 148, pp. 1091, 1092, and cases cited in footnotes; Butler v. Gosling, 130 Cal. 422, 426, 62 P. 596. We have found one case in which the rule as so expressed has been interpreted to mean:

"When the books and the cases say that a reservation in a grant, in order to be valid must be for the benefit of the grantor, or some one of the grantors, and that a reservation cannot be made for the benefit of a stranger to the deed, it is meant and the language used connotes, that the reservation must be for the benefit of that grantor who, having an interest in the thing granted, may logically reserve from the operation of the grant a part of the estate or thing granted, or some right growing out of or appurtenant thereto." Lemon v. Lemon, 273 Mo. 484, 496, 201 S. W. 103, 106.

But, as before in effect declared, we are not required to express an opinion herein upon the question whether that part of the habendum clause of the grant purporting to reserve a life estate out of the fee in the real property in dispute to the defendant is, strictly speaking, a reservation, for, as pointed out above, the language of the grant, particularly the reddendum words embraced within the habendum clause, must be so construed as to give effect to the intention of Mrs. Murphy with respect to the interest in the fee which evidently she desired to withhold therefrom for the benefit of her husband, regardless of the technical form in which it may be found to be necessary to sustain and carry out such intention, provided, of course, that such intention may be worked out, as in our opinion it may be, without doing violence to any of the canons of construction established and commonly invoked as a guide to the ascertainment of the meaning and intent at the bottom of contracts in general. If, therefore, the clearly manifested intention of Mrs. Murphy to provide a life interest for her husband in the property in question cannot be sustained upon the theory that such intention has been evinced in the form of a reservation, as that term in law is technically understood, then it is clear that the provision for the defendant, in order to enforce the manifest intention of Mrs. Murphy, may, in practical effect, be invested with the force of a reservation by construing it as an exception to the estate granted to plaintiffs, whereby Mrs. Murphy, for the benefit of her husband, excepted, for a specified time, from the operation of the grant to plaintiffs of the fee, an interest which must cease to exist in the manner expressed by or necessarily implied from the language of the habendum clause of the grant before the right of the plaintiffs to the enjoyment or beneficial use of the estate passing to them arises or inures to them. Or, stating the proposition in other language: The plaintiffs being granted the whole of the estate in fee, subject to a certain interest therein which was expressly withheld or excepted therefrom by their grantor, are not, in the very nature of the situation, entitled to the enjoyment of the beneficial use of the fee until the excepted interest shall have ceased to exist, or has terminated, according to the terms of the instrument creating it. This construction legally facilitates the carrying out of the plan or manifest intention of Mrs. Murphy and is in consonance with the theory according to which the courts and other authorities hold that deeds of like character to the one here should be construed, where it is necessary to do so, to effectuate the clear intention of the grantor with respect to several different estates sought to be carved out of a single fee in real property. A few excerpts from the statement of the rule as it is formulated by the text-writers which we conclude controls in the construction of the deed in question, and which rule as so stated is predicated upon or approved by the cases generally, will be sufficient for our purposes here.

Mr. Devlin, in his very excellent work on Deeds (volume 2, 3d Ed. § 982), says:

"A stranger to a deed cannot take title by reservation. But it may operate, when so intended by the parties as an exception from the thing granted."

In 8 Ruling Case Law, § 148, p. 1092, the rule is thus stated:

"Generally it is declared that a reservation must be in favor of a grantor or party executing the conveyance, and not to a stranger.

"A better statement of the rule is that, a reservation in a deed to a stranger being by right of authority invalid as a reservation, the tendency of the courts is to effectuate the intention of the grantor by treating it as an exception.

"A reservation is none the less made to a grantor if it is so made that others can derive advantage from it; it will be considered as made to him when valuable rights are secured to him, though others may be benefited by it."

In 18 Corpus Juris, § 339, p. 340 et seq., it is stated:

"A reservation is a clause in a deed whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself out of that which he granted before. It differs from an exception which is ever of part of the thing granted and of a thing in esse at the time. The office of an exception is to take something out of the thing granted that would otherwise pass. While this distinction between a reservation and an exception has been uniformly recognized, the terms 'reservation' and 'exception' are often used interchangeably; and the technical meaning will give way to the manifest intent, even though the technical term to the contrary is used."

Again, in the same volume of the same work, section 340, p. 343:

"The true rule is said to be that, where words taken according to their technical meaning do not create a legal reservation and are notwithstanding construed to amount to a reservation, it is always done with a view to advance the intent of the parties, but not to defeat or destroy it. And words not technically amounting to a reservation are not to be so construed unless to effectuate a manifest intention. Where not repugnant to the grant, a reservation or exception may appear in any part of the deed."

See, also, the many cases cited in the footnotes, which support the text.

In Martin v. Cook, 102 Mich. 267, 60 N. W. 679, the grantor reserved to himself and to his daughter, who was a stranger to the deed and to the title, an estate for the lives of both in the property conveyed. The court, on page 272 of 102 Mich., on page 680 of 60 N. W., said:

"While the rule that a reservation in favor of a stranger to the instrument is invalid as a reservation has been adhered to, yet, in order to effectuate the intention of the grantor, such a reservation has uniformly been treated as excepting from the grant the thing reserved."

See, also, Burchard v. Walther, 58 Neb. 539, 78 N. W. 1061; In re Dixon, 156 N. C. 26, 72 S. E. 71.

Nothing further need be said upon the question under consideration than what is declared in the above authorities. The case here unquestionably falls within the rule as to exceptions as declared therein.

[4] In conclusion, it is proper to say that, in taking up this record for consideration, we did not overlook the point made by respondents at the outset of the argument presented in their brief, that the "attempt on the part of the appellant to attack the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of fact" cannot be reviewed for the reason that the bill of exceptions does not contain a specification of the particulars in which it is claimed that the findings are not thus supported. Code Civ. Proc. § 648. While the rule as declared in that section of the Code in cases where the appeal is supported by a bill of exceptions, and where the findings are challenged for want of sufficient evidence to support them, should generally be followed, yet in the instant case the decision below, as is the decision here, was predicated entirely upon the construction of the deed constituting the foundation of this action. There was little evidence received in the case and in that there was no conflict whatever, viz.: The testimony of the plaintiff Mrs. Boyer, giving the date of her mother's death, the defendant's testimony, of which a synoptical statement is hereinabove given, and the deed. The findings which might be sufficient as such under other circumstances are in the present situation in reality conclusions of law following the construction of the deed.

[5] The conclusion arrived at upon the merits, as stated, and as is obvious, is wholly founded on a construction of the grant. It follows that the instrument is subject to no other construction. The finding, therefore, that the defendant's claim of interest in the property is without right, etc., amounts to no more than an unsupported conclusion of law. See Carr v. Carr, 15 Cal. App. 480, 495, 496, 115 P. 261; Rosenberg v. Bump, 43 Cal. App. 376, 398, 185 P. 218.

Accordingly, the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion to vacate said judgment "and to enter another and different judgment in said cause, to wit, a judgment in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiffs," are, and each of them is, reversed and the court below is hereby directed to enter or cause to be entered judgment in favor of defendant in harmony with the prayer of his answer.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

HUTTON et al. v. YOLO ORCHARD CO. et al. (Civ. 3287.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 30, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1927.

1. Boundaries ⇨14—Under deed describing lot as "running eastwardly to bank of Cache creek," "bounded on east by Cache creek," east boundary of lot was center of creek (Civ. Code, § 830).

Under deed conveying lot as laid down and designated on plat of town of Cacheville, which lot contained 60 feet frontage and running back eastwardly to bank of Cache creek and boundary of which was stated as follows: "On north by lot No. 3 of same block; east by Cache creek," "bank of Cache creek," and "bounded east by Cache creek"—were used as synonymous terms, and, under Civ. Code, § 830, eastern boundary was center of creek.

2. Boundaries ⇨3(4)—Where deeds of lots referred to plat on which creek was eastern boundary, length of lots stated had to give way to boundary of creek (Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, subd. 2).

Where deeds of lots referred to plat of town which showed Cache creek as eastern boundary of lots, language of lots stated as 150 feet, and also as about 150 feet, had to give way to definite and ascertained boundary of Cache creek, the water line of center of stream, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, subd. 2.

3. Deeds ⇨90—Where private party is grantor, grantee is favored one in event of controversy.

Where a private party is grantor, grantee is the favored one in the event of any controversy.

4. Boundaries ☞14—Deeds carrying side lines to bank of stream without limitation by description of short line connecting side lines carries conveyance to center of stream.

Deeds carrying side lines to bank of stream without any limitation by description of a short line connecting two side lines, as running along shore or bank of a stream, carries conveyance to center of stream.

5. Confusion of goods ☞3—Injured party may recover value of whole only when confusion of goods is such that true proportions are indistinguishable.

Where confusion of goods is caused by wrongful act of another, injured party may replevy whole or sue in damages for value of whole only when admixture is such that true proportions are indistinguishable.

6. Confusion of goods ☞13—Burden of proof rests on person causing confusion of goods to show that rights of parties can be approximated.

Where wrongful act of party causes confusion of goods, burden of proof rests on him to show that rights of parties can be approximated.

7. Confusion of goods ☞15—Whether confusion of goods prevents recovery of his proportion thereof by one of owners is question of fact.

Whether there has been such confusion of goods as will prevent recovery of his proportion thereof by one of owners is a question of fact.

Appeals from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action to quiet title and for damages by J. A. D. Hutton and others against the Yolo Orchard Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Elmer W. Armfield and Arthur B. Eddy, both of Woodland, for appellants.

Hurst & Hurst, of Woodland, and E. B. Mering, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiffs began this action in 1915 to quiet title to certain lands and premises situate in the county of Yolo, state of California, described as follows:

"Commencing at a point on the south property line of Washington street in the town of Cacheville county and state aforesaid, as shown by plat of said town of Cacheville, filed October 10, 1857, in Map Book No. 1, page 37 of the records of the county recorder of the county of Yolo, state of California, and to which map all reference to streets in said town of Cacheville are made, 150 feet easterly from First street in said town of Cacheville, running thence southerly and parallel to said First street to a point 300 feet southerly of the south property line of Clay street in said town of Cacheville to the property of Mary Griffith; thence easterly and along the line of said Mary Griffith's property to the eastern boundary of the original Hutton property; thence down the bed of Cache creek upon said eastern boundary line of said property to a point where said south property line of said Washington street, if extended, would intersect said eastern boundary line; thence westerly along said extended line to the place of beginning. Said eastern line of said Hutton tract above mentioned is located in the following manner, to wit: Commencing at the southwest corner of lot 2 as described in a deed executed by James M. Harbin and others to James A. Hutton, dated February 4, 1857, and recorded February 5, 1857, in Book C of Deeds, at page 82 records of the office of the county recorder of Yolo county, state of California; thence south and east 18 degrees, 100 rods to the middle of Cache creek; thence down said Cache creek east of north 18 degrees, 64 rods; thence east of north 78½ degrees, 24 rods."

The premises above described are included within the red line on a map, marked "Exhibit 9," and are situated along the bed of that certain stream in said county, known as and called "Cache creek."

In connection with their action to quiet title to said premises the plaintiffs also joined a cause of action for damages against the defendants, alleging that the defendants had removed certain gravel deposits from the easterly side of the center line of said stream to the damage of the plaintiffs in the sum of $25,000. The damages above referred to are set forth in a supplemental complaint filed by said plaintiffs, wherein said sum is alleged to be the value of sand and gravel removed from premises belonging to the plaintiffs by the defendants and converted to their use.

The trial court awarded judgment to the plaintiffs, quieting title to that portion of the premises herein described, lying west of a certain line running along the bed of said Cache creek, known as and called during the trial the "Harter line," being the line shown on Exhibit No. 9 as the west boundary of lands deeded by Harriet S. Hutton et al. to W. W. Brownell et al., by a deed recorded in Book of Deeds 41, page 487, Yolo county records. Judgment was also awarded the plaintiffs in the sum of $4,000. From the judgment quieting title and awarding damages, the defendants appeal.

The record shows that at 10 minutes past 10 o'clock a. m. on February 5, 1857, a deed bearing date of February 4, 1857, was recorded in Book C of Deeds, page 82, wherein and whereby James M. Harbin et al., parties of the first part, conveyed and confirmed unto James A. Hutton, of the county of Yolo, a tract of land containing about 316 acres in the county of Yolo, state of California, upon a part of which premises the town site of Cacheville referred to herein was thereafter located; that on the same day, to wit, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock p. m., February 5, 1857, there was recorded in Book C of Deeds, page 84, a deed executed by James A. Hutton to James M. Harbin, dated February 4, 1857, wherein and whereby the said James A. Hutton conveyed to James M. Harbin a half interest in 40 acres of land included within the tract mentioned in the deed of Harbin to Hutton, and, at the same time, there was recorded in Book A of Mortgages, page 285, Yolo county records, a mortgage by the said Harbin to the said Hutton, covering the 40 acres of land included in the conveyance of Hutton to Harbin, whereby the said Harbin mortgaged to the said Hutton the said 40 acres of land to secure the payment of the sum of $857.

In the deed from Hutton to Harbin mention is made of a certain map or plan of a town to be thereafter mutually made by the said Harbin and the said Hutton, from which plat was to be reserved certain lots upon which certain buildings might be found to be situate upon said premises after the same were platted. In the deed from Hutton to Harbin and in the mortgage from Harbin to Hutton, the east boundary line of the 40 acres conveyed and mortgaged was described as follows:

"Thence south of east eighteen degrees (18°) one hundred rods to the middle of the bed of said Cache creek; thence down said creek east of north (18°) eighteen degrees, sixty rods," etc.

The premises conveyed by Hutton to Harbin and by Harbin mortgaged to Hutton are shown upon the annexed map marked Exhibit A, and used by us for the purposes of illustration only:

The premises included in the last-mentioned deed and mortgage lie to the south of that certain street designated on the map as Washington street and west of the center of Cache creek. Thereafter, and on the 10th day of October, 1857, James A. Harbin filed in the county recorder's office of the county of Yolo, a map of the proposed town of Cacheville. The premises included in this action are shown upon "Exhibit 9" here annexed [see page 902] and the plat of the town of Cacheville, so far as involved herein and being a tracing of the original map, is shown upon "Exhibit 10," also annexed [see page 903].

On the 10th day of October, 1857, James A. Hutton and James M. Harbin granted and conveyed to one T. F. W. Price:

"All of that tract of land situate in the county of Yolo, state of California, known and described on the official plot of said town of Cacheville as fractional block No. three (3) being three hundred (300) feet front on First street and running back on Sacramento and Clay streets to the bank of Cache creek, containing five (5) lots of sixty (60) feet front each."

On May 1, 1857, said Hutton and Harbin granted and conveyed to one Philo L. Dustin those certain premises designated on the official map or plat of said town of Cacheville as "the south half of lot No. four (4) in fractional block No. two (2)" lying 30-foot frontage on First street and running back 150 feet. On July 18, 1862, James A. Hutton conveyed and granted to C. D. Moran those certain premises described as:

"Lot No. one (1) in block No. two (2) being sixty feet front on First street and running back one hundred and fifty feet on Sacramento street, as laid down on the official map of said town of Cacheville, on file in the recorder's office of Yolo county."

On September 4, 1858, said Hutton conveyed and granted to one Selig and Hyman those certain premises in the town of Cacheville described as:

"Lot No. two (2) in block No. two (2) as laid down and delineated on the plat of the town of Cacheville, which lot contains sixty feet front on First street and back eastwardly to the bank of Cache creek, and is bounded on the north by lot No. three (3) of the same block, east by Cache creek, south by lot No. one (1) of the same block, which separates it from Sacramento street, and West by said First street."

On August 12, 1867, said Hutton conveyed to Charles S. White et al. those certain premises in the town of Cacheville, described as:

"Lot No. two in said town of Cacheville, also a strip of land 39 feet 8 inches wide across the whole length of the north side of lot No. one (1) in block No. two (2) of said town."

On October 18, 1858, said Hutton conveyed to one Ferguson those certain premises described as:

"Lot 3, block 2, of the town of Cacheville, as laid down on the official map of said town, containing 60 feet front on First street and running back about 150 feet to the bank of Cache creek, bounded north by P. L. Dustin, east by the bank of Cache creek, south by Hyman, and west by First street."

On September 30, 1858, James A. Hutton conveyed and granted to P. L. Dustin those certain premises situate in the town of Cacheville, as appears on the map thereof, and described as follows:

"The south half of lot No. four (4) in fractional block No. two (2), containing a front of thirty feet on First street and running back eastwardly to the water line of Cache creek; bounded west by First street, north by the north half of said lot formerly sold to said Dustin, east by Cache creek, and south by lot No. three."

On May 13, 1857, said Hutton sold to Laurence Hollenbeck and John T. Noel those certain premises in the town of Cacheville, described as follows:

"Being in the town of Cacheville and known and designated on the official plat of said town of Cacheville as lot No. five in fractional block No. two, lying sixty feet front on First street and running back one hundred and fifty feet on Washington street."

On June 7, 1887, Harriet S. Hutton and others granted and conveyed to W. W. Brownell all and singular those certain premises situate in the county of Yolo, containing about 212 acres, being a portion of the premises theretofore conveyed by James M. Harbin to the said James A. Hutton, by the deed first mentioned herein. This deed, among

"Thence east 30 feet to the fence on the east side of the road; thence southerly on the line of said fence to the center of Cache creek; thence down the center of said creek to Cramer's southwest corner."

On February 9, 1860, James A. Hutton conveyed to William Campbell those certain premises in Yolo county, described as follows:

"Commencing at the southeast corner of the junction of Clay and First streets in the town of Cacheville; thence running southerly with the direction of said First street 300 feet; thence easterly to the western bank of Cache creek; thence northerly with the western bank of said Cache creek 300 feet to the south boundary line of Clay street; thence westerly with the southern boundary of said street to the place of beginning."

Thereafter said premises were conveyed by S. N. Mering to Mrs. Nancy Mering, his wife, by a deed dated May 14, 1892, describing the premises as follows:

"Commencing at a point common to the middle of Clay and First street in the village of Cacheville; thence running southerly in the direction of said First street one hundred and sixty feet (160) to the lands of A. Griffith; thence easterly to the middle of Cache creek; thence northerly down the middle of said Cache creek one hundred and sixty (160) feet to the middle of Clay street; thence westerly down the middle of said Clay street to the place of beginning."

"Also that certain piece of land adjoining the above-described land commencing at a point common to the center of Clay and First streets; thence running westerly down the middle of Clay street, three hundred and sixty (360) feet to a point common to the middle of Clay and Sec-other lands, conveyed the premises described on one of the maps as property belonging to the defendant Yolo Orchard Company. The boundary lines in this deed, so far as material here, are as follows:

ond streets; thence southerly down the middle of the county road one hundred and ninety (190) feet; thence easterly and parallel with Clay street three hundred and sixty (360) feet; thence northerly and parallel with said Second street one hundred and ninety (190) feet to the place of beginning, commonly known as the New Process Flouring Mills."

Thereafter, on October 26, 1926, said Nancy Mering conveyed to C. S. Mering all of the premises just herein described. On February 13, 1901, C. S. Mering conveyed to E. B. Mering et al. all of the premises last described. On June 24, 1901, C. S. Mering, E. B. Mering et al., sold and conveyed to E. J. De Pue all of the premises last herein described, and on July 29, 1901, said De Pue conveyed to the Yolo Orchard Company all of the premises herein described.

It will be observed that all of these deeds beginning with May 14, 1892, described the easterly boundary of the premises conveyed as being the middle of Cache creek. The controversy herein revolves around the question of whether the several deeds herein referred to have conveyed whatever interest James A. Hutton originally acquired to the bed of Cache creek, or whether the conveyances limited the boundary line of the several tracts so as to leave in the said Hutton, and therefore in the present plaintiffs as his heirs, a small portion of the bed of the Cache creek lying west of the center line thereof and adjoining fractional blocks Nos. 2 and 3 in Cacheville and a small portion of the bed of said creek lying east of property belonging to the defendant known as the "mill site." The record does not disclose that James M. Harbin ever parted with his half interest in the 40 acres conveyed to him by Hutton, other than as the fractional block No. 3, in the town of Cacheville and certain lots in fractional block No. 2.

On the part of the respondents it is contended that no title to said premises is shown by the record to have been vested in James M. Harbin by virtue of the deed to him of a half interest in the 40 acres herein referred to, by reason of the fact that the conveyance from Hutton to Harbin appears to have been acknowledged by Harbin and not by Hutton. As meeting this contention, appellant calls attention to section 1207 of the Civil Code relating to conveyances defectively acknowledged prior to a certain date. Respondent questions the applicability of this section, insisting that it relates only to the protection of subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers, and does not permit the admission of the deed from Hutton to Harbin as evidence for any purpose in this case. The last sentence of said section, however, is general in its terms, and makes a recorded instrument, though defectively acknowledged, as effective as though it were properly acknowledged. The last part of the sentence reads as follows:

"Duly certified copies of the record of any such instrument may be read in evidence with like effect as copies of an instrument duly acknowledged and recorded; provided, when such copying in the proper book of record occurred within fifteen years prior to the trial of the action, it is shown first that the original instrument was genuine."

The deed in this case defectively acknowledged was recorded some 60 years prior to the date when it was sought to introduce it in evidence. The admissibility of such a deed is considered in the case of Mercantile Trust Co. v. All Persons, 183 Cal. 369, 191 P. 691, and does not appear to be limited to controversies simply between purchasers and incumbrancers. However, as to whether Harbin ever acquired a one-half interest, or now has any interest in the Cacheville premises involved in this action, is wholly immaterial. The relevancy of the conveyance of Hutton to Harbin is only as a circumstance, along with others, tending to evidence the intent of Hutton to part with or withhold his interest in the bed of Cache creek. After the various deeds executed by both Hutton and Harbin, and by Hutton alone, conveying all the lots in fractional blocks Nos. 2 and 3, having an east frontage on Cache creek, or wherever the line may be, we find that the Hutton heirs joined in a deed conveying all the property belonging to him lying easterly of Cache creek and east of the said town of Cacheville and the lots herein described, which deed places the west boundary line of the lands conveyed as running to the center of Cache creek, and thence down the center of said Cache creek to a certain designated corner.

In the conveyance executed by Hutton and Harbin to Price, conveying fractional block No. 3, in the town of Cacheville, the premises are described as follows:

"Being three hundred (300) feet front on First street and running back on Sacramento and Clay streets to the bank of Cache creek."

In the deed from Hutton to Harbin and in the mortgage from Hardin to Hutton, the east boundary line of the same premises is described as the center of Cache creek. The reasonable inference from the language used in these instruments would be that the boundary line is intended to be the same in all three cases; there being nothing to indicate a contrary intention. The deed from Hutton and Harbin to Price not containing any reference to a line running northerly and southerly along the west bank or along the bank of Cache creek, delimiting or evidencing an intention to mark out a boundary line different from that referred to in the instruments executed by Hutton to Harbin and Harbin to Hutton, the east line would be the center of the creek. In the deed from Hutton and Harbin to Dustin conveying the north half of lot No. 4, in block No. 2, the premises are described as running back 150 feet, but the reference is first made to the lot as described on the plat. The tracing from the plat on file shows a different length, from which it follows that the 150 feet line does not limit the extent of the lot, but it extends back from Front street the distance necessary to make it conform to the plat according to which it is conveyed.

Lot No. 1 in block No. 2 is described as running back 150 feet on Sacramento street. This lot is also sold as laid down on the official map of the town of Cacheville. A reference to the tracing from the original plat shows that the northerly line of the lot is longer than the southerly line. No distance is given for the northerly line in the conveyance, nor is there any connecting boundary line mentioned as defining the easterly boundary line connecting the north and south boundary lines of said lot. From this it follows that, wherever the map filed carries the lines, the conveyance must be held as conforming thereto. In the deed executed by Hutton to Selig and Hyman, lot No. 2, in block No. 2, is conveyed as laid down and designated on the plat of the town of Cacheville, which lot contains 60 feet frontage on First street and running back eastwardly to the bank of Cache creek, and then the boundary is stated as follows:

"On the north by lot No. three (3) of the same block, east by Cache creek, south by lot No. one (1) of same block, * * * and west by First street."

[1] There seems to us no reasonable question but that "the bank of Cache creek and bounded east by Cache creek" are used as synonymous terms and under section 830 of the Civil Code carries the east boundary to the center of the creek. Again, in the conveyance of lot No. 3, in block No. 2, "as laid down on the official map of said town," the lot is described as "containing 60 feet frontage on First street and running back about 150 feet to the bank of Cache creek; bounded north by P. L. Dustin, east by the bank of Cache creek, south by Hyman, and west by said First street."

Cache creek, being a permanent natural monument, carries the line back to the creek, and, under section 830 of the Civil Code, to the center of the creek. It also appears that the language "150 feet" to the bank of Cache creek has preceded it the word "about," which shows that the parties did not intend to limit said line to 150 feet, but to carry the line back to Cache creek, irrespective of whether it was or was not 150 feet. The distance in this case mentioned is only relative, or given in such terms as to indicate no intention to cut off the lot before it reached the creek.

The conveyance of lot No. 4, in block No. 2, was effected by two deeds, one conveying the north half and the latter the south half. In the deed conveying the north half of lot No. 4, after describing the lot as described on the official map, the description contains the following:

"The north half of lot No. four in fractional block No. two, lying thirty feet front on First street and running back one hundred and fifty feet."

The conveyance of the south half of the same lot, after referring to the lot as designated and numbered according to the official map of the town of Cacheville, etc., uses the following description:

"The south half of lot No. four (4) in fractional block No. two (2), containing a front of thirty feet on First street and running back eastwardly to the water line of Cache creek; bounded west by First street, north by the north half of said lot formerly sold to said Dustin, east by Cache creek, and south by lot No. three."

This deed clearly shows the intention of the grantor to carry the line of the lot eastwardly to Cache creek. A reference to the maps which we have set forth herein shows that the north line of lot No. 4, in block No. 2, is longer than the south line and that the easterly line of the north half of lot No. 4 would be longer than the easterly boundary line of the south half of lot No. 4, even though Cache creek is the easterly boundary line of both the north and south half of said lots. Also, in this latter deed, we have the water line of Cache creek and east by Cache creek used in the same sense of fixing the east boundary line, which under section 830 of the Civil Code means the center line of Cache creek.

In the instrument conveying lot No. 5, in block No. 2, the description is as follows:

"Being in the town of Cacheville and known and designated on the official plat of said town of Cacheville as lot No. five in fractional block No. two, lying sixty feet front on First street and running back one hundred and fifty feet on Washington street."

The description in feet cuts the line short a considerable distance from Cache creek as the lot is delineated on the official plat of the town of Cacheville, and this is true whether the bank of the creek or the center line of the creek be held as the easterly boundary line of the lot. Here, again, we may refer to the boundary lines given in the deeds conveying lot No. 4, in said block, which goes back to the water line of Cache creek, and upon the official map the north line of lot No. 4, in block No. 2, and the south half of lot No. 5, in block No. 2, are one and the same. Thus, if lot No. 4 goes to the water line of Cache creek or to Cache creek, lot No. 5 extends to the same boundary.

Section 830 of the Civil Code reads as follows:

"Except where the grant under which the land is held indicates a different intent, the owner of the upland, when it borders on tidewater, takes to ordinary high-water mark; when it borders upon a navigable lake or stream, where there is no tide, the owner takes to the edge of the lake or stream, at low-water mark; when it borders upon any other water, the owner takes to the middle of the lake or stream."

This section must also be read in connection with certain subdivisions of section 2077 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in considering the deeds, to which we have referred. In subdivision 2 of said latter section we find the following:

"When permanent and visible or ascertained boundaries or monuments are inconsistent with the measurement, either of lines, angles, or surfaces, the boundaries or monuments are paramount."

And also subdivision 4:

"When a road, or stream of water not navigable, is the boundary, the rights of the grantor to the middle of the road or the thread of the stream are included in the conveyance, except where the road or thread of the stream is held under another title."

And subdivision 6:

"When the description refers to a map, and that reference is inconsistent with other particulars, it controls them if it appear that the parties acted with reference to the map; otherwise the map is subordinate to other definite and ascertained particulars."

As we have said, there appears to be nothing in any of the deeds conveying the fractional parts of blocks 2 and 3, which would indicate an intention on the part of the grantor to limit the easterly boundary of the lots to a line 150 feet east of First street or to the west bank of Cache creek. None of the deeds contain such words of limitation as running along the bank of Cache creek or running along the westerly bank of Cache creek, as appears in some of the cases holding that such language limits a deed to the bank instead of the conveyance carrying title to the center of the stream, as would otherwise be the case under section 830 of the Civil Code.

[2] Under subdivision 2 of section 2077 of the Code of Civil Procedure the distance in this case stated as 150 feet and also as about 150 feet must give way to the definite and ascertained boundary of Cache creek, the water line of the center of the stream. In all cases the official map was referred to as the lot conveyed and the further description of the lots contained in the deeds do not appear in any way to affect such description, nor are they inconsistent therewith, unless it be held that in the instances where certain lines are mentioned as running 150 feet or about 150 feet easterly are inconsistent with the map, but, in view of the fact that in some of those very deeds, the bank of Cache creek, the water line of Cache creek and Cache creek are designated as the easterly line, it is evident that the grantor intended to convey according to the map which carried the lots to Cache creek, and that the permanent monuments referred to were intended to designate the easterly boundary line of the property conveyed.

The claim of title by prescription on the part of the plaintiffs requires but little mention. The record shows that the premises exhibited no visible evidence of possession by any of the plaintiffs, save and except the hauling therefrom of a few loads of sand at same date after 1892, from a place in the creek near what was called the old Mering property, near the mill site. The record shows no inclosure of the premises described in the plaintiffs' complaint, and it is further shown that said premises were never listed for the purposes of taxation, and that no taxes had been paid by the plaintiffs upon the claimed premises. The only occupancy of the disputed premises is that of the alleged use made thereof by the defendants in taking sand and gravel, as the scrapers or machinery operated by the Yolo Orchard Company moved in its course across Cache creek to take sand and gravel from the bed thereof.

In addition to the résumé which we have given of the deeds of conveyance and the sections of the Code, citation of authority seems unnecessary. However, the language of the Supreme Court in the case of Los Angeles v. San Pedro, etc., R. Co., 182 Cal. 652, 189 P. 449, is applicable:

"It may be considered a cañon in American jurisprudence that, where the calls in a conveyance of land are for two corners at, in, or on a stream or its bank, and there is an immediate line extending from one such corner to the other, the stream is the boundary, unless there is something which excludes the operation of this rule by showing that the intention of the parties was otherwise.' See, also, City of St. Louis v. Rutz, 138 U. S. 226, 11 S. Ct. 337, 34 L. Ed. 941; see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 11 S. Ct. 808, 838, 35 L. Ed. 428; Producers' Oil Co. v. Hansen, 238 U. S. 325, 35 S. Ct. 755, 59 L. Ed. 1330."

[3] Attention is also called in that case to the rule of interpretation that, where the sovereign is the grantor, the instrument is considered most strongly in favor of the sovereign, but, where a private party is the grantor, the grantee is the favored one, in the event of any controversy.

[4] The language of the decision just referred to shows that deeds carrying side lines to the bank of a stream without any limitation by a description of a short line connecting the two side lines as running along the shore or bank of a stream carry the conveyance to the center of the stream—in this case, to the center of Cache creek.

In considering words of limitation, which may appear in the conveyances of lands bordering on streams, the text-writer, in 4 Ruling Case Law, page 87, refers to the authorities as follows:

"Other words such as running 'down river,' 'along the shore,' or 'along the bank,' may be given the same effect and may prescribe a limitation of the boundary line to the shore or bank. For the same reason a boundary which runs 'up the bank' will pass title merely to low-water line. However, in some jurisdictions the courts adhere to a different rule, and when a deed describes the land as bounded by a bank, or as on the west side of a nonnavigable river, or by lines running to a stake or line upon the bank, thence 'up' or 'down' the stream to another monument on the bank, the thread of the stream is the boundary. And the words 'running up a creek' are not treated as a binding call, but merely as indicating the general direction of the line, which must run in a straight direction from boundary to boundary. Accordingly, there are decisions that the title to the center of a stream is granted by a deed describing the boundary line running 'to the river, and thence on the river shore'; or by a description of land as 'lying on the south side' of a nonnavigable river which is also named as a boundary."

As heretofore said, however, none of the deeds to which we have referred contain any words of limitation. We are therefore constrained to hold that the plaintiffs have shown no title by mesne conveyances or by possession, by virtue of which they would be enabled to maintain this action. Not having title to the premises involved in this action, they have suffered no damages.

While not necessary to a decision herein, we will refer to the subject of damages. The court found that the defendant Yolo Orchard Company had removed from Cache creek during the several years of its operations 98,971 tons of sand and gravel, for which it received the gross returns of $56,618.95, and that the plaintiffs had been damaged in the sum of $4,000. So far as the findings are concerned, just how and in what manner the $4,000 damages suffered by the plaintiffs were estimated does not appear. There is no finding that it was impossible to ascertain the amount or approximately the amount of sand taken from the premises alleged to belong to the plaintiffs, nor does it appear whether the damages were or were not allowed from the value of the sand in place at the time of its alleged removal. The record shows that there is testimony from which, if believed by the trial court, the quantity of sand and gravel removed from the premises claimed by the plaintiffs could be estimated. There is no difference shown by the record of the value of sand and gravel taken from either side of the center of Cache creek. The record does show, however, that as sand and gravel were removed from the stream, the recurring floods in Cache creek proceeded to make additional deposits of sand and gravel, and in most cases to cover up and heal whatever wounds or excavations defendants made in the bed of the stream.

[5, 6] Under the rule relating to the confusion of goods caused by the wrongful act of another, it is only when the admixture is such that the true proportions are indistinguishable that the injured party may replevy the whole or sue in damages for the value of the whole. The rule in relation to damages in such cases is set forth in section 47, of the Second Edition of 2 Schouler on Personal Property, as follows:

"If the intermixture was caused by one's willful misconduct, the offender must bear the loss; for it has long been settled at common law that, where personal chattels, solid or fluid, are so mingled as to have become undistinguishable by the wrongful act of one owner, he cannot recover for his own proportion, nor for any part of the intermixture, but the entire property vests in him whose right was invaded. Nor is the latter obligated to compensate the former, in such a case, according to our laws, in which respect many have thought that we differ from the civilians; for the gist of the rule appears to be the natural justice, on the one hand, of allowing the intentional trespasser to be the loser by his own wrongful act, and, on the other, the injustice of permitting any innocent owner to be deprived of property without his consent. The intermixture being such, then, that the true proportions are undistinguishable, the injured party may replevy the whole, or sue in damages for its value."

While the burden of proof rests upon the party causing the intermixture, if the testimony shows that the court can approximate the rights of the parties, neither one is entitled to all the proceeds of the value of the whole. In 5 California Jurisprudence, p. 489, § 5, the rule is set forth as we have just stated and the authorities are cited. The text is as follows:

"The rule stated in the preceding section is carried no further than necessity requires. If the goods can be easily distinguished and separated, as articles of furniture, for instance, then no change of property takes place. Also, if the goods mixed together were of equal value, as corn or flour, then the injured party takes his given quantity and not the whole. If exact justice cannot be obtained, an approximation to it must be sought, care being taken that no injury is done to the innocent party. The burden of proof rests with the party causing the mixture."

[7] Likewise, in 5 Ruling Case Law, p. 1057, relative to confusion of goods and the rights of the parties, the rule is stated that whether there has been such a mixture of goods as will prevent a recovery of his proportion thereof by one of the owners is a question of fact for the jury, and it was error for the court to assume to decide that question; that is, in this case, it was a question of fact for the court to decide. In this case, the findings show that the court failed to decide the vital question, which determines whether the rights of the parties, whether the proportions could be determined, whether the innocent party should be given the whole, or the wrongdoer allowed an equitable proportion. Whether the $4,000 allowed as damages is for the whole value of the sand and gravel in place or for a proportionate share thereof, or what part thereof, does not appear. The evidence does show that the value of the sand and gravel in place was only nominal.

In addition to the authorities which we have cited, we may also list the note to the case of Ayre v. Hixson, Ann. Cas. 1913E, p. 665, where the subject is fully considered.

Other reasons are assigned herein as grounds for reversal, but by reason of the foregoing, and especially the first ground herein considered, further extension of this opinion is unnecessary.

The judgment is reversed.

MELLO et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.
(Civ. 3321.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 28, 1927.

1. Master and servant $\S$ 403—Petitioners have burden to show injury arose out of as well as in course of employment (Workmen's Compensation Act).

In proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended), burden is on petitioners to show that injury arose out of as well as in course of employment.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 403—No presumption arises that injury occurring in course of employment arose out of employment.

Fact that injury occurs in course of employment does not give rise to presumption that injury arose out of or because of such employment.

3. Master and servant $\S$ 405(4)—Finding accident did not arise out of employment held supported by evidence, where prune picker was drowned in pool (Workmen's Compensation Act).

In proceedings, under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended), for death of prune picker found drowned in pool on employer's premises, lying outside of direct course of travel from deceased's house to point of work, evidence held to support finding of Industrial Accident Commission that accident did not arise out of employment.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Mary Borba Mello, in behalf of herself and Laura Mello, and others, minors, as their guardian ad litem, for the death of Antonio Mello, opposed by St. John's Park Company, employer, the State Compensation Insurance Fund, and another. Order of the Industrial Accident Commission denying compensation, and claimants apply for certiorari. Affirmed.

Bradford, Cross & Prior, of Sacramento, for petitioners.

Frank J. Creede and G. C. Faulkner, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This is an application for a writ of certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission denying compensation to the petitioners, the surviving wife and children of Antonio Mello, deceased, who, at the time of his death, was in the employ of St. John's Park Company as a prune picker.

The commission found:

"The deceased was found drowned in a two-foot pool of water on the premises of the employer, * * * and on autopsy examination it was discovered that he also had had a beginning pneumonia. The drowning of deceased was not due to injury arising out of his employment with said employers."

In this opinion no weight is given to the finding that Mello "had a beginning pneumonia." The only question for determination is whether there is sufficient evidence to support the finding that the drowning "was not due to injury arising out of his employment." The evidence bearing upon this question is meager. The record contains a map of the premises, apparently conceded to be drawn according to a scale, but the scale is not given. The following is a copy of such parts of the map as are material to the question under discussion:

[1-3] The places and objects delineated on the map will be referred to by the names appearing thereon. The whole area shown on the map is an orchard. On the day of the accident, two of the Mello children, Lillian and one of her brothers, the latter being sick, remained in the Mello house while Mr. and Mrs. Mello and some of the children went to the "old orchard" to pick prunes. During the forenoon the work in that orchard was completed, and the pickers then went to the place marked "point of work" for the purpose of picking prunes at that place. In going there Mrs. Mello and some of the children followed the road beside which the office is situated. It does not appear by what course Mr. Mello made the trip. Thereafter, about 9:30 o'clock of that forenoon, Mello left, saying that he was going back to the house for a shaking pole, and his wife asked him to give the sick boy some medicine. Louis, another son, asked his father to bring a watermelon for lunch. Mrs. Mello testified that Lillian said that Mr. Mello took the shaking pole and a watermelon from the house, and went back to the field. His body was found in the drain pool about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of that day. The shaking pole and the watermelon were found in the same pool. While the water was shallow, as found by the commission, in the part of the pool in which the body was lying, it was eight feet deep in some other parts. The water in the pool was the drainage from the dehydrator, and contained a small percentage of lye, enough "to make a man's eyes sting," but "it was not strong enough to have any effect on your hands." The position of the body was such as to indicate that the man had fallen into the deeper part of the pool, and had drowned while attempting to crawl out. The record is wholly silent as to why Mello took this roundabout way to go from his house to the place of his work. A witness, who is secretary and one of the managers of the St. John's Park Company, testified that "the prune pickers are supposed not to pick melons, but it is not looked upon in the nature of any particular misdemeanor. They are simply asked not to.

* * * They are not supposed to pick them, but, however, it is very generally done. They all do it." Louis had put the melon in the Mello house the evening before the accident. It is possible that Mello kept away from the road on his return from his house in order to avoid being seen with the melon by any one in the office. Of course, the fact that he took a melon belonging to his employer is wholly immaterial, except as it may explain his purpose in taking the course he pursued through the orchard. The burden was upon the petitioners "to show that the injury arose out of as well as in the course of the employment; and there is no presumption * * * that because an injury occurs in the course of the employment it arises out of or because of that employment." G. L. Eastman Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 186 Cal. 587, 593, 200 P. 17, 19. The evidence does not show that Mello had any duty to perform in the vicinity of the pool, or that it was necessary or even convenient for him to pass by the pool on his way back to work. A justifiable inference from the evidence is that he went out of the usual course for purposes of his own, and not to discharge any duty of his employment. In a case similar in principle it is said:

"An employer cannot be held liable under our compensation act [St. 1913, p. 279, as amended] unless the accident arises out of and in the course of the employment, and of course it devolves on a claimant to establish this fact by evidence from which such a conclusion is fairly inferable." Casualty Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 176 Cal. 530, 533, 169 P. 76, 77.

If it be conceded that the evidence is sufficient to support a finding that the accident arose out of the employment it cannot be held that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding made by the commission, especially in view of the fact that the burden of proof was on petitioners.

The order is affirmed.

CANN v. PARKER. (Civ. 4431.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 7, 1927.

1. Judgment $\S$ 163—Generally, on motion to vacate default judgment, only question is whether facts establish case of excusable neglect.

General rule is that only question to be passed on on motion to vacate default judgment is whether facts are sufficient to establish case of excusable neglect.

Denying motion to vacate default judgment in claim and delivery action for automobile, where defendant did not answer because sheriff, when delivering summons, told her that, if she delivered automobile, it would be unnecessary for her to appear, and that no judgment could be entered, except for its possession, and where her answer, tendered at same time, admitted plaintiff's ownership and right to possession, but denied demand had been made, and denied damages, held not abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action of claim and delivery of an automobile by Lora Cann, doing business as Don Cann, against Mrs. William Gilbert Parker Judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William & Guy Lewis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Minor Blythe, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This appeal is from an order denying the defendant's motion to set aside and vacate the judgment and her default for failure to appear in the action. The complaint in the form of a claim and delivery action upon a conditional sales contract with a claim of $300 damages for detention was filed on January 5, 1923, and the motion was first noticed for March 21, 1923. The reason assigned by the defendant in her affidavit for not answering is that, when the sheriff demanded possession of the automobile, and served her with a copy of the summons, which was on January 5, 1923, he stated to her that, if she delivered the car to him, it would not be necessary for her to appear; that no judgment could be entered in the action except for its possession. In the same affidavit she averred that, after fully stating the facts to her counsel, she was informed by him that she had a "good legal defense to" the action. She tendered an answer at the same time in which by failure to deny it was admitted that plaintiffs were the owners of, and entitled to the possession of, the automobile, but denied that demand had been made for possession prior to the institution of the action, and denied that she had detained the automobile, and denied damage in the sum of $300 or any other sum. In response to this affidavit the plaintiff filed two reply affidavits, which contained almost exclusively averments relating to the question of whether plaintiff had demanded possession, and whether defendant had detained possession, and whether plaintiff had been damaged by the detention. There is only one statement in the reply affidavits that may be considered as going to the question of inadvertence or excusable neglect, which is a denial that defendant relied upon the statement of the sheriff. On the first hearing the court, on motion of defendant, granted a continuance for the purpose of allowing her to make a further showing as to the merits of her defense either by way of further affidavits or by amended answer. Further affidavits were filed to the same effect as previously, but the proposed answer was not amended, nor was the affidavit of merits. The additional statement was made that the defendant did not have the funds with which to employ counsel for advice, and therefore she relied upon the statement of the deputy sheriff. The motion was denied.

[1] The appellant complains that the court considered the reply affidavits for any purpose. Undoubtedly it is the general rule that the only question to be passed upon in such a motion is whether the facts are sufficient to establish a case of excusable neglect. It was never intended that the merits of issues of fact should be passed upon in any such proceeding (Jergins v. Schenck, 162 Cal. 747, 124 P. 426; Rauer's Law & Coll. Agency v. Gilleran, 138 Cal. 352, 71 P. 445), unless perhaps there is good reason for the court to believe that the defense is sham and frivolous, and intended solely for the purpose of delay.

[2, 3] Without regard to the reply affidavits, however, does it appear that there has been an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge? The authorities are numerous to the effect that, unless there has been an abuse of discretion, the order will not be disturbed. It will be noted that, although two and one-half months had elapsed from the service of summons until the motion was made, there is no suggestion of an excuse in the affidavits for not making the motion more seasonably. The excuse for not appearing in the first instance was not of such a character as to appeal wholeheartedly to the conscience of the jurist. The complaint was very simple, and it and the summons plainly showed that appellant would have to appear or suffer judgment for repossession together with damages for the detention of the automobile. There is no suggestion that defendant could not read and understand the significance of the papers served upon her. The affidavit states that defendant had a "good legal defense" instead of saying that she has a good and meritorious defense or a good defense on the merits. This very fact indicates that the denials in the answer, when considered in connection with the fact that there is no denial of ownership or right of possession, may be based not upon the merits, but upon a technical defense. While it is true that a defense on the merits sufficient to defeat any substantial part of plaintiff's claim is sufficient, we cannot find sufficient to warrant us in saying there was an abuse of discretion.

Order affirmed.

Whether woman's fall was proximately caused by her heel catching on projecting board of temporary sidewalk held, under the evidence, for trial court sitting without aid of jury.

Whether temporary sidewalk was negligently constructed, in that it contained cracks and projecting boards, held, under the evidence, for the trial court sitting without the aid of a jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Benjamin K. Knight, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by Katherine M. Sheckles and another against the Clinton Construction Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Kemp, Mitchell, Silberberg & Davis and Kemp, Partridge & Kemp, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. This is an action prosecuted by plaintiffs to recover damages for injuries sustained, due to the alleged negligence of the defendants. The case was tried before the court without a jury. Judgment went for plaintiff Katherine M. Sheckles in the sum of $500, and for her husband, coplaintiff Walter B. Sheckles, in the sum of $387. From the judgment entered, the defendants present this appeal.

There is no dispute as to the fact that plaintiff Katherine M. Sheckles was injured while walking on a temporary plank sidewalk constructed by the defendants along the north side of the Lane building, situated at the southwest corner of Spring and Eighth streets, Los Angeles, and that, as a result of falling, plaintiff Katherine M. Sheckles broke one of the small bones of her left ankle.

The findings of the court were:

"That said temporary sidewalk was not even, but was constructed of pieces of rough boards of irregular length, and that the same was so carelessly, negligently, and dangerously constructed as to be dangerous for pedestrians to walk upon. That upon the west end of the said temporary sidewalk, where the same reaches the point opposite the alley in the rear of the said building, the said defendants negligently constructed the said temporary sidewalk in such a manner that one of the boards at a point where there was a step from the said temporary sidewalk to the public alley extended about one and one-half inches beyond the other boards constituting the surface of the said temporary sidewalk; that the construction of the said sidewalk was carelessly and negligently installed, and that the same was not done in a good and workmanlike manner, and that the defendants did not use the care required of them in the construction of the said sidewalk, and that, by reason of the negligence and want of ordinary care in the construction thereof, the said sidewalk, at the point above mentioned, was dangerous to the life and limb of the pedestrians walking upon the said temporary sidewalk. The (trial) court further finds that on the evening of the 6th day of June, 1922, at about 6:30 o'clock, the plaintiff Katherine M. Sheckles was walking westerly from Spring street upon and along the said temporary sidewalk so constructed and maintained by the said defendants, and that, when said plaintiff reached the end of the said temporary sidewalk where the same reaches the alley on the westerly side of the said property, she stepped down with her left foot, and, in attempting to step with her right foot from the sidewalk, the heel of the shoe of her left foot caught on the projecting board carelessly and negligently left by the defendants projecting from said sidewalk, by which she was tripped and fell in such a manner as to fracture the bones of her left ankle."

[1] The only ground of appeal urged by appellants is that the evidence does not support the findings. It is first urged by appellants that the testimony does not support the finding that plaintiff tripped on the projecting board, and that there is no evidence in the record showing what particular thing caused, or was the proximate cause of, the plaintiff's fall. The evidence is undisputed that one or more of the boards on the step projected somewhat beyond the other boards. It is also undisputed that plaintiff fell while stepping from the step in the sidewalk. While the evidence is not entirely clear as to what caught the heel of plaintiff's shoe, yet we believe that under all the circumstances there was some evidence to support the finding of the trial court that plaintiff's heel caught on the projecting board. Where there is some evidence, though slight, to support the finding of the trial court, the judgment will not be reversed on appeal. Plaintiff was the only witness who testified as to the manner of the fall. She testified:

"Why, I was walking with these friends, as I stated, and, when I reached the end of the board of the boardwalk, I stepped off with my right foot, and my left foot was caught in a manner that it held in such a way that it threw my whole body forwards. * * * My left foot was hung under me in such a manner that I was thrown forward. * * * Something caught my heel and held it firmly, as though it was in a vise. * * * No; I hardly think my foot turned before I stepped. I think that my fall was from being held up, because I had a sensation that I will never forget to my dying day that my

Several other witnesses testified to seeing the plaintiff fall as she attempted to step from the sidewalk; also that some of the boards on the sidewalk projected beyond the other boards. Photographs and plats of the projecting board were also introduced in evidence. We conclude from the foregoing that there is testimony sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that plaintiff's heel caught on a projecting board.

[2] It is further urged by appellants that the evidence does not support that portion of the first finding, namely, that the construction of the temporary sidewalk was carelessly and negligently installed; that the same was not done in a good and workmanlike manner; and that the defendants did not use the care required of them in the construction of the said sidewalk. The witness George H. Fruehling, called on behalf of plaintiffs, testified that he measured and made plats of the sidewalk on the morning after the accident. He further testified as follows:

"Q. Now, what condition did you find the ends of those boards in, which constituted the temporary sidewalk, that intersected with the alley of the sidewalk itself? A. They were very irregular. * * * Q. Go on and state what irregularities you found in the ends of those boards. A. I found that the third and fourth boards from the outside of the sidewalk had a projection greater than any of the rest of the boards. * * * Q. Now, you may state to the court what condition you found them in with reference to projections. A. I found that these two boards, that I have mentioned, the third and fourth boards from the outside of the sidewalk, the one—the third board had a projection of nearly one and three-quarters inches beyond the riser, and by the riser I mean—* * * Q. This is Exhibit 2. Mark it one and three-quarter inches at the point you have indicated. Is that correct? A. Yes, sir; and at the inside of the fourth board from the outside of the sidewalk, I found a projection of one and one-eighth inches from the riser. * * * Q. Is that beyond the edge of the other corresponding board? A. No, not exactly. * * * Q. Now, referring to the surface of the boards three and four, which projected the greater distance beyond the riser, what was their condition as to roughness or otherwise? A. As shown on the photograph, you will notice that the board, the first board on the inside, and on the inside edge was split back probably a foot, as I have also indicated on my little drawing. Q. Referring to Exhibit 8? Mr. Dunnigan: That is shown on Exhibit 3, that top view? A. That top view. It shows from both views at this point (indicating). Mr. Kemp: All right. Now, was there any crack between the third and fourth? A. Yes, sir; there was quite a large crack. There was quite a large crack, and a little chip, a knot, right at the corner of the third board. Mr. Dunnigan: Pardon me a second. I move to strike out the statement that there was quite a large crack. This witness has measured it, and if he has he can give us the exact figures. The Court: Yes. * * * About how wide would you say that crack was? A. About three-quarters of an inch."

Appellants' contention cannot be sustained. It was for the court, as it would have been for a jury, considering all the circumstances and facts shown by the evidence, to declare whether the defendants were or were not negligent. The defendants were called upon to exercise the care which the circumstances required in the construction and maintenance of the temporary sidewalk, and what was ordinary care it was peculiarly the province of the court below, sitting as a trier of the facts, to determine. Humphrey v. Leonard, 151 Cal. 375, 90 P. 705; Wile v. Los Angeles Ice, etc., Co., 2 Cal. App. 190, 83 P. 271; Oliver v. Stoltenberg, 24 Cal. App. 637, 142 P. 108; Siegman v. Fetters, 59 Cal. App. 115, 210 P. 49. In view of the foregoing authorities and the evidence submitted in the case, we do not believe it can be held in this court as a matter of law that respondent has not established that the proximate cause of her injury was due to the negligent manner of the construction or maintenance of the sidewalk on which she was injured.

The judgment is affirmed.

WILKES et al. v. BRADY et al. (Civ. 3294.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 2, 1927.

Easements $\Leftrightarrow$ 12(1)—Executed parol agreement for right of way, followed by improvements and use, will be protected.

Executed parol agreement under which pasturage was exchanged for right of way, followed by improvements, expenditures of money, and use of right of way, created equitable title sufficient to sustain suit to restrain interference, notwithstanding that grantor executed deed erroneously describing other land as right of way.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Suit by Alfred G. Wilkes and others against Howard Brady and others to enjoin interference with the use and maintenance of a road. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, and Lawrence Schillig, of Yuba City, for appellants.

A. H. Hewitt, of Yuba City, and Charles S. Wheeler and J. W. Dorsey, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This is an equitable action instituted by the plaintiffs seeking to enjoin the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs' use and maintenance of a certain road over and across certain lands belonging to the defendant Howard Brady. The plaintiffs' right to the use of said road is based upon an alleged executed parol grant in the year 1918, when the then owner, Thomas Brady, in consideration of the exchange of certain grazing privileges on lands belonging to the plaintiffs, granted to the plaintiffs a right of way across the lands of the said Thomas Brady, leading from a certain public road to the lands belonging to the plaintiffs.

The complaint sets forth the ownership of the roadway belonging to the plaintiffs, the interference of the defendants therewith, and concludes with a prayer that the defendants be enjoined and restrained from in any manner further interfering with either the use or repair of said road.

The record shows that the plaintiffs and defendants were and are the owners of contiguous lands in Sutter county, the plaintiffs and the Field & Tule Gun Club having clubhouses on the lands reached by the right of way herein referred to. In 1918 the plaintiffs and the Field & Tule Gun Club desired to have a road across defendants' lands from the county road to the clubhouse just mentioned, and during the month of March, 1918, one Frank W. Stall, on behalf of both clubs, in negotiating with Thomas Brady, offered to exchange the pasturage for that year on the lands belonging to the two clubs for a right of way; the pasturage being valued at the sum of $500. This agreement was orally concluded as stated, and thereupon the said Thomas Brady, the then owner of the land, executed a deed for a right of way, as desired by said clubs, and delivered the same to the said Frank W. Stall. This agreement of exchange was, during the month of May, 1918, further ratified by the plaintiffs, on behalf of the club, of which they were members, and some modification made with relation to the value of the grazing privileges, and a certain sum of money passed between the said Thomas Brady and the plaintiffs and the Field & Tule Gun Club. Thereafter, and about the month of June, the plaintiffs proceeded to construct a road across the right of way involved in this action and expended in so doing something over the sum of $1,000. For three years after the construction of the road over the right of way and the making of the improvement just referred to, the same was used by the plaintiffs and also by the defendant, a gate being maintained thereon for the purpose of preventing egress and ingress of stock. Some time during the year 1922 the defendants locked the gate herein referred to and have attempted to prevent the plaintiffs from using the right of way herein referred to, and otherwise interfering with the use of said right of way by the plaintiffs.

The record shows that the deed referred to as executed by Thomas Brady, conveying the right of way over land sought by the defendants, did not describe the right of way actually improved and used by the plaintiffs, but described a strip of land situate some distance therefrom. This appears to have occurred by inadvertence in describing the right of way as situate in section 31 instead of in section 30.

The record shows, however, that the actual right of way agreed upon and the lands over which the easement for a right of way was sought was known and understood by the parties; that Thomas Brady, the owner of the land at the time of the making of the agreement herein referred to and the execution of the deed, knew of the location of the right of way and the line along which the road was improved and upon which the expenditures were being made by the two clubs. The court also found that the intended right of way was located on the strip of land described in plaintiffs' complaint. The record further shows that the said Thomas Brady had the benefit of the value of the pasturage referred to, as given in exchange for the right of way set forth in plaintiffs' complaint. The deed which we have referred to, executed by the said Thomas Brady, purporting to convey a right of way, was excluded by the court on the theory that it described a right of way across lands in a different section from that where the road actually constructed and used by the plaintiffs was and is located. It does appear, however, that the grantee in the deed was examined in relation thereto for the purpose of showing a mutual mistake of the parties in the description contained in the deed, and that the grantor intended by the conveyance to give the plaintiffs the right of way or easement over the particular lands where the road was laid out and the improvements made. This testimony was admitted in connection with other testimony for the purpose of establishing an executed parol grant of the easement, and that the same had become effectual by its exercise while Thomas Brady was still the owner of the land, and that, in pursuance of the parol agreement, the plaintiffs had entered into the possession of and had made the improvements of the road leading from the county road or highway to the lands belonging to the two clubs, all during the time that Thomas Brady was the owner of the lands intended to be granted, and that after the building of said road said plaintiffs and the defendants used the same without objection from any one for a period of three years.

Upon these facts, which we have gleaned from the record and from the findings of the court, the court drew its conclusions that the easement for the right of way had become vested in the plaintiffs as an executed parol grant, and that the plaintiffs were the owners of the equitable title to such easement, and as such were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the use thereof.

Appellants do not appear to challenge the correctness of the findings of the trial court, but rely upon the contention that an easement for a right of way cannot be acquired in any such manner.

The findings of fact show an agreement of exchange, the entering of the plaintiffs into the immediate possession of the right of way, followed by the improvement and actual use of the road they had built upon such right of way, all with the knowledge and consent of Thomas Brady, the then owner of the premises.

The law is clear that such an equitable title is amply sufficient to sustain an action to restrain interference therewith. As stated in Flickinger v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 126, 25 P. 268, 11 L. R. A. 134, 22 Am. St. Rep. 234, where a right of way for the construction of a ditch was involved, possession had been given, and deed unexecuted:

Where "nothing remains to be done except the execution of a conveyance of the right of way. * * * His equity to a deed is perfect (Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 494; 73 Am. Dec. 593); and when such is the case, a court of equity, in accordance with its familiar rules considering that as done which ought to be done, will protect it as readily and as fully as a legal title. If the legal title would be protected by an injunction, a perfect equitable title should also."

In Rubio Canon, etc., Ass'n v. Everett, 154 Cal. 29, 96 P. 811, a case where the principle involved is the same as that with which we are here dealing, it was held that an equitable title to an easement might be acquired by parol. The agreement involved in that case referred to a right of way for a pipe line, and in an action to protect such easement, the court held (quoting from the syllabus):

"In such action, evidence of the parol agreement between the original owner of the land and the plaintiff, who erected the pumping plant, is admissible for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff held the equitable title to the easement prior to the conveyance thereof by such owner."

It will be noticed that the agreement in the case at bar relative to the right of way and the pasturage therefor was an agreement of immediate exchange, not of something to take place in the future, that Thomas Brady proceeded to take the benefit of the pasturage and the plaintiffs proceeded with the improvement of the road along the line where the easement was located by the oral agreement. The earliest California cases to which our attention has been called, McDonald v. Bear River, etc., 13 Cal. 234, sustains such agreements and protects rights acquired thereunder as fully and completely as though a deed had been executed in due form. After considering certain technical defects under which the plaintiff took possession, the court, in its opinion, uses the following language:

"That by force of such agreement, and the possession taken under it, * * * McDonald acquired an equitable estate in the premises, giving him a present right to its full enjoyment we think, clear, and this right, being united with the present possession, enabled him to maintain any action for an interruption of the possession or any injury to the property."

In considering the question of easements acquired by an oral agreement, the text-writer, in 9 California Jurisprudence, p. 949, thus expresses the rule of decision:

"Even an oral agreement, if executed and based upon a valuable consideration, will convey an equitable title to the easement agreed upon," citing Flickinger v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 126, 25 P. 268, 11 L. R. A. 134, 22 Am. St. Rep. 234, and Rubio Canon, etc., Ass'n v. Everett, 154 Cal. 29, 96 P. 811.

The California cases all hold that an easement may be created by an executed oral agreement. We need only cite the following: Blankenship v. Whaley, 124 Cal. 300, 57 P. 79; Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516, 83 P. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301, 7 Ann. Cas. 704; Gravelly Ford Canal Co. v. Pope & Talbot Land Co., 192 Cal. 4, 218 P. 405; Id., 36 Cal. App. 717, 178 P. 155; Cairns v. Haddock, 60 Cal. App. 83, 212 P. 222; Scott v. Henry, 196 Cal. 666, 239 P. 314.

In Scott v. Henry, supra, the action was one to enjoin the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's right to maintain and use a certain ditch across the lands belonging to the plaintiff. It was there held that an easement for such ditch was created and acquired by parol. The owner of the servient tenement had made and delivered deeds, by which it was intended to vest title in the easement, and also went upon the lands with the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs proceeded to immediately make use thereof, etc.

It does not appear in the case at bar whether Thomas Brady went upon the lands intended to be conveyed by the deed referred to, purporting to invest the plaintiff with an easement for a road, but it does appear that all parties had knowledge of the location of the right of way and that immediately after the agreement herein referred to, the plaintiffs proceeded to improve the right of way intended to be conveyed and covered by the easement, and to make use thereof, and that this use was continued for the period of three years without any objection, which presents a state of facts identical in principle with those involved in the case of Scott v. Henry, supra.

In Cairns v. Haddock, 60 Cal. App. 83, 212 P. 222, this court, where a right to the continuance of an easement created by parol was involved, held as follows:

"A parol license to construct an irrigating ditch over the licensor's land, which is executed by the construction of the ditch by the licensee with the expenditure of a large sum of money, becomes in all essentials an easement upon the licensor's land, continuing for such length of time as the use of the ditch may continue."

A like ruling was held in the case of Gravelly Ford Canal Co. v. Pope & Talbot Co., 192 Cal. 4, 218 P. 405.

In Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516, 83 P. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301, 7 Ann. Cas. 704, the contention was over the right to maintain an irrigating ditch. It was there held that the easement granted by parol conveyed a title which would be protected.

Our attention not having been called to and not being able to discover from the record any particulars in which the findings are not supported by the evidence, and the law being established by an unbroken line of authorities that a parol agreement for a right of way when executed, followed by improvements and expenditures of money and use, will be protected, the judgment of the trial court must be and the same is hereby affirmed.

WEAVER v. ATLANTIAN CONST. CO.
et al. (Civ. 5487.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 25, 1927.

1. Corporations ⚡—Corporate entity cannot be ignored in action against stockholder, in absence of evidence that two other equal shareholders are trustees for him.

Corporate entity of de jure corporation cannot be ignored in action against stockholder for alleged fraud of corporation and another stockholder, in absence of evidence that two others having equal amounts of stock held the same in trust for him.

2. Corporations ⚡—Misrepresentations of corporation director cannot make codirector liable unless he knew of and was party to fraud.

Misrepresentations of fact as to corporation's assets and prospects, made by one director to induce investment by third person, cannot make codirector personally liable, without proof that he had knowledge of and was a party to the misrepresentations.

3. Corporations ⚡—One dealing with corporation as such may not afterward hold stockholders personally liable.

One dealing with corporation as a corporation in buying its stock may not afterwards be permitted to claim more than he bargained for and hold the stockholders personally liable.

4. Partnership ⚡—Evidence held insufficient to show existence of partnership between stockholders so as to render them individually liable for fraud of one stockholder.

Evidence of only such community of interest between stockholders of de jure corporation as all stockholders in the same corporation have held insufficient to show existence of partnership between stockholders so as to render them individually liable for fraud of one in selling stock of the corporation.

5. Trial ⚡—397(3)—Findings are properly silent on defense of settlement not pleaded.

Findings are properly silent on defense of settlement of controversy, where there is no pleading by way of answer on which the defense may be based.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. H. Ellis, Judge.

Action to recover money paid for corporate stock by Stella Dee Weaver against the Atlantian Construction Company, J. H. Meyering, William P. Mason, and others. Judgment for plaintiff against the named defendants, and the two defendants first named appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Janeway, Beach & Pratt, S. T. Hankey, and Wood, Janeway & Pratt, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by respondent against Atlantian Construction Company, a corporation, and J. H. Meyering, William P. Mason, D. H. Naylor, Jr., and A. Y. Jameson, alleged to be the stockholders of the corporation and also alleged to be copartners therein. Judgment was entered against the corporation and two of the directors and stockholders, namely, J. H. Meyering and William P. Mason, in the sum of $2000, together with interest. Atlantian Construction Company and J. H. Meyering, one of the directors and stockholders, have appealed.

Appellants urge that the judgment cannot be sustained for the reasons:

"(1) There is no warrant either in the facts or the law for a judgment against the appellant J. H. Meyering as a copartner of the defendant William P. Mason; (2) the respondent settled the matter of which she complains by a contract in writing between herself and the appellant corporation."

The Atlantian Construction Company was a building company and was duly incorporated on June 10, 1921, and a copy of the articles of incorporation was duly filed with the county clerk of Los Angeles county, the city of Los Angeles being the principal place of business of the corporation. The capital stock of the corporation was $100,000, divided into 5,000 shares of the preferred stock and 5,000 shares of common stock, each of the par value of $10 per share. The incorporators were W. P. Mason, J. H. Meyering, and W. H. Hicks, who were the first directors, and each subscribed $500—that is, for 50 shares of stock, or a total of $1,500. At the first meeting of directors held on June 15, 1921, appellant J. H. Meyering was appointed president and treasurer, W. H. Hicks vice president and general manager, and William P. Mason secretary. Later on negotiations were entered into for an arrangement whereby W. H. Hicks was to retire and the defendants D. H. Naylor and A. Y. Jameson were to become stockholders and directors, but this arrangement was never consummated; and, although on January 4, 1922, W. H. Hicks had signed a conditional assignment of his interests in the corporation to all four individual defendants, that assignment never took effect inasmuch as the condition of its execution was never performed, and therefore, on and up to the 4th of February, 1922, the date of the impugned transaction, there had been no change in the holding of the shares of the three incorporators, who were the only stockholders at that time. The defendant William P. Mason had charge of the office of the appellant corporation, and, although appellant J. H. Meyering was the president, he had his office in a different part of the city.

Respondent testified that she never knew and never talked with the appellant Meyering and that all her dealings were with defendant Mason as secretary and took place in the office of the corporation, first in January, 1922, when her husband was with her, and again on February 4, 1922, when she purchased the stock in controversy and drew her check for $2,000 in favor of appellant corporation, which she handed to defendant Mason, the secretary, and received from him a certificate for the shares of stock signed by defendant Mason, as secretary, and appellant Meyering, as president.

Defendant Mason testified that there was a proposition on foot that defendant Jameson and his friends would put money into the corporation and that Mr. Jameson had been talking to Mr. Weaver, the husband of respondent, about it. This was corroborated by Jameson himself, who says that he told Mr. Weaver that he contemplated doing so, and the defendant Mason further says that at the time of receiving the check that he told respondent he would protect her in the event of this proposition not going through.

Defendant Jameson testified that when he was told Mason had made a sale of stock to respondent he spoke to defendant Meyering over the telephone and advised him not to sign the stock certificate as Mason was figuring too much on profits, and appellant Meyering's testimony was that when the defendant Mason brought the stock over to his office for him to sign Mason stated to him that he had a special arrangement with respondent that if for any reason the proposition with Mr. Jameson and his friends did not go through, the $2,000 should be applied to the building of Mr. Weaver's house, which was in progress of construction by the Atlantian Construction Company, and that this arrangement was quite satisfactory to him.

The alleged misrepresentations are set out in the amended complaint and in the findings of the court, and are that defendant Mason represented to respondent that the appellant Atlantian Construction Company was a solvent and going concern; that defendants Jameson and Naylor were putting $35,000 into the business; and that appellant Meyering and defendant Mason had put large sums of money and valuable rights and contracts into the business of the company and that the company was paying dividends of 8 per cent. and would eventually pay more than 100 per cent. That these representations were false is asserted by respondent and so found by the court, and we will therefore assume them to be false. There is, however, no evidence in the record—at least, we have been unable to find any and none has been called to our attention—to show or tending to show that appellant Meyering had any knowledge whatever of the alleged misrepresentations made by Mason to respondent, nor is there any finding of fact to that effect.

The appellant company was a corporation de jure properly organized and existing under the laws of the state of California and was so found to be and was acting as such. The three incorporators, appellant Meyering, defendant Mason, and W. H. Hicks, who subscribed for 50 shares of stock each, were still the stockholders having the same equal holdings in the corporation. Unless there is evidence in the record to justify the court in disregarding the corporate entity of appellant corporation and treating the stockholders as partners, the appellant Meyering cannot be held liable as a partner on account of the alleged misrepresentations by defendant Mason.

There are no cases to be found in this state nor in any other jurisdiction, so far as we have been able to find, and none has been cited by counsel in their briefs, where the separate entity of a corporation has in a similar case been disregarded. There are a number of California cases holding that an agreement made by persons interested in anticipation of the formation of the corporation are bound by the agreement and that, if necessary to its enforcement, the corporate fiction will be ignored. These authorities are collected in Conover v. Smith (Cal. App.) 256 P. 835, recently decided by this division of this court. Respondent has cited us to sections of California Jurisprudence as upholding her position. On looking up the cases cited in the notes to the text of California Jurisprudence set forth in respondent's brief, we find that in these cases there was some anterior agreement between the parties as to their respective rights in some business or undertaking, which, for the sake of convenience, was carried on in the form of a corporation. The effect of these cases is summed up in Tower v. Wilson, 45 Cal. App. 137, 188 P. 92, in which the court says:

"They merely go to the point of holding that, as between the original incorporators, the corporation is a trustee, and the court will dispose of its assets in accordance with the original agreement made between them, they, to that extent, some of the cases holding, being regarded as partners in the concern."

There are three recent cases in California which deal with the subject of ignoring the separate entity of corporations where the interests of third parties are concerned. Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 200 P. 641; Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 202 P. 673; and Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, 227 P. 723. In the Erkenbrecher Case Erkenbrecher was the owner of all outstanding shares of the capital stock of the company, some of them standing in the names of others, but in fact held in trust for him. The court held that there was nothing inequitable in recognizing the separate entities of Erkenbrecher and the corporation, in that the organization of the corporation and the transfer of his property to it were not in any manner fraudulent or prompted by dishonesty. In the Minifie Case one man, Rowley, was the owner and holder of all outstanding stock except one share each held by others for the purpose of qualifying them as directors. Rowley personally had given two promissory notes for $5,000 each, and for the purpose of renewing the notes gave a promissory note for the corporation, which he had formed and called the "Rowley Investment Company," for $10,000, and, there being no dealings with the corporation as distinct from the individual, Rowley, the court held that to recognize the corporate entity as distinct from Rowley would result in the avoidance of a legal obligation and perpetrate an injustice. In the Wenban Case Mrs. Wenban was the sole owner of all of the shares of stock of the corporation. The corporation sought to set aside certain bonds of the fruits of which Mrs. Wenban had had the benefit on the ground that they were null and void, being issued contrary to the provisions of section 359 of the Civil Code. The court ignored the separate entity of the corporation, holding that not to do so would result in fraud and injustice to a third person. In these three cases the corporation was in effect the alter ego of the individual.

In Minifie v. Rowley, supra, the court lays down the rule as follows:

"Before the acts and obligations of a corporation can be legally recognized as those of a particular person, and vice versa, the following combination of circumstances must be made to appear: First, that the corporation is not only influenced and governed by that person, but that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality, or separateness, of the said person and corporation has ceased; second, that the facts are such that an adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would, under the particular circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice."

[1] The facts in the case here are widely different from the facts in the cases quoted. The appellant corporation was not the alter ego of the appellant Meyering; there were three members of the corporation, all holding an equal amount of the stock, and there is no evidence that Mason or Hicks held their stock in any way in trust for appellant Meyering. Therefore it cannot be said that there was that unity of interest and ownership indicating a cessation of individuality and separateness of the person and the corporation, which the law requires before the corporate entity can be ignored. It further appears that it was the purpose of the incorporators to sell stock; that a permit to do so had been secured from the corporation commissioner; that stock had been sold, and efforts made to sell other stock.

[2, 3] The fraudulent misrepresentations of facts by the defendant Mason cannot make his codirector Meyering personally liable unless it is proved that he had knowledge of and was a party to such misrepresentations, and of this there is no evidence nor is there any finding to that effect. "There is no reason why parties who have dealt with a corporation as a corporation afterwards should be allowed to claim more than they originally bargained for and to hold the stockholders personally liable. Such is the established rule beyond reasonable doubt." 1 Cook on Corporations (6th Ed.) 634. A creditor who deals with a corporation as a corporation cannot hold the stockholders liable as partners. American, etc., Co. v. Bulkley, 107 Mich. 447, 65 N. W. 291.

[4] With reference to the finding of the existence of a copartnership between appellant Meyering and defendant Mason, there is no evidence of the community of interest between them necessary to create a copartnership. There is only the community of interest which all stockholders in the same corporation have and which these three stockholders, Meyering, Mason, and Hicks, as such, may here be said to have had.

[5, 6] As to the other point urged that "the respondent settled the matter of which she complains by a contract in writing between herself and the appellant corporation," and that by reason thereof appellant is released from liability, there is no merit. There is no pleading by way of answer upon which such defense can be based, and as a consequence the findings are silent thereon. While the writing was received in evidence, it was received over respondent's objection. A release is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded and proven. Coles v. Soulsby, 21 Cal. 47; San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, 53 P. 410; Great Western, etc., v. Chambers, 153 Cal. 313, 95 P. 151.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

WEAVER et al. v. ATLANTIAN CONST. CO.
et al. (Civ. 5488.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 25, 1927.

1. Partnership $\S$ 55—Evidence held insufficient to show existence of partnership between stockholders so as to render them individually liable for fraud of one.

Evidence of only such community of interest between stockholders of de jure building corporation as all stockholders in the same corporation have held insufficient to show existence of partnership between stockholders so as to render them individually liable for fraud of one in selling stock.

2. Damages $\S$ 119—Amount of recovery in actions ex contractu must be determined by legal measure of damages.

Amount of recovery in action ex contractu is not left to the sound discretion of the court or jury, but must be determined by application of the legal measure of damages.

3. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 312—Burden was on property owner suing building contractor to prove amount and validity of mechanics' liens paid by owner.

Burden was on owner seeking to recover damages for building contractor's breach of contract and for permitting filing of mechanics' liens, which the building owner paid, to prove the amount and validity of the liens.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. H. Ellis, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of contract by B. M. Weaver against the Atlantian Construction Company, J. H. Meyering, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Janeway, Beach & Pratt and S. T. Hankey, all of Los Angeles (Lissner, Roth & Gunter, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This action is one brought by respondent against Atlantian Construction Company, a corporation, and against each of the stockholders thereof as copartners. The relief sought is for damages for the alleged breach of a building contract executed by respondent and Atlantian Construction Company, a corporation, the breach complained of being the alleged failure of the defendants to complete the construction of the building and the alleged allowance by defendants of the filing of certain mechanics' and materialmen's liens. From the judgment against the corporation for the sum of $2,877.57 and against each of the stockholders of the corporation for the full amount thereof Atlantian Construction Company and J. H. Meyering, one of the stockholders, have appealed.

Appellants urge that the judgment cannot be sustained for two reasons: First, "there is no warrant either in the facts or the law for the judgment against the stockholders of the defendant corporation as copartners"; and, second, "the plaintiff wholly failed in making the necessary proof of the amount of damage suffered by reason of the alleged breach of contract."

The Atlantian Construction Company, alleged in the complaint first to be a corporation, is also upon information and belief alleged to be a copartnership consisting of each of the stockholders of the corporation. The allegation of the corporate existence is admitted, but the allegation of copartnership is denied. Upon the issue thus presented the court found:

"That the defendant Atlantian Construction Company, a corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, and having its principal place of business at and within the county of Los Angeles, state of California. * * * That on the 29th day of November, 1921, said corporation was only an instrumentality used by the defendants J. H. Meyering, William P. Mason, and W. H. Hicks, as copartners, in the furtherance of their copartnership business, and that such partnership was on said date engaged in the general construction and building business at and within the county of Los Angeles, state of California. * * * That on the 29th day of November, 1921, each of the defendants, including both the corporation and the stockholders, as copartners, entered into a certain building contract with the plaintiff."

The findings proceed to set out the contract which recites that it is entered into by and between B. M. Weaver, party of the first part, and Atlantian Construction Company, a corporation, party of the second part, and is signed "Atlantian Construction Company by W. P. Mason, Sec'y," and bears the seal of the corporation.

There is neither allegation, proof, nor finding of fraud, plaintiff relying upon his contention of the existence of the alleged copartnership to sustain his judgment against appellant Meyerering.

[1] The first point urged, "that there is no warrant either in the facts or the law for the judgment against the stockholders of the defendant corporation as copartners," is passed upon the case of Stella Dee Weaver v. Atlantian Construction Co. et al. (Cal. App. No. 5487) 258 P. 111, a companion case in which the evidence on this point is the same, this day decided, and on the authority of that case the judgment must be reversed.

[2, 3] As to the second point urged, "that plaintiff wholly failed in making the necessary proof of the amount of damage suffered by reason of the alleged breach of contract," the testimony of respondent is that he had paid out certain money to satisfy some four mechanics' liens; that when he came to summer the thing down and found out what was actually against the place he paid them. Aside from the payment of these liens respondent expended moneys in completing the building. In this respect the evidence shows that he signed a contract under date of July 24, 1922, with one Milton R. Sutton, for the completion of the building after the failure of appellant corporation to complete the same, and that the amount of the contract exceeded the amount remaining unpaid under the appellant corporation's contract. No proof was offered that respondent had received bids for completing the work, that he had given the contract to the lowest available contractor, or that the amount paid was a fair and reasonable value of the work performed. Differing from an action in tort, the amount of the recovery in actions ex contractu is not left upon general principles to the sound discretion of the court or jury. Where there is a legal measure of damages the court or jury must determine the amount as a fact. Parke v. Frank, 75 Cal. 369, 17 P. 427; Weichers v. Dehail, 41 Cal. App. 547, 183 P. 187. As to the liens the evidence is merely to the effect that respondent paid the liens filed against the property; the liens themselves were not offered in evidence, nor is there any evidence as to their validity. The right to enforce a mechanic's or materialman's lien depends upon a compliance with the requirements of the statutes, and the burden was upon respondent to show that the liens were valid and enforceable liens upon the premises. Wilson v. Nugent, 125 Cal. 280, 57 P. 1008.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

We concur. TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

STRAND v. EVERETT. (Civ. 5053.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 2, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1927.

1. Appeal and error §1010(1)—Finding of plaintiff's contributory negligence in burning of automobile supported by some evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

In action for personal injuries and property loss in burning of automobile from overflowing of gasoline tank at filling station, finding that plaintiff, owner of automobile, was guilty of contributory negligence, supported by testimony that her agent driving automobile was negligent in indefinite and uncertain manner in which he ordered quantity of gasoline, will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Explosives §10—Answer held to put in issue contributory negligence as proximate cause of burning of automobile by filling gasoline tank.

In action for personal injuries and for property damages in burning automobile through negligently filling gasoline tank, answer and amendment thereto setting up that plaintiff's damages were proximately caused by plaintiff's negligence, in driving automobile while overheated to filling station and spilling gasoline on its tank while filling it, held sufficient to put in issue plaintiff's negligence as proximate cause of injuries.

3. Negligence §117—Pleader may charge contributory negligence in general terms, but must show causal connection with injury.

Although pleader may charge contributory negligence in general terms, he must plead facts thereof, which must show causal connection with injury.

4. Appeal and error §882(3)—After trial on theory that contributory negligence was properly alleged, reversal cannot be claimed on appeal because such plea was insufficient.

Where trial is conducted on theory that contributory negligence of plaintiff was properly alleged and was in issue on appeal, reversal cannot be claimed on ground that plea was insufficient.

5. Appeal and error §1011(1)—Finding that plaintiff's concurrent negligence contributed to burning of automobile and injuries, supported by conflicting evidence, held conclusive on appeal.

In action for personal injuries and property loss in burning of automobile through negligently filling gasoline tank, finding that concurrent negligence and carelessness of plaintiff in spilling gasoline on tank contributed to burning of automobile and injuries, supported by conflicting evidence, held binding on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by Mrs. A. A. Strand against P. L. Everett, doing business as the Indio Auto Supply Service Station. From a judgment for plaintiff for less than she asked, she appeals. Affirmed.

E. R. Simon and Harry B. Ellison, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thos. C. Yager, of Indio, and O. K. Mor-ton, of Riverside, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff brought suit to recover damages for personal injuries and property loss arising from the alleged negligence of defendant in overflowing plaintiff's automobile tank at a gasoline filling station so that the automobile took fire, which caused the loss and injury. The trial court gave judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $240, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Plaintiff's husband, A. A. Strand, testified: That he drove the plaintiff's automobile from Brawley and stopped at the service station of the defendant at Indio. At that time Tyler G. Duff was sitting in the front seat with Strand and to his right. Plaintiff was sitting on the right side, and Mrs. J. F. Warner on the left side of the rear seat of the automobile. Plaintiff's husband got out of the automobile from the left side of the car and went to the right of the front seat and measured the contents of the gasoline tank, while Duff stood on the left side of the car near the front end, and the ladies remained in the rear seat of the automobile. That after measuring the contents of the gasoline tank, he stated to Craig, the defendant's employee who was in charge of the service station, "I want four gallons of gasoline." That he heard no further remark from Craig. That Craig inserted the end of the nozzle into the gasoline tank and began to pump. That shortly after the commencement of the pumping by Craig, the tank overflowed, at which instant he shouted to Craig, "I said four gallons." That Craig thereafter made a half turn of the pump and then said, "Oh, I forgot," and at that instant the portion of the automobile near the gas tank broke out in flames. Duff testified that he stood near the left front fender and Strand measured the gas in the tank and said to Craig, "Four will be enough;" that Craig inserted the end of the hose into the gasoline tank and said, "Well, it will take five, then," but that Strand made no reply; that Craig operated the pump, and he then heard Strand say, "Stop, you are giving me too much—I said four gallons"; that Craig then remarked, "I beg your pardon, I did not——"; and pulled the hose from the gasoline tank while it was running half capacity of the nozzle; that the hose was entirely away from the automobile when the flames broke out from the tank. Mrs. Warner testified that she heard Mr. Strand say, "I want four gallons." Mrs. Strand testified that she heard Strand say, "It will take four gallons," and that she did not hear Craig make any remark after Strand had ordered the four gallons of gasoline. V. W. Lockwood testified for the defense that he was at the service station of the defendant when the Chevrolet automobile was driven to the station by Strand; that he stood in the front door of the service station while Craig went to the gasoline pump, a distance of about 20 feet; that he heard Strand say, "Look out, it is running over"; that at the same time he saw gasoline drip underneath the car, and a few seconds later he saw a ball of fire drop from the engine pan, and then the car took fire; that he did not see any gasoline come out of the end of the hose when Craig threw it to one side; that Craig had stopped pumping when Strand said, "Look out, it is running over." Craig, the defendant's employee, testified that Strand was measuring the gasoline tank when he arrived at the automobile; that Strand withdrew the measuring stick from the tank, and, while looking at the stick, said, "Four gallons;" that he handed the hose to Strand, and said, "Well, it will take five more then, won't it?" that Strand did not answer; that he then started the operation of the pump, which was set at the five-gallon mark; that after he had completed the run of the pump and had stepped away from it to prepare to drain the hose, he heard Strand say, "It is running over," and Strand immediately added, while holding up the nozzle, "I said four gallons"; that he replied, "I beg your pardon, I did not——"; and at that time the gasoline took fire.

It thus appears that the evidence was in sharp conflict as to whether Strand ordered four or five gallons of gas. The trial court's findings were:

"III. That at the said time and place the said plaintiff gave said order for gasoline to plaintiff in a careless, indefinite, heedless, thoughtless and negligent manner, resulting in confusion and misunderstanding as to the amount of gasoline ordered; that plaintiff was careless and negligent in not responding to defendant's inquiry of the amount of gasoline desired; that plaintiff was careless and negligent in not giving proper attention and care to the business then in hand of ordering gasoline for his automobile.

"IV. That at the said time and place, the said defendant negligently placed and attempted to place gasoline in the said automobile in excess of four gallons, thereby causing the gasoline tank on said automobile to overflow and gasoline to be spilled on said automobile and the mechanism thereof, and said automobile shortly thereafter ignited and burned, demolishing and totally destroying said automobile and injuring plaintiff, Mrs. A. A. Strand. That the negligence of defendant was not willful nor deliberate."

"XIII. That it is not true that the said plaintiff, Mrs. A. A. Strand, and A. A. Strand, well knew at the time of the driving of the said automobile to the service station of said defendant that the said automobile and mechanism and machinery thereof was overheated and was extremely hot and in a dangerous condition in which to place gasoline or to permit the fumes and vapor of gasoline to come in contact therewith, and that it is not true that the said plaintiff, Mrs. A. A. Strand, or her agent, Mr. A. A. Strand, carelessly and negligently drove said automobile to said service station in said dangerous condition.

"XIV. That it is true that whatever injuries and damages the said plaintiff, Mrs. A. A. Strand, sustained was consequent upon, due to, and was proximately caused by the concurrent negligence and want of care of plaintiff's agent, A. A. Strand, and defendant's agent, E. E. Craig; that it is true that the negligence and carelessness of plaintiff contributed to and was concurrent in setting in motion the proximate and direct cause of the injuries and damage sustained by plaintiff; that the mutual carelessness and negligence of plaintiff and defendant was contemporaneous, concurrent, contributory, and continuing down to the very moment of the injury; that the mutual negligence and carelessness of plaintiff and defendant constituted the proximate cause of the injuries and damages sustained by plaintiff and because of the concurrent negligence of plaintiff she is entitled only to nominal damages.

"XV. That it is not true that the said plaintiff, Mrs. A. A. Strand, her agents and the occupants of said automobile drove said automobile to said service station of defendant in an overheated, extremely hot, and dangerous condition constituting contributory negligence. That it is true that the concurrent negligence and carelessness of said plaintiff in spilling gasoline on said tank during the filling of the same contributed to the proximate and direct cause of the injuries and damages suffered by plaintiff."

[1] It is claimed by appellant that Craig's act in overflowing the tank by delivering more gasoline than was ordered is negligence and is the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. It was the finding of the trial court that Craig was negligent, and that his negligence was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. It was also the finding of the trial court, based upon conflicting evidence, that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Such finding will not be disturbed on appeal where there was some evidence to support it, as it appears from the testimony heretofore stated that there was some evidence tending to prove that plaintiff's agent, Strand, was guilty of negligence in the indefinite and uncertain manner in which he ordered a quantity of gasoline.

[2] Appellant next contends that finding of fact III is outside the issues, and is not supported by the pleadings nor sustained by the evidence. It is claimed that defendant's pleading does not sufficiently state a defense of contributory negligence, in that the facts alleged did not show a causal connection with the injury. It is alleged in the amendment to defendant's answer:

"That whatever injury and damages the said plaintiff, Mrs. A. A. Strand, sustained, if any, either to herself or to her property, was consequent upon, and due to, and was proximately caused by the negligence and want of care of plaintiff, Mrs. A. A. Strand, her agents and the occupants of said automobile, to wit, A. A.

Strand, Mrs. J. F. Warner, and Tyler G. Duff, and that such negligence and carelessness of said plaintiff, Mrs. A. A. Strand, her agents and the occupants of said automobile, to wit, A. A. Strand, Mrs. J. F. Warner, and Tyler G. Duff, aforesaid, contributed to and was the proximate and direct cause of said injuries and damage, if any. This defendant further alleges that the said negligence and carelessness of the plaintiff and said others consisted in driving said automobile to the said service station of defendant in an overheated, extremely hot, and dangerous condition, and in spilling gasoline on said tank during the filling of the same."

[3, 4] Finding III, as hereinbefore quoted, merely states the manner in which plaintiff spilled the gasoline on the automobile tank as alleged in the amendment to the answer. The rule is settled, as held in Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. Mining Co., 168 Cal. 500, 505, that while the pleader may charge contributory negligence in general terms, yet he must plead the facts of such negligence, and the facts pleaded must show a causal connection with the injury. But where, as in the case at bar, the trial was conducted throughout upon the theory that contributory negligence of the plaintiff was properly alleged and that the fact was in issue, the rule prevails that the parties cannot on appeal claim a reversal on the ground that the plea was insufficient. Busch v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 536, 539, 174 P. 665, 2 A. L. R. 1607; Schuh v. R. H. Herron Co., 177 Cal. 13, 18, 169 P. 682; Kelly v. Santa Barbara, etc., R. R. Co., 171 Cal. 415, 421, 153 P. 903, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 67. The defendant does, however, affirmatively plead in his amendment to the answer that the damages to plaintiff were proximately caused by the negligence of plaintiff. This was a sufficient plea to put in issue plaintiff's negligence as the proximate cause of the injuries to plaintiff. Brkljaca v. Ross, 60 Cal. App. 431, 437, 213 P. 290. It is also to be noted that the answer itself denies and alleges as follows:

"That the plaintiff, Mrs. A. A. Strand, or A. A. Strand ordered from the said defendants four gallons of gasoline to be put into the tank of said automobile, but defendants allege that the said A. A. Strand did, on said date, order the agent of the defendants to put into the tank of said automobile five gallons of gasoline."

In our opinion, finding III is also supported by the foregoing pleading. Appellant's contention that finding III is not supported by the evidence cannot be upheld in view of the conflicting testimony hereinbefore quoted.

[5] Appellant also urges that the last sentence of finding XV is not sustained by the evidence. This reads:

"That it is true that the concurrent negligence and carelessness of said plaintiff in spilling gasoline on said tank during the filling of the same, contributed to the proximate and direct cause of the injuries and damage suffered by plaintiff."

In view of the conflict of evidence as hereinbefore indicated, we believe this contention to be without merit.

Appellant's further contentions are necessarily disposed of by the foregoing conclusions and for that reason will not be discussed.

We find considerable difficulty, as does appellant, in understanding how the trial court could render a judgment for expenses incurred by plaintiff for medical care, etc., based on the findings that plaintiff was guilty of negligence. However, defendant has taken no appeal, and that question is not before this court for decision.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

In re KELPSCH'S ESTATE et al.★
(Civ. 5685.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District Division 2, California. July 7, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 1, 1927.

1. Executors and administrators §314(11)—Statute providing for written objections to petition for distribution of estate of deceased person authorizes framing of issues of fact to be tried as are will contests (Code Civ. Proc. § 1668).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1668, providing that any person interested in the estate of a deceased person may appear and contest the petition for distribution by filing written objections thereto, expressly authorizes the framing of issues of fact to be tried as are will contests in accordance with sections 1714, 1716, and 1717.

2. Executors and administrators §314(12)—Objections to petition for distribution of estate of deceased person may not be raised for first time on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1635, 1668).

Objections to petition for distribution of estate of deceased person, not raised in the trial court, cannot be raised for first time on appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1668, providing that at the time for hearing any person interested in the estate may appear and contest the petition by filing written objections thereto, in view of section 1635.

3. Executors and administrators §314(12)—Jurisdiction of probate court distributing property of deceased person to determine that property was community property might be questioned for first time on appeal.

Decree distributing the estate of deceased person might be attacked on ground that probate court had no jurisdiction to determine that the property was community property, although this question was raised for the first time on appeal, since jurisdictional questions may always be raised.

4. Executors and administrators §314(11)—Probate court, passing on petition for distribution of estate of deceased, might determine whether it was community property, where executor, as husband, claimed interest in property as community property.

On petition of executor and executrix for distribution of the estate of a deceased person, probate court had jurisdiction to determine whether the property was community property, where the executor claimed one-half of the property as husband of deceased by reason of the fact that the property was community property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Christine M. Kelsch, deceased, Joseph A. Kelsch, executor, and Ellen C. Johnson, executrix. From an order approving and settling the final account and directing distribution, Mrs. Inger A. Beckner and others appeal. Order affirmed.

Henshaw, Black & Lyders and Eric Lyders, all of San Francisco, and Rush & McCormick, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bradner W. Lee, Jr., and Kenyon F. Lee, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. Christine M. Kelsch died at Los Angeles in December, 1925, leaving a will in which her husband, Joseph M. Kelsch, and Ellen C. Johnson were nominated executor and executrix. They were appointed such and in their final account reported that the entire property held by the deceased was community property. They inserted a further statement as follows:

"That said estate consists of community property, and therefore one-half thereof goes to the surviving husband, Joseph A. Kelsch, the other one-half is subject to testamentary disposition of the decedent, and if the said third clause of said will is valid, he will be entitled to three-fourths of said estate, and the other one-fourth will be distributed to the nieces and nephews named in said will, whereas, if the third clause of said will is invalid, said Joseph A. Kelsch, as the surviving husband, will be entitled to the entire estate."

After the petition for distribution was filed the appellants here, as the residuary legatees subject only to one-half previously devised and bequeathed to Joseph A. Kelsch, the executor, filed what is denominated in the order settling the final account, "a memorandum and statement of facts," to which the executors replied by "a statement of facts." What the statements were does not appear from the transcript, but it does appear from the briefs that they were not pleadings which raised issues of fact. The court found that the entire property was community property and ordered three-fourths thereof distributed to Joseph A. Kelsch and one-fourth to the appellants as the residuary legatees and devisees. The appeal is from the order approving and settling the final account and ordering distribution.

[1] The first question must be as to whether the appellants have any standing to urge upon the court a consideration of the appeal. Section 1668 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, among other things relative to the petition for distribution, that:

"At the time fixed for the hearing, or to which the hearing may be postponed, any person interested in the estate may appear and contest the petition by filing written objections thereto." (Italics ours.)

[2] It has been held that this provision expressly authorizes the framing of issues of fact to be tried as are contests of wills in accordance with sections 1714, 1716 and 1717 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Carter v. Waste, 159 Cal. 23, 112 P. 727. It should be noted that the sentence quoted from section 1668 of the Code of Civil Procedure and construed in Carter v. Waste, supra, was added by amendment in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 993) so that the Estate of Benner, 155 Cal. 153, 99 P. 715, which was tried in the probate court prior thereto, does not help us to solve the question. The industry of counsel has uncovered no authority directly in point. We are not, however, left without light on the proper construction to be placed upon the effect of the amendment upon the right to raise questions on appeal not raised by pleadings in the court below. Section 1635 of the Code of Civil Procedure is similar to the sentence under scrutiny in so far as it gives to interested parties the right to appear and file written exceptions to an account of the executor or administrator. And we read with reference to this section 12 C. J. 814, that:

"Its object is that an issue shall be made as to the items contested, or with which it is sought to charge the representative. It was intended that he should know the items contested or the matters in regard to which he is claimed to have been delinquent, so that he may come into court with his evidence prepared to meet or explain any exception taken to his account."

It has also been said that the account and report, exceptions (if any) and findings (if any) and order constitute the judgment roll. Estate of Thayer, 1 Cal. App. 104, 81 P. 658. Also, that an objection to an item in the account cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Estate of Rohrer, 160 Cal. 574, 117

P. 672, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 479. So in Estate of More, 121 Cal. 635, 54 P. 148, it was announced that:

"* * * If a person interested in an estate wishes to contest an account presented for settlement by the executor or administrator, he must file his exceptions in writing to the account, setting out specifically the grounds of his objections; and at the hearing he should be held limited to the exceptions so presented."

Adhering to the same rule in Estate of Marre, 127 Cal. 128, 59 P. 385, the court held that where the objections were oral and were made in the presence of the administrator and the court, the administrator should be deemed to have waived the requirement that they be in writing. This last ruling, however, is of no comfort to appellants here for we do not find any record of oral objections. It seems obvious from the line of authority concerning section 1635 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the law should be that where the Legislature has outlined a manner by which the issues may be framed that interested parties who have the opportunity and desire to frame issues should follow that procedure or be precluded from raising their objections for the first time on appeal. It certainly cannot be said that it is conducive to the proper administration of justice to deny to the trial court and the adversary knowledge of the points of assault and wait until the matter is before the appellate tribunal to launch an attack upon the evidence.

[3, 4] Holding, as we do, that objections not raised in the trial court may not be raised for the first time on appeal, does not, however, include the attack of appellants upon the decree on the ground that the probate court had no jurisdiction to determine that the property was community property. Jurisdictional questions may always be raised. However, the recent case of Bauer v. Bauer, 256 P. 820, sets at rest a question long in doubt and draws the distinction between those cases where the probate court may try title and where it may not, holding that in those instances where the representative of an estate claims title to property in his individual capacity the probate court may try the question. That is the case here—the respondent, the executor, claimed one-half of the property to be his by reason of the fact that it was community property.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

MACMURTRY v. FRATIES. (Civ. 5782.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 11, 1927.

1. Pleading $\S$ 64(2)—Complaint commingling causes of action for money lent and money paid held not insufficient.

Complaint commingling cause of action for money lent and cause of action for money paid held not insufficient.

2. Trial $\S$ 396(1)—Finding that all allegations of complaint were true held sufficient to support judgment under complaint commingling causes of action for money lent and money paid, though unsupported by evidence of money lent (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 463).

Under complaint commingling causes of action for money lent and for money paid, finding that all allegations were true held sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff, though there was no evidence regarding money lent, since complaint would still be sufficient with that allegation stricken, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 463.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 169—Issue not presented to trial court will not be reviewed.

Issue which was not presented to trial court by pleadings as framed or otherwise will not be considered on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Alton B. MacMurtry against George J. Fraties. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. A. Kottinger, of Oakland, for appellant.

Forrest M. Pearce, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The trial court awarded a judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant, and from that judgment the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The first point made by the defendant is that the trial court made a finding which is not sustained by the evidence. The contention is correct, but it is of no benefit to the defendant, as will appear from a consideration of the following matters:

[1, 2] The charging part of the complaint is that the defendant was indebted "to the plaintiff in the sum of \$1,076, on an account for moneys lent by the plaintiff to said defendant and for money paid, laid out and expended by the said plaintiff to and for the use of said defendant as his request." To that complaint a demurrer of the defendant pleaded only that the complaint was insufficient. The complaint was not insufficient. It commingled (1) a cause of action for money lent, and (2) a cause of action for money paid, etc. After the action had been tried, the trial court made findings in which it found that each and all of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint contained are true. Conceding that there was no evidence regarding "money lent by the plaintiff to said defendant," it is clear that, if that allegation be stricken out, the complaint would still be sufficient. Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 463. A finding that all the allegations of the complaint are true is a sufficient finding to support the judgment. Fritz v. Mills, 170 Cal. 449, 458, 150 P. 375. The findings as made do not present a set of facts similar to the facts before the court in such cases as Holt Mfg. Co. v. Collins, 154 Cal. 265, 276, 97 P. 516.

[3] As we understand the defendant, he contends that a partnership existed between the plaintiff and himself, that no accounting has been had, and therefore no judgment should have been rendered in favor of the plaintiff on a cause of action such as the plaintiff had alleged in his complaint. Whatever there may be in the contention, it is sufficient to state that no such issue was presented to the trial court by the pleadings as framed or otherwise.

The judgment is affirmed.

FULMER v. PACIFIC SOUTHWEST TRUST & SAVINGS BANK et al.

(Civ. 5684.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 8, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 6, 1927.

1. Executors and administrators $\S$ 510(11)—Order disallowing items of administrator's account will be upheld, if justified on any ground.

Order of superior court disallowing expenditures and claim for fees of administrator on final account, if justified on any ground, will be upheld.

2. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 84—Rights of wronged party in case of breach of contract to sell real estate may be fixed by terms of contract itself.

On entering into contract involving purchase or option to purchase real estate, parties have right to anticipate event of breach of contract, and to provide for rights of wronged party arising therefrom.

3. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 84—Administrator held not bound to make payments under option contract held by intestate, providing that on nonpayment of installments sums previously received by vendors should be retained as consideration for option.

Under contract by which deceased was permitted to purchase real estate at fixed sum to be paid in installments on exercise of option to purchase, and by which all sums received by vendors were to be retained as consideration, and purchasers' right forfeited in case payments were not made when due, administrator was not legally bound to make further payments; sole result of failure to do so being forfeiture of amounts previously paid.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨506(1)—Personal representative has burden to show his conduct in administering estate is that of ordinary prudent man having knowledge of business which he has assumed to transact.

Burden is on personal representative to show that his acts in administering estate are those of ordinary prudent man having knowledge of business which he assumed to transact, as no man has right to undertake trusteeship which he is incapable of managing with ordinary skill and wisdom.

5. Executors and administrators ⇨135—Belief of personal representative as to value of land which deceased had option to purchase, unsupported by investigation, does not alone warrant charge against estate.

Belief of personal representative that land which deceased had option to purchase was worth price to be paid is not alone sufficient to base charge against estate for payment of installments of purchase price without investigation as to value.

6. Executors and administrators ⇨135—Disallowance of administrator's expenditures, made without investigation in payment of installments on deceased's land contract, held proper, where administrator was not bound to make payments, price was grossly exaggerated, and vendors could not deliver title.

Under final account of administrator to which creditors excepted, payments made by administrator without investigation under option or purchase contract of intestate, which administrator was not required to make, held to amount to mismanagement of estate, justifying disallowance of items of account, where land was purchased at grossly exaggerated price, vendors could not deliver title, and payment was made of portion which was to have been borne by other parties, as payment showed want of exercise of ordinary prudence in administering estate.

7. Executors and administrators ⇨82—Ex parte orders permitting administrator to pay installments on deceased's land contract held not res judicata of propriety of payments on administrator's final account.

Ex parte orders obtained by administrator authorizing him to make payments under land contract of deceased held not res judicata of question of propriety of payments on administrator's final account, especially where at least one order was secured on erroneous representation that estate was solvent.

8. Executors and administrators ⇨82—Heirs and creditors are not precluded from disputing validity of claims or contesting preferences by ex parte orders obtained by personal representative.

Heirs cannot be deprived of their rights to dispute validity of claims, and creditors cannot be deprived of right to contest preferences by ex parte orders obtained by personal representative authorizing payments from assets of estate.

9. Executors and administrators ⇨510(9)—On appeal from order disallowing expenditures on administrator's account, it was assumed previous orders permitting expenditures were without notice.

On appeal from order disallowing items of administrator's final account representing certain expenditures, it was assumed on appeal that previous orders which permitted such expenditures were made without notice.

10. Executors and administrators ⇨82—Validity of ex parte orders authorizing payments from assets can be determined only on settlement of administrator's account.

Validity of ex parte orders authorizing expenditures by administrator from assets of estate can be determined only on settlement of administrator's account, on which occasion those interested may appear and be heard.

11. Appeal and error ⇨931(1)—Every Intendment is indulged to sustain decision below.

On appeal, every intendment is indulged to sustain decision of trial court.

12. Executors and administrators ⇨236—Claims filed against estate may be allowed only in regular manner.

Court has no authority to allow claim filed against estate except in regular manner.

13. Executors and administrators ⇨241—Court had jurisdiction, on settlement of final account of administrator, to pass on validity of claim not allowed in regular manner.

Where claim was not allowed in regular manner, and order allowing it was therefore unauthorized and void, court had full jurisdiction to pass on claim's validity at time of settlement of final account of administrator.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Final account of Glenn A. Fulmer, administrator of the estate of Luella Fulmer, deceased, opposed by the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank and another. Order disallowing certain items of the account, and the administrator appeals. Affirmed.

Horace W. B. Smith and P. R. Lund, both of San Francisco, and Francisco O. Hoover, of Modesto, for appellant.

C. Kelley Hardenbrook, of Lompoc, and Fred A. Shaeffer, of Santa Maria, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. On or about July 5, 1918, Luella Fulmer, a resident of Santa Barbara county, together with five other persons, including Glenn A. Fulmer, her son, entered into a contract in writing with the California Farms Company, by the terms of which contract the latter agreed upon receipt of $36,483.30 "to convey to said purchasers by good and sufficient grant deed sound and marketable title, free and clear of all incumbrances, certain lands in Tehama county. An initial payment of $5,000 was acknowledged and accepted as "part of said purchase price if the option herein contained is exercised," and it was agreed that Luella Fulmer, James R. Fulmer, and Glenn A. Fulmer should execute three promissory notes for $5,707.40 each, payable consecutively on the 1st day of December, 1921, 1922, and 1923; and James F. McCloskey and James D. Heron agreed to execute three $1,200 notes each, maturing on said respective dates. It was further agreed that the total purchase price should be $60,805.50, and that—

"This receipt and agreement is and shall be construed as an exclusive option until December 1st, 1918, for the purchase of said land, and that, if the further sums above named as being required to be paid by December 1, 1918, December 1, 1919, and December 1, 1920, are not paid when due, or if the notes and mortgages herein referred to are not made and delivered by December 1, 1920, by purchasers all sums received by us shall be retained by us for our sole benefit as a consideration for this option, and all rights of purchasers under this agreement shall at once and forever be at an end without further action on our part."

"It is further understood and provided that, in the event we fail to deliver deed, as provided herein, we can refund to purchasers any sums paid us by purchasers, and the purchasers shall have no further claim against us. Purchasers shall have the right to demand of us any sums paid by them immediately upon our failure to deliver deed, as provided herein; and upon return of said sums the purchasers shall have no further claim against us."

It appears that Luella Fulmer paid $2,018.61 upon the execution of said contract, and that on December 1, 1918, she paid $5,044.50, and gave her promissory note for $5,700; that she died on January 1, 1919; and Glenn A. Fulmer heretofore mentioned was appointed administrator of her estate. On August 15, 1919, the administrator filed a petition reciting that the appraisal showed property of said deceased in Santa Barbara county of the value of $22,285; that the $5,700 note with accrued interest then amounted to $6,869.45, which the California Farms Company demanded, and that, unless paid, the estate would lose the amounts theretofore invested. The superior court thereupon made an order directing "that the administrator pay said note and interest, and any further interest not yet accrued when the same shall become due and payable, unless thereafter for good cause this order shall be set aside or modified by the court upon a similar petition and notice."

On July 26, 1920, the administrator again petitioned the court, averring that he had complied with the preceding order, and that, "since said payment has been made, further sums have accrued, and your petitioner as such administrator procured from the Lompoc Valley Bank of the City of Lompoc, in said county, $3,000, at one time, and $2,400 at another time, and paid the same on payments due on said contract or option to prevent the forfeiture of said option and the money theretofore paid thereon; that your petitioner also paid the sum of $856.11 as accrued interest, or thereabouts; that in the aggregate there has been paid on said contract or option the sum of $15,432.59, or thereabouts; and that there is now due on installment long past due $1,919.55 and also taxes and interest, the amount of which is unknown to petitioner."

The petitioner further represented that property in Santa Barbara county had been sold for the sum of $26,250; that the debts outstanding and allowed against the estate, and remaining unpaid, aggregated $19,010.18, and that there would be sufficient funds after paying such claims to satisfy the $1,919.55 indebtedness. After hearing upon this latter petition, it was ordered that the administrator "pay any installments due and that may hereafter become due and payable," unless such order be set aside or modified. Neither of the foregoing orders was vacated or modified.

On May 1, 1925, the administrator filed his first and final account, which purported to set forth all receipts and disbursements, including the following expenditures, to which the respondents herein, who were creditors of the estate, excepted, and which were disallowed by the trial court: $6,078.38, $6,869.49, $1,991.55, $2.30, $342.50, $60.75, $304.47 and $266.55, paid on account of principal and interest under the contract of July 5, 1918; $2,400 and $3,000 borrowed from the Lompoc bank; $40, $41.67, $78.13, and $100, the proportionate shares of moneys paid for the maintenance of the Tehama county property; $13.20, $76.35 and $159.60, paid for repairs; $1,378.81 of $11,030.50 deducted by the bank from the proceeds of the sale of certain real property. The claim of the administrator for fees in the sum of $1,147.96 was disallowed "at this time, as the estate is not yet ready to be closed." From the order disallowing these items the administrator appealed.

In the appellant's final account it was represented that the total receipts amounted to $39,309.75; that the total expenditures had been $43,340.30; and that there remained an indebtedness of $3,030.55. The Tehama county property was not included in said account, and it is conceded that title thereto was never acquired by the contracting buyers. It appears that appellant as administrator instituted a suit for reformation of the contract and for moneys paid to the California Farms Company on account of principal, interest and taxes thereunder, and that a demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and no further proceedings were had therein. Thereafter Mary J. Spooner brought suit against the California Farms Company, J. D. Heron and others to quiet title to the property, and recovered judgment therein. Appellant apparently had possession and use of the property for about three years at the estate's expense, with no prospect of acquiring title. True, he accounted for the proceeds of a crop of mustard, but he expended and obligated the estate to pay out and dispose of all moneys and assets, leaving an indebtedness of $3,030.55, to the exclusion of preferred creditors; and, further, appellant credited himself with alleged expenditures aggregating $3,725, and charged his account with an alleged revenue of but $2,581, and showed a net loss of $1,144 in seeding, caring for, and sale of a crop of barley. When asked as to whether or not he had testified at a previous hearing that the estate was solvent, appellant replied that he could not remember, nor could he remember any of the testimony which he gave at that time.

The appellant insistently urges that he acted at all times under the advice of able counsel. Apparently without an order of court he permitted his brother to remove from the premises a horse valued at $100, merely upon the claim that his mother had borrowed that amount; the whole amounts of such payments as $6,078.38, $856.10, $1,991.55, $2,30, $340, $60.75, $304.47, $144, and $100 were charged to and paid from the funds of the estate, whereas five-twelfths of these claims, if payable at all, should have been borne by the heirs and cocontractors of Luella Fulmer, deceased. Large sums of money belonging to the estate were paid by the administrator without prior sanction of the court, and the lapse of memory of the administrator upon these and other matters at the time of the trial seems at least indicative of gross negligence.

Appellant contends that, when Luella Fulmer made additional payments on the purchase of the Tehama county lands, and executed her promissory note for $5,700, she committed herself to purchase the property, and that on December 1, 1918, the option ripened into a contract which she became bound to perform and which the administrator in turn became obligated to fulfill; that, notwithstanding the fact that the title failed, he expended all of the amounts paid in that behalf which were disallowed in compliance with a valid binding obligation of the estate in an effort to continue the contract in force, and to preserve valuable property rights which the California Farms Company had theretofore agreed to convey to Luella Fulmer, and hence that the items in question were improperly disallowed.

However, the foundation for appellant's argument falls before the uncontradicted evidence in the record before us. It appears that the California Farms Company was known by appellant to have had no title to the property, but merely an option to purchase it from Mary J. Spooner; and the evidence strongly tends to show that the company could not make payments under such option only as it received moneys under the Fulmer contract. When appellant's administration of the estate commenced, and, of course, before he made the first payment, the court may well have concluded that it had become apparent that the purchase would never be completed and that the estate would therefore lose such money as might be paid thereafter. This might reasonably be inferred from what has been said, and the further fact that all of the other purchasing parties had defaulted. Also appellant admitted on cross-examination that neither he nor any of the cocontractors except Luella Fulmer had paid $1 of their shares of the agreed purchase price, other than a portion of the initial installment of July 5, 1918. So far as the record discloses, neither of the notes for $5,707.40 or $1,200 was ever executed.

[1-3] If the order of the superior court to which exceptions are taken is justified upon any ground, of course it will be upheld. Concerning the contract for the purchase of the Tehama county lands, respondents urge, first, that it was a mere option, not binding upon the estate, and hence that the action of the administrator in making payments based upon its provisions was in truth a purchase of the lands for the estate, and that such an act is outside the authority of an administrator. It may well be argued that, in providing for "an exclusive option until December 1, 1918, for the purchase of said land," it was intended that the option in question should not extend beyond that time, and that, as one installment was made to fall due on that date, it was meant that the mere payment thereof should constitute an exercise of the option. If this theory be accepted, the contract thereafter would assume the status of a contract for the purchase of the land in question, binding upon the parties, and enforceable through the usual proceedings, should either party break it. But we think it is unimportant in this instance to decide whether or not this option ever actually became a contract to complete the purchase by the vendees. This is true, for the contract itself makes full provision as to the remedy of each of the parties should the other thereafter and up to the time for delivery of the deed fail to further carry out its terms. With reference to the remedy of the vendees it is stipulated that "the purchasers shall have the right to demand of us any sums paid by them immediately upon our failure to deliver deed as provided therein; and upon return of said sums the purchasers shall have no further claim upon us." As to the rights of the vendors in case of default by December 1, 1920, on the part of the vendees, it was agreed that all sums received by the vendors should "be retained by us for our sole benefit as a consideration for this option and all rights of purchasers under this agreement shall at once and forever be at an end without further action on our part." In order that no doubt might exist, it was further set forth that "this receipt and option agreement expresses the entire understanding of the parties hereto." The parties have, as they had a right to do, made their own contract, and in it they anticipated the event of either party failing to fulfill his agreement; and they have provided for and at the same time limited, the rights of the wronged party under such conditions. It cannot be said that, in view of the terms of this contract, the administrator became legally bound to make any payments. The only result of his failure to do so would have been the forfeiture to the vendor of the amounts previously paid.

[4-6] Since the estate was not required to make any payments, the most favorable light in which the action of the administrator can be viewed would be that he expended the money to protect the estate, but the entire transaction is surely such as to uphold the conclusion apparently reached by the trial court, that ordinary prudence would have dictated that good money be not thrown after bad; in fact, that the making by the administrator of any payments amounted to mismanagement of the estate, both because the land was being purchased at a grossly exaggerated price, and also that the vendors could not deliver title. Before expending any money an ordinarily prudent man would have made inquiry as to both of these matters. There is nothing in the record to show that the administrator made any investigation concerning them. The burden is upon him to show that his acts were those of an ordinarily prudent man having knowledge of the business which he assumed to transact, for no man has a right to undertake a trusteeship which he is incapable of managing with ordinary wisdom and skill. The appellant insists that, when these payments were made, he believed that the purchase should be completed in order that the property might be kept for the estate, and that he then thought the land was worth the price contracted to be paid. Assuming this to be true, such belief is not sufficient upon which to base a charge against the estate. If in fact the land was worth only one-half or one-third of the sum to be paid, and this fact might have been ascertained by careful investigation, no evidence was offered or reason given to explain why the inadequacy in value of the land was not as apparent before the administrator made the first payment as at the time when he decided to discontinue the purchase. Again, the payments made by the administrator included, in addition to those provided to be made by Juella Fulmer, the sums required of her associates. No excuse or justification appears for the estate paying not only its own portion of the installments stipulated by the option, but those of all the other parties as well. If the action of the administrator in this behalf be regarded as having been taken for the benefit of the estate, either to complete the purchase, to preserve the assets, or to keep clear a title possessed by the deceased, it is plain that the payments were not justified. Estate of Knight, 12 Cal. 200, 73 Am. Dec. 531; Tompkins v. Weeks, 26 Cal. 51, and other cases cited by the respondent, are in point as announcing the rule that, while an administrator is to take care of and preserve the estate, he is not authorized to pay off incumbrances resting upon the property because he may believe such action profitable to the estate to save for it the land incumbered. Nor are we constrained to regret the necessity of holding the administrator responsible, as was the Supreme Court in Estate of Knight, supra, for in the instant proceeding his actions seem so reckless of the interests of the estate as to suggest incompetency or misconduct. Upon this phase of the case appellant cites Estate of Armstrong, 125 Cal. 603, 606, 58 P. 183, 184. The instant case falls definitely within the exception stated in that opinion, where it is said that, "if the circumstances were such that we could not say a reasonably prudent man would have done the same thing, then the circumstances might justify the charging of the loss to the administrator." None of the other authorities cited by appellant are in point, for in each instance the claim allowed was for a payment which the estate was legally bound to meet.

[7-13] Appellant attempts to secure protection under orders of the court directing the payments made August 26, 1919, and July 26, 1920. The record contains no indication of any notice having been given previously to the making of these orders. At least the last one made was secured upon a representation by the administrator to the effect that the estate was solvent, and would pay all claims against it, including the one for which an order was then sought, which representation proved to be erroneous. Heirs cannot be deprived of their right to dispute the validity of claims, nor creditors from contesting preferences, by ex parte orders. The validity of these orders which must be assumed to have been made without notice can only be determined upon the settlement of an account of the administrator, upon which occasion those interested may appear and be heard. Estate of Smith, 118 Cal. 462, 50 P. 701; Estate of Bell, 142 Cal. 97, 75 P. 679; Estate of Smith, 122 Cal. 462, 55 P. 249. We have said that it must be assumed that the orders in question were made without notice. This follows, since on appeal every intendment is indulged to sustain the decision of the trial court. It may be said parenthetically at this point that in this regard the instant case is quite different from many of those cited by appellant, in that they involve appeals from decrees allowing the claims of executors or administrators, and hence the benefit of the rule to which reference has just been made aided materially in sustaining a number of such decisions. Under the authority of the decisions above cited (Estate of Smith, Estate of Bell, Estate of Smith, supra), the orders in question do not constitute matters res adjudicata. It is true that a claim was filed and allowed on the $7,500 promissory note representing a part of the purchase price of the Tehama lands, but the court had no authority to allow this claim except in the regular manner, and, since the order which was made was unauthorized and void, it was a matter open for decision at the settlement of the final account. It was then disallowed. The court had full jurisdiction to pass upon its validity, and may well have concluded that it was not justly and legally due from the estate.

Holding as we do that the Tehama county lands were not an asset of the estate in any sense which required the making of any of the contested payments by the administrator upon the principal of the purchase price or interest, it follows that he had no right to pay taxes upon such property or to advance the cost of repairs thereon or for maintenance thereof, and the claims for such items should have been, and some were, properly disallowed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

CALDWELL v. WEINER. (Civ. 5055.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. July 12, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 8, 1927.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨221(5)—Finding that deceased never agreed to pay off claimant's mortgage in return for room and care held contrary to evidence, where testimony establishing agreement was uncontradicted.

In action on rejected claim filed against estate of deceased based on deceased's agreement to pay off mortgage for claimant in return for room and board and care, evidence held insufficient to support finding that no such agreement existed, where testimony establishing agreement was uncontradicted.

2. Evidence ⇨594—Uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony must be accepted by trial court, unless inherently improbable.

Uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of witness tending to establish issuable fact in case must be accepted as proof of such fact by trial court sitting as jury, and cannot be arbitrarily disregarded, unless testimony is so inherently incredible and improbable as to amount to no evidence.

3. Wills ⇨714—Bequest to testator's creditor is not in lieu of debt, unless intention to substitute bequest appears from will.

Fact that creditor of deceased is remembered in deceased's will does not of itself indicate intention of decedent that bequest should be in lieu of debt, unless such intention appears from consideration of will itself.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨443(6)—Complaint alleging agreement of deceased to pay off mortgage in return for care held proper under rejected claim based on reasonable and agreed value of services.

Complaint in action on rejected claim, alleging that deceased entered into agreement with plaintiff to pay amount of mortgage on her home in return for care, room, and support or partial support during his lifetime, held not to set up different cause of action than claim presented against estate for room, board, care, nursing, and home, based on reasonable and agreed value of services.

5. Executors and administrators ⇨227(1)—Claim against estate, which indicates nature and amount of demand, enabling executor and judge to act advisedly, is sufficient.

Though plaintiff cannot recover on rejected claim on any other cause of action than that set out in claim, claim against estate need not set forth facts on which it is based with precision and detail of pleading, but is only required to indicate nature and amount of demand so as to enable executor and probate judge to act advisedly.

6. Executors and administrators ⇨227(6)—Claim against estate for care, stating reasonable and agreed value of services, will support action on contract or quantum meruit.

Claim presented to executor for and on account of room, board, care, nursing, and home furnished decedent at his special instance and request, of which reasonable and agreed value was sum of $6,000, is sufficient to form basis of action on contract or action for reasonable value of services performed.

7. Husband and wife ⇨210(1)—Action on rejected claim for room and care furnished decedent, not claimant's husband, held properly brought in name of wife alone, where concerning earnings from wife's separate property.

Action on rejected claim for room, care, and nursing of deceased, not claimant's husband, held properly brought in name of wife alone as concerns earnings from her separate property, where residence on which deceased agreed to discharge mortgage was her property received from first husband.

8. Husband and wife ⇨208—Joinder of husband held not required in wife's action to recover for care of deceased, even if earnings were not derived from separate property (Code Civ. Proc. § 370, as amended by St. 1921, p. 102).

Failure to join husband in wife's action on rejected claim for room, care, and nursing furnished deceased held not fatal, though action should be construed as one to recover wife's earnings from other sources than her separate property under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, as amended by St. 1921, p. 102.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ralph H. Clock, Judge.

Suit by Flora M. Caldwell against Henry E. Weiner, as executor of the estate of Henry C. Weiner, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

N. B. Nelson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Redwine & Redwine and H. G. Redwine, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendant in a suit brought on a rejected claim filed against the estate of the deceased, Henry C. Weiner. The complaint alleges:

"That on or about the month of November, 1919, at Los Angeles, Cal., the plaintiff herein and Henry C. Weiner, now deceased, entered into an agreement whereby this plaintiff was to furnish said decedent Henry C. Weiner, with a home during his lifetime, including room, such meals as he should desire or request, to care and nurse him when he was ill or indisposed, and to take him into her home and treat him as one of her family, and as compensation therefor said decedent, Henry C. Weiner, promised and agreed to pay this plaintiff the sum of $25 per month for his room rent, and, in addition thereto, promised and agreed to pay this plaintiff the amount of a mortgage then upon her home, namely, a mortgage in the sum of $6,000, as soon as he should sell a certain piece and parcel of land then owned by him, and which was located near the city of Long Beach, county of Los Angeles, state of California; that immediately upon the making of said agreement the said decedent, Henry C. Weiner, came to plaintiff's home to live and make his home, and that he resided with plaintiff and her family continuously up to the time of his death, excepting therefrom short period of time when he made occasional visits out of the city of Los Angeles; that during all of the said time that said decedent lived with plaintiff and her family this plaintiff and her family provided a home for said decedent, and treated him in all respects as one of her family, furnished him with room, such meals as he requested or desired, did some of his laundry, nursed and cared for him while he was ill or indisposed, and in all things looked after his welfare and comfort at all times, to the best of her ability; that this plaintiff has fully performed all of the conditions of said contract on her part to be performed; that on or about the month of March, 1922, said decedent, Henry C. Weiner, sold the said parcel of land owned by him in or near the city of Long Beach; that said sum of $6,000, nor any part thereof, has not been paid."

The answer denies the foregoing alleged agreement, except it is alleged by defendant that "Henry C. Weiner did promise and agree to pay to plaintiff the sum of $25 per month, and no other sum or amount, for the rent of a room in plaintiff's residence, and for no other purpose."

The court found the following facts:

"That it is not true that on or about the month of November, 1919, or at any other time, at Los Angeles, Cal., or elsewhere, the plaintiff and Henry C. Weiner, now deceased, entered into an agreement whereby the plaintiff was to furnish said Henry C. Weiner with a home during his lifetime, including room, such meals as he should desire or request, to care and nurse him when he was ill or indisposed, and to take him into her home and treat him as one of plaintiff's family; and that it is not true that said Henry C. Weiner promised and agreed to pay the plaintiff the amount of a mortgage then upon her home in the sum of $6,000, or any other sum, as soon as he should sell a certain parcel of land owned by him, and which was located near the city of Long Beach, Cal., or at any other time; that it is not true that said Henry C. Weiner ever at any time promised and agreed to pay plaintiff the said sum of $6,000, or any other sum, at any time or in any manner, except the sum of $25 a month for his room rent, and that the only promise which said deceased made to pay plaintiff any sum of money was to pay her the sum of $25 per month for his room rent, and this sum was paid by him to plaintiff; and that all the averments and allegations of paragraph No. I of the complaint herein are untrue; that all the allegations and denials of the answer herein are true, and all the allegations of the complaint herein are untrue."

Appellant assigns as error the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision of the court as to the above findings. The only testimony offered by the respondent was that of a physician, who testified that he had been intimately acquainted with the deceased for about 12 years, and saw him practically every day; that whenever the occasion required medical counsel the decedent sought it from him; that during the last 3 years of decedent's life he was ill on only two occasions; once from a sunburn that required no other treatment than being sent home, where he was confined to his bed for about a week, and one other time for an acute attack of indigestion requiring but one treatment; that these were the only occasions in the period of 10 or 12 years when decedent needed medical advice. In addition to this testimony, respondent offered the will of the decedent, in which the decedent made bequests to appellant as follows:

"I give and bequeath to my friend Mrs. G. B. Caldwell of Los Angeles one loose diamond contained in my three stone diamond ring now worn by me, also all my picture etchings paintings in the room occupied by me. * * * All my clothing and other personal effects I give and bequeath to Mrs. G. B. Caldwell to be distributed to charity as she sees fit."

Respondent further introduced the inventory and appraisal of the decedent's estate, showing that decedent left an estate of the appraised value of $28,297.39.

Appellant offered the testimony of four witnesses. Appellant's daughter Wilma Faust, testified to a conversation held in December, 1919, between appellant and decedent, as follows:

"A. Uncle Harry (the decedent) came out to the house—which is the name of Mr. Weiner—and he seemed very much agitated. As soon as he came in the house he said that his rent had been raised again; it had been raised several times since he had lived there, and he said that—we all three discussed the general increase in living at the time, and everything like that. Finally he said that he didn't feel that he could afford to pay this increase in the rent, and he said that—after a great deal of discussion he finally asked my mother if he could come there to live. He told her that he wanted a home; he wanted to feel that he never would have to move again; that he had lived in a hotel all his life, practically all his life; he had been married, even then his wife was an invalid; he had to live in hotels, and he said that he wanted a home, and the home privileges, and he wanted to feel that he had a family, because he was practically alone out here except for his friends, and he said that he had felt that he couldn't pay more than $25 a month for his room, but he wanted other privileges; he wanted to take his breakfast there always, and what other meals that he cared for, and he wanted my mother to take care of him, and he just simply wanted to be a member of the family; and in consideration of that, when he sold his property in Long Beach, he would then pay off her mortgage of $6,000. He felt that that would do her more good in a lump sum; and he couldn't pay any more than $25 at that time; that was simply for his room, and he was going to take care of the mortgage at the time he sold his property. Q. Did he state why he couldn't pay more than $25? A. Well, he either wasn't working at the time, or he had what he considered a very inferior position. Owing to the country going dry he had lost a very good position and had to take a very minor position at a very small salary, but he didn't even have that position at the time. I don't remember that exactly. Q. What did your mother say to that? A. She told him that wouldn't make any difference. He also said that he might not be able to pay $25 a month, might not be able to pay it every month, although he did. Mother said that wouldn't make any difference even if he couldn't pay it; he could always have his home there; that was the understanding, that was to be his home."

The witness further testified that the decedent soon thereafter moved into appellant's home and occupied the best room in the house, paying only $25 per month for room rent, while others were paying $35 and $40 per month; that appellant always gave decedent his breakfast, and frequently his dinner; that he was a member of the family; that the appellant took care of his mending, and nursed him when he was ill, once when he was bedfast for ten days or two weeks, and on two or three other occasions when he suffered from heart attacks. The witness further testified that appellant left for six months, but arranged for another lady and daughter to live in the house without paying rent and keep the home open for decedent; that they took care of decedent, but did not give him his meals. The witness also testified that at different times she heard the decedent say to appellant, "Well, when I sell my land I am going to pay off your mortgage."

Nell Pryn, a witness called on behalf of plaintiff, testified that decedent told her that appellant was giving him a good home; that he was paying only $25 per month for room rent; that he had sold his property, and said, referring to appellant, "I am going to pay off her mortgage when I get my next payment;" and "Well, I am going to pay the mortgage off, and I am going to give her $6,000 to pay the mortgage off, as I have agreed to."

Mrs. Dora Koonz testified that she met decedent, and the following conversation was held:

"And then I says, 'Well, how is everything anyhow?' 'Well,' he says, 'I am very happy, Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell are both lovely,' he said, 'Flo and her husband are very lovely to me. I am having a wonderful home. The first time I have had a home since my wife died.' I says, 'Do you think there is any chance of the mortgage being paid off?' I was really interested by my friend's standpoint of view, and he said, 'Well, I am figuring now on the sale of this property,' which I knew he had, and he said, 'As soon as I get that sale through, I am going to do the square thing.'"

J. A. Rominger testified as a witness for appellant that the decedent had listed his property with him for sale, and "he expressed at that time the reason that he wanted to sell, the agreement he had made with Mrs. Caldwell relative to paying off the mortgage that he had agreed to pay for her, and said that he would be willing to reduce the price of the land, if I could make a ready sale for him for cash." Appellant also introduced in evidence a letter from decedent, addressed to herself and family, the general tenor of which tended to show that decedent regarded himself as a member of appellant's family. It further appears that in March, 1922, the decedent sold said parcel of land; that the said sum of $6,000, nor any part thereof, has not been paid; that the said Henry C. Weiner died about the 12th day of December, 1922; that on the 21st day of February, 1923, respondent was appointed executor of the last will and testament of the decedent, and letters testamentary were thereupon issued to him; that the appellant, pursuant to respondent's notice to creditors, presented to respondent her verified claim on October 2, 1923, upon which this action is founded, for allowance; that said respondent, as such executor, rejected said claim in its entirety on the 10th day of October, 1923.

[1-3] It is readily apparent from the foregoing review of the evidence that appellant's claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings must be sustained. Respondent's evidence was negative and indirect in character, tending to prove that the decedent had not been ill while living in the home of appellant, therefore not requiring any care; also that decedent had left a will in which he had made certain bequests to appellant. On the other hand, the testimony offered by appellant was positive and direct, and tended to prove the alleged agreement between decedent and appellant, as well as the admission of such agreement by the decedent before several witnesses. Evidently the trial court did not believe appellant's witnesses. This is not sufficient where the testimony is uncontradicted. It is the general rule that the uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of a witness tending to establish an issuable fact in the case may not be arbitrarily disregarded by the trial court; that, to the contrary, such testimony must be accepted as proof of the fact which it is offered to establish, unless it can be said that such testimony is so inherently incredible and improbable as to amount to no evidence at all. Shepard v. Shepard, 65 Cal. App. 310, 223 P. 1012; Stewart v. Silva, 192 Cal. 405, 221 P. 191; Anso v. Anso, 72 Cal. App. 513, 237 P. 814; Sun-Maid Raisin Growers v. Papazian, 74 Cal. App. 231, 240 P. 47; 10 Cal. Jur. p. 1143, § 362. We do not find anything in the record indicating that the testimony of appellant's witnesses which we have set forth is inherently improbable, or that the surrounding circumstances of the case, as disclosed by the record, were such as to render any of the testimony incredible or unworthy of belief. Respondent did not attempt to impeach or contradict the testimony of appellant's witnesses, except as to periods of illness and the bequests given to appellant. The fact that appellant was remembered in the will of decedent does not show that it was the intention of the decedent that such bequest was in lieu of any debt which may have been due from the decedent to appellant. Such intention must be gathered from the will itself. Nothing in the will showed any such intention. White v. Deering, 38 Cal. App. 433, 435, 177 P. 516, and cases cited.

to establish a stated account. The claim presented to the executor was "for and on account of room, board, care, nursing, and home furnished to said decedent during his lifetime, at his special instance and request; that the reasonable and agreed value thereof was, and is, the sum of $6,000; that no part of which has been paid." We cannot agree with respondent's contention that the cause of action alleged in the complaint is different than that set forth in the claim. While the rule is well settled, as held in the cases cited by respondent, that a plaintiff cannot recover upon any other cause of action than the one set out in the claim which has been presented and rejected, yet the law does not require that a claim against an estate should set forth the facts upon which it is based with the precision and detail of a pleading. Thompson v. Koeller, 183 Cal. 476, 484, 191 P. 927; Warder v. Hutchinson, 69 Cal. App. 291, 231 P. 563. Further, the claim on its face showed that it was founded upon an agreement between the parties, and stated sufficient facts upon which to base either an action on the contract or one for the reasonable value of the services performed. Warder v. Hutchinson, supra. It is only required that the claim sufficiently indicate the nature and amount of the demand to enable the executor and judge in probate to act advisedly upon it. If the claim meets this general requirement, it is sufficient, unless it fails to meet some particular requirement of the Code. Thompson v. Koeller, supra; Warder v. Hutchinson, supra.

[7, 8] Respondent's further contention is that, if the evidence introduced establishes any cause of action, it is for the recovery of community property, which must be brought in the name of the husband of the plaintiff and not by the plaintiff. This contention cannot be sustained. The testimony clearly shows that the residence of appellant was her separate property, which she had received from her first husband. In so far as this action concerns the earnings from appellant's separate property, she alone is the proper party plaintiff. If this be construed as an action to recover the wife's earnings from other sources, she can maintain such an action without joining her husband. Code Civ. Proc. § 370, as amended in 1921 (St. 1921, p. 102).

For the reasons stated, it is ordered that the judgment be reversed.

MORRIS v. McKESSON. (Civ. 5815.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 7, 1927.

1. Corporations —30(1)—Officer held not entitled to rescind contract to form corporation because not appointed treasurer, where he signed by-laws appointing bank.

Vice president held not entitled to rescind contract to form corporation on ground he was not appointed treasurer, where contract provided he should be appointed vice president or treasurer and he signed without objections by-laws designating bank in lieu of member as treasurer.

2. Corporations —30(1)—Officer held not entitled to rescind contract to form corporation because of failure to develop business, where responsibility, if any, was his.

Vice president held not entitled to rescind contract to form corporation on ground new business had not been established as agreed, where failure was due to owner of leased building to complete alterations for which the vice president had greater responsibility than other party to the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action for rescission of contract by James Morris against R. F. McKesson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Horace M. Street, of San Francisco, for appellant.

James M. Thomas, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for the rescission of a written contract upon the ground that the consideration as to him had failed. The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury, and resulted in findings and judgment in favor of the defendant. Plaintiff has appealed upon a typewritten record. The whole attack upon the judgment is based upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support it.

On May 15, 1923, the parties entered into a written contract, agreeing to form a corporation for the purpose of conducting a furniture jobbing business, together with a "chair-finishing plant." The respondent was at the time engaged in the furniture jobbing business, the good will of which he agreed to turn into the new corporation in consideration of $5,000 in stock of the new corporation to be issued to him. This business it was agreed should be continued in the new corporation as the parties deemed advisable. The portions of the agreement of interest in this litigation read:

"In consideration of the foregoing and to promote new business and to continue the business already started, it is understood that you are to at once cash in your securities, sufficient to invest between nine thousand ($9,000.00) dollars and ten thousand ($10,000.00) dollars available June 30, 1923.

"It being our purpose in mind to create and develop a chair-finishing plant, it is understood that this new business will come under your direct supervision and also to help promote the sale of chairs or any other part of the business.

"It is understood and agreed you are to receive the salary of $250.00 per month for the balance of year.

"It is understood that in the new corporation I am to hold the position of president of the corporation and general manager, and that you will hold the office of secretary and treasurer or vice president and secretary, whichever seems to be the best arrangement." (Emphasis ours.)

The corporation was organized in due time, and the appellant was elected one of a board of five directors; the other four having been selected by the respondent. This board met in due order and adopted by-laws and filled the corporate offices designated therein. Article 10 of these by-laws provided that a depository should be selected in lieu of a treasurer, and this arrangement was assented to by the appellant, and the by-laws were signed by him and the other directors. Some time thereafter the appellant paid into the corporation the sum of $9,100, for which stock was issued to him, and he continued to serve in the office of vice president and director of the corporation to which he had been elected at the original meeting. In the latter part of the year 1923 he suggested to the respondent that the agreement had provided that he should be elected treasurer, and on December 12, 1923, the respondent's counsel addressed him a letter calling attention to this fact and informing him that, if he still desired to make the change from a bank depository to an individual treasurer, he should communicate with him so that the directors might amend the by-laws and proceed to have him appointed treasurer. No answer was made to this letter, but the appellant continued to act as before until about March 3, 1924, when, becoming dissatisfied with the financial arrangements, he gave written notice to the respondent of his intention to rescind the contract.

[1] On this appeal it is argued that the respondent did not act in good faith in failing to have the appellant elected treasurer of the company and in failing to establish the chair-finishing plant mentioned in the contract. These are the two grounds of rescission upon which the complaint was based, and the trial court in both instances found adversely to the appellant. As to the first ground urged, it will be noted that the agreement was that the appellant should hold the office of secretary and treasurer or vice president and secretary, "whichever seems to be the best arrangement." It did not, as alleged in the complaint, provide that plaintiff should hold such office as seemed to him to be the best arrangement, but the plain meaning of the contract is that this arrangement should be made by the corporation in such manner as the parties to the contract should deem best. At the first meeting of the board of directors, by-laws were adopted in which it was provided that a bank should be selected as a depository in lieu of a member of the corporation being selected as treasurer. This arrangement was assented to by appellant, who signed the by-laws, concurred in the selection of the bank as a depository, and concurred in the selection of himself for the office of vice president. No complaint was made by the appellant to this arrangement until he became dissatisfied with the contract some six months later. In support of his appeal, the appellant gives as his only explanation of his conduct the excuse that he was slightly hard of hearing and did not know all that occurred at the directors' meeting. He does not, however, claim any defect of eyesight, nor make any explanation of his signature to the by-laws which eliminated the office of treasurer, nor does he explain why, after this arrangement had been made, he continued to act without objection in the office of director and vice president and paid into the corporation the sum of $9,100 for corporate stock, which was the full consideration to pass from him under the terms of the contract.

[2] The second ground for rescission urged is that the respondent did not act in good faith in respect to the establishment of a chair-finishing plant as a part of the activities of the corporation. The contract provided that this should be taken on as new business of the corporation in connection with the old business theretofore conducted by the respondent, and that this new business should come under the direct supervision and promotion of the appellant. Throughout the appeal the appellant insists that the establishment and promotion of this new business was a duty imposed upon the respondent, and the failure of the respondent to establish this new business prior to September 1, 1923, is put forward as a breach of the contract on respondent's part. The explanation of the failure to establish this new business is that the corporation had entered into a written lease with the owner of a building which was to be altered to suit the purposes of the corporation. The alterations in this building were delayed through no fault of the corporation, and possession for the purpose of conducting the chair-finishing business was not delivered to the corporation until March, 1924. All the testimony shows unmistakably that this delay was wholly the fault of the owner of the building, and that, if either party to the agreement is to be charged with culpability in permitting delay in the completion of the building or in failing to establish a chair-finishing business, that charge rests with the appellant, upon whom the duty was imposed under the contract.

The argument is also made that, because of respondent's failure to have the appellant elected treasurer of the corporation and because of his bad faith in failing to establish the chair-finishing business, the appellant's stock in the corporation became valueless. In support of this contention no evidence is cited, and we have been unable to find any in the record. It is said the trial court found that the stock did not have any market value, but this statement is not supported by the record. By inserting a quotation mark in the finding, which does not appear in the original transcript, the appellant has made it appear that the trial court had found that this stock did not have any market value, whereas the original finding in the transcript discloses that the trial court found to the contrary.

Judgment affirmed.

CROWE GLASS CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 5857.) *

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 1, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1927.

1. Master and servant $\S$ 416—Only one rehearing can be had before Industrial Accident Commission (Workmen's Compensation Act, §§ 64, 65, 67).

Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 832), §§ 64, 65, 67, providing that persons aggrieved by final award of commission may apply for rehearing by Industrial Accident Commission, and providing for appeal to courts from decision on rehearing, contemplates but one rehearing, after which party aggrieved must look to appellate courts for review of proceedings.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 416—Second rehearing granted by Industrial Accident Commission after denying award on first rehearing held functus officio (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 64, 65, 67).

Under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 832), §§ 64, 65, 67, providing that persons aggrieved by final award of Industrial Accident Commission may apply for rehearing by commission, and providing for appeal to courts from decision on rehearing, act of commission in granting second rehearing after denying award of compensation on first rehearing was functus officio, as its jurisdiction was exhausted.

3. Master and servant 416—Person "may apply" for rehearing in compensation case in accordance with statute (Compensation Act, § 64).

Under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 832), § 64, providing that person aggrieved by award of Industrial Accident Commission "may apply" for rehearing, words "may apply" are used in procedural sense expressing existence of privilege to be exercised in accordance with act, and after decision on rehearing jurisdiction of commission is exhausted; there being no question of continuing jurisdiction under section 20 (d).

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Carrie Graham for the death of Fred Graham, her husband, claimant, opposed by the Crowe Glass Company, employer, and the Maryland Casualty Company, insurance carrier. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission granting an award after a second rehearing, employer and insurance carrier bring certiorari. Award annulled.

R. P. Wisecarver, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner and Warren H. Pillsbury, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission. On the 15th day of February, 1926, respondent Carrie Graham filed with the said commission an application for adjustment of claim under the Compensation Act, in which it was alleged that one Fred Graham, her husband, sustained an injury due to straining himself by lifting a heavy crate on Thursday, November 19, 1925, at which time he was employed by Crowe Glass Company. She charged that by reason thereof he died on November 22, 1925, as the aftermath of an operation to cure a rupture. Petitioners herein, as employer and insurance carrier, respectively, contested the application on the ground that the deceased employee had never made any claim of injury, and that in fact his rupture, or hernia, was not caused by the employment, but had, on the contrary, been one of years' standing. Thereafter hearings were regularly had before the commission, at which time testimony of the attending physician and others was taken. It is claimed by petitioners that this evidence showed that deceased had suffered from a hernia for a long time; that on Monday, November 16, 1925, prior to the date of the alleged injury, he was sick from some intestinal trouble which caused vomiting, and which condition continued through the following day. The next day he returned to his duties and worked throughout that day and a part of Thursday morning, at which time he was compelled to quit on account of sickness. He made no complaint to his employer that he had received any injury at this time, but he did inform a coemployee that it hurt him to lift the glass cases. He was sick with his ailment for the two days following, when his condition became critical. He called in a physician, who advised an immediate operation, which was performed Saturday, November 20, 1925. The intestines were found to have become strangulated in a large hernia of long standing. The condition had not reached the gangrene stage, but for some unknown reason Graham died on Sunday, November 21st. Thereafter, on April 27, 1926, a hearing was had upon the widow's application, and the commission made and entered its findings of fact, in which it was determined that the evidence did not establish that the death complained of was caused by an injury arising out of the employment, and petitioners' application for relief was denied. Thereafter, and within 20 days, the respondent, Carrie Graham, filed a petition for a rehearing. Petitioners in their answer thereto set forth that the application failed to state any reason for the granting of the same, whereupon a supplemental petition was filed, in which the history of the case was reviewed and request made for an opportunity to show that the old hernia from which deceased suffered had been aggravated by the alleged injury. Subsequently, on June 16th, the commission entered its order granting the application for a rehearing. Hearings were had thereon and further testimony was taken. It appears from medical evidence that deceased had a very large hernia with protrusion of the intestines down into the scrotum; that he suffered from this hernia for a long period, and had many times previously reduced it himself; that on the present occasion he was unable to do so, with result that it became strangulated, necessitating the operation. There was a conflict in the testimony as to whether his employment had any effect upon his condition or not, as it was possible for a strangulation to occur at any time from his condition. It was testified that lifting might crowd the intestines down through the hernia, which might cause an acute condition, and one physician seemed to be of the opinion that this was probably what had happened. Another physician reviewed the evidence and stated that he was of the opinion that the case was one of continual development of intestinal involvement, beginning with the illness of Monday or Tuesday, and that the development of the pathology during the week was simply a culmination of the pathological condition that was chronic, with a strong probability that in addition to the hernia there was some other intestinal involvement of a chronic nature, which was the real cause of death rather than the shock of the hernia operation, as the rapid development of high temperature immediately after the operation could not very well be explained as resulting from shock due to the operation. Thereafter, on September 25, 1926, the commission made and entered its decision after rehearing reading as follows:

"It is ordered as, and for the decision after rehearing that the findings and award filed herein on April 27th, 1926, be and they are hereby affirmed."

Both under the original and by this decision petitioners were relieved of any and all liability upon the ground that no injury was shown to have occurred in the course of the employment, or that any such injury caused the disability or death of the employee. Subsequently, on October 14, 1926, the applicant, Carrie Graham, filed a second petition for rehearing, or a petition for rehearing of the decision on rehearing. The matters contained in this petition were a reiteration of the previous facts that had been considered by the commission on its hearing and rehearing. Petitioners herein replied claiming that the case had been finally decided on its merits and prayed that it be summarily denied. On December 3, 1926, the Commission made its order granting a second rehearing. Thereafter, on February 9, 1927, without any further hearing in the matter, the commission reversed its previous original decision and its decision upon rehearing and ordered as and for the decision after the second rehearing:

"That the findings and award made and filed on April 27, 1926, be and the same are hereby rescinded and annulled, and that the following findings and award be and hereby are made and filed herein."

Under these findings the commission determined that deceased was injured November 19, 1926, by having a left inguinal hernia of years' standing subjected to sufficient strain to cause the said hernia to protrude in such manner as not to be reducible, causing strangulation which required an operation, from which death ensued. The commission then entered an award for $5,150 death benefit, and medical expenses in the additional sum of $137.75. It is not here contended that the facts are insufficient to justify the award, as no such issue is here presented, the sole question in issue being one of law only. It is petitioners' contention that the Industrial Accident Commission, in entering its order granting a second rehearing to the applicant for compensation, after the original hearing and decision on rehearing had been decided adversely to her, acted without and in excess of its powers; that the commission had no power or authority or jurisdiction to grant a second petition for rehearing; that under and pursuant to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, the commission is only allowed the right to grant one rehearing, and that after decision upon rehearing any party affected not only may, but must, apply to the appellate courts for a writ of review. In other words, petitioners claim that the only procedure provided for by the Compensation Act after a decision on rehearing is, if a party feels aggrieved, to apply for a writ of review either to the District Court of Appeal or to the Supreme Court, as the commission cannot sit as a reviewing court on its own final decision. Respondent, on the other hand, contends that as the statute does not expressly prohibit a second application, the commission may entertain one; that the word "may" as applied to the application for certiorari by the appellate courts after decision on rehearing, does not mean "must" in all cases. This issue presents the question of the proper construction to be given to the provisions of the act in question upon this subject. The sections of the act with regard to procedure before the commission on hearings and in petitions to appellate courts for writs of review are to be found in sections 64, 65, and 67 of the Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 832). Section 64 provides, in substance, that any person aggrieved by the final award of the commission may apply for a rehearing; that only those questions are raised on rehearing which are set forth and objected to in the petition for rehearing. The section further provides that no cause of action arising out of such original final order, decision, or award shall accrue in any court to any person until and unless such person shall have made application for such rehearing and such application has been granted or denied. The section declares that on such rehearing testimony may or may not be taken; that the commission shall reconsider all the facts and may abrogate, change or modify the original award. Also that:

"An order, decision or award made after such hearing abrogating, changing or modifying the original order, decision or award shall have the same force and effect as an original order, decision or award."

Section 65 provides that the petition for rehearing must be filed within 20 days, and sets forth the grounds upon which it may be based. Section 67 provides:

"Within thirty days after the application for a rehearing is denied, or, if the application is granted, within 30 days after the rendition of the decision on the rehearing, any party affected thereby may apply to the Supreme Court of the state, or to the District Court of Appeal of the appellate district in which such person resides, for a writ of certiorari or review, * * * for the purpose of having the lawfulness of the original order, rule, regulation, decision or award, or the order, rule, regulation, decision or award on rehearing inquired into and determined."

It also provides for the grounds upon which the petition may be made and for the procedure on appeal.

[1] It seems plain to us that the provisions in question contemplate but one rehearing, and that thereafter, if a party feels aggrieved, he must apply to the appellate courts. If it could be held that an applicant is entitled to more than one rehearing it would follow that the employer and insurance carrier would likewise be so entitled, as the act would have to be given a uniform operation. If such right existed, an employer or insurance carrier, if they felt aggrieved upon a decision on rehearing, could again invoke the commission's jurisdiction to grant a second rehearing and so on indefinitely. On the other hand, where an award had been refused an applicant and a rehearing denied, he could again apply for a rehearing, which could be granted or denied and so on ad infinitum. Under such a practice there would be no end to the litigation, as no time, however great, would operate to bar successive applications provided only that they were applied for in seasonable time. Such a construction would lead to legal chaos. That this condition might be brought about under the claimed construction of respondent demonstrates its unsoundness. Then, again, the construction contended for would defeat the very purposes of the act itself, which contemplates a speedy determination of controversies involved thereunder, and not a vacillating attitude on the part of the commission. We do not consider a further discussion necessary. The question in our opinion has been definitely determined by our Supreme Court. In Harlan v. Ind. Acc. Com., 194 Cal. 352, 228 P. 654, the issue was whether the employer was properly before the Supreme Court, because he had never applied for a rehearing from a decision on rehearing. The original award was entered in his favor and the applicant for compensation petitioned for a rehearing, which was granted, and the decision on rehearing was then made in favor of the applicant for compensation. Within 30 days thereafter the employer applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of review, which was granted. The commission there contended that the court could not entertain the petition for writ of review because of the fact that the employer had never applied for a rehearing with the commission. The learned author of the opinion, in speaking for the court, reviews the provisions of the act and states:

"Only one other question, which is raised by respondent, remains for consideration, to wit, whether petitioner, * * * has lost its right to apply to this court for a writ of review for the reason that it did not apply to respondent Industrial Accident Commission for hearing after rehearing once granted. We think the act furnishes no substantial grounds for the claim that a second petition for a rehearing is required before an application may be made to this court for a writ of review. The act contemplates a speedy determination of questions involving the right to compensation and the Commission is given broad powers to the end that long delays may be avoided. It is the policy of the law in general practice to consider but one application for a rehearing and there is less justification for an exception to this rule in proceedings that are somewhat summary in character, as the act under consideration undoubtedly is" (italics ours), citing Federal Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 190 Cal. 97, 210 P. 628; Carroll v. Ind. Com. of Colo., 69 Colo. 473, 195 P. 1097, 19 A. L. R. 107; Schrewe v. N. Y. Cent. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 170, 158 N. W. 337.

See, also, Dorland v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 484, 6 P. 135. Respondent claims that what is said in the opinion just quoted from its dicta as the precise question here presented was not in issue in that case. The principle was directly involved as the decision there reached was based entirely upon it.

[2, 3] We are cited by respondents to the action of the Supreme Court in denying a hearing in the recent case of Van Bilderbeek v. I. A. C., S. F. 11532, as opposing this view. A discussion of the facts of that case would answer no useful purpose. It has no relevancy to the instant question. We conclude, therefore, that the act of the commission in granting a second rehearing was functus officio as its jurisdiction was exhausted. The act in question, properly construed, contemplates but one rehearing and the party aggrieved must then look to the appellate courts for a review of the proceeding. The employment in the statute of the words "may apply" being used in a procedural sense, mean, therefore, that when a litigant elects to further proceed with his case after decision on rehearing, he must apply in accordance with the provisions of the act. The words are employed to express the existence of a privilege that may be exercised in the discretion of the applicant and this is the only remedy that a party to such a proceeding has after decision on rehearing, the jurisdiction of the commission being exhausted upon the final disposition of that hearing, there being no question involved concerning the continuing jurisdiction of the commission under section 20 (d) of the Compensation Act, and here it is conceded there is none, the employee having died prior to the time the application for benefits was made.

From what we have said it follows that the award must be and it is hereby annulled.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. RICKERT et al.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 11, 1927.

1. Bail ⚡74(1)—Bail under indictment after demurrer sustained without leave to amend and resubmission to grand jury held not exonerated, but answerable for defendant's appearance in consolidated proceedings under both indictments (Pen. Code, §§ 997, 998, 1008-1010, 1287).

Bail given pursuant to Pen. Code, § 1287, was not exonerated, but was answerable for appearance of defendant, where demurrer to first indictment under which bail was given was sustained without leave to amend, and the case resubmitted to the grand jury, which returned a new indictment solely on same facts, and cases under both indictments were consolidated with consent of defendant, but without sureties' knowledge, under sections 997, 998, 1008-1010, relating to resubmission to grand jury.

2. Indictment and information ⚡16—Proceedings are not barred after demurrer to indictment is sustained and no amendment made, but court may resubmit case to grand jury (Pen. Code, § 1008).

Further proceedings are not barred for offense if after demurrer to indictment is sustained no amendment thereto is made, under Pen. Code, § 1008, but court may resubmit case to grand jury, which may return valid indictment based solely on same facts.

3. Criminal law ⚡620(1)—Proceedings under indictment to which demurrer was sustained, and under indictment after resubmission to grand jury, may be consolidated.

Proceedings under indictment to which demurrer was sustained without leave to amend and under indictment returned on same facts after resubmission to grand jury may be consolidated.

4. Bail ⚡57—Bail bond need not state that demurrer to indictment was sustained and case resubmitted.

That bail bond did not set forth that demurrer to indictment had been sustained and case resubmitted to the grand jury is not defense on bond; it not being essential that bond set forth the circumstances under which it is taken.

5. Bail ⚡58—Bail bond need not describe offense with particularity of indictment.

Bail bond need not describe the offense with the same particularity required of the indictment.

6. Bail ⚡75—Sureties on bail bond undertaking to hold defendant amenable to court were not released by defendant's appearance for arraignment under new indictment after resubmission of case to grand jury.

Appearance of defendant for arraignment and plea under new indictment returned after resubmission of case on same facts to grand jury did not release sureties on bail bond given after demurrer to original indictment had been sustained, where the bond undertaking was that defendant should at all times hold himself amenable to orders of the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action on a bail bond by the County of Los Angeles against Evelyn Rickert and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Woolwine & Geisler, Leonard M. Comegys, and Fred W. Shelley, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, Roy W. Dowds and Arthur T. George, Deputies County Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Action on a bail bond. Defendants appeal on the judgment roll alone.

Appellants concede that all the facts are contained in the findings of the trial court. According to the findings, there was filed on December 9, 1921, in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, an indictment entitled, "People of the State of California v. W. S. Kirby," being case No. 17481, wherein the defendant was charged with the crime of bribery. On said day the court admitted said defendant to bail in the sum of $10,000, and ordered that he be committed to the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county until he give such bail. On December 10th the defendant was duly arraigned on said charge. On the 13th day of December a demurrer to said indictment was duly filed, and on December 14th said demurrer was sustained. The court ordered the said cause to be resubmitted to the grand jury of the county of Los Angeles, and that the defendant be remanded to the custody of the sheriff. Thereafter, on the 17th day of December, the defendants above named made and executed the bail bond sued upon herein. On said date the said bail bond was duly approved by the court and filed with the county clerk. By reason of the execution and filing of said bail bond, defendant Kirby was released from the custody of the sheriff on December 17th. Thereafter, on December 27th, there was filed in said court an indictment No. 17569, wherein the defendant Kirby was charged with the same offense set forth in said indictment No. 17481, to wit, the crime of bribery. On January 4, 1922, said defendant Kirby being present in court, said court, with the consent of said defendant Kirby, made an order consolidating said case No. 17481 and said case No. 17569, and ordered that said bail bond theretofore given in case No. 17481 should stand as the bail bond in the consolidated case No. 17569.

Said case was duly and regularly continued to January 16, 1922. Upon said day defendant Kirby was duly arraigned in said court upon the said indictment in case No. 17569, and the trial thereon was set down for hearing on May 1, 1922. On said last-named date the trial was continued to May 18th, on which date said defendant Kirby failed to render himself amenable to the order and process of said court. Whereupon the court ordered the forfeiture of said bond, and said forfeiture was duly entered upon the minutes of the court. The defendants herein have failed and refused to pay to the county of Los Angeles the said sum of $10,000, or any part thereof. The bail bond executed by defendants was executed and filed by the defendants in case No. 17481 after the demurrer to the indictment in said case had been sustained, and before the new indictment, No. 17569, had been returned by the grand jury. After said order of consolidation no further proceedings were had under case No. 17481, and no indictment other than the said indictment No. 17569 was ever returned against Kirby after the demurrer was sustained to said indictment No. 17481. The trial court also found that said Kirby was being tried when he absented himself from court without leave on said new indictment No. 17569, with which case No. 17481 had been consolidated as aforesaid. Neither of the defendants herein knew of or consented to any order or proceeding in either case No. 17481 or case No. 17569 other than the approval of said bail bond and the release of defendant Kirby on said bond. The trial court did not at the time it sustained the demurrer to said indictment No. 17481, nor at any time thereafter, allow an amendment thereto. Said indictment No. 17569 was based solely on the same state of facts as indictment No. 17481. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $10,000 and costs.

[1] Appellants urge the following grounds for reversal: (1) The court erred in overruling defendants' demurrer herein. (2) That the judgment is not sustained by the facts and is against the law. In support thereof, appellants first advance the proposition that the sustaining of the demurrer to the first indictment without allowing an amendment determined proceedings and constituted a bar to further prosecution for said offense and effected an exoneration of bail. The only ruling of the trial court on the demurrer to that indictment was that the demurrer be sustained, and the court then and there ordered the said cause to be resubmitted to the grand jury. In our opinion the following provisions of the Penal Code are determinative of the foregoing proposition (italics ours):

"Sec. 1008. An indictment or information may be amended by the district attorney without leave of court, at any time before the defendant pleads. Such amendment may be made at any time thereafter, in the discretion of the court where it can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant. An indictment cannot be amended so as to change the offense charged, nor an information so as to charge an offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination. If a demurrer is sustained and an amendment is not allowed, or if allowed, is not made, within such reasonable time as the court may fix, the court shall give a judgment of dismissal, which shall be a bar to another prosecution for the same offense. The defendant shall thereupon be discharged, unless the court directs the case to be submitted to the same or another grand jury, or directs a new information to be filed; provided, that after such order or resubmission, the defendant may be examined before a magistrate, and discharged or committed by him, as in other cases.

"Sec. 1009. If the court does not permit the information to be amended, nor direct that an information be filed, or that the case be resubmitted, as provided in the preceding section, the defendant, if in custody, must be discharged, or if admitted to bail, his bail is exonerated, or if he has deposited money instead of bail, the money must be refunded to him.

"Sec. 1010. If the court directs that the case be resubmitted, the same proceedings must be had thereon as are prescribed in sections nine hundred and ninety-seven and nine hundred and ninety-eight.

"Sec. 997. The motion [to set aside indictment] must be heard at the time it is made, unless for cause the court postpones the hearing to another time. If the motion is denied, the defendant must immediately answer the indictment or information, either by demurring or pleading thereto. If the motion is granted, the court must order that the defendant, if in custody, be discharged therefrom; or, if admitted to bail, that his bail be exonerated; or, if he has deposited money instead of bail, that the same be refunded to him, unless it directs that the case be resubmitted to the same or another grand jury, or that an information be filed by the district attorney; provided, that after such order of resubmission the defendant may be examined before a magistrate, and discharged or committed by him, as in other cases, if before indictment or information filed he has not been examined and committed by a magistrate.

"Sec. 998. If the court directs the case to be resubmitted, or an information to be filed, the defendant, if already in custody, must so remain, unless he is admitted to bail; or, if already admitted to bail, or money has been deposited instead thereof, the bail or money is answerable for the appearance of the defendant to answer a new indictment or information; and, unless a new indictment is found or information filed before the next grand jury of the county is discharged, the court must, on the discharge of such grand jury, make the order prescribed by the preceding section."

[2] Appellants' position is, in our opinion, untenable. Appellants claim that section 1008 of the Penal Code lays down an absolute rule that the trial judge must determine at the time if further proceedings are to be had on the original facts, as stated

(defectively) in the original indictment, and, if so, allow an amendment; otherwise further proceedings are barred for the same offense, and that the only order that the court could make thereafter was one of dismissal. In support of the foregoing, appellants rely on the following sentence appearing in section 1008 of the Penal Code:

"If a demurrer is sustained and an amendment is not allowed, or if allowed, is not made, within such reasonable time as the court may fix, the court shall give a judgment of dismissal, which shall be a bar to another prosecution for the same offense."

Apparently appellants have lost sight of the sentence immediately following, which reads:

"The defendant shall thereupon be discharged, unless the court directs the case to be submitted to the same or another grand jury, or directs a new information to be filed."

It has been held in the recent case of Mitchell v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 245 P. 1109, that the foregoing should be read in one sentence, as though it were worded as follows:

"If a demurrer is sustained and an amendment is not allowed, or, if allowed, is not made, within such reasonable time as the court may fix, the court shall give a judgment of dismissal, which shall be a bar to another prosecution for the same offense, and the defendant shall thereupon be discharged, unless the court directs the case to be submitted to the same or another grand jury, or directs a new information to be filed; provided that after such order of resubmission, the defendant may be examined before a magistrate and discharged or committed by him as in other cases."

In that case the petitioner sought to obtain a writ of mandamus directing the trial court to enter a judgment of dismissal, alleging that the grand jury had returned an indictment against him; that he demurred to the indictment and the court made an order "that the demurrer be and it is hereby sustained and that the matter be submitted to the present grand jury"; that thereafter petitioner moved the trial court for an order dismissing the indictment, which was denied. The court said (page 1110):

"The record before us does not disclose what was claimed to be the defect in the first indictment filed against the petitioner. However, from the allegations of the petition, it appears that no amendment was asked or allowed. We may assume, therefore, that the defect, if any, was at least claimed to be one which went to the substantial rights of the defendant. This assumption is fortified by the terms of the order sustaining the demurrer, and which directed the case to be submitted to the grand jury. The court was therefore considering an instance where, in its judgment, a change was necessary, but which change, if made, was one of those changes which must be made with the authority first obtained from the grand jury. The court was considering a new indictment, not an amendment. To such a change the petitioner would apply that sentence contained in the section which reads as follows: 'If a demurrer is sustained, and an amendment is not allowed, or if allowed, is not made, within such reasonable time as the court may fix, the court shall give a judgment of dismissal, which shall be a bar to another prosecution for the same offense.' That sentence, standing alone, is limited to amendments, and not to new indictments, and is not helpful under the facts of this case. However, we think that the remaining portion must also be applied. It is as follows: 'The defendant shall thereupon be discharged, unless the court directs the case to be submitted to the same or another grand jury, or directs a new information to be filed; provided, that after such order of resubmission the defendant may be examined before a magistrate, and discharged or committed by him, as in other cases.' The whole section must be so interpreted as to give some force and effect, if possible, to each and every clause therein contained. The very purpose of the amendments to the section was to prevent miscarriage of justice—not to create them. The section clearly provides that in a proper case it will be the duty of the trial court to direct the case to be submitted to the same or another grand jury, or to direct a new information to be filed. The contention made by the petitioner will give no force or effect whatsoever to that part of the section just quoted."

The writ was denied. It has been squarely decided in the case of Copeland v. Superior Court, 62 Cal. App. 316, 217 P. 573, that a criminal prosecution "is not at an end," under Penal Code, § 1008, when the court rules, "Demurrer to indictment sustained and case ordered resubmitted to the grand jury;" and that a new indictment on the same facts for the same offense is valid. The court said (page 319 [217 P. 574]):

"Indeed, the meaning of the language of the Code section is so clear that it should need no interpretation. It is equally apparent that the discretion and jurisdiction of the superior court does not end with determining whether or not there shall be any further prosecution; the mode of such further prosecution is also indisputably a matter for the court's decision. * * * It has been held that the court may delegate the choice of any one of the modes of prosecution provided in section 1008 of the Penal Code to the district attorney. Matter of Application of June, 30 Cal. App. 767, 159 P. 452. This was the effect of the order made in the present instance. By directing that the case be 'resubmitted to the grand jury' the court determined that there should be further action on the part of the people by way of presentation of the matter looking toward an indictment, but permitted the district attorney to elect whether to resubmit the matter to the grand jury which had voted the first indictment or to another grand jury. This the June Case holds the trial court had a right to do."

In People v. Follette, 74 Cal. App. 178, 240 P. 502, the court said, at page 185 (240 P. 505):

"As to the power of the grand jury to return a second indictment against a defendant for the same offense charged in the first, the rule is stated in Corpus Juris as follows: 'It is generally held that a grand jury may find a valid indictment notwithstanding another indictment is pending against accused for the same offense, and the pendency of the other indictment, where there has been no conviction or jeopardy thereon, is not ground for a plea either in abatement or in bar of the second indictment, * * * although as a rule accused can be tried or put in jeopardy only on one. It has been so held, even though defendant has been arraigned and a plea of not guilty entered on the first indictment.' 31 C. J. p. 598. Numerous authorities are cited by the author of the above work in support of this rule, and they appear generally to sustain the text."

[3] Appellants' second proposition is that, the original indictment being out and "the case at an end," no valid order of consolidation could be made. Having seen from the foregoing authorities that the case was not at an end when the court "ordered said case to be resubmitted to the grand jury," we believe the order of consolidation was valid, and that defendants were thereafter bound as sureties on the original bail bond. Section 998 of the Penal Code provides that if the court directs the case to be resubmitted, the defendant, if already in custody, must so remain, unless he is admitted to bail. In the case at bar, defendant was in custody when the court ordered the case to be resubmitted on December 14th, and he was admitted to bail on December 17th, after said order was made. The bond in case No. 17481 recited the filing of the indictment charging the defendant Kirby with the crime of bribery, and further recited that an order of court had been made on December 19th (17th) admitting defendant to bail. The condition of the bond was that the defendant's sureties "undertake that the above named W. S. Kirby will appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted, and will at all times hold himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, and, if convicted, will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof." Thereafter the defendant was charged with the identical offense of bribery in case No. 17569, and the cases were ordered consolidated and the defendant held under the original bond. The defendant was released from custody solely by virtue of the executing and filing of the bail bond as provided in section 998. As the case was not at an end, the second indictment was valid and a part of the same proceeding. The only purpose in admitting defendant Kirby to bail as provided in section 998 was to insure the appearance of the defendant to answer a new indictment; otherwise the defendant must be held in custody until a new indictment is returned or the grand jury fails to act.

Section 998 expressly provides that if the defendant is already admitted to bail, where the court directs the case to be resubmitted to the grand jury, the bail is answerable for the appearance of the defendant to answer a new indictment. There can be no other or different purpose in admitting defendant to bail after the case has been ordered to be resubmitted to the grand jury than to insure the appearance of the defendant to answer a new indictment. Defendant Kirby failed to appear to answer the new indictment and defendants became liable as sureties.

In view of the foregoing, we are unable to see in what manner the bond failed to comply with the statute, as contended by appellants, since the bond substantially conformed to the requirements of section 1287 of the Penal Code.

[4, 5] The fact that the preliminary recitals in the bond did not set forth all the facts, to wit, that the demurrer to the indictment referred to had been sustained, and that the case had been resubmitted to the grand jury, can be of no avail as a defense on the bond, as sufficient facts were given to identify the defendant and the action pending against him. The sureties cannot expect or require that every detail connected with the imprisonment of the defendant be set forth in the bond. The bond herein could not have designated the offense any more accurately than it did. It referred to indictment No. 17481, because that was the only indictment pending against defendant Kirby. The new indictment not having been returned and the old indictment not having been dismissed, it was a matter of record that the demurrer to that indictment had been sustained, and that the defendant was in custody to await the action of the grand jury to which the charge mentioned in said indictment No. 17481 had been referred. If the bond when executed was to refer to any indictment at all, it must of necessity have referred to indictment No. 17481, for the reason that the new indictment had not yet been returned. The authorities do not require that the bail bond shall describe the offense with the same particularity as is required of the indictment. People v. Barnes, 65 Cal. 16, 2 P. 493. It is not essential to the validity of a bail bond that it recite the special circumstances under which it was taken. Corpus Juris, p. 1003, § 244.

[6] Appellants assert that Kirby was in court and in custody when arraigned on the new indictment, and the bond became void. At no time was defendant Kirby in custody after he was released upon the bond executed by the defendants, though he did appear for arraignment under the new indictment and regularly entered his plea thereto. The appearance of the defendant before the court for arraignment and plea did not release the sureties on the bail bond where the undertaking is that "the defendant will at all times hold himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, and, if convicted, will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof." 20 A. L. R. 594. note and cases cited.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is ordered affirmed.

WERNER v. BRYDEN. (Civ. 3277.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 15, 1927.

1. New trial ☞161(1)—Plaintiff, in breach of promise suit, who makes out case warranting reasonable recovery, is entitled to have damages assessed by jury.

In action for damages for breach of promise of marriage and seduction, plaintiff who makes out case, and is entitled to recover reasonable sum as damages, has constitutional right to demand that such damages be assessed by jury, as respects condition of denying new trial.

2. New trial ☞161(1)—Permitting defendant to stipulate entry of judgment for plaintiff in specified sum in lieu of new trial, in breach of promise suit, held error.

In breach of promise suit, where evidence was insufficient to sustain judgment for defendant, action of court in permitting defendant to consent to entry of judgment in specified sum in lieu of new trial held error, as denying plaintiff's constitutional right to have damages assessed by jury.

3. New trial ☞70—Finding that verdict for defendant, who married another, was not supported by sufficient evidence, held proper.

Conclusion of trial court that evidence was insufficient to sustain verdict for defendant, in breach of promise suit, held proper, where evidence clearly showed defendant's promise of marriage and breach thereof by marrying another.

4. Appeal and error ☞165—Plaintiff's appeal from judgment for defendant, in breach of promise suit, held effective, notwithstanding defendant's consent to judgment for specified sum under court order on plaintiff's motion for new trial.

Plaintiff's appeal from judgment for defendant, in suit for breach of promise, held effective, notwithstanding court had permitted defendant, in determining plaintiff's motion for a new trial, to stipulate for entry of judgment in specified sum, and defendant had filed stipulation in accordance therewith.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Action by Augusta Werner against Charles J. Bryden, also called James C. Bryden. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

George A. Connolly, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. H. Carlin and W. P. Rich, both of Marysville, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action to recover damages for breach of promise of marriage and seduction under such promise. The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of defendant. In due time the plaintiff moved for a new trial and the court made and entered the following order:

"The court is constrained to hold that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury; that plaintiff has made out a case and is entitled to recover a reasonable sum as damages; that $1,500 is a reasonable sum; and that a new trial should be granted, unless defendant shall consent to the entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff for said sum of $1,500.

"Accordingly it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that, if the defendant shall, on or before March 21, 1925, file herein a written stipulation consenting to the entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,500 (each party to pay her or his own costs thus far incurred), the motion for a new trial shall be and in such event is hereby denied; and upon the failure of defendant to file such stipulation and consent on or before said date, to wit, Saturday, March 21, 1925, then and in that event said motion for a new trial shall be and the same is hereby granted."

On the day this order was filed the defendant filed his stipulation that:

"Judgment may be forthwith entered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant in this action for the sum of $1,500, each party to the action to pay her and his own costs incurred to date."

The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

[1, 2] The defense set up in the answer is that the defendant never promised to marry the plaintiff. That was his sole defense at the trial. If he made the promise, he undoubtedly broke it, because he married another woman prior to the commencement of the action. It is a necessary inference from the verdict, therefore, that the jury found that the alleged promise was not made. Having so found, of course, the jury did not determine the amount of damage suffered by the plaintiff. In the order disposing of the motion for a new trial, the court states that "the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict," and that "plaintiff has made out a case and is entitled to recover a reasonable sum as damages." In the absence of any such statement, the facts so stated are necessarily inferred from the mere making of the conditional order. Being convinced that substantial justice was not done by the verdict, it was the duty of the trial court to make an unconditional order granting a new trial. Having "made out a case" and being "entitled to recover a reasonable sum as damages," plaintiff had the constitutional right to demand that a jury assess such damages. The power of a trial court to make the denial of a defendant's motion for a new trial conditional upon the plaintiff's consent to a reduction in amount of an excessive verdict in his favor has long been upheld in this state. In Adamson v. County of Los Angeles, 52 Cal. App. 125, 131, 198 P. 52, it was held that, under the circumstances there stated, it was within the power of the trial court to make the denial of the defendant's motion for a new trial in a condemnation suit conditional upon the plaintiff's consent to increase the amount awarded the defendant for the property taken. Similar orders have been upheld in several other states. In Eaton v. Jones, 107 Cal. 487, 491, 40 P. 798, 800, one of the findings was "in direct conflict with the evidence and admission of defendant." The court said:

"That this was a mistake is quite apparent, and when, on the motion for a new trial, the court discovered the error, it very properly called upon defendant to consent to its correction with the alternative of granting a new trial upon a refusal."

But no case has been discovered in which an order such as that in question here has been upheld. In Shanahan v. Boston & N. St. Ry. Co., 193 Mass. 412, 79 N. E. 751, the plaintiffs sued to recover damages for personal injuries. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant and the plaintiffs moved for a new trial. The court made an order "granting the motions unless on or before a certain date the defendant consented to the entry of judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the first case for $200, and in the second for $50." The defendant consented to the terms of the order and the plaintiffs appealed. The higher court said:

"The judicial action taken after the determination had been reached to set the verdicts aside substituted for the verdict of a jury a finding by the judge which the plaintiffs were not compelled to accept, nor could they thus be deprived of their constitutional right. * * * These cases are to be distinguished from those in which an adverse verdict having been returned the defendant asks for a new trial, and the option is given to the plaintiff upon filing a remittitur in excess of a certain sum to retain the verdict, or otherwise the motion will be granted. In such cases the question of liability has already been determined in the plaintiff's favor."

In a similar case it is said:

"By annexing a condition that defendant should pay plaintiff $300, the trial court has made it manifest that in his opinion substantial justice was not done in the premises. We cannot, however, agree with him as to his right to annex such a condition. It was equivalent to the trial court himself assessing the damages. This is the province of the jury. This court has frequently sanctioned the reduction of verdicts where they were larger than the law would justify, but the right of a trial court to reduce a verdict under such circumstances would not carry with it the right to assess damages where the jury has refused to assess any. The plaintiff has the right to insist that the jury shall assess the damages." Goldsmith v. Detroit J. & C. Ry., 165 Mich. 177, 130 N. W. 647.

[3] The evidence shows, without substantial conflict, that the defendant promised to marry the plaintiff. In the early summer of the year 1921 the defendant was in the vicinity of the Feather River Inn, near Blairsden, Plumas county, where he had charge of his father's flocks of sheep, not as the herder thereof, but rather as general manager and overseer of the herders. The plaintiff was employed as a waitress at the Feather River Inn. The parties met at a dance on June 5th, and an immediate attachment sprang up between them. The plaintiff testified that they became engaged to marry about two weeks later and that the alleged seduction took place about a month after the first meeting. The defendant testified that the sexual relations between him and the plaintiff commenced on the second day of their acquaintance and continued throughout the summer. At the end of the summer season the plaintiff went to San Francisco and at a later time the defendant went to his father's home in Yuba county. The parties occasionally met after the plaintiff had gone to San Francisco and many letters passed between them. The plaintiff kept the defendant's letters, but he testified that he destroyed hers. He testified that each sent the other about 50 letters. His letters and his testimony in relation thereto are too long to be given even in substance, but a few quotations will indicate their general character. On cross-examination he was examined in part as follows:

"Q. I will call your attention to this language * * * in a letter postmarked Marysville, January 13, 1922: 'I am awfully lonesome here, Peg, and God, how I wish that you were here with me for good as my wife and sweetheart in our own little home. I am always thinking and dreaming of it, dear, and I am working for it, too, for I love you.' At the time when you wrote those words to Miss Werner, hadn't you already asked her to be your wife? A. No; not any more than I was asking her or letting her know I wanted to marry her in that letter. * * *

"Q. Were you working to bring that about? A. I suppose I had that end in view. * * *

"Q. I am reading now from plaintiff's Exhibit No. 24, contained in an envelope postmarked Honcut, January 23, 1922. * * * The latter commences: 'Friday night, Dearest Peg, your letters of Tuesday night and Wednesday night arrived to-day, dear, and I have just finished reading them again. You have clearly outlined my idea of Heaven, Peg, when you said you would like to be here to clean me up, feed me, and put me to bed after a hard day's work.' Had Miss Werner written a letter to you in which she used the substance of those words? A. I think she had; yes.

"Q. Mr. Bryden, at the time that you wrote that letter, were you intending to make Miss Werner your wife? A. I think so.

"Q. I now call your attention to the reference to your father contained in this same letter: * * * 'I can't say whether Dad knows that I am in love with you, dear, for he never says a word about my personal affairs, but he will know it before another year goes by.' * * * Had Miss Werner asked you shortly before you wrote this letter whether or not your father knew that you were in love with her? A. I think so.

"Q. And what did you mean when you said to her, 'But he will know it before another year goes by?' A. I felt sure she would marry me later on when financially so that I could ask her. * * *

"Q. You further say, 'Of course, he don't know you love me; how could he? I can hardly believe it myself.' Had you told your father by this time whether or not Miss Werner loved you? A. I never discussed love, my love for her or her love for me, with him. * * *

"Q. I will call your attention to the following portion of the * * * letter (dated January 28, 1922): 'You could make me very happy, dear, if, as you say, you could enjoy me most that way. That is the only way to a real, true, lasting happiness for me, and, if I could make you happy also, our happiness would be insured.' * * * I wish you would state to the jury now what you referred to. * * * A. I don't remember exactly. I think it was some reference that led me to understand that we might be married. * * * A lot of my letters made no direct reference to marriage, but hinted at it, in other words, but I think it was probably some favorable answer to my previous letter that brought that out. * * *

"Q. I now call your attention to a letter * * * which I have taken from an envelope postmarked Honcut, I think, February 10, 1922, 7 p. m., and I draw your attention to the following language: * * * 'I am just as lonesome as ever, dear, and I am sure now that I will never stop wanting you and longing for you. God, how I would like to have a place I could call home and to have it feel like home with you there, dear, to make it so. I want that above everything else in my whole world, because, dearest, I will never stop loving you as long as you will let me.' * * * When you wrote those words, were you intending, or hoping, or wishing, or expecting to make Miss Werner your wife? A. Yes; all of those. * * *

"Q. I call your attention to the last paragraph in that letter (February 22, 1922): 'I love you, dear, with all my heart. Do you? You never said one single thing in your last letter about it, if you do, and it made me feel rotten, dear.' I want you to tell the jury now whether or not, if Miss Werner did not state to you in every letter that she wrote that she loved you, that you felt badly about it? A.

That is what I would write back and tell her I suppose; I felt badly; yes. * * *

"Q. You spent Christmas afternoon with Miss Werner, on Christmas Day in 1921, in the company of your mother, your sister, and your sister's husband, in Oakland, at the home of your mother and sister, did you not? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. (Quoting from letter of May 11, 1922): 'Yes, Peg, old dear, you are going to see lots of me this summer, and I am wishing all the time that the time were here, for I am very lonesome for you.' When you wrote that language to Miss Werner, did you mean it? A. Well, I meant it; yes. I meant it in a certain way. * * * I mean I was anxious to be with her. * * * I wanted to go on as we had gone on in the summer before. * * * I never intended to make her my wife after that time. * * *

"Q. Did she not go with you to Sacramento after you wrote that letter to her? A. I think so. * * *

"Q. Did she not, after you had written that letter to her, Mr. Bryden, go with you to Sacramento and live with you as your wife? * * * A. Yes.

"Q. When was it you ceased to hope or expect to make Miss Werner your wife? A. It was very soon after March 17th. * * * I felt a little different towards Miss Werner and I think she felt a little different towards me after that time. And my father's death had a good deal to do with it, too. It made me look at things in a little different light. * * *

"Q. Your father's death on April 10, 1922, made you realize more and more you didn't love Miss Werner? Is that it? A. That's it; yes."

The defendant's deposition was taken prior to the time of the trial. The following appears therein:

"Q. Did you ever promise to marry Miss Werner? A. No.

"Q. You never promised nor agreed to marry her? A. Well, that is a kind of a hard question to answer. Will you let me answer it the way I want to? Q. Certainly, answer it in your own way. A. She never asked me to marry her, consequently I never agreed to marry her."

Not only from the testimony of the plaintiff, but from that of the defendant and from references in his letters to statements contained in hers, it appears that her expressions of love for him were as ardent as his for her. The statements in his letters and his admissions as a witness at the trial so clearly established the engagement of the parties to marry that his mere assertion on the witness stand that they were not so engaged does not create a substantial conflict in the evidence. It clearly appears that the trial court could have come to no other rational conclusion than that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. The question is not whether the amount fixed by the court is a reasonable sum to be allowed as damages, but the plaintiff has the constitutional right to have such damages assessed by a jury.

[4] Respondent makes the point that the appeal is ineffective. The contention is so utterly devoid of merit that it is deemed unnecessary to discuss it.

The judgment is reversed.

COPP v. MULCAHY. (Civ. 3244.) *

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 6, 1927.

1. Corporations ⚡657(7)—In action on note by assignee of nonresident corporation, defense based on void forfeiture of corporation's license held without merit (St. 1917, p. 373, § 3).

In action on note by assignee of foreign corporation, defense that corporation was not competent to assign note or to collect it through plaintiff by reason of forfeiture of its license to do business in the state for nonpayment of license tax required by St. 1917, p. 373, § 3, held without merit, where attempted forfeiture of corporation's license was in fact void and of no effect.

2. Bills and notes ⚡523—Corporations ⚡411—Plaintiff held authorized to collect note either as assignee or agent of nonresident corporation.

Evidence held to warrant finding that plaintiff was authorized to collect note either as assignee of nonresident corporation or as corporation's agent.

3. Bills and notes ⚡525—Defense that execution of note was obtained by false representation as to payee held not sustained by evidence.

In action on notes by assignee of foreign corporation, evidence held insufficient to sustain defense that execution of note was obtained by false representations to defendant that corporation rather than its agent individually was named payee therein.

4. Landlord and tenant ⚡230(9)—In action on rental note, defendant's asserted wrongful ouster through unexplained foreclosure proceedings held immaterial, absent any plea for affirmative relief.

In action on rental note by assignee of foreign corporation, defendant's claim of wrongful ouster by particular bank as a result of some unexplained foreclosure proceeding involving the leased property held immaterial, in absence of any plea by defendant for affirmative relief.

5. Assignments ⚡34—Parol assignment of notes by foreign corporation to resident manager held valid.

A thing or chose in action arising out of an obligation may be assigned verbally or without a writing, and hence parol assignment of notes due foreign corporation to its resident agent was valid.

6. Assignments ⚡34—Parol assignment of notes if made in Massachusetts held valid, in view of presumption affecting law of Massachusetts and absence of contrary showing.

Parol assignment of notes sued upon if assumed to have been made in state of Massachusetts held valid, in view of presumption affecting law of foreign state and absence of any showing that rule in Massachusetts differed from that in California.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by Fleet F. Copp against James Mulcahy. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.
Berry & Watson, of Stockton, for respondent.

HART, J. This action is by plaintiff to recover on two several promissory notes. The complaint is in two counts, in the first of which it is alleged that defendant, on the 11th day of July, 1924, made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff his promissory note for the sum of $297, payable three months after date, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. Said note is set out in hæc verba in said count. The second count or cause of action is founded on a note for the sum of $58, dated July 19, 1924, and payable, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, on or before three months after date. Said note is also set out in full in the complaint. Each of said notes provided for the payment by the maker (defendant herein) of reasonable attorney's fees in case action was instituted to enforce the payment thereof. The complaint alleges that no part of the principal sums, nor any interest accruing thereon, has been paid, and that the said notes "are now due, owing and unpaid," and that, as to the first cause of action, the sum of $75 is a reasonable amount to be awarded as attorney's fees, and that, as to the second cause of action, the sum of $25 is a reasonable amount to be allowed for such fees.

The defense interposed by defendant may the better be understood by reciting a brief history of the transactions culminating in the making and delivery of the notes in suit by defendant to the plaintiff before referring to the allegations of the answer. This statement may be taken from the findings, from which it appears that for some time prior to the date of the making of said notes a corporation known as the New England-California Corporation, organized under the laws of the state of Massachusetts and having its principal place of business at Worcester, Mass., filed with the secretary of state of California a certified copy of its articles of incorporation and other papers required to be so filed by foreign corporations desiring to transact intrastate business within this state (Stats. 1917, pp. 371-377); that thereafter said corporation proceeded to carry on its business in this state, with the plaintiff herein as the managing agent thereof; that during the period of time in which it thus transacted business in California the defendant rented from it a certain number of acres of land in San Joaquin county at a certain specified rental and also from time to time purchased hay from it; that after these transactions, and on the 3d day of March, 1923, the right of said corporation to transact business in California was (officially declared to be) forfeited because of its failure to pay the annual tax which the state attempted to exact from foreign corporations as one of the conditions upon which they are permitted to transact intrastate business therein. It further appears from the findings that one George M. Wright was at all times the president of said New England-California Corporation and resided at said city of Worcester, Mass.; that, previous to the execution of the notes in controversy, said corporation was indebted to the plaintiff for salary as managing agent thereof in a sum in excess of $2,000 and that after the right of the corporation to transact business in California was (officially declared to be) forfeited for the reason above stated, the plaintiff was duly authorized by said George M. Wright, the president of said corporation, to collect and apply certain debts due said corporation from certain persons in California, including the indebtedness of defendant to said corporation, upon and in satisfaction of the moneys due plaintiff from the corporation on account of the salary due him.

The answer alleges that the defendant was not indebted to the plaintiff on account of the notes set out in the complaint or on any other account and that the defendant did not knowingly or intentionally make, execute, or deliver to plaintiff either of the promissory notes set out in the complaint, that (referring to the first count of the complaint) in the years 1922 and 1923 the defendant rented from said corporation certain real property, belonging to it and situated in the county of San Joaquin, for the sum of $150 per year, which was payable at the end of each year thereof, that "on the 11th day of July, 1924, the plaintiff, who was then and there acting as a servant of said corporation falsely and fraudulently represented and stated to defendant that he (defendant) was then indebted to said corporation in the sum of $297, for and on account of the rental of said corporation's real property, and that said corporation was then demanding the said rental money from him, and that he had prepared the said promissory note in the amount specified in said note, and had made the same payable to the said corporation in order that it might be forwarded to it, and thereby save the expense of a suit at law for the collection of said rent, when in truth and in fact the defendant was not indebted to either plaintiff or the said corporation in the said sum of $297, or any other or different sum, on account of the rental of said real property, or for any other matter or thing whatsoever, and that the said corporation was not then demanding, and never had demanded, the money from the plaintiff for said rental, and the latter had not made the said promissory note payable to the said corporation, and the said note was not asked for or secured for the purpose of being forwarded to said corporation or for the purpose of saving the expense of a lawsuit, and that the plaintiff then and there well knew that defendant was not indebted to said corporation or to him in the said sum of $297, or any other or different sum, on account of the said rental or any other matter or thing whatever, and that said corporation was not then demanding and never had demanded the said rental money from plaintiff (which had already been paid as aforesaid), and that plaintiff had not made said promissory note payable to said corporation but to himself, and that the same was not asked for or secured from defendant for the purpose of being forwarded to said corporation, or for the purpose of saving the expense of a lawsuit, and that plaintiff made each and all of the foregoing false and fraudulent representations and statements to the defendant for the purpose of inducing and forcing him to unknowingly and unintentionally give said promissory note to him individually and not to said corporation, and thereby of defrauding defendant out of the amount thereof; that defendant believed and relied upon each and all of the aforesaid false and fraudulent representations and statements, and in consequence thereof and of his belief that the note was made payable to said corporation, he signed said promissory note, and not otherwise; "that defendant never had any personal dealings or business with plaintiff, and never at any time owed him money or other obligation, and that for the purpose of securing defendant's signature to said note to himself, the plaintiff falsely and fraudulently represented and stated to defendant at the time said note was executed, that it was made payable to the said corporation, and that defendant then believed it was so written, and now believes that it was not then made payable to plaintiff, and that the payee's name was left blank, and that plaintiff afterward fraudulently filled said blank by writing his own name therein, for the purpose of defrauding defendant out of the amount thereof."

The allegations of the answer replying to the second count of the complaint are substantially, if not precisely, the same as those contained in the answer responding to the first count as above herein set forth. Defendant filed a cross-complaint, in which it is alleged that the plaintiff (cross-defendant) is indebted to cross-plaintiff (defendant) on an open, mutual, and current account, in the sum of $450, "for and on account of moneys loaned by him to said cross-defendant, at his special instance and request, which the said cross-defendant then and there promised and agreed to pay cross-plaintiff long prior to the commencement of this action, together with the interest to accrue thereon at the legal rate"; that said cross-defendant has not paid cross-plaintiff said sum of $450 or any part thereof and that the same with interest, etc., is now due and owing from cross-plaintiff to the cross-defendant. The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint specifically denying each of its allegations.

The defendant, by leave of the court, filed an amendment to his answer, alleging that the corporation referred to "was a foreign corporation created under the laws of the state of Massachusetts and which was licensed to do business in this state prior to the 3d day of March, 1923, and which forfeited that said right in this state on that date by reason of its failure to pay its taxes theretofore due the state of California, and that in consequence thereof the aforesaid promissory notes are null and void."

The court found, in addition to the findings from which is taken the general statement of the facts hereinabove given, that the defendant at all times well knew the relations existing between the plaintiff, the said New England-California Corporation, and said George M. Wright, "and acquiesced in and fully understood the circumstances under which said promissory notes were executed and also knew that said New England-California Corporation had forfeited its right to transact business within the state of California, by reason of the forfeiture of its charter within the state of California, as aforesaid, which forfeiture was and is at all times since said 3d day of March, 1923, a matter of public record within the state of California; that it is not true as alleged in the defendant's answer herein that the plaintiff made any false or fraudulent representations to the defendant whatsoever with reference to said promissory notes, and the court finds that all matters set forth in said answer not expressly covered by the foregoing findings are untrue."

It is further found that:

"Each of the allegations of the cross-complaint was, and is, untrue; that no evidence has been introduced showing or tending to show that within four years previous to the commencement of this action, or at all, the cross-defendant, plaintiff herein, has been, or ever was, indebted to cross-plaintiff, defendant herein, upon an open, mutual and current account, or any account, in the sum of four hundred fifty dollars ($450), or any sum, for or on account of moneys loaned to him by said cross-plaintiff, or at all."

Plaintiff, upon the findings and the conclusions of law following therefrom, was awarded judgment in the total sum of $510, which includes the aggregate of the sums for which, respectively, the notes counted upon were given, together with the interest accruing thereon.

The defendant appeals from the judgment in accordance with the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is admitted that, prior to the making and delivery of the notes in question by defendant to plaintiff, the New England-California Corporation failed to pay the annual tax to the state, as required by the statute of 1917, supra, and had not paid such tax at the time of the commencement of this action, and that the secretary of state of said state duly and regularly made a record in his office of that fact.

The point primarily made by the defendant for a reversal of the judgment is that the forfeiture of the right of said corporation to transact business in California "disqualified it from collecting any claim or account by suit or otherwise." It is hence contended that "if the corporation could not legally make such collection or maintain such action against the defendant herein, its agent or servant could have no greater or better right than it had." There are other points urged by the defendant. One of these is that the corporation "never gave plaintiff any assignment of the claim, and never at any time authorized him to take notes to himself for any of its demands against its debtors." This last stated proposition involves the question whether or not a verbal assignment by the corporation to plaintiff of the debts of which the promissory notes in suit purport to be evidence, is legal or valid.

[1] Section 3 of the statutes of 1917 regulating the right of corporations to transact business in the state of California contains precisely the same provisions as are contained in the corresponding section of the act of 1915, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, passed by the legislature subsequent to its session of 1915 and relating to the same subject. See Deering's General Laws 1923, p. 548. Said section, after providing that a foreign corporation shall file with the secretary of state an authenticated copy of its charter, together with the payment of a specified filing fee, and also filing an affidavit disclosing its authorized capital stock on January 1st of the current year, etc., provides as follows:

"Sec. 3. Except those corporations herein-after specified, every corporation incorporated under the laws of this state, and every corporation incorporated under the laws of any other state, territory, or foreign country now doing intrastate business within this state, or which shall hereafter engage in intrastate business in this state, shall procure annually from the secretary of state a license authorizing the transaction of such business in this state, and pay therefor the license tax prescribed herein.

"For the purpose of measuring said tax the secretary of state shall examine all articles of incorporation and all documents on file in his office relating to an increase or decrease in the authorized capital stock of corporations which are subject to said tax, and determine the amount due from each corporation by the following rule."

Following which is the prescribed amount of the tax, which amount is graduated according to or upon the basis of the authorized capital stock of such corporation.

In the very recent case of Perkins Manufacturing Co. v. Jordan, as Secretary of State, 254 P. 551, the Supreme Court had before it the above-named section, or the same section as it appears in the statute of 1917, supra, in a proceeding in mandate to compel the secretary of state, notwithstanding that the corporation, petitioner, refused to pay the annual license tax purporting to be required by the statute in such case, to accept and file a copy of the charter of said corporation tendered, with other documents mentioned in said section, to said officer by the petitioner for filing in his office. The ground upon which the petitioner refused to pay the annual license tax upon presenting a certified copy of its charter and other documents for filing with the state officer named was that the provision of section 3 of the statute in question, attempting to fix a graduated license or excise tax upon the basis of the amount of the authorized capital stock of a foreign corporation (meaning a corporation of a sister state) is invalid, in that at least the effect of its necessary operation would be an unlawful interference with interstate commerce, the regulation of which is solely the function of Congress, and, further, would involve the attempted performance of an act inconsistent with the due process clause of the federal Constitution (Amend. 14, § 1), since the imposition of such tax would be upon the property of a foreign corporation, when neither the corporation nor the property taxed was located or used within the borders of the state of California. Our Supreme Court, in that case, in a well-considered opinion by Mr. Justice Preston, sustained the contentions of the petitioner therein and ordered the writ of mandate, as prayed for, to be issued. Obviously the effect of that decision was to set at naught as illegal and void section 3 of the act of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 424), and, consequently, the same section of the act of 1917. It is not necessary to present herein excerpts from the opinion of Judge Preston. It is enough to say, as already enough has been said to indicate, that under that decision, and the existing statute as it is thereby interpreted, it is at the present time obligatory upon the secretary of state to file, upon application therefor, the certified copy of the charter and any other documents required by the statute of 1917 to be filed by any foreign corporation desiring and intending to transact intrastate business within the limits of the state of California, without the payment by such corporation of the annual license tax which said statute purported or attempted to exact from foreign corporations as one of the conditions upon which their right to transact intrastate business in California was made to depend.

It is manifest that, under the decision in the case named, the attempted forfeiture by the state of California of the right of the New England-California Corporation to transact intrastate business within its borders because of the failure of said corporation to pay its annual license tax according to the terms of section 3 of the statute of 1917 is wholly nugatory and void, and that said corporation, if it has complied with the other conditions prescribed by said statute and which are necessary to be observed and which are not within or subject to the objections sustained in Perkins Manufacturing Co. v. Jordan, etc. (as to which matter the record makes no disclosure), was, when the transactions herein concerned took place, entitled to enjoy and exercise, in this state, any rights, privileges or perform any corporate acts within the scope of its powers as a corporation. It of necessity follows that, if for no other reason than that furnished by the result reached in the case named, the point made by defendant that the corporation involved herein had been rendered legally incompetent to assign to plaintiff or through him collect any claims accruing to it before the asserted forfeiture of its right to do intrastate business in California is wholly without a legal foundation for its support. We are not to be understood as expressing an opinion on the question whether or not the effect of a forfeiture, as prescribed by the statute, of a foreign corporation's right to do intrastate business in California, for any reason for which the right of such a corporation to transact business in this state might, under the statute, be forfeited, would be to debar it of the right, subsequent to such forfeiture, of enforcing in the courts of this state the payment of any debts or claims accruing to it prior to such forfeiture.

The findings, other than that purporting to find that the New England-California Corporation had forfeited its right to do business in the state of California by reason of the nonpayment of its taxes, are afforded sufficient evidentiary support. The plaintiff testified that from November, 1919, to the time (March 3, 1923) of the alleged forfeiture of the right of said corporation to transact business in California, he was in the employ of said corporation as an expert and manager; that at the time of the purported forfeiture, the said corporation was indebted to him (plaintiff) in a sum approximating $6,000 for personal services rendered by him for the corporation as such expert and manager; that, on the date of the alleged forfeiture, there were owing to the corporation certain debts, among which was the debt of the defendant to the corporation and which latter was evidenced by the notes in suit; that, in the year 1924, and prior to the time that said notes were executed and delivered by defendant to plaintiff, the latter held a conversation with the former, in the course of which the plaintiff stated to the defendant that the corporation was indebted to him (plaintiff) in a large sum of money for the services theretofore performed by him for the corporation; that defendant then said to plaintiff that he knew the corporation was indebted to him (plaintiff); that, subsequently and before the making and the delivery of the notes in controversy, he (plaintiff) went to the state of Massachusetts, and discussed with George M. Wright, president of the corporation, the situation in California with respect to the affairs of the corporation and also the matter of the indebtedness of the corporation to plaintiff on account of wages or salary due the latter from the former; that said Wright, as such president, verbally vested plaintiff with full authority to superintend and wind up the affairs of the corporation in California, and to that end, collect the debts due the corporation, and pay such indebtedness as existed against the corporation in this state, including the indebtedness of the corporation to plaintiff for salary; that said Wright at that time verbally assigned to plaintiff the moneys due the corporation from defendant; that, on returning to California, he (plaintiff) called on the defendant and requested him to settle the amounts due from him to the corporation for hay purchased by the former from the latter and also for rent money, as explained in the findings; that he then told the defendant that the corporation, through its president, Mr. Wright, had assigned to him the moneys due from him (defendant) to the corporation and that the same were to be in satisfaction of the corporation's indebtedness to plaintiff; that the defendant again said that he knew the corporation was indebted to plaintiff and that the latter ought to have the money that he (defendant) owed the corporation—in fact, so plaintiff testified, the defendant then stated that he would rather pay plaintiff what he owed the corporation than to pay the corporation itself; that plaintiff thereupon suggested that defendant give him in his (plaintiff's) name the promissory notes for the two several sums owing from defendant to the corporation, and that defendant thereupon made and delivered to the plaintiff and in his name the first of the notes, the latter having previously prepared it, and that some days later defendant executed and likewise delivered to plaintiff the second note, which is the basis of the second cause of action stated in the complaint. A letter dated at Worcester, Mass., June 18, 1924, was addressed to plaintiff by the "New England-California Corporation, George M. Wright, Agent," and in due course was received by plaintiff, in which it was stated:

"Confirming our talk we hereby acknowledge that you are still in the employ of the New England-California Corporation and are to carry on the work as superintendent under the direction of their agent, George M. Wright, and that it is understood that you are to continue in the employ of the company, as above stated, until either you or the company indicate their desire to terminate the arrangement by writing."

The defendant testified that he was in possession of and used a tract of land consisting of 21 acres under a lease from the corporation during the years 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, "and parts of the year 1924," said lease by its terms to expire with the expiration of the last-named year; that in the negotiations leading to the making of the lease, the plaintiff acted for and on behalf of the corporation; that during the term of the lease he "once in a while" bought hay from the corporation. He admitted that plaintiff, prior to the date of the making of the first of the notes in suit, told him of the corporation's indebtedness to him on account of salary or wages for personal services performed for the corporation. He testified that plaintiff stated that the notes were to be made to the corporation; that he agreed to give the notes on condition that threatened foreclosure proceedings against the property of the corporation which embraced the acreages under lease by him did not result in dispossessing him of the land demised to him before his fruit crops were gathered; that plaintiff replied that "it was only a matter of form that they wanted the notes, and they wasn't going to foreclose if I made the note to the New England Corporation." He added that, after he made and delivered the notes, the "Stockton Savings and Loan Bank foreclosed and they put me off the property," and as a result he was prevented from gathering and so securing the benefit of his fruit crops growing thereon. Defendant stated that he did not examine either note before he signed it "to see who the note ran to," but, on cross-examination, admitted that, if he had known that the notes were to be made to the corporation, as he assumed they had been, he would have signed them, as he knew that he was indebted to the corporation in some amount.

[2, 3] There has now been given in substance all the testimony regarding the transactions resulting in the execution and delivery of the notes in suit to plaintiff. It is thus readily to be seen that there is evidence warranting the conclusion that the plaintiff was authorized to collect, either for himself as assignee or for the corporation as its agent, the moneys due the corporation from defendant and represented by the notes in suit. But, at all events, if it were necessary to admit that there is, as a proposition of law, any force to the defense, interposed by defendant to plaintiff's action, to the effect that the plaintiff falsely represented to him (defendant) that the corporation was made the payee of the notes and upon such representation alone he signed and executed the instruments, nevertheless, the finding that such defense was or is unfounded in fact is fully sustained by the testimony of the plaintiff.

[4] Although we have referred herein to the testimony of the defendant that he was wrongfully ousted from the premises by a Stockton bank as a result of some unexplained foreclosure proceeding involving the property under lease by the defendant, it should be stated that that testimony is of no importance whatever under the issues of the case, since the defendant has not claimed here nor asked for any affirmative relief by way of damages for his asserted wrongful eviction from the premises and asserted consequent loss of crops.

As to the allegations of the cross-complaint to the effect that the plaintiff (cross-defendant to said cross-complaint) was indebted to the defendant upon an open, mutual and current account in the sum of $450, there was not, as the court expressly found, any evidence whatever introduced in support thereof. There was an attempt by defendant to show that he had paid the debts evidenced by the notes. Some checks given by defendant to the plaintiff for the corporation were introduced in evidence. These checks, however, were shown to have been for an indebtedness accruing in favor of the corporation from defendant prior to the time that the indebtedness evidenced by the notes was created. At any rate, the court was well within its discretion in so finding from the evidence upon that subject.

[5, 6] The objection to the rulings of the court permitting the plaintiff to prove by parol that the corporation assigned to him the claims it held against the defendant on the ground that such assignment is not valid or of any legal force because it was not reduced to writing is untenable. In this state, a thing or a chose in action, arising out of an obligation, may verbally or without a writing be transferred by assignment by the owner to another. Civ. Code, §§ 954, 1052, and 1624; Dingley v. McDonald, 124 Cal. 90, 94, 56 P. 790. And, if it is to be assumed that the verbal assignment by the corporation to plaintiff of the claims existing in favor of the corporation against the defendant was effectuated entirely in the state of Massachusetts, then the validity of the assignment may, under the circumstances of this case, be sustained upon the presumption, which obtains in this state, that, in the absence of proof that the law of a sister or foreign state upon any subject is different from our own law upon the same subject, the law of such sister or foreign state is the same as our law on such subject. O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 153 Cal. 502, 95 P. 873, 96 P. 323; Wills v. Wills, 166 Cal. 529, 532, 137 P. 249; McCormack v. McCormack, 175 Cal. 292; 165 P. 930; Estate of Pusey, 177 Cal. 367, 373, 374, 170 P. 846; Fox v. Mick, 20 Cal. App. 599, 129 P. 972; 5 Cal. Jur. pp. 430 and 431, and cases named in the footnotes. There was no evidence received, nor, indeed, any attempt to prove, in this case, that at the time the assignment in question here was made, the law of the state of Massachusetts regarding the requisites of a valid assignment of a chose in action was not the same as our law upon that subject. The presumption, therefore, is that, as in this state so it is or was true in the state of Massachusetts, a thing in action may legally be transferred by assignment verbally by the owner to another or without committing such assignment to writing.

There are no other points requiring notice herein.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ELY. (Cr. 1489.) *

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 5, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court. Sept. 1, 1927.

1. Criminal law ⇨696(3)—Evidence of condition of bumper after striking deceased held not inadmissible because bumper was not shown to be in same condition before accident.

In a prosecution of an automobile driver for failing to stop and render aid to one struck by his automobile, refusal to strike testimony that there were marks on the bumper such as would be made by striking clothing like that worn by deceased, on the ground that there was no testimony that the bumper was not in the same condition before the accident, held not error; objection going solely to the weight of the testimony.

2. Criminal law ⇨388—Testimony respecting experiments rests largely in court's discretion and substantially same conditions must be shown.

The reception or rejection in a criminal case of testimony respecting experiments rests largely within the discretion of the trial court, but it must be shown that substantially the same conditions existed and the evidence must be of such a character as to aid the jurors, rather than to confuse their minds with collateral matters.

3. Criminal law ⇨388—Excluding testimony as to experiment held not error, in absence of showing similarity of conditions.

In a criminal case where there was no attempt to show that the circumstances surrounding an experiment were similar to those which existed at the time of the accident, resulting in death of deceased when struck by defendant's automobile, it was not error to exclude testimony as to what witness had found by an experiment respecting the impression that would be made upon automobile bumpers by corduroy.

4. Criminal law — 1172(6)—Refusal to instruct to acquit driver of failing to aid one struck by his automobile unless he had guilty knowledge held harmless error, where absence of guilty knowledge was beyond credence (Vehicle Act, § 141).

In a prosecution of an automobile driver for failing to stop and render aid to one struck by his automobile, as required by Vehicle Act, § 141 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128), refusing to instruct that the prosecution must establish beyond reasonable doubt that defendant knew he had struck a person, and if not satisfied thereof beyond reasonable doubt to find defendant not guilty, held harmless error, where it was beyond credence that defendant did not know that he had struck a person, or that the jury did not believe that defendant knew that he had struck a person.

5. Municipal corporations — 707 — Conviction of automobile driver failing to aid one struck held sustained by evidence (Vehicle Act, § 141).

In a prosecution of an automobile driver for failing to stop and render aid to one struck by his automobile, as required by Vehicle Act, § 141 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128), evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction as against contention of uncertainty in name of deceased.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

R. H. Ely was convicted of failing to stop and render aid to one struck by an automobile driven by him, under Vehicle Act, § 141, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Honnold & Hubbell, of Escondido, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, and John D. Richer, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. Defendant was charged by information with failing to stop and render aid, as required by section 141 of the California Vehicle Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 1852, Act 5128), to one struck by an automobile driven by defendant. A verdict of guilty was returned against him, and he appeals from the judgment pronounced thereon and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The essential facts are that on the evening of September 21, 1926, at about 10:30 p. m. the defendant was traveling west on University avenue, in the city of San Diego, in company with two young ladies in a red Buick roadster without a top. Miss Boatman and Miss Hill, the young ladies in the car, testified that shortly after they turned into University avenue from another street they ran over something, and Miss Boatman asked what it was, and the defendant jokingly replied, "A man on a bicycle." Miss Boatman testified that, although she had noticed a noise in the motor before the time of the accident, it became worse thereafter and when she arrived home she observed that the motor meter was broken. Both of the young ladies suggested to the defendant that he stop and investigate, to which he replied that he had seen the man pick himself up and that he could do nothing. He did not stop. The defendant admitted the remarks attributed to him by these witnesses and said that, while they had struck what he thought was a sewer drain, they had been joking all evening and he made this remark in jest, laughing about it. He said that earlier in the evening some one must have backed into him and broken his motor meter, a part of which was found at the place where the man was struck, and that they had also dented the radiator and pushed it back until the fan arms were striking against it; that this was the cause of the noise referred to by the other witnesses.

Other testimony established that a man was struck by a red roadster with its top down or off, and that on the car driven by defendant there were, in addition to the damage to the radiator and motor meter, marks on the bumper indicating that they had been made by striking corduroy clothing, such as that worn by the man who was struck and killed. Hair and pieces of thread were also found under the car on the battery box.

[1] The appellant bases his appeal upon several grounds, the first of which is that the court erred in refusing to strike out the testimony that there were marks on the bumper such as would be made by striking clothing like that worn by the deceased. The ground urged by defendant as the reason for requesting his testimony be stricken at the time of trial was that there was no testimony to show that the bumper was not in the same condition prior to the time of the accident. Such objections run solely to the weight to be attached by the jury to the testimony, and is not a ground for its entire exclusion.

[2, 3] The next objection is somewhat related to the one just mentioned. During the examination of the defendant he was asked by his counsel if he had made an experiment on dusty bumpers with a piece of corduroy, and, this question being answered in the affirmative, he was asked to tell the jury what he had found out about the impression that would be made upon the bumper by corduroy "when it was pressed lightly or when it was struck a heavy blow." An objection was interposed and was sustained on the ground that the proffered testimony was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. We find no error in the ruling. The testimony comes within the class of testimony designated as experiments, which, when shown to have been made under the same conditions as those existing in the case itself, are admitted. The reception or rejection of such testimony lies largely within the discretion of the trial court, with this limitation—that it must be shown that substantially the same conditions existed, and, further, that the evidence shall be of such a character as to aid rather than to confuse the minds of the jurors with collateral matters. People v. Woon Tuck Wo, 120 Cal. 294, 52 P. 833; Western S. B. Co. v. O'Brien, 49 Cal. App. 707, 194 P. 72. It is apparent that the experiment could not well have been conducted under similar conditions with those of the accident without danger of a homicide; furthermore, there was no attempt to show that the surrounding circumstances were similar.

[4] The appellant next complains of the refusal of the trial court to give the following instruction:

"The prosecution must establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew he had struck a person. The guilty knowledge of defendant is as material to the prosecution as any other element of the offense charged, and if you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had such knowledge you must find the defendant not guilty."

Undoubtedly such an instruction would have been proper. It cannot be asserted with any degree of seriousness that it was ever intended that a person should be convicted of failing to stop and give aid to one whom he had no reason whatever to believe had been struck by him. Yet the evidence in this case establishes the fact that the person struck died shortly after the accident; other evidence which was evidently given full weight by the jury was to the effect that the radiator of the automobile was driven back so that it came in contact with the arms of the fan, and that the motor meter was broken. It is beyond comprehension that the defendant did not know that he had struck the deceased. The jury apparently did not believe that he was joking when he made the statements to the two young ladies that he had hit a man on a bicycle. It is beyond credence that they would have convicted had they not believed (as they were fully justified by the evidence) that defendant knew he had struck a human being. As was indicated in People v. Graves, 74 Cal. App. 415, 240 P. 1019, and said in People v. McKee (Cal. App.) 251 P. 675, we cannot appreciate how the failure to give the instruction prejudiced the defendant.

[5] The other reasons assigned for the reversal of the judgment are, in effect, that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict, and particularly in this: That uncertainty exists as to the name of the deceased, and that the circumstantial evidence is consistent with the theory of innocence. From the recital of the facts heretofore, it is patent that the jury were fully justified in coming to the conclusion arrived at by them, and we are not authorized under the circumstances to do other than abide by their determination. In so far as the name is concerned, Officer Lindsey testified that after the injury he discovered the man's name to be Pipkin, which he later corrected to Pupkin. Under the rule announced in People v. Foster, 198 Cal. 112, 243 P. 667, the correct name of the injured person may not be of serious consequence, but, regardless of that rule, we think the name of the deceased was sufficiently supplied in the case at bar.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

84 Cal. App. 325

BEDIG v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(Civ. 3262.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. July 1, 1927.

1. Commerce §8(12, 13)—State laws governing bills of lading and liability of carriers do not affect interstate transportation of grapes governed by Interstate Commerce Act (Interstate Commerce Act [U. S. Comp. St. § 8563 et seq.]; Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8).

Interstate transportation of grapes by carrier is included within Interstate Commerce Act (U. S. Comp. St. § 8563 et seq.), enacted by Congress pursuant to Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, and hence state laws governing effect of bills of lading and fixing liability of transportation company for failure to deliver freight do not apply to such transportation.

2. Commerce §8(1)—Congress has exclusive authority to regulate interstate commerce (Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8).

Under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, Congress has exclusive authority to regulate interstate commerce.

3. Commerce §8(12)—Straight bills of lading and transfers thereof used in interstate commerce are governed by federal law, not local statutes (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8604aaaa, 8604cc, 8604dd, 8604e, 8604ee, 8604kk).

Straight nonnegotiable bills of lading, so marked on their face and used in interstate shipment, are governed by Act Cong. Aug. 29, 1916, §§ 2, 6, 8, 9, 10, 22 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8604aaaa, 8604cc, 8604dd, 8604e, 8604ee, 8604kk), and bills and transfers thereof cannot be governed by local statutes.

4. Commerce ⇨10—Transfer or assignment of bills of lading in interstate commerce is assumed to be authorized where federal law does not prohibit same (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8604aaaa, 8604co, 8604dd, 8604e, 8604ee, 8604kk).

Where Congress under Act Aug. 29, 1916, §§ 2, 6, 8, 9, 10, 22 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8604aaaa, 8604cc, 8604dd, 8604e, 8604ee, 8604kk), has fully legislated on subject of effect of bills of lading used in interstate commerce and has omitted to prohibit transfers or assignments of bills, it will be assumed that transfer or assignment, either by principal or agent, is authorized.

5. Carriers ⇨94(3) — Finding that plaintiff, suing carrier for conversion, did not own property and was not entitled to possession at time of alleged conversion held supported by evidence.

In action by original consignee against carriers for conversion of shipment, finding that plaintiff was not at time of alleged conversion either owner of goods shipped or entitled to its possession held supported by evidence that plaintiff authorized seller to bill cars for other purchasers in plaintiff's name and thereafter assigned bill of lading.

6. Sales ⇨202(6)—Title to grapes sold held intended to pass on delivery of bill of lading, under memorandum not specifying time of delivery and requiring final payment on presentation of bill.

Memorandum of contract to sell grapes reciting that grapes were sold to plaintiff accompanied by deposit, without specifying grapes from any particular field or time of delivery and providing for final payment on presentation of bill of lading to plaintiff, together with surrounding circumstances, showed that parties intended title to grapes to pass on delivery of bills of lading to purchaser.

7. Sales ⇨228—Seller's conduct in delivering duplicate bills of lading to original purchaser and accepting purchase price held not to affect title which had already passed by authorized assignment of bill to another.

Where seller assigned bill of lading and delivered it to customer under authority of original purchaser, conduct of seller in subsequently procuring duplicate copies of bills of lading and delivering them to original purchaser and accepting balance of purchase price for shipment did not affect title which had already passed.

8. Carriers ⇨52(1), 70—"Bill of lading" is receipt for goods by carrier and presumptive evidence of ownership of goods.

"Bill of lading" is in nature of receipt of goods by carrier and is only presumptive evidence of ownership thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Bill of Lading.]

9. Carriers ⇨51—Bill of lading is impeachable for mistake, error, or false statements therein, as between parties.

As between parties to bill of lading, bill is impeachable for mistake, error, or false statements contained therein.

10. Carriers ⇨53—Bill of lading may become contract between carrier and shipper for delivery of goods to owner or consignee.

Bill of lading may become contract between shipper and carrier for transportation and delivery of goods to owner or consignee.

11. Evidence ⇨427—Oral evidence showing seller's authority to bill cars in original consignee's name and transfer bill of lading to others held admissible in consignee's action against carrier for conversion.

In action by original consignee of shipment against carrier for conversion of goods by delivery to another, oral evidence, received solely to establish agency by seller to bill cars on plaintiff's bond and in his name and to transfer bills of lading to others, not offered to vary terms of bill of lading, held competent.

12. Carriers ⇨56—Federal law does not prohibit consignee orally authorizing seller to bill shipment in his name and transfer bill of lading to others.

Parol authority to seller by original consignee to bill cars on bond of original consignee and in his name and to transfer bills of lading to other purchasers held not prohibited by federal law.

13. Pleading ⇨93(2)—Answer admitting sale to plaintiff, suing carrier for conversion, denying other allegations, and alleging ownership of goods by another did not set up inconsistent defenses.

In original consignee's suit against carrier for conversion of shipment by delivery to others, answer admitting agreement to sell goods to plaintiff and denying all other material allegations of complaint, and alleging that another was owner of goods claimed to have been converted did not set up inconsistent defenses.

14. Carriers ⇨94(3)—Finding that plaintiff, suing carrier for conversion, did not employ carrier and authorized transfer of bill of lading to person receiving goods held supported by evidence.

In action by original consignee against carrier for conversion of goods by delivery to another, finding that plaintiff did not employ defendants to transport goods and that property belonged to another, who was authorized by plaintiff to transfer bills of lading to others to whom goods were delivered, held sufficiently supported by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by O. Bedig, doing business as the Bedig Produce Company, against the Southern Pacific Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward Schary, of Fresno, for appellant. Power & McFadzean and J. Thos. Crowe, all of Visalia, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment for defendants, in an action for alleged conversion of two carloads of grapes, shipped from Kings county, over the Southern Pacific Railroad, and originally consigned to the Bedig Produce Company, at Chicago. The defendants deny that plaintiff was the owner of the grapes, and upon the contrary allege that they were owned by the Reliance Fruit Company, and were billed in the name of plaintiff by agreement as a matter of accommodation, and re-consigned to the purchaser, California Growers & Shippers, of Fresno, by H. J. Ellis, as the agent of plaintiff, and delivered to John A. Eck Company, at Chicago.

The plaintiff contends that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence; that the court erred in admitting oral evidence of the authorization for the transfer of the bills of lading; and that inconsistent defenses are not separately stated in the answer.

In part, the court found:

"That the plaintiff did not hire or employ defendants * * * to transport * * * either of the carloads of grapes mentioned in plaintiff's complaint. * * * That it is not true that said carloads of grapes were * * * the property of plaintiff, but on the contrary were the property of said Reliance Fruit Company, composed, owned, operated and managed by said H. J. Ellis, * * * and that said request that said bills of lading should be issued in plaintiff's name, as aforesaid, was made through the said H. J. Ellis, and was made in pursuance of an agreement or understanding theretofore entered into between said Reliance Fruit Company and said H. J. Ellis on the one hand, and said plaintiff on the other. * * * That said H. J. Ellis was authorized and empowered to indorse, transfer, and deliver said bills of lading. * * * That the said Reliance Fruit Company and H. J. Ellis did sell said carloads of grapes to * * * the California Growers & Shippers; and that said H. J. Ellis did indorse, transfer, and deliver said bills of lading to said California Growers & Shippers, which in turn sold said carloads of grapes, while the same were in transit * * * to a certain concern in Chicago known as John A. Eck Company, * * * and said defendants did deliver both of said carloads of grapes at their destination * * * to said John A. Eck Company. * * *

During the season of 1921 the plaintiff was engaged as sole owner, in buying and shipping grapes in the county of Kings, under the firm name of Bedig Produce Company. At the same time H. J. Ellis was also engaged at Fresno in the same business, as sole owner, under the firm name of Reliance Fruit Company. Ellis had a contract to furnish the California Growers & Shippers with 20 carloads of muscat grapes. At the same time he was under contract to supply plaintiff with 10 carloads of the same variety of grapes. The last-mentioned 10 carloads were covered by two written agreements in the following language:

"Fresno, Cal., September 22, 1921.

"This is to certify that the Reliance Fruit Company has sold, and the Bedig Produce Company has bought 5 cars of first crop muscats out of the Lamoore district, at $54 per ton loaded. A deposit of $150 a car is hereby acknowledged—total $750, balance to be paid upon presentation of bill of lading to O. Bedig at Fresno, Cal. [Signed] Reliance Fruit Company, by H. J. Ellis, Agt. Bedig Produce Company, O Bedig."

In fulfillment of these contracts, Ellis obtained the cars of the Southern Pacific Company and loaded them, procuring the bills of lading to be issued in the names of the purchasers. Usually the grapes intended for plaintiff were billed in the name of Bedig Produce Company, as consignor, and directed to the same firm, as consignee, at Chicago. The carloads which were delivered to the California Growers & Shippers were similarly billed with this purchaser's name appearing in the bill of lading as both consignor and consignee. Standard bills of lading were issued by the transportation company in triplicate, the first copy being termed the original, the second was called a duplicate, and the third was a mere memorandum, which was retained by the railroad company. Both the original and duplicate bills of lading were given to Ellis and turned over to the purchaser upon delivery of the grapes when the cars were ready to roll. Plaintiff had nothing to do with the loading or billing of these cars.

The rule of the railroad company required the prepayment of freight charges, but in lieu thereof a bond was required of the shipper guaranteeing the payment of freight before the cars were supplied. The plaintiff had such a bond deposited with the defendant railroad company covering the Lamoore station from which the grapes in question were shipped. Pursuant to an oral agreement the 10 carloads of grapes for which plaintiff contracted were to be loaded and delivered to him at Lamoore at the rate of 1 carload every day, or every other day, at request. In this manner 8 of the cars were loaded and delivered to plaintiff, and are not involved in this action. Although a conflict of evidence exists, there is substantial testimony to the effect that some of the carloads of grapes which were sold to purchasers other than the plaintiff, as a matter of accommodation, were billed in the name of Bedig Produce Company, for the reason that the Reliance Fruit Company had no sufficient bond on file with the railroad company. And it appears that the plaintiff had authorized this practice together with the necessary indorsement of transfer, and the signing of his company name on the bills of lading, when the carloads were delivered or re-consigned in transit. This agreement was not in writing, and evidence of this oral agreement was received over plaintiff's objection.

Mr. Ellis, the owner of the Reliance Fruit Company, testified that after 8 carloads of grapes had been loaded and delivered to the plaintiff, he was told by plaintiff that he was delivering the grapes too fast, and that he wished him to hold the remaining shipments back somewhat; that the last 2 carloads involved in this suit were loaded and billed to the Bedig Produce Company; that the bills of lading were delivered to him (Ellis) by his representative, Alexander, and that on account of said instructions from plaintiff, he (Ellis) had thereupon diverted and transferred the carloads of grapes to the California Growers & Shippers, and had assigned the bills of lading in his own handwriting, indorsing them, "Bedig Produce Company, by H. J. Ellis."

With relation to this authority to load and bill the grapes in the name of Bedig Produce Company and thereafter assign the bills of lading, Mr. Ellis testified:

"I informed Mr. Bedig we had no shipper's bond on the Southern Pacific lines, and would like very much to use his bond for the shipment of fruits over the Southern Pacific in that district for that season. He stated that that would be perfectly all right, as he had no shipments going forth from that section. * * * He told me I could indorse the bills of lading, Bedig Produce Company by myself, and that would be perfectly all right. * * * We loaded the cars and billed the cars under Bedig Produce Company, and presented the bills of lading to Mr. Bedig, and received his check for them as loaded, less deposit. * * * We commenced delivery of the second series immediately after the first 5 were filled, and he came to our office at one time and said that we were shooting them a little too fast for him. * * * We had one particular car of fruit * * * he stated it was too heavy for him to use, and I turned that car over to a broker to dispose of. * * * We were also filling Mr. Satrakian's order at the same time. * * * We supplied him 2 cars on an old Bedig bond, same being indorsed, 'Bedig Produce Company, by myself,' * * * under authority received by Mr. Bedig, and witnessed too."

About October 18th or 20th, Ellis had a conversation with plaintiff about this matter, regarding which he testified:

"Mr. Bedig came in and stated that we had delivered two bills of lading to the California Growers & Shippers, and he didn't want (them) to have any cars whatever billed on his bond. Any one else was perfectly all right, but Mr. Satrakian, the manager, * * * and himself were not on speaking terms, and were not good friends, and consequently they could not have any fruit billed on his bond."

On cross-examination, the following occurred:

"Q. Well, his authority to you was unqualified, was it, that you could take whatever cars he had, consign them by him to himself, have the bill of lading issued to Mr. Bedig, and you could indorse his name on the back of it, by yourself, and it would be perfectly all right? A. Absolutely.

"Q. And you did that? A. Yes.

"Q. In two instances, is that right? A. In three instances."

Two other witnesses, namely, Condry and Augustus, corroborated the claim of Mr. Ellis that plaintiff had authorized the billing of cars in the name and under the bond of plaintiff. After assigning and transferring the bills of lading of the 2 carloads involved in this action, to the California Growers & Shippers, the last-mentioned company re-consigned them and they were forwarded and delivered to John A. Eck Company, at Chicago. Some three days after Ellis delivered the bills of lading of these 2 cars to the California Growers & Shippers, plaintiff came to see Ellis and registered a vigorous protest against this particular sale. The plaintiff was very angry, and in order to placate him Ellis procured a return of the duplicate bills of lading and delivered them to him without telling him that the California Growers & Shippers had already diverted and re-consigned the cars to purchasers at Chicago. Upon delivery of these two duplicate bills of lading, the plaintiff offered, and Ellis accepted, his check for $1,165.55, the balance of the purchase price of the 2 carloads of grapes. Somewhat later, Ellis offered to supply plaintiff with two other carloads of grapes in lieu of these 2 in question, which the plaintiff refused to accept. Ellis also offered to repay plaintiff the entire purchase price of said 2 carloads of grapes, which was likewise refused. After receiving the duplicate bills of lading from Ellis, plaintiff tried to divert and re-consign the 2 carloads of grapes to a purchaser at Jersey City, but was unsuccessful, for they had been delivered under the transferred original bills of lading to John A. Eck Company, at Chicago. Thereupon this action was commenced, and defendants had judgment in the court below.

The chief question involved in this case is whether the defendant railroad company was guilty of conversion for failure to deliver the 2 carloads of grapes at their destination to the original consignee named in the bill of lading. If the title to the grapes had not passed to plaintiff, and Ellis had the authority to bill these cars in the name of plaintiff and transfer the bills of lading as the agent of plaintiff, then the defendant is not liable.

[1,2] Appellant relies upon certain sections of the Civil Code of California, which, it is claimed, governs the effect of bills of lading and fixes the liability of transportation companies for failure to deliver freight. But, since this case clearly involves a transaction governed by interstate commerce, these sections of the state law do not apply. The transportation of grapes by a carrier from Kings county, Cal., to Chicago, Ill., is clearly within the Interstate Commerce Act (U. S. Comp. St. § 8563 et seq.), enacted by Congress pursuant to the provisions of article 1, § 8, of the federal Constitution. 5 R. C. L. 713, § 25; 12 C. J. 22, § 22. Congress has exclusive authority to regulate interstate commerce under the federal Constitution. 1 Const. & Courts, 447, 449, 459; 5 R. C. L. 715, §§ 26, 27; 12 C. J. 86, § 114. "The power of Congress to subject every carrier engaging in interstate commerce to the regulations which it has adopted is undoubted. Such regulations as Congress may lawfully prescribe or authorize, and which may properly be deemed in regulation of interstate commerce, are paramount. * * * The states have no power to present any obstacle or lay any burden upon interstate transportation (except when the) subject-matter is a proper police regulation." 5 R. C. L. 715. "* * * The liability of a common carrier for loss, damage, or injury to an interstate shipment, as well as the validity of a stipulation in the contract of carriage relating to liability, is exclusively a federal question to be determined by reference to the federal statutes and decisions." 12 C. J. 86. "Commerce, which consists of the transportation of persons and property between the states, is a subject of national character, and requires uniformity of regulation. Congress, alone, therefore, can deal with such transportation; its nonaction is a declaration that it shall remain free from the burdens imposed by state legislation. Otherwise there would be no protection against conflicting regulations of different states, each legislating in favor of its own citizens and products, and against those of the other states." 1 Const. & Courts, 449; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Penn., 114 U. S. 204, 5 S. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158; Welton v. Missouri 91 U. S. 280, 23 L. Ed. 347.

[3] The bills of lading involved in this action and the transfer thereof must be governed by the federal laws, and not by our local statutes. They were "straight, nonnegotiable bills of lading," and were so marked upon their face. Having been consigned to specified persons, these bills were what Congress has termed "straight bills," as distinguished from "order bills."

By an act of Congress adopted August 29, 1916, c. 415, Supp. of 1918, Fed. St. Ann. 73, (U. S. Comp. St. § 8604aaa et seq.), it is provided, in part:

"Sec. 2. A bill in which it is stated that the goods are consigned or destined to a specified person is a straight bill." (U. S. Comp. St. § 8604aaaa.)

Section 6 of that act provides:

"A straight bill shall have placed plainly upon its face by the carrier issuing it, 'nonnegotiable,' or 'not negotiable.'" Section 8604acc.

Section 8 holds that:

"A carrier in the absence of some lawful excuse, is bound to deliver goods upon a demand made either by the consignee named in the bill for the goods or, if the bill is an order bill, * * *." etc. Section 8604dd.

Section 9 provides that:

"A carrier is justified, * * * in delivering goods to one who is (a) A person lawfully entitled to the possession of the goods, or (b) The consignee named in a straight bill for the goods, or (c) A person in possession of an order bill, * * *." etc. Section 8604e.

Section 10 provides that:

"Where a carrier delivers goods to one who is not lawfully entitled to the possession of them, the carrier shall be liable to any one having a right of property or possession in the goods if he delivered the goods otherwise than as authorized by subdivisions (b) and (c) of the preceding section. * * *." Section 8604ee.

And section 22 of that act provides that:

"If a bill of lading has been issued by a carrier or on his behalf by an agent * * * the carrier shall be liable to (a) the owner of goods covered by a straight bill subject to existing right of stoppage in transitu, or (b) the holder of an order bill, * * *." etc. Section 8604kk.

[4] It will be observed that there is nothing in the foregoing act which prohibits the transfer or assignment of a bill of lading. Since Congress has fully legislated on the subject of the effect of bills of lading, and has omitted to prohibit such transfers, we must assume that a transfer or assignment of bills of lading, either by a principal or agent is authorized. "Where the power of Congress to regulate is exclusive, the failure of Congress to make express regulations indicates its will that the subject shall be left free from any restrictions or impositions; and any regulations of the subject by the states, except in matters of local concern only, is repugnant to such freedom." 1 Const. & Courts, 459.

From the foregoing portions of the federal bill of lading act it appears that a carrier is justified in delivering goods (a) to the person lawfully entitled thereto, or (b) to the consignee named in a straight bill of lading; and where a carrier delivers goods to one who is not lawfully entitled to them, he is liable only to (a) the owner of the goods, or (b) the one having the right of possession of the goods.

[5] The record in the instant case furnishes substantial evidence to the effect that plaintiff, at the time of the alleged conversion, was neither the owner of the 2 carloads of grapes in question, nor entitled to their possession. Appellant relies upon the fact that having contracted with Ellis for 10 carloads of grapes, since the last 2 cars were actually loaded by the vendor and billed in plaintiff's name, therefore title had passed to him and he thereby became the owner. However, it appears that at the same time Ellis was loading similar grapes at the Lammoore station and billing them to other buyers. He had been informed by plaintiff that he was delivering the cars too fast. Substantial evidence indicates that Ellis was authorized by plaintiff to load and bill cars for other purchasers on plaintiff's bond and thereafter assign the bills of lading. Plaintiff had no part in either the loading or the billing of the cars.

[6, 7] The contracts of purchase were very meager, indeed, and furnish little evidence as to when the parties intended title to the grapes in question to pass. These memorandums recited that "Reliance Fruit Company has sold, and Bedig Produce Company has bought," 10 carloads of grapes. A deposit of $150 per car was made on this purchase. No grapes from any particular field were specified, and no time for delivery was mentioned. The final payment was to be made "upon presentation of the bill of lading to O. Bedig." Considering this memorandum of purchase in connection with all the other facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction, it appears to have been the intent of the parties that the title to the grapes was to pass upon the delivery of the bills of lading to the purchaser. On account of plaintiff's instructions to Ellis that he was delivering the cars too fast, he assigned the bills of lading and delivered them to his other customer, the California Growers & Shippers, who, in turn, sold and reconsigned them to John A. Eck Company, at Chicago. Whatever may have been the motive or purpose of Mr. Ellis in subsequently procuring the duplicate copies of the bills of lading, and delivering them to plaintiff, and accepting the balance of the purchase price for the 2 remaining carloads of grapes which he had agreed to furnish plaintiff his conduct in no way affected the title to the grapes which had already passed.

But appellant contends that oral evidence of the alleged authority of Ellis to transfer the bills of lading from plaintiff to another customer, under the provisions of section 2309 of the Civil Code, was incompetent.

[8-10] Primarily, a bill of lading is in the nature of a receipt for goods on the part of the carrier, and is presumptive evidence, only, of the ownership thereof. As between the parties it is impeachable for mistake, error, or false statements contained therein. 4 Elliott on Railroads [3d Ed.] 497, § 2135; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Citizens' Bank of Little Rock, 87 Ark. 26, 112 S. W. 154; 4 Jones Comm. on Evidence, 3030, § 1652. But a bill of lading may also become a contract between the shipper and the carrier for the transportation and delivery of the goods to the owner or the consignee. 4

Elliott on Railroads, 497, § 2135. The last-mentioned citation contains this statement:

"In so far as it is merely a receipt, either party may explain or contradict it by parol, but as a contract it must be construed according to its terms."

And on page 527 of the last authority cited, it is said:

"Bills of lading are not negotiable at common law as commercial paper. * * * They are, however, assignable, and in a larger than usual sense in so much as their assignment ordinarily constitutes a complete legal delivery of the goods." Dodge v. Meyer, 61 Cal. 405.

[11, 12] The oral evidence objected to in the instant case was not offered to vary the terms of the written bill of lading, nor was it offered to show the authority to sell and convey property, but it was received solely to establish an alleged agency to load and bill cars on plaintiff's bond and in his name, and to transfer the bills of lading therefor. We are of the opinion that parol evidence is competent for this purpose. There is no inhibition of the federal law to this effect. It was held in Kemper Mills, etc., Co. v. Hines, 293 Mo. 88, 103, 239 S. W. 806, that the agency of a consignee authorizing him to receive delivery of goods need not be in writing. It is there said:

"In such case would the consignor's authority to his agent to receive the delivery of the goods be required to be in writing? * * * We think not. We know of nothing in the act of Congress or other statutes so requiring. The fact that the bill of lading itself is required to be in writing does not require the authority of the agent receiving the property thereunder to be in writing."

In 4 Jones Comm. on Evidence, 2847, § 1557, it is said:

"Notwithstanding the rule of law that an agreement reduced to writing may not be contradicted or varied by parol, it is well settled that the principal may show that an agent who made a contract in his own name was acting for him. This proof does not contradict the writing; it only explains the transaction. * * * Agency may always be proved for the purpose of binding the principal, or for the purpose of giving the principal the benefit of the contract."

And in 4 Elliott on Railroads, 505, § 2139, the following language is used:

"Bills of lading are only prima facie evidence between the original parties that the goods have actually come into the carrier's custody, and like other receipts are open to explanation or contradiction by parol."

[13] Nor does the answer set up inconsistent defenses. After admitting the agreement to sell plaintiff 10 carloads of muscat grapes, defendants categorically deny all the other material allegations of the complaint, and allege that the Reliance Fruit Company, and not the plaintiff, was the owner of the particular carloads of grapes involved in this action.

[14] The findings are sufficiently supported by the evidence, and no reversible error appears in the record. For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

Will and codicils are to be read together as constituting one document under Civ. Code, §§ 1320, 1321, providing that testamentary instruments are to be taken together and all parts construed in relation to each other.

2. Wills ⇨476—"In consequence of" referring to death of executor held equivalent to "in event of," so that codicil naming substitute executor was inoperative.

Provision in codicil that "in consequence of" the death of an executor named in the will another should be executor held equivalent to provision "in the event of" the named executor's death, so that letters would issue to the originally named executor, and the provision be inoperative.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Application by M. C. Chapman and others for the probate of the will of Elizabeth Churchill Spaulding, deceased. From a decree admitting the will to probate appointing the named applicant as one of the executors and declaring a codicil to be inoperative, John R. Montgomery, named as substitute executor in the codicil, appeals. Affirmed.

John Perry Wood, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Eugene Daney, of San Diego, and Eugene E. Trefethen, of Oakland, for respondent.

John J. Barrett, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

CRAIG, J. This case comes before us upon a stipulated record. The trial court decreed that the codicil of April 12, 1921, was inoperative and of no effect, and ordered the issuance of letters testamentary to Union Trust Company and respondent Chapman, which was according to the direction of the testatrix, as stated in the will. The codicil was dated the same day as the will. It is admitted that it was holographic, and that it provided as follows:

"I hereby make this codicil to my last will and testament April 12th, 1921. In consequence of the death of M. C. Chapman named as executor and trustee under said will, I hereby nominate, appoint and substitute John R. Montgomery in his place and stead as such executor and trustee, with the same power and authority by me conferred in my said will upon M. C. Chapman as such executor and trustee and likewise without bonds. Elizabeth Churchill Spaulding."

The parties stipulated that upon the hearing for probate of the will and codicils the trial court took no evidence, and that none was offered, in support of the finding that the codicil above quoted was inoperative and of no effect, except to show that Chapman was alive at the time the first codicil was made and was one of the petitioners for the probate of the will. The findings recite, in part as follows:

"The court further finds that both M. C. Chapman and John R. Montgomery were alive at the time of the making of each of the said instruments, and are alive at this time; that each is competent to act as executor or trustee; and that each consents to act as such. The evidence, however, that M. C. Chapman was alive when said instruments were executed was received over the objection of counsel for John R. Montgomery that such evidence was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and an attempt to vary the terms of the will of said decedent.

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said instruments are and constitute the last will and testament of said decedent, and that the same be, and hereby are, admitted to probate as the last will and testament of said decedent, but that the holographic codicil dated April 12, 1921, is inoperative and of no effect upon the ground and for the reason, solely and not otherwise, that said M. C. Chapman therein mentioned was, upon the date said codicil was made, and still is, living, and one of the petitioners herein as aforesaid, and that said codicil by its terms is conditional on the death of M. C. Chapman."

Appellant contends that under the foregoing codicil he should have been appointed executor of the estate of said deceased. Upon this appeal the finding above set forth is assailed, as is also the court's construction of the provision that "In consequence of the death of M. C. Chapman * * * I hereby nominate, appoint and substitute John R. Montgomery in his place and stead," and this is the sole question presented for our determination.

[1, 2] It is argued by appellant that his appointment as executor was not made conditional upon the death of respondent, but that the language of the codicil is clear and unambiguous and that it merely states the reason or occasion for making it; also, that the expression in controversy cannot be interpreted in the sense that appellant should be appointed "in the event of the death of M. C. Chapman." Both sides agree that standing alone the expression "In consequence of" means because of, or by reason of, and this we will assume to be true. Although the testatrix said, by reason of the death of M. C. Chapman, etc., John R. Montgomery should be substituted, in that connection, using the words, "I hereby nominate appoint and substitute John R. Montgomery," as we understand the import of this language she did not intend to state that Chapman's death had then occurred. In effect she merely provided that whenever his death might occur, if before the probating of the will and the taking effect of the other provisions therein contained in that behalf, Montgomery should be appointed executor in Chapman's place and stead. Such a consequence she directed should follow by reason of and as a result of the latter's death. But he had not died when the will was offered for probate, and so no occasion arose for putting into effect the codicil dated April 12, 1921. The will and both codicils are to be read together and as constituting one document. Estate of Ladd, 94 Cal. 670, 30 P. 99; Civ. Code, §§ 1320, 1321. The second codicil was made more than three years after the one here in dispute. The testatrix, of course, knew at the time the last codicil was executed that Chapman's death had not occurred, for he attested that instrument as a witness. It is unthinkable that the language employed should be understood as stating that M. C. Chapman had died when, in republishing the entire will in 1924, the testatrix did so in the presence of Chapman himself, who signed as a witness at her request and in her presence. Under these circumstances such a construction would be illogical in the extreme. On the other hand, to interpret the words "in consequence of," used in this context, to mean "in the event of," comports with reason as well as giving effect to the true meaning of the language employed by the testatrix.

Interpreting the words of the codicil as we have, it becomes unnecessary to consider the discussion in the briefs upon the interesting question which would be presented were we to adopt the construction contended for by appellant that the language in question amounts to a statement that M. C. Chapman's death had occurred, and that by reason thereof the testatrix then appointed Montgomery as executor. Of course, the question would then arise as to whether or not such a statement, constituting as it would an erroneous recital of a nonexistent fact as a reason for an unconditional devise, would be regarded as conditional when encountered in a codicil, although it would be absolute if found in the original will. But we are not permitted to pass upon this question, for we hold that not only was it the intention of the testatrix to appoint Montgomery executor solely in the event that Chapman's death might occur before that of the testatrix and the probating of the will, but that such is the plain meaning expressed by the words of the codicil itself when taken in conjunction with the circumstances, no doubt considered by the trial court, that M. C. Chapman must have been known to the testatrix to have been alive in 1924, because at that time, in her presence, he witnessed the republication of her will.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

GREER v. LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB. (Civ. 4480.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 30, 1927.

Rehearing Denied, with Modifications, July 29, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1927.

1. Innkeepers ⇐11(1)—Detached portion of envelope in which club member deposited valuables held "receipt" within statute limiting liability of lodging house keeper (Civ. Code, § 1860; Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3).

Detached portion of envelope in which club member deposited valuables containing number identifying it with envelope, as supplemented by printed matter on the envelope directing the manner of its use, held a "receipt" within meaning of Civ. Code, § 1860, limiting liability of lodging house keeper for valuables deposited, "unless he shall have given a receipt in writing therefor," particularly in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3, relating to conclusive presumptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Receipt.]

2. Appeal and error ⇐1012(1)—Appellate court will not weigh evidence either to justify or discredit trial court's findings.

Appellate court will not attempt to weigh evidence with a view either to justify or discredit findings of trial court.

3. Clubs ⇐5—Club accepting deposit of valuables by member for safekeeping, without requiring statement of value, and giving receipt, held liable as bailee for hire for full amount of actual value (Civ. Code, § 1840).

Where club, as part of service rendered its members, received deposit of valuables by club member without requiring any statement by member of value of the deposit, and gave receipt, it was liable as a bailee for hire for full amount of such deposit, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 1840, providing "liability of a depository for negligence cannot exceed the amount which he is informed by the depositor, or has reason to suppose, the thing deposited to be worth."

4. Clubs ⇨12—Finding that club was liable as lodging house keeper for deposit of valuables by member held not inconsistent with finding that it was liable as bailee for hire.

Finding that club accepting deposit of valuables by member for safekeeping was liable as a lodging house keeper held not inconsistent with finding that it was liable as a bailee for hire.

5. Clubs ⇨12—Club, failing to return valuables deposited by member for safekeeping, has burden of showing absence of negligence.

Club, failing to return to member his valuables deposited for safekeeping, has burden of showing that negligence cannot fairly be imputed to it.

6. Clubs ⇨12—Evidence held to warrant finding of negligence of club in keeping member's valuables deposited for safekeeping.

In member's action against club for value of package deposited for safekeeping, and not returned, evidence held sufficient to warrant finding of negligence on part of club.

7. Clubs ⇨12—Evidence held insufficient to show negligence of club member in making deposit of valuables for safekeeping.

In member's action against club for value of package deposited for safekeeping, and not returned, evidence held insufficient to show negligence on part of plaintiff in making deposit.

8. Clubs ⇨12—Club, failing to return member's valuables deposited for safekeeping, is liable for interest from date of demand (Civ. Code, § 3287).

Under Civ. Code, § 3287, club liable to member for loss of valuables deposited for safekeeping is liable for interest from date of demand for return of deposit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by P. H. Greer against the Los Angeles Athletic Club. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

O'Melveny, Millikin, Tuller & MacNeil, Sayre MacNeil, and Paul E. Schwab, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Neil S. McCarthy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the Los Angeles Athletic Club from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for damages for failure to return to plaintiff a package deposited with the defendant. Judgment was for the sum of $1,253.83, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum. The defendant is a social organization used by the members and their guests. In addition to the ordinary facilities furnished by it, the club maintained sleeping rooms, which were rented to members of the club, for which a consideration in addition to the regular dues of the club was required. The plaintiff was a member in good standing in the club, and had resided in one of the rooms of the club from the early part of 1919 until after the incident resulting in this litigation. Defendant also kept a fireproof safe in the clerk's office on the main floor for the safekeeping of packages deposited therein by lodgers or other members of the club, for which no special charge was made.

The court found in favor of the plaintiff, and bases its conclusion in that regard upon: (1) The fact that the defendant was a lodging house keeper; and (2) that in accepting the package to be deposited in its safe it was a bailee for hire. The appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed primarily upon two specifications: (1) That appellant, as a lodging house keeper, was not liable for more than $250, not conceding, however, that it was liable for anything; (2) if it was a bailee for hire, the liability would be limited to the amount the defendant was informed by the depositor was contained in the deposit package, or what it had reason to suppose the deposit to be worth, and that in no event could the liability exceed the sum of $250.

Taken in the order in which they have been above named, the defendant contends that, since the relationship between the plaintiff and defendant was that of lodger and lodging house keeper, and since the defendant kept a fireproof safe, and gave notice to plaintiff, as contemplated in section 1860 of the Civil Code, it follows that the liability of the defendant, if any, is governed by that section which provides:

"If an innkeeper, hotel keeper, boarding house or lodging house keeper, keeps a fireproof safe and gives notice to a guest, boarder or lodger, either personally or by putting up a printed notice in a prominent place in the office or the room occupied by the guest, boarder, or lodger, that he keeps such a safe and will not be liable for money, jewelry, documents, furs, fur coats and fur garments, or other articles of unusual value and small compass, unless placed therein, he is not liable, except so far as his own acts shall contribute thereto, for any loss of or injury to such articles, if not deposited with him to be placed therein, nor in any case for more than the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars for any or all such property of any individual guest, boarder, or lodger, unless he shall have given a receipt in writing therefor to such guest, boarder or lodger."

Appellant insists that no receipt was given to respondent.

[1] Many cases, and definitions by text-writers and lexicographers, are cited to determine the meaning of the word "receipt," as used in the foregoing section of the Code, all of which in our judgment are fully answered and disposed of by supplementing the detached portion of the package envelope hereinafter referred to, with the printed matter remaining on said envelope and being part thereof, printed on the body thereof in the words following:

"Directions for Using this Envelope. After the depositor has placed his money or valuables in the envelope and sealed it, have him sign his name in full on check A, and then tear off and give him check B, to keep as a receipt. When he calls for his deposit, cause him to put his signature on check B, and then compare it with that on check A; if the result is satisfactory, deliver the envelope, and date and file the two checks as receipts."

The portion of the paper referred to above was delivered to the defendant at the time of making his deposit and was in words and figures as follows:

"Check B. Date ———, 192—, Los Angeles Athletic Club. No. 304. Los Angeles, Calif. Depositor is to sign here only when he withdraws his deposit ———. Deliverable to the owner only."

The evidence shows that at the time the plaintiff deposited his package with one of the clerks in the office of the defendant there was delivered to him the above slip of paper which was detached from the envelope into which the deposit was placed.

Section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure, subdivision 3, reads as follows:

"The following presumptions, and no others, are deemed conclusive: * * * 3. Whenever a party has, by his own declaration, act, or omission, intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief, he cannot, in any litigation arising out of such declaration, act, or omission, be permitted to falsify it."

This writing was regarded and considered as a receipt by all parties to the action. The directors evidently so considered it when they authorized and directed the preparation of the envelope to be used by persons depositing money or valuables in its safe. The plaintiff and the employees of the club constantly in their testimony referred to the writing as a receipt. The portion of the envelope taken by the defendant bore a duplicate number corresponding to the number on the portion of the deposit envelope retained by the officers of the club, and when returned, signed and dated by the depositor, entitled him to the envelope and its contents. Nothing on the envelope requires the depositor to state the amount of money or the value and character of valuables, if such there were. This presumably was the intention of the officers of the club, and it was probably their purpose for good reasons not to have disclosed to its employees the amount or value of the contents of these deposit packages. They evidently regarded it as unnecessary, and probably concluded that it would avoid temptation. Certainly, it would have served no good purpose to have disclosed to the clerk or clerks at the desk the contents and value of packages, as it is not disclosed in the record that they or any of them were or was clothed with any discretionary powers to refuse a package because in amount or value it was in excess of any stipulated limitation, and it cannot fairly be said, and the record does not disclose the fact to be, that such information, had it been given, would have caused the employees or officers of the club to exercise any greater degree of care in its safekeeping. The receipt as given was such as a matter of law. A receipt in its common use is nothing more than a bare acknowledgment of having received something. In the case of California Packers Co. v. Merritt Fruit Co., 6 Cal. App. 507, 510, 92 P. 509, 510, this court says:

"It was as to defendant a mere receipt for money. The fact that it stated that the money received was in full of all claims and demands must be held to mean the claims and demands for which the money was given in satisfaction. A receipt may always be explained, and even the amount of money stated in the receipt to have been paid may be shown by parol evidence to have been a different sum. If the amount or sum mentioned in the receipt may be contradicted by parol, there is no reason why the words, 'All claims and demands,' may not also be contradicted or explained. One word in a receipt is no more sacred than another. A receipt is not intended to be an exclusive memorial, and for this reason the authorities all hold that the facts may be shown. A receipt is only a written admission of a transaction independently existing, and, like other admissions, it is not conclusive. It is evidence—and often very convincing evidence—against the party who gives it, but it is not conclusive."

In Hickox v. Naugatuck R. R. Co., 31 Conn. 281, 83 Am. Dec. 143, the court says:

"The check is in the nature of a receipt, and may be given and received at any time when the convenience and custom of the company dictate. It is not the contract, but evidence of the ownership, delivery and identity of the baggage."

There are many other cases holding to the same effect. Greenleaf on Evidence, § 305, says:

"In regard to receipts, it is to be noted that they may be either mere acknowledgments of payments or delivery, or they may also contain a contract to do something in relation to the thing delivered. In the former case, and so far as the receipt goes only to acknowledge payment or delivery, it is merely prima facie evidence of the fact and not conclusive, and therefore the fact which it recites may be contradicted by oral testimony."

In the Interstate Commerce Act, § 20k (4 Fed. Stats. Ann. 506 [U. S. Comp. St. § 8640a]) the following language appears:

"That any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company subject to the provisions of this act receiving property for transportation from a point in one state or territory or the District of Columbia to a point in another state, territory, District of Columbia, or from any point in the United States to a point in an adjacent foreign country shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property. * * *

In commenting upon this language the Supreme Court of the United States in Boston & Maine R. R. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 121, 34 S. Ct. 526, 532, 58 L. Ed. 868, 879 (L. R. A. 1915B, 450, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593), speaks as follows:

"We do not think the requirement of the Carmack Amendment, that a railway company receiving property for transportation in interstate commerce shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, required other receipts than baggage checks, which it is shown were issued when the baggage was received in this case. When the amendment was passed Congress well knew that baggage was not carried upon bills of lading, and that carriers had been accustomed to issue checks upon receipt of baggage. We do not think it was intended to require a departure from this practice when the matter was placed under regulation by schedules filed and subject to change for unreasonableness upon application to the commission. Such checks are receipts, and there is no special requirement in the statute as to their form."

It is self-evident that a receipt of the character here disclosed would not be required to measure up to the formalities and specifications of a warehouse receipt. In such receipts a description is essential in order that the negotiable character of the instrument may be effectuated. They are more than receipts—they are contracts. In view of the printed matter on the package envelope and the function the slip of paper was designed to accomplish, we are strongly of the opinion that, had it, when given to the defendant, borne simply the duplicate number with a direction to return the same and identify it as required by the package envelope, it would have measured up to all of the requirements of a receipt.

[2] There is some discussion that the deposit was returned and some doubt expressed as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the trial court's finding as to the amount of the deposit. The trial court's conclusions on both of these matters is adverse to the appellant. It found that the package had never been returned to the plaintiff and that the amount contained in the package was a definite and specific sum, to wit, $1,253.80. As to the first contention, the evidence is contradictory, and as to the second point the contention is largely based on inference as against the direct and positive testimony of the plaintiff together with certain corroborative circumstances. Under such circumstances the rule is too well settled to warrant discussion that the appellate court will not attempt to weigh the evidence with a view either to justifying or discrediting the findings of the trial court.

[3, 4] It is next contended by the defendant that, if it is a bailee for hire instead of a lodging house keeper, the liability is limited to the amount the defendant was informed by the depositor or had reason to suppose the deposit to be worth, and in any event not in excess of the sum of $250. In support of this position, section 1840 of the Civil Code is quoted, as follows: "The liability of a depositor for negligence cannot exceed the amount which he is informed by the depositor, or has reason to suppose, the thing deposited to be worth," it being the defendant's contention that there was no evidence whatever that the defendant was informed by the plaintiff or any one, at the time of the deposit, of the amount contained in the package, nor is there any evidence from which it can be concluded that the defendant had reason to suppose that the package was worth more than $200 or $250, and that therefore the finding of the trial court that the defendant knew the package contained a large amount of money, and that the defendant had reason to suppose it contained as much as $1,253.80, is not sustained by the evidence. Furthermore, it is the contention of the appellant that, the court having found that it was a lodging house keeper, the contention of the plaintiff that it was a bailee for hire is inconsistent with such finding. We are unable to agree with this contention. The plaintiff was a member of the club, and incidentally a roomer in the clubhouse. In either of these capacities he was entitled to all the privileges and benefits it afforded. He was not required, in making his safety deposit, to indicate in what capacity he was acting, and we are unable to see any inconsistency in invoking every instrumentality recognized by law in asserting his right to recover his property. As a member of the club, the law afforded him the right to recover as a bailor. As a renter of a room, it afforded him the right to recover as a pay guest in a lodging house. If he fails in one and makes good in another he has established a cause of action. If he succeeds in establishing both he has likewise accomplished the single purpose of recovering the property he has deposited. It may be stated that there was no special charge for the service rendered by the club to its members in keeping a safe for the safekeeping of the valuables and money belonging to its members. This service, if paid for at all, was a portion of the service for which the members paid dues to the club, and in this connection the respondent calls attention to the fact that the superintendent of the club testified that the acceptance of the packages and the caring for them was a part of the service which was rendered to the members of the club in consideration of the dues paid by them. Mr. Hall, the assistant secretary, testified that this depositary service was a part of the service rendered to members, partly paid for from dues, and on cross-examination he testified:

"The club has not given the members everything that they have wanted. It has given them what it has thought would be necessary to run a decent club."

The superintendent testified to the same effect. It is further evident from a direction printed on the back of the deposit envelope as follows:

"Below are directions for using this envelope. After the depositor has placed his money or valuables in the envelope and sealed it, have him sign his name in full on check A and then tear off and give him check B to keep as a receipt."

It is apparent, therefore, that a part of the service to be rendered by the club in consideration of the dues of the members was caring for money and valuables when deposited with it in the proper manner and in failing to provide any blank or space on the envelope where the character or amount of the deposit was to be designated, it is apparent that it was the intention of the club officers to receive such amounts and such valuables as a member might in his discretion see fit to deposit. This it no doubt had a right to do, and in doing so assumed the responsibilities necessarily consequent thereon. In the case of Cussen v. Southern California Savings Bank, 133 Cal. 534, 65 P. 1099, 85 Am. St. Rep. 221, the Supreme Court of this state, having discussed the conduct and liability of depositaries for hire in a manner that is very enlightening in determining the questions involved in this appeal, said:

"It was required to use that degree of care in the protection of this property from thieves without and thieves within, and it was required to use that same degree of care in the selection of its employees, and in the supervision of their conduct after they were employed. It is said in Preston v. Prather, 137 U. S. 604 [11 S. Ct. 162, 34 L. Ed. 788]: 'Persons, therefore, depositing valuable articles with them expect that such measures will be taken as will ordinarily secure the property from burglars outside and from thieves within, * * * and also that they will employ fit men, both in ability and integrity, for the discharge of their duties, and remove those employed whenever found wanting in either of these particulars. An omission of such measures would in most cases be deemed a culpable negligence so gross as to amount to a breach of good faith, and constitute a fraud upon the depositor.' See also Gray v. Merriam, 148 Ill. 179, 190 [35 N. E. 810, 32 L. R. A. 769, 39 Am. St. Rep. 172]. In this case it was established by plaintiff's evidence that his money was abstracted from the vaults of defendant while on deposit. Under these circumstances the burden was cast upon defendant of showing that it used proper care in the safekeeping of the plaintiff's property. In Lockwood v. Manhattan Storage Co., 28 App. Div. 63, 50 N. Y. S. 954 [974], it is said: 'The ordinary rule established by numerous authorities is, that when plaintiff has proved the deposit of his goods, and a failure of the defendant to produce the same on demand, he has established a prima facie case, and the defendant must excuse his failure to produce, by bringing himself within one of the recognized exceptions.' See, also, Clafin v. Meyer, 75 N. Y. 262 [31 Am. Rep. 467]. * * * Section 1840 of the Civil Code declares: 'The liability of a depository for negligence cannot exceed the amount which he is informed by the depositor, or has reason to suppose, the thing deposited to be worth.' Defendant relies upon this section of the Code, but in its provisions we see no relief for it. Here, plaintiff did not inform defendant as to the value of the deposit. Neither does defendant claim that it had reason to suppose the thing deposited was of less value than it was in fact. Indeed, the very manner of conducting this somewhat peculiar line of business contemplates that the bailee shall not know the value of the thing deposited. In substance, he closes his eye to the value and character of the deposit, and this fact seems to be one of the controlling features in the transaction of this character of business. Under the circumstances, it is apparent that section 1840 of the Civil Code can have no application to the facts of this case."

In the case of Sulpho-Saline Bath Co. v. Allen, 66 Neb. 295, 92 N. W. 354, 1 Ann. Cas. 21, the Supreme Court of Nebraska says:

"In Woodruff v. Painter, 150 Pa. St. 91 [24 A. 621], 16 L. R. A. 451 [30 Am. St. Rep. 786], a retail dealer in clothing was sued for the value of a watch which, at the direction of a clerk, he had placed in a drawer while trying on a suit of clothes. The court said (page 452): 'When the defendants opened a retail clothing store they thereby invited the public to come into their place of business and purchase clothing in the usual manner; and when they extended this invitation they assumed some duty to the people who should respond to it. Even the householder who permits the use of a path leading to his house is deemed to hold out an invitation to all people who have any reasonable ground for coming thither to pass along his pathway, and is therefore held responsible for neglecting to fence off dangerous places. 1 Addison, Torts, 203. So, too, a shopkeeper is liable for neglect on leaving a trap-door open without any protection by which his customers receive injury. Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Co., 11 Ad. & El. 223, 39 E. C. L. 54. In like manner it cannot be doubted that, if these defendants had maintained or permitted a danger of any kind in their store, and by reason of it the plaintiff had sustained bodily injury, they would have been answerable to him for the consequences. In such case they would be said to have been guilty of negligence—guilty of a neglect of duty which they owed to the customer; but I apprehend that the duty neglected would arise from an implied contract that, if customers would come to their store, no harm that could reasonably be averted should overtake them, and the consideration for such promise would be the chance of profits from their patronage. * * * The principles which govern that relation are briefly and clearly stated by Judge Story, in his work on Bailments, thus: 'When the bailment is for the benefit of the bailor, the law requires only slight diligence on the part of the bailee, and of course makes him answerable only for gross neglect. When the bailment is for the sole benefit of the bailee, the law requires great diligence on the part of the bailee, and makes him responsible for slight neglect. * * * Manifestly the bailment, in a case like the present, is of the latter class, for, while the customer pays nothing directly, or eo nomine, for the safe-keeping of his effects, the dealer receives his recompense in the profits of the trade of which the bailment is a necessary incident. It was upon this principle that Lord Holt said, in Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 473, 483, an action was sustainable against an innkeeper for the loss of a guest's goods, and that the Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment of the court of common pleas of the city of New York in Bunnell v. Stern [122 N. Y. 539, 25 N. E. 910, 10 L. R. A. 481, 19 Am. St. Rep. 519], supra.'"

The court further says:

"Having received the property as bailee, the burden was on the defendant alone to show that it was lost, if such was the case, without negligence upon its part."

[5, 6] These cases are clear expressions of the law applicable to the situation developed in the instant case where any depositary accepts property as incidental to services rendered by the depositary, holding that the relationship between the parties is one of mutual benefit, and the depositary is a bailee for hire. In its pleadings the plaintiff raises no issue of negligence; that issue having for the first time been injected into the case by the answer of the defendant. The logic of the foregoing cases under such circumstances requires the defendant to assume the burden, having failed to return to the plaintiff his package, of showing that negligence may not be fairly imputed to it. The case of Perera v. Panama-Pacific Int. Exposition Co., 179 Cal. 63, 175 P. 454, cited by appellant, is readily distinguished from the case at bar and the cases hereinbefore discussed. In that case it is conceded by the plaintiff that he must establish the negligence of the defendant. The defendant received jewelry from the plaintiff in locked showcases furnished by the plaintiff which defendant was to sell for the plaintiff on a commission. Plaintiff's representatives at all times knew of the conditions under which the property was being cared for. The locks on the showcases were not of the accepted type, and were easily opened. The case has more the aspect of a joint venture than a bailment for hire. The facts are so entirely divergent from the facts in the instant case as to serve no purpose in the solution of the problem. There is no satisfactory evidence either way as to the knowledge of the club or as to its supposition touching the amount of money likely to be deposited by the plaintiff. There is evidence in the record to the effect that the plaintiff was a business man in the city of Los Angeles; that during the year preceding this transaction his firm had done business to the extent of over $7,000,000, and that he himself had an allowance of $30,000 per year as president of the corporation, and that he frequently carried in excess of $1,000 upon his person, and had upon a previous occasion deposited a large amount of money with the club. This issue was tendered by the defendant, and no evidence was offered in support of the issue so tendered. The conduct of the defendant in failing to require any specification on the deposit envelope may fairly be construed to mean that a member might deposit any amount or value at his discretion. When it failed to return the deposit, it was prima facie guilty of negligence, and it at once devolved upon the defendant to meet the issue. In the absence of any showing in this regard, and in the absence of any limitation on deposits, we are not prepared to say that from all the circumstances of the case and the presumptive knowledge attributable to the officers of the club the court was not justified in finding that the defendant knew that plaintiff deposited a large amount of money in said package, or had reason to suppose that the amount of said deposit was as much as claimed by respondent. There is evidence in the record independent of what has been heretofore said upon which a finding of defendant's negligence may fairly be predicated. The club itself kept from $1,000 to $3,000 in cash in a safety box in the safe, which the evidence discloses was always kept locked. On the other hand, the compartments in which the safety deposits were kept were generally open, as was the door to the safe. The degree of care which is necessary to avoid the imputation of bad faith is estimated by the degree of care which the depositary would use toward its own property of a similar kind. In 4 A. L. R. 1215, note, it is said:

"Presumptions Arising from Fact that Depositary Used the same Care as to his own Property. The degree of care which is necessary to avoid the imputation of bad faith is estimated by the carefulness which the depositary uses toward his own property of a similar kind. Lloyd v. West Branch Bank (1850) 15 Pa. 172, 53 Am. Dec. 583, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 574; Ray v. Bank of Kentucky (1874) 10 Bush (Ky.) 344. It will be difficult to presume fraud where the bailee was equally a loser with the bailor. McLean v. Rutherford (1843) 8 Mo. 109. A gratuitous bailee is bound to the exercise of good faith; and if he keeps the goods intrusted to him with less care than he keeps his own of the same kind, this is a circumstance from which a jury might well infer a want of good faith; but the keeping of them as his own is an argument of his honesty. Griffith v. Zipperwick (1876) 23 Ohio St. 388, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 545. * * * It is not enough that a bailee takes the same care of the property bailed as he does of his own, the conduct of men of common sense, as a class, in the care of their own property, being the standard. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Guilmartin (1893) 93 Ga. 503, 21 S. E. 55, 44 Am. St. Rep. 182."

[7] In this behalf the appellant contends that the respondent was negligent, and in support of this contention quotes from the testimony of respondent as follows:

"The clerk then tore off the receipt and handed it to me, took the envelope, and I saw him place it in the large compartment in the safe. It was not locked, and the safe doors were open. There was another door to this compartment within the large safe. The large safe doors were opened. I do not think that I ever saw them closed. The large safe doors were always open when I went to the club, but the small doors were closed."

It would seem that this testimony fails to support the contention of the appellant. No one questions the fact that these safety packages were deposited in the small compartments in the safe, and, of course, the plaintiff would have no means of knowing whether they were or were not locked. He did know, apparently, that the large door to the safe was left open during business hours, and during the time that he was in and about the club. In the case of Dieterle v. Bekin, 143 Cal. 683, 77 P. 664, the plaintiff pleaded the delivery of property to defendant for storage, a demand for possession, and the refusal to comply with the demand. Defendant, in addition to the denials, pleaded that the property was without fault or negligence of the defendant destroyed by fire. The trial court found that the goods were destroyed by fire, the origin of which was unknown, and gave judgment for the defendant, which was reversed on appeal. In that case the court said:

"The plaintiffs made out their case when they established to the satisfaction of the court the allegations of their complaint. It was then for the defendant to establish the allegations of his affirmative defense if he could do so. The court has found that he was grossly negligent in the matter of exposing the property to loss by fire, and that the property was destroyed by fire of an unknown origin. The facts found suggest at least a probability that the fire came from the same source from which emanated the 'more than ordinary risk' under which the property was so negligently placed by the defendant. Under the circumstances disclosed by the findings, the burden which the defendant had assumed in his affirmative defense was upon him to satisfy the court that the fire did not come from this source."

This principle is further elucidated in the case of Wilson v. California, etc., R. R. Co., 94 Cal. 166, 172, 29 P. 861, 864 (17 L. R. A. 685), where the Supreme Court says:

"Had the defendant been sued as a tort-feasor, and charged in the complaint with negligence whereby plaintiff's goods were destroyed by fire, the burden of proving the alleged negligence would have been upon the plaintiff (Wilson v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 62 Cal. 171); but not so where, as in this case, the action is upon the carrier's contract to carry and deliver goods; the alleged breach being a failure to carry and deliver according to the contract, and the defense being that the goods were destroyed by fire, without the carelessness or negligence of the defendant. As a general rule, the burden is on the defendant to prove new matter alleged as a defense (Osborn v. Hendrickson, 8 Cal. 31; Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 22 [70 Am. Dec. 692]; Kuhland v. Sedgwick, 17 Cal. 124; Bryan v. Maume, 28 Cal. 244; Mulford v. Estudillo, 32 Cal. 136), even though it requires the proof of a negative. 'It makes no difference, therefore, whether the actor is plaintiff or defendant, so far as concerns the burden of proof. If he undertake to make a case, whether affirmative or negative, this case must be made out by him, or judgment must go against him. Hence it may be stated, as a test admitting of universal application, that whether the proposition be affirmative or negative, the party against whom judgment would be given as to a particular issue, supposing no proof be offered on either side, has on him, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, the burden of proof, which he must satisfactorily sustain. If there is a case made out against a defendant, on which, if the plaintiff should close, a judgment would be entered against the defendant, then the defendant has on him the burden of proving a case by which the plaintiff's case will be defeated.' Wharton on Evidence, § 357, and authorities cited."

[8] There is some contention that the property was stolen. No evidence was offered from which a finding to that effect could be sustained. The further disposition of this property after leaving the clerk's hands has never been accounted for. The trial court awarded to the plaintiff interest from the date of the demand for the return of the deposit. Appellant contends that, in awarding damages for the amount deposited the court exhausted its power to award anything beyond that amount. This matter appears to be clearly covered by section 3287 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"Person Entitled to Recover Damages May Recover Interest Thereon. Every person who is entitled to recover damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day, except during such time as the debtor is prevented by law, or by the act of the creditor, from paying the debt."

No doubt a different rule applies in replevin cases where damages are allowed for the value and wrongful detention. The cases cited by appellant are to this effect, and, as we view the matter, have no application to the situation involved in this litigation.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing points out that there is an erroneous statement in the opinion in this cause, and it is manifest that the assertion is correct. In order to cure the inadvertence through which the erroneous statement was made, the opinion is now corrected by striking therefrom the following:

"No one questions the fact that these safety packages were deposited in the small compartments in the safe, and of course the plaintiff would have no means of knowing whether they were or were not locked. He did know, apparently, that the large door to the safe was left open during business hours, and during the time that he was in and about the club."

We think the erroneous statement contained in the opinion does not affect the merits of the appeal.

Rehearing denied.

RIDDLE v. ETLING. (Civ. 3020.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 15, 1927.

1. Chattel mortgages ⇨278—Testimony held sufficient to support finding as to amount of unsecured indebtedness, in suit to foreclose chattel mortgage.

In action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, plaintiff's testimony to items of defendant's unsecured indebtedness aggregating greater sum than that found by court held sufficient to support finding that unsecured indebtedness was certain sum.

2. Payment ⇨39(6)—Chattel mortgagee receiving proceeds of unauthorized sale of mortgaged property may apply proceeds to unsecured indebtedness.

Where property covered by chattel mortgage was sold without mortgagee's knowledge, and proceeds paid to mortgagee, she was not required, without direction by mortgagor, to apply them to satisfaction of note secured by mortgage rather than to unsecured indebtedness.

3. Chattel mortgages ⇨218—Mortgagee need not bring action to recover mortgaged property after unauthorized sale.

Where property covered by chattel mortgage is sold without authority of mortgagee, she is not required to bring action for recovery of property.

4. Chattel mortgages ⇨227—Chattel mortgagee has no lien on money received by mortgagor in unauthorized sale of mortgaged property.

Where property covered by chattel mortgage was sold without authority of mortgagee, she had no lien on money in mortgagor's hands received from buyer of such property.

5. Chattel mortgages ⇨227—Chattel mortgagee has no lien on proceeds of sale of mortgaged property, where sale is authorized or ratified.

Where chattel mortgagee authorizes or ratifies sale of mortgaged property by mortgagor, lien on property is extinguished and is not transferred to proceeds in hands of mortgagor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Laura Riddle against C. W. Etling. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. E. Davies, of Marysville, for appellant.
A. H. Hewitt and Lloyd Hewitt, both of Yuba City, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage given by defendant to plaintiff on a crop of barley and an automobile to secure the payment of a promissory note for $1,000. Plaintiff was given judgment for $300 and interest and also the sum of $100 as attorney fees, and the automobile was ordered sold to satisfy the judgment. The defendant has appealed. The court found:

"That the crop of barley * * * was sold by the defendant for the sum of $1,922.35, and defendant paid to plaintiff the sum of $1,722.35 from the proceeds of said sale.

"That at the time said plaintiff received said sum defendant was owing plaintiff, and there was due and payable from defendant to plaintiff, in addition to the amount due on the promissory note set forth in said complaint, the sum of $1,113, which said sum represents money borrowed from said plaintiff by defendant, money paid by plaintiff for defendant at his request, and wages due plaintiff from the defendant.

"That, at the time said defendant paid the plaintiff the sum of $1,722.35, plaintiff and defendant had no accounting between themselves, and neither of them knew to a certainty how the account stood.

"That, from said sum of $1,722.35, plaintiff immediately on receipt of the same applied the sum of $735 to the payment of the amount due on said note, $700 of which was applied in payment on the principal thereof, and $35 thereof was applied by her to the payment of interest accrued on said note to the 27th day of August, 1924, and she applied the balance thereof, the sum of $987.35, on the amount due her from the defendant in addition to the amount represented by the promissory note, to wit, the sum of $1,113.

"Defendant, at no time prior to the time she made application of said money as above set forth, directed plaintiff to apply all of the said sum of $1,722.35, or any part thereof, to the payment of said note or interest thereon. * * * The said sum was given to plaintiff in two installments. The payment or installment of $501 on the 12th day of August, 1924, and the other installment of $1,221.35 on the 18th of August, 1924.

"That there is now due and unpaid from the defendant to plaintiff on account of the principal of the promissory note set forth in the complaint herein, the full sum of $300, together with interest thereon from the 27th day of August, 1924, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and also the sum of $1,256.65 as balance due on unsecured indebtedness of defendant to plaintiff, which said sum of $1,256.65 the plaintiff waives."

[1] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the unsecured indebtedness of defendant to plaintiff was the sum of $1,113. Plaintiff testified to items of indebtedness aggregating a greater sum than that found by the court. Such testimony is sufficient to support the finding, even though some of the items were disputed by defendant. Appellant tabulates the items of indebtedness testified to by the plaintiff as involved in the account and then attempts to show that she testified to payments aggregating a greater sum. He entirely ignores, however, her testimony to the effect that some of these payments were made upon debts of previous years, which did not enter into the accounting at all. In his tabulation he credits the defendant with a payment of $650, but omits to charge him with $600 loaned to him by the plaintiff and in satisfaction of which the payment of $650 was made.

The finding that the balance of the unsecured indebtedness of defendant to plaintiff was $1,256.65 is clearly a clerical error. A mere computation from the specific facts found shows that such balance was $125.65. That finding is wholly immaterial except for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff had not applied a greater sum upon the unsecured indebtedness than was due her thereon.

[2] Appellant's main contention is that, because the payments made to the plaintiff were the proceeds of the sale of a part of the mortgaged property, it was her duty, without direction by defendant, to apply the same first to the satisfaction of the note secured by the mortgage. The following testimony stands uncontradicted:

"In the summer of 1924, the crop was harvested by the defendant, and, instead of being turned over to the plaintiff, was retained in possession of defendant until sold by him, without the knowledge of the plaintiff. The first installment of the barley was sold by defendant and after this sale he paid the plaintiff $500, * * * and subsequently, and before August 13, 1924, defendant sold the remainder of the barley without the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee, and on August 13th, defendant handed plaintiff a check for $1,221.35, the proceeds of the second installment of the barley."

Plaintiff testified that the defendant told her to apply the amount of the check first on the unsecured indebtedness and the remainder on the mortgage note. The defendant denied this and testified that:

"The check for $1,221.35 was delivered with the intention of having it applied to the payment of the mortgage."

[3-5] It is clear that the defendant made an unauthorized sale of the barley. Whether or not such wrongful sale had the effect of extinguishing the lien of the mortgage on the barley depends upon circumstances not shown by the record. Crosby v. Fresno Fruit Growers' Co., 30 Cal. App. 308, 158 P. 1070. In any view of the case, out of the several remedies opened to the plaintiff by the unauthorized sale, she was not required to bring an action for the recovery of the property. When the proceeds of the sale came into the hands of the defendant, it was within his power to appropriate the same to any purpose of his own choosing. While, depending upon the circumstances, the lien of the mortgage may have continued on the barley, the plaintiff had no lien upon the money in defendant's hands which was paid for the barley. If the plaintiff had authorized or ratified the sale made by the defendant, the result would be the same. The lien on the barley in that case would be extinguished and would not be transferred to the proceeds in the hands of the defendant. Maier v. Freeman, 112 Cal. 8, 44 P. 357, 53 Am. St. Rep. 151.

The defendant having failed to direct the application of the payments to any particular debt, no more reason appears for requiring the application thereof to the mortgage debt than if the moneys had been derived from a different source. In case of foreclosure or sale by the mortgagee under authority given him by the mortgage, it has been held uniformly that the proceeds of the sale must be applied first to the mortgage debt. The decisions are in conflict as to the rule applicable to payments made by the mortgagor out of moneys derived from his sale of the mortgaged property when he does not direct the application thereof. The decisions holding in accordance with appellant's contention do not consider whether there is a distinction to be made between such a case and one where the sale is involuntary as to the mortgagor, as upon foreclosure or sale by the mortgagee. Such a distinction is clearly pointed out and what appears to be the logical rule is stated in Cain v. Vogt, 138 Iowa, 631, 116 N. W. 786, 128 Am. St. Rep. 216, where it is said:

"Of course, if the creditor forecloses his mortgage, the proceeds of the sale will be applied upon the debt thereby secured, because the very purpose of the foreclosure is to convert the security into money for the payment of that specific debt. But if the mortgagor voluntarily sells the property, and turns the money thus realized over to the creditor without direction for its application, the right of the latter to apply it to the unsecured debt is, in our judgment, a logical deduction from the propositions of law to which we have already given our adhesion. The books are not wanting in authority bearing upon the point here presented. * * * Rules which bind the mortgagee who sells upon foreclosure, or takes possession of and sells and converts the security, have little application to a case where the payment is made from money obtained by a voluntary sale by the mortgagor. In the latter case the lien of the mortgage does not follow or attach to the money, and the mortgagee has no recourse upon any other person to whom such moneys have been paid. In the hands of the mortgagor they have no different character than moneys derived from a wholly different source; and when paid over to the mortgagee in the absence of agreement or direction as to their application, the latter has the right to credit them upon the unsecured debt without regard to the source from which they were obtained by the debtor."

The judgment is affirmed.

BURGE et al. v. MUNICIPAL COURT OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.*
(Civ. 5652.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. July 12, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 8, 1927.

1. Courts ⇨160—Statute relating to jurisdiction of municipal courts held not unconstitutional (St. 1925, p. 648; Const. art. 6, §§ 5, 11a).

St. 1925, p. 648, relating to jurisdiction of municipal courts and giving them concurrent original jurisdiction with superior court of all cases arising within county held not in violation of Constitution, in view of Const. art. 6, §§ 5, 11a.

2. Courts ⇨172—Municipal court of city of Los Angeles held entitled to exercise jurisdiction in action against resident of county living outside city's boundaries (Const. art. 6, §§ 5, 11a; Municipal Court Act, § 29).

Municipal court of city of Los Angeles has jurisdiction of action at law involving less than $1,000 brought against resident of county of Los Angeles residing outside city's boundaries, under Const. art. 6, § 11a, Municipal Court Act, § 29 (St. 1925, p. 658) Const. art. 6, § 5, providing process of municipal court shall extend to all parts of county in which city having court is situated.

3. Constitutional law ⇨206(1)—Constitutional provisions for establishment of municipal courts in cities with population of over 40,000 held not to violate privileges and immunities of citizens for nonuniformity (Const. Cal. art. 6, §§ 5, 11a; Municipal Court Act; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Const. Cal. art. 6, §§ 5, 11a, and Municipal Court Act (St. 1925, p. 648), relating to optional establishment of municipal courts in cities having over 40,000 inhabitants, held not in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, as abridging privileges and immunities of citizens of United States on account of lack of uniformity as to operation in all cities of state.

4. Statutes ⇨73(2), 93(4)—Classification of municipalities by population to effect benefits or correct evils arising from congestion of population does not violate Constitution (Const. art. 1, §§ 11, 21).

Classification of municipalities by population with view to legislation effecting benefits or mitigating evils arising from congestion of population is not in violation of Const. art. 1, §§ 11 and 21, which requires laws of general nature to have uniform operation and prevents unequal granting of privileges or immunities.

Application by B. Q. Burge and another for writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Municipal Court of the City of Los Angeles, to prevent further proceedings in an action in which Mary R. Dietterich, as executrix of the estate of Martha Rawson, is plaintiff, and petitioners are defendants. Writ discharged.

Charles E. Salisbury, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and R. C. McAllaster, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Municipal Court.

Henry O. Wackerbarth, of Los Angeles, and Oliver P. Ensley, of Hemet, for respondent Dietterich.

HOUSER, J. Prohibition. Petitioners seek to prevent the respondent municipal court of the city of Los Angeles from proceeding further in an action pending in said court, in which action respondent Dietterich is the plaintiff and petitioners herein are the defendants.

Other than that the action was brought in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles, in the county of Los Angeles, the facts material to this decision are that each of the defendants is a resident of the city of South Pasadena, in the county of Los Angeles, and that the amount involved in the action is the sum of $800.

[1] As related to the Constitution of the state of California, petitioners attack generally the constitutionality of the statute under which the action was brought (Stats. 1925, p. 648), and cite many authorities in support of their contention. In view of the fact, however, that since each of the cases to which the attention of this court is directed was decided, by appropriate amendments to the Constitution of this state, the Constitution was specifically amended for the very purpose of providing for the creation of municipal courts, and that the statute in question was enacted by the Legislature pursuant to such constitutional authority, it becomes apparent that the authorities to which petitioners refer are inapplicable to the present situation and that the contention of petitioners in regard to the constitutionality of the statute cannot be sustained.

[2] It is further urged by petitioners that no territorial jurisdiction exists in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles outside the boundaries of said city of Los Angeles.

Section 11a of article 6 of the Constitution, among other things, provides that:

"In any city and county and in any city which is governed under a charter framed and adopted under the authority of this Constitution containing a population of more than forty thousand inhabitants, * * * a municipal court may be established as in this article provided, anything in this Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding. * * * Municipal courts shall have original jurisdiction, * * * in all cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, * * * amounts to one thousand dollars or less, * * * and in all criminal cases amounting to misdemeanor * * *."

Said section also provides in part that:

"The Legislature shall provide by general law for the constitution, regulation, government and procedure of municipal courts, and for the jurisdiction thereof. * * *"

And section 29 of the Municipal Court Act (Stats. 1925, p. 648) contains the following language:

"Each municipal court shall have concurrent original jurisdiction with the superior court or the justices' courts of all such cases arising within the county in which such court is situated. * * *"

Section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution provides, in part, that:

"The process of any municipal court shall extend to all parts of the county or city and county in which the city is situated where such court is established. * * *"

Construing such constitutional provisions in the case entitled In the Matter of the Application of Luna (Cal. Sup.) 257 P. 76, where the authorities are cited, it is held that the jurisdiction of the municipal court in misdemeanor cases extends to all parts of the county of Los Angeles. While some language may be found in other adjudications by the Supreme Court, notably in the case of Bakken v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 504, 241 P. 874, which indicates that so far as the civil jurisdiction of municipal courts is concerned it may be limited to the area defined by the boundaries of the municipal corporation, nevertheless, from the reasoning in the Luna Case we are constrained to hold that the principles there announced are directly applicable to the facts in the instant case. Considering the phraseology of the constitutional provisions to which reference has been had, it is clear that if the municipal court has jurisdiction over all misdemeanor cases arising in any part of Los Angeles county, such court also has jurisdiction of the basic action in the instant case, it being an action at law, in which the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to less than $1,000, and brought against a resident of the county of Los Angeles.

[3, 4] Petitioners also suggest that the constitutional provisions affecting the question are violative of article 14 of the Constitution of the United States, in that they abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States for the reason that the provisions of our Constitution and the statute in question, each respectively providing for the optional creation of a municipal court in any city of the state having a population of more than 40,000 inhabitants, do not act uniformly as to all citizens of the state and are not general in their operation. The case entitled In re Brady, 65 Cal. App. 345, 224 P. 252, is cited as an authority in the premises. It was there held, in effect, that a statute which provided for a session of the superior court solely in and for the county of Los Angeles in each city therein having a population of 50,000 inhabitants was unconstitutional in that such statute was special and local, not uniform in its operation; that it conferred special privileges upon a class of citizens not granted to all citizens; and that a general law could have been made applicable in the premises. With the possible exception of the specifications that the provisions here under consideration are not uniform in their operation, but confer special privileges upon a class of citizens not granted to all citizens it is apparent that none of such reasons is applicable to the facts in the instant case. No authority other than the Brady Case, directly bearing upon the facts herein, is cited by petitioners to sustain their contention in this regard. On the other hand, the classification of municipalities by population, with a view to legislation effecting benefits or evils to be corrected arising from congestion of population has long been recognized as proper within constitutional provisions of this state (section 11, art. 1; section 21, art. 1), which, in effect, are similar to that part of the constitutional provisions of the United States which are here invoked by petitioners.

In the case of Martin v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 93, 227 P. 762, one of the questions involved was the validity of a statute by which the manner of the selection of trial jurors in counties and cities and counties having a population of 90,000 inhabitants or over was sought to be regulated. It was there held that such statute was not violative of the one constitutional provision requiring that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation (section 11, art. 1), or of the other constitutional provision (section 21, art. 1) which inhibits the granting of privileges or immunities to any citizen or class of citizens which upon the same terms shall not be granted to all citizens. It thus becomes apparent that, because of the similarity of the provision in the state Constitution with the provision in the Constitution of the United States with reference to privileges and immunities, the ruling in the case just cited is most persuasive, if not conclusive; from which it would follow that neither the statute nor the constitutional provision here in question is in conflict with the constitutional provision of the United States to which reference has been had.

Several reasons for the denial of the writ for which petitioners pray are assigned by respondents, but because of the authorities hereinbefore cited, it is considered unnecessary to devote further attention to the questions thus suggested.

A demurrer having been interposed to the petition herein, it is ordered that the demurrer be and it is sustained; further, that the alternative writ issued herein be and it is discharged, and that petitioners take nothing by this proceeding.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

H. T. Morrow, of Los Angeles, for defendants, cross-complainants, and respondents and intervener and respondent.

SHENK, J. Plaintiff brought this action to quiet his title to lot A of the North Long Beach tract in Los Angeles county. The complaint is in the usual form. The defendants, J. S. Darby and Beulah K. Darby, his wife, answered, denying the plaintiff's title, admitting that they claim an interest in said property and as a separate defense alleged that they are the owners of an acre of land abutting on the entire west side of lot A; that said lot A has been a highway, openly, continuously, and notoriously used by the public and by abutting property owners as a public highway for more than ten years prior to the commencement of this action; and that said lot A is subject to a private easement on behalf of abutting property owners for highway purposes. The Darbys also filed a cross-complaint to the same effect as the separate defense set up in their answer. Appended to each pleading was a prayer that their easement in said lot A be quieted, and that the cross-defendants, of which the defendant A. W. Hanneman was one, be barred from asserting any interest in said lot A adverse to their easement rights. The defendant A. W.

BLODGETT v. DARBY et al. (PACIFIC-SOUTHWEST TRUST & SAV. BANK, Intervener). (L. A. 8337.)

Supreme Court of California. July 23, 1927.

1. Quieting title ☞39—In action to quiet title, cross-complaint and complaint in intervention held to allege causes of action to determine adverse claims to real property (Code Civ. Proc. § 738).

In action to quiet title to land, cross-complaint of defendants and complaint in intervention held to state causes of action to determine adverse claims to real property as authorized by Code of Civ. Proc. § 738.

2. Appeal and error ☞907(3)—On appeal on judgment roll alone from judgment determining various claims, it must be assumed that case was tried as one to determine adverse claims.

Where appeal from judgment in action to quiet title determining various claims and interests in and to lot and enjoining certain parties from asserting claim adverse to use thereof as public highway or adverse to private easements of other parties was on judgment roll alone, it must be assumed that case was tried on theory that cause was one to determine adverse claims to real property.

3. Pleading ☞64(2)—If pleadings alleged facts constituting two or more causes of action, causes of action defectively averred could be discarded as surplusage (Code Civ. Proc. § 452).

If pleadings alleged facts which might constitute cause of action to abate public nuisance, and also causes of action to determine adverse claims and to quiet title, under Code of Civ. Proc. § 452, causes of action to abate nuisance defectively averred could be discarded as surplusage, and causes of action to determine adverse claims and to quiet title could be given full application as predicate to determination of rights of parties.

Hanneman, also answered, denying plaintiff's title, and as a special defense set up sole ownership and title in himself. He died prior to the trial of the action, and the defendant Bert Hanneman, as administrator of his estate, was substituted in his place and stead. The Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, by leave of court, filed a complaint in intervention in which it alleged that it is the owner of lots 1 and 25 of said North Long Beach tract; that said property immediately adjoins lot A; that the intervener claims an interest in lot A in the nature of a private easement thereon as an abutting owner; that the plaintiff Blodgett and defendant Hanneman threaten to erect obstructions on lot A which will prevent its use as a public street; and that their claims adverse to the intervener's easement over it have greatly diminished the value of the intervener's property. The intervener prayed that all adverse claims in and to said lot A be determined by the court and a decree entered accordingly; that the intervener's easement over the same be quieted; and that the assertion of the claims of all parties adverse to said easement be forever barred.

Issue was joined on all the pleadings, and after trial the court found that the plaintiff has no right, title, or interest in or to said lot A; that the defendant administrator of the estate of A. W. Hanneman, deceased, is the sole owner in fee simple and entitled to the possession of lot A, subject to the easement of the public to use the same as a public street and subject also to the private easements thereon and thereover of the defendant J. S. Darby and the intervener. A judgment thus determining the various claims and interests in and to said lot A and enjoining the plaintiff and the defendant administrator of the estate of Hanneman from asserting any claim in or to said lot A adverse to the use thereof as a public highway or adverse to the private easements of the defendant Darby and the intervener was accordingly entered. From the judgment the defendant administrator of the estate of Hanneman only has appealed. The appeal is on the judgment roll alone.

The appellant makes no attack on the sufficiency of the judgment itself, nor does he claim that the findings do not support the judgment, nor that the findings are defective, inconsistent, or outside the issues raised by the pleadings. The sole contention of the appellant is that the cross-complaint of the Darbys and the complaint in intervention do not state facts sufficient to constitute causes of action to abate a public nuisance. It is insisted that such is the nature of such pleadings and that the same are defective for the reason that under the law a private person may not maintain an action to abate a public nuisance when the injury he suffers is the same in kind as that sustained by the general public, and that there is no allegation in either of said pleadings that the highway in question constitutes the only mode of ingress and egress to or from the lands of the Darbys and the intervener. The appellant cites Hitch v. Scholle, 180 Cal. 467, 181 P. 657, as authority to the effect that said pleadings do not state a cause of action to abate a public nuisance. If it be granted that said pleadings may be construed as including an attempt to allege the existence or threatened creation of a public nuisance, and that there is no sufficient allegation of special injury therein, it may also be said that they likewise may be construed as setting up interests in and to lot A in the nature of private easements on behalf of abutting property owners.

[1-3] In their essential averments said pleadings may properly be construed as causes of action to determine adverse claims to real property as authorized by section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The original complaint of the plaintiff was framed on that theory. The pleading of the appellant was framed on that theory, and all subsequent pleadings were intended to and do conform in all their essential characteristics to the same theory. Since the appeal is on the judgment roll alone it must be assumed that the case was tried on the theory that the cause was one to determine adverse claims to real property. The fact that the pleadings might be considered as broad enough to constitute an attempt to abate an existing or to prevent a threatened obstruction in a public street, and therefore defective under the doctrine of the Hitch Case, still, if the pleadings allege facts which might constitute two or more causes of action a liberal construction of the pleadings directed by section 452 of the Code of Civil Procedure would impel the conclusion that the causes of action defectively averred may be discarded as surplusage and the causes of action to determine adverse claims and to quiet title to private easements be given full application as a predicate to the determination of the rights of the parties. Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, 152 Cal. 118, 122, 92 P. 70, 125 Am. St. Rep. 47; German-American Sav. Bank v. Gollmer, 155 Cal. 685, 687, 102 P. 932; Townsend v. Driver, 5 Cal. App. 581, 583, 90 P. 1071.

[4] Assuming that the alleged injury to the public right of the Darbys and of the intervener would afford them no right to maintain an action for damages or for an injunction without an allegation of special damages, nevertheless, as abutting owners, they have the right to have their private easements established regardless of the fact that the same obstruction, existing or threatened, might also constitute an obstruction to their public right of travel. Williams v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 592, 594, 89 P. 330.

[5] From the record it is obvious that the trial court proceeded on the theory that said pleadings were sufficient to present issues for the determination of private rights, and, as the evidence is not before us, it must be assumed in support of the judgment that the evidence was sufficient to support the findings.

The judgment is affirmed.

OF NEW YORK. (S. F. 11500.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1927.

Rehearing Granted Aug. 29, 1927.

1. Insurance ☞455—Nurse's death from blood poisoning contracted from patient held not through "accidental means," within disability and accident policy; "accident."

Death of nurse, caused by blood poisoning contracted from patient, held not through "accidental means," within disability and accident policy of insurance, though policy was labeled "Business Women's Disability Policy" and insurer knew insured was nurse; "accident" being something out of usual course of events, happening suddenly and without any design of person injured.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accident—Accidental; Accidental Means.]

2. Insurance ☞646(6)—One suing under accident policy must show death of insured was from "bodily injury sustained through accidental means."

In action by beneficiary on disability and accident policy of insurance, burden is on plaintiff to show that death ensued from "bodily injury sustained through accidental means," within policy.

3. Insurance ☞146(3)—Rule that insurance policy should be liberally construed for assured cannot be applied where language is certain and unambiguous.

Though disability and accident policy of insurance should be liberally construed in favor of assured, such rule cannot be applied where policy is certain and unambiguous in its terms.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Fannie Moore against the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. C. Sharpsteen and Hartley F. Peart, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff on a disability and accident policy of insurance. On November 17, 1920, the defendant company issued to Mary Evelyn Moore an insurance policy containing the following caption:

"Business Women's Disability Policy, Providing for (1) Bodily Injury Sustained Through Accidental Means and Resulting in Disability, Dismemberment, Loss of Sight, or Death; (2) Illness From Any Disease Resulting in Disability to the Extent Herein Provided."

In the insuring clause, the policy, among other things, and as far as material here, insured the said Mary Evelyn Moore, hereinafter called the assured, against (1) bodily injury sustained * * * through accidental means, * * * and resulting directly, independently and exclusively of all other causes, in—(a) total disability; * * * (b) partial disability; * * * (c) specific injury; * * * (d) death; (2) illness or sickness * * * which necessarily results in (a) confining disability; * * * (b) nonconfining disability. * * * Article 9 provides:

"Blood poisoning resulting directly from a bodily injury shall be deemed to be included in the said term, bodily injury."

The policy is a combined disability and accident policy. In brief, indemnity is provided therein for bodily injury suffered through accidental means and resulting in disability or death, and illness resulting in disability. We are here concerned only with the effect of the provisions of the policy providing for indemnity for bodily injury through accidental means resulting in death, when said provisions are considered in the light of the evidentiary facts.

Mary Evelyn Moore, at the time of her application for the policy, was an unmarried woman of the age of 29 years. She was 6 feet 1 inch in height, weighed 205 pounds, and was a graduate nurse by profession. On the 4th day of February, 1922, and while said policy was in force, she was employed as a nurse to attend one Walter J. Hesse, referred to herein as the patient, and who was confined on said day in the University of California Hospital in San Francisco. The patient had been removed from Oakland to the San Francisco hospital on February 3d. He was suffering from an infection of the blood technically known as streptococcus hemolyticus beta, or streptococcus septicæmia, and commonly known as blood poisoning. The assured was employed to attend and did attend the patient on the 4th, 5th, and 6th of February. On the day last mentioned she was attacked by the same malady and was herself placed under the care of a nurse. The patient died on February 6th, and the assured died on February 16th. The beneficiary under the policy, the plaintiff herein, made demand on the defendant for the payment of the $5,000 death indemnity, and upon refusal of payment this action was brought.

It was alleged in the complaint that the nature of the infection is such that the said virulent organisms are generated in the tissues of the body, including the respiratory tract, and are capable of being exhaled from the mouth and nostrils of the patient and of being inhaled by a person in close proximity, and are capable of producing blood poisoning when so inhaled; that while the assured was acting in the performance of her duties the said organisms "were unexpectedly to said assured exhaled by said patient and were unconsciously inhaled by said assured, by reason whereof said assured became infected with said organisms in consequence of which blood poisoning supervened which resulted directly, independently and exclusively of all other causes in the death of the assured," and "that nursing a person infected as aforesaid is not manifestly dangerous, and such service is ordinarily performed without injurious consequences to the nurse." The foregoing allegations were denied by the defendant. The court found them to be true and concluded that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

For the purpose of simplifying the record on appeal, it was stipulated that at the time he entered the University of California Hospital the patient was suffering from said infection and that he subsequently died at said hospital by reason of said infection; that the assured contracted said infection from the patient at the hospital, and that only by reason of said infection so contracted the assured died on February 16, 1922. It is contended, however, by the defendant that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding and conclusion of the court that there was any such element of unexpectedness or unintentional surprise as to make out a case of bodily injury sustained through accidental means as contemplated by the policy of insurance.

The evidence is contained in a bill of exceptions and consists entirely of the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff, supplemented by a further stipulation as to certain facts hereinafter alluded to. It appears from this record that when the patient was received in the San Francisco hospital he was placed in a private room about 10 feet in length; that streptococcus hemolyticus beta is a well-known and fairly common form of an infectious organism; that in the month of February, 1922, the bacteriologist at said hospital developed cultures of this organism in nine different cases; that there are periods of three and four months at a time when no patients are at said hospital afflicted with said infection, and there are times when there are at the hospital at the same time several persons so afflicted; that the atmosphere surrounding the patient within a radius of about 10 feet may, by his coughing or sneezing, be permeated with these virulent germs; that anywhere within the patient's room is considered a zone of danger; that when the patient entered and was in the hospital he had a brain abscess, was semiconscious a considerable part of the time, had convulsions of his arm and leg, had inflammation of the ear, a severe sore throat, bronchial pneumonia, inflammation of his frontal sinuses, and that he coughed a great deal; that a night nurse, as well as the assured, attended the patient; that a sister and also the fiancée of the patient were in constant attendance at the bedside; that the personal physician of the patient and several hospital physicians were in and out of the room during the patient's illness; and that no person who had been in the room during the time contracted the infection other than the assured. It also appeared that the assured was fully aware of the danger of infection in such cases and always took precautions against contracting the same; that in this particular case, while in attendance upon the patient, the assured stated to another nurse, who was her roommate, that she was afraid of the case she was on, the Hesse case; that, in addition to her own knowledge of the danger, she was advised by the personal physicians of the patient that the infection was readily communicable and suggested to her the wisdom of taking precautions to prevent the contraction of the same. One of the hospital physicians testified that in such cases the contraction of the infection is something which is expected at all times and something to be guarded against as carefully as possible. One form of guarding against the infection is the wearing of a gauze mask. It was stipulated at the trial that none of the physicians, internes, or nurses in attendance on the patient and none of the relatives or friends who visited him wore masks, and that none of the persons mentioned became infected from the patient except the assured. This stipulation was proposed by counsel for the plaintiff during the course of the trial and was later confirmed by exchange of letters. It was agreed to by counsel for defendant, subject, however, to the objection that the facts so stipulated were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and therefore not admissible in evidence. We deem these facts of no controlling consequence for the reason that it was in evidence, uncontradicted, that while masks were some protection against infection, "they are not a good protection." From the evidence it may be reasonably, if not necessarily, inferred that while the wearing of gauze masks is a protection to some extent, the infection may be contracted, notwithstanding the wearing of such masks.

[1, 2] From the foregoing epitome of the record, appearing without conflict, it is now to be determined whether the showing thus made by the plaintiff was sufficient to establish that the assured suffered death by reason of "bodily injury sustained * * * through accidental means" as provided in the policy. It will be assumed for the purposes of this case that the contraction of the infection by the assured was a bodily injury, but we are unable to conclude that such injury was caused by accidental means. The term "accident" as used in similar policies has been given a definition in this state that is uniform and without substantial deviation. No difficulty is encountered with reference to the definition, but problems arise in applying the definition to particular and varying states of fact. The term "accident" is defined as "a casualty—something out of the usual course of events, and which happens suddenly and unexpectedly, and without any design on the part of the person injured." Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 170, 26 P. 762, 23 Am. St. Rep. 455; Price v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 169 Cal. 800, 147 P. 1175; Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 768, 771, 158 P. 762; Olinsky v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 182 Cal. 669, 189 P. 835, 14 A. L. R. 784. The burden is on the plaintiff to show that death ensued from a bodily injury sustained through accidental means. Postler v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 173 Cal. 1, 6, 158 P. 1022; Mah See v. North American Acc. Ind. Co., 190 Cal. 421, 213 P. 42, 26 A. L. R. 123. It must be borne in mind that the policy in question does not insure against accidental death, but against death through accidental means. "A differentiation is made, therefore, between the result to the insured and the means which is the operative cause in producing this result. It is not enough that death or injury should be unexpected or unforeseen, but there must be some element of unexpectedness in the preceding act or occurrence which leads to the injury or death." Rock v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 462, 465, 156 P. 1029, 1030 (L. R. A. 1916E, 1196).

In the case at bar the means through which the fatal malady was contracted by the assured was neither unusual nor unexpected. There was no element of surprise in coming in contact with the virulent organisms. In fact, such contact was foreseen and expected. The assured knew and realized the dangers incident to the performance of her duties as an attending nurse, and by gargling, washing her hands, etc., took precautions to guard against the effect of the incident exposure. The fact that others similarly exposed did not contract the disease is not sufficient to prove that the assured contracted the same by accidental means. If the other persons present in the room from time to time (the sister and fiancée of the patient were more constantly at his bedside than the assured) had contracted the malady, there would have been no element of surprise or unexpectedness or of the unusual in so contracting the same, or they were all advised and warned of the dangers of their presence in the room. That such other persons did not fall a prey to what was an expected and anticipated attack from the germs would show no more than that their resistance was greater and the attack unsuccessful. Effect must be given to the plain language of the policy, and a distinction must be made between the result to the assured and the means by which that result was brought about. It may properly be said that the result to the assured, namely, illness and death, was unexpected and unintentional, but that is far from saying that the means that produced the illness and subsequent death were unexpected, unusual, or not anticipated.

The plaintiff places great reliance on the case of Horton v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 45 Cal. App. 462, 187 P. 1070. But there is nothing in that case at variance with the conclusions herein expressed. It was there recognized that the term "accidental means" is descriptive of "means which produce effects which are not their usual and probable consequences," citing Western Commercial Travelers' Ass'n v. Smith (C. C. A.) 85 F. 401, 40 L. R. A. 653. It was held in the Horton Case that the injection into the body of the insured of virulent death-producing germs was not the natural and probable consequences of the contemplated use by the dentist of uninfected dental instruments. The use of infected instruments was unexpected, unforeseen, and unusual and constituted the "accidental means" through which death was produced. In the present case the means through which death resulted were known, expected, and foreseen, but were unsuccessfully guarded against. We conclude, therefore, that the death of the assured was not through "accidental means," and the finding and conclusion of the trial court to the contrary effect are without support in the evidence.

[3] It is contended by the plaintiff that, as the defendant knew at the time the policy was issued that the assured was a trained nurse by occupation, it should be held that the defendant should be bound to indemnify against risks it knew it was the assured's duty to incur in the course of her occupation. It is pointed out that the policy is headed as above indicated, and it is urged, in effect, that it must have been contemplated by the parties to the contract that death caused as a result of risks incident to the occupation of the assured should be indemnified against, and also as matter of law that policies of insurance should be liberally construed in favor of the assured, citing Berliner v. Travelers', etc., Co., 121 Cal. 458, 53 P. 918, 41 L. R. A. 467, 66 Am. St. Rep. 49. The rule of law asserted cannot be disputed, but there must be an opportunity for its application. Here it may not be contended that the policy in one of its two main characteristics is not a business women's disability policy. The caption does not in terms or effect enlarge, detract from, modify, or restrict the insuring clause for bodily injuries resulting in death by accidental means. The clause providing indemnity for death appears to be not unusual in form. It is certain and unambiguous, and in the light of the decisions in this state this court has no recourse but to enforce it as it finds it in the policy.

It is deemed unnecessary to discuss the many authorities cited by the plaintiff from other jurisdictions. It is enough to say that the effect of the clause of the policy vital to this case has become well established by adjudications in this state, and counsel for the plaintiff has cited none of our own cases to the contrary.

The judgment is reversed.

MAILHEBUAU v. RUSS BLDG. CO.

(S. F. 12370.)

Supreme Court of California. July 25, 1927.

1. Courts ⇨202(5)—Order in probate, though void, will not be reviewed by Supreme Court, where no appeal is provided (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3).

Order in probate, though void, will not be reviewed by Supreme Court, to ascertain or declare its validity, where no appeal from such order is provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3.

2. Courts ⇨202(5)—Order permitting filing and foreclosure of mechanic's lien against property of estate held not appealable as attempted action in equity conducted by court of probate (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3).

Proceedings in probate court, by which owner of property adjoining that of estate was permitted to file and foreclose mechanic's lien for expenditures made in supporting estate's building, held not to constitute attempted action and judgment in equity, such as to permit appeal from order, where appeal was not provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3.

3. Courts ⇨202(5)—Order of superior court, permitting filing and foreclosure of mechanic's lien against estate's property, held "order in probate," not reviewable by appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3).

Order of superior court, permitting filing of mechanic's lien against real property belonging to estate, and authorizing proceedings to foreclose, for expenditures made by adjoining owner in supporting estate's building, held "order in probate," not reviewable by appeal to Supreme Court, because not made so by Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3.

In Bank.

Petition by the Russ Building Company for leave to file a mechanic's lien against certain property belonging to the estate of Camille Mailhebauu, deceased, resisted by Eugenie Bouscal Mailhebauu, executrix. From an order permitting the filing of a mechanic's lien and authorizing proceedings to foreclose the same, the executrix appeals. On petitioner's motion to dismiss. Appeal dismissed.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. At the time of submission of this cause on the merits there was also submitted a motion to dismiss the appeal, which is from an order, purporting to be one in probate, giving to the respondent the right to assert and file a mechanic's lien against certain real property belonging to the estate, and to authorize the institution of proceedings to foreclose such lien.

The claim of respondent is that appeals from orders in probate are controlled by subdivision 3 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that no provision can be found therein authorizing the appeal here attempted. Appellant, on the contrary, makes the claim that, although the order given was made by the probate court, it was in reality a proceeding in equity and a final judgment therein, and, inasmuch as said judgment was rendered by a court sitting in probate, it was beyond the jurisdiction of said court, nevertheless reviewable on appeal. The position of respondent seems perfectly sound, and disposition of this motion will thereby conclude the whole proceeding.

The facts, briefly stated, are that Camille Mailhebauu died testate in San Francisco on December 3, 1924. His widow, Eugenie Bouscal Mailhebauu, thereafter, and on December 29, 1924, duly qualified as executrix of his last will and testament. The estate owns a lot, together with improvements thereon, situated in the city and county of San Francisco, and known as No. 441 Pine street. Respondent owns a large area in the same block which adjoins the property above referred to. In the year 1926, some time after the death of decedent, respondent filed a petition in the said estate, in which it asserted that on or about the 24th day of March, 1926, it commenced the construction of a 30-story class A building on its said adjoining lot; that prior to the commencement of said building it duly served on the executrix of said estate the notice required by section 832 of the Civil Code, wherein petitioner gave to said executrix reasonable notice of its intention to commence construction of said building, and to make excavations on its said property for the purpose of such construction, and notified said executrix to underpin and support said building located on the property of said estate; and that thereafter and on the 17th day of June, 1926, said executrix, through J. J. Dunne, her attorney, who was also the attorney for said estate, advised petitioner that the estate had no funds with which to pay the charges for underpinning or supporting said building, and requested petitioner to underpin said building, agreeing to execute and deliver to petitioner the promissory note of said executrix covering the cost thereof, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum; that petitioner duly accepted said offer, and did thereafter underpin and support the said building belonging to said estate, and spent for that purpose the sum of $6,732.30; that neither said executrix nor said estate have paid said sum, or any part thereof; and that it had no means of securing reimbursement for said outlay, other than by filing a mechanic's lien upon said estate and foreclosing same in the manner provided by law.

The said estate and the executrix thereof duly filed an answer to said petition, and denied all the material allegations thereof, pleading, among other defenses, lack of jurisdiction of the probate court to grant an order permitting the filing or foreclosure of a mechanic's lien against said property. After a consideration of said petition and the answer thereto, the court duly gave and made its order permitting respondent herein to make and file its mechanic's lien in the manner provided by law by the chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure on that subject, and to thereafter, if so advised, institute proceedings to foreclose the same. Thereupon the executrix, in behalf of herself and also in behalf of said estate, duly perfected an appeal from said order, and caused to be prepared and authenticated a bill of exceptions thereto. Respondent in due time filed its motion to dismiss said appeal, alleging failure of the Legislature to provide for an appeal from such an order.

[1] Only such appeals in probate as are allowed by subdivision 3 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure can be entertained by this court. Estate of Cahill, 142 Cal. 628, 76 P. 383; Estate of Allen, 175 Cal. 356, 165 P. 1011; Estate of Funkenstein, 170 Cal. 595, 150 P. 987; Estate of Seng, 52 Cal. App. 149, 152, 198 P. 809. If it be conceded that said order is void, nevertheless, as long as it is an order in probate, from which no appeal is provided, it will not be examined by this court to ascertain or declare its validity or invalidity. Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 265, 269, 33 P. 1103; Estate of Overton, 13 Cal. App. 117, 119, 108 P. 1021.

Appellant, however, makes several contentions, all of which seem to us to be beyond the issues involved in this proceeding. For example, the well-known principle that the foreclosure of a lien is an action in equity, and not within the jurisdiction of the probate court, is asserted. But this principle has no bearing upon the proceeding before us, as no proceeding in equity took place or was attempted. The utmost that can be claimed in that direction by this order was that the court gave its consent to the future institution of an action in equity. As above intimated, it may well be doubted whether the court under the facts of this case could make a valid order authorizing the filing of a mechanic's lien, in the absence of a pre-existing contract made with the estate upon order of court. Chappius v. Blankman, 128 Cal. 362, 60 P. 925; S. F. Paving Co. v. Fairfield, 134 Cal. 220, 66 P. 255; L. A. v. Winans, 13 Cal. App. 234, 254, 109 P. 640; Fresno Co. v. Manning, 20 Cal. App. 766, 769, 130 P. 196.

But this question is also beside the issue. If respondent should seek to exercise the permission granted to it, and ask to foreclose its alleged lien, then in that case appellant could urge all the infirmities, if any there be, in this order made by the court; or appellant herself, in behalf of said estate, may institute an action to remove the cloud from or quiet the title to said property, and in such proceeding may attack the validity of this order, or she may invoke other remedies; but none of these methods of relief may be secured by appealing from a nonappealable order.

[2] There is likewise no merit in the suggestion that the petition and order here under consideration themselves constitute an attempted action and final judgment therein in an action in equity conducted by a court of probate. The order relates to the property in probate, and, whether valid or not, it is clearly within the general purview of the powers of a probate court, and it bears none of the indicia of an action in equity. This appears conclusively, not alone from the very nature of the control of the property by the probate court, but from the principles announced in the very cases relied upon by appellant to show that the purported lien is invalid, in the absence of a contract entered into by authority of the probate court, for if, under a contract authorized by the probate court, a mechanic's lien may be asserted against property of the estate, then it must follow that an order allowing the filing of a lien thereon, whether valid or invalid, is an order in probate, as distinguished from an order exercised under the general jurisdiction of the superior court.

[3] In reality the legal effect of the order here under consideration was to give respondent permission to sue in a case where the property was in custodia legis, and is akin to the permission to sue required in actions against receivers and other trustees of property under the control of the court; and such permission is not referable to any other jurisdiction than that in control of the property. Counsel has indulged in much research to show us the history of the probate jurisdiction and the limits thereof, but in our view the order remains a simple one in probate, made by the probate court, an order to which the Legislature has not attached the right of appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

PAOLINI v. SULPRIZIO. (S. F. 11572.)

Supreme Court of California. July 29, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 607(1)—Where trial court granted relief from default, objection that notice to clerk to prepare transcript was filed too late was without merit (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473).

Plaintiff's objection to consideration of appeal on ground that notice to clerk to prepare transcript was filed too late was without merit, where defendant in proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, had obtained order from trial court granting relief from his default.

2. Fraud $\S$ 31—Defrauded purchaser may rescind or affirm contract and sue for deceit.

Where purchaser is defrauded in contract for purchase of real estate, he may rescind, whereby, upon discovery of fraud, he repudiates contract, offers to return what he received, and seeks restoration to original position claiming damages for conduct of vendor, or he may affirm contract, return what he has received, and sue for damages in action for deceit.

3. Fraud $\S$ 34—Purchaser need not perform contract as condition to action for deceit.

One induced by fraud to enter into contract for purchase of real estate is not required to perform on his part as a condition to maintaining his action for deceit.

4. Fraud $\S$ 60—Unpaid part of purchase price must be deducted from award for fraud.

Where purchaser defrauded in executory contract for purchase of real estate affirms contract and sues for damages for deceit, any unpaid part of purchase price must be deducted from any award made because of fraud.

5. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 310—Purchaser defrauded in land contract may set up vendor's fraud as partial defense, without offering restitution, and recoup damages.

Where purchaser is defrauded in contract for purchase of real estate, he may set up vendor's fraud as partial defense or counterclaim, without any offer of restitution, and recoup his damages in action brought by guilty party to contract.

6. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 168—Where purchaser is defrauded he may withhold payments under contract to recoup damages which may be recovered.

Where purchaser is defrauded in contract for purchase of real estate, he may withhold payments under contract to recoup damages which may be recovered.

7. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 314(2)—Purchaser affirming contract and seeking damages for collateral fraud need not allege willingness and ability to perform to maintain defensive relief.

Purchaser affirming contract for purchase of real property and seeking damages for collateral fraud in counterclaim, in action on contract by vendor, need not allege willingness and ability to perform terms of contract in order to maintain action or defensive relief.

8. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 314(3)—In action by vendor on land contract, purchaser's evidence of collateral fraud held improperly excluded, though purchaser did not allege readiness and willingness to perform.

In action to recover money due under executory contract for sale of real property, in which purchaser filed cross-complaint for damages for misrepresentations as to nature and quality of land sold, evidence of purchaser's damages held improperly excluded even though purchaser did not allege that he had rescinded contract or had complied or was ready and willing to comply with its provisions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Action by G. Paolini against D. Sulprizio to recover money due under executory contract for sale of real property, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Arthur Allyn and Edward F. Peters, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Stanley Moffatt, of Fresno, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. [1] Judgment was entered in this case in favor of the plaintiff for the balance due under an executory contract for the sale of real property. Defendant's motion for a new trial being denied, he has appealed. The objection of the respondent to the consideration of the appeal, on the ground that the notice to the clerk to prepare a transcript was filed too late, is without merit. In a proceeding under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the defendant obtained an order from the trial granting relief from his default.

Respondent sold a vineyard to the appellant at the agreed price of $12,000. The appellant assumed a mortgage against the property in the sum of $7,000, paid $3,000 in cash, and agreed to execute promissory notes for the balance. A deed of the land was executed and delivered to appellant, and he went into possession, but failed to complete the payments required, or to execute notes for the amount as promised. After waiting some eight months the vendor brought this action to recover the balance due, with interest. The vendee made specific denial of the allegations of the complaint, and by way of a separate defense and counterclaim against the respondent alleged that he had been damaged to the extent of $2,000 by reason of misrepresentations of the respondent as to the nature and quality of the land sold. He subsequently filed an amended answer and a cross-complaint, alleging the amount of damages to be $5,000. He did not allege in his answer, or in the cross-complaint, that he had rescinded the contract, or that he had affirmed it and was willing and able to perform according to its terms.

When the case came on for trial, the respondent testified to the transaction between himself and the appellant, and to the unpaid balance of the purchase price of the land. Appellant thereupon admitted that "$1,232 more" was to be paid under the contract, but claimed that his damages, by reason of the alleged misrepresentations, were greater than the balance due, and sought to prove the allegations of his cross-complaint. On the objection of the plaintiff and in apparent reliance on an expression of this court in Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 515, 143 P. 729, the trial court refused to permit the introduction of any evidence on the subject of damages upon the ground that it was not alleged in the cross-complaint that defendant had rescinded the contract or had complied, or was ready and willing to comply, with its provisions. As a result of the court's ruling the defendant was deprived of any opportunity to support his claim that he had been damaged in the transaction, and judgment was entered for the plaintiff for the unpaid balance due on the sale of the vineyard.

[2-4] Notwithstanding the language of the court in Hines v. Brode, supra, which seems to lend support to the position of the court below, and to the contention of the respondent on this appeal, that it was incumbent on the appellant to allege his willingness and ability to perform the terms of the contract, we are of the view that the court erred in sustaining the objection to the introduction of appellant's evidence. Three remedies are open to a party defrauded in a contract for the purchase of real estate. One is rescission, whereby, upon the discovery of the fraud, he repudiates the contract, offers to return what he has received, and seeks a restoration to his original position, claiming whatever damage he may have suffered by reason of the unconscionable conduct of the other party; or, two, he may affirm the contract, retain what he has received, and sue for his damages in an action for deceit. It is a principle of universal application that a right of action for damages for a fraud arises immediately upon the consummation of the fraud, which may arise in a contract executed or executory, and which may be asserted at once upon the discovery. The action is not upon the contract, but is collateral to it, and is on the case (Hines v. Brode, supra), and one induced by fraud to enter into a contract for the purchase of real estate is not required to perform on his part as a condition to maintaining his action for deceit (Moran v. Tucker, 40 R. I. 485, 101 A. 327, L. R. A. 1918A, 99; Stearns v. Kennedy, 94 Minn. 439, 103 N. W. 212; Pierce v. Hellenic, etc., Co., 76 Misc. Rep. 473, 135 N. Y. S. 605). In many cases it would be unjust to hold that the party defrauded shall lose the advantage which attaches to a tort action, unless he makes further venture in a transaction into which he has been induced by fraud to enter. He affirms the contract, but not as one made in good faith. He consents to be bound by the provisions of the agreement, but does not thereby release or waive his claim for damages arising from a fraud collateral to the agreement. He must, himself, be willing and able to perform on his part, and it must be conclusively taken that he stands ready and willing to pay the full consideration called for by the contract. If the contract remains executory, the damages which he is entitled to recover are no other and no greater than those which would be awarded to a party who has fully executed his contract. From any award which may be made because of the fraud must be deducted any unpaid part of the purchase price. Hines v. Brode, supra, page 515, 143 P. 729.

[5, 6] In harmony with this principle, which permits the buyer to retain the property and bring suit for the recovery of the damages which he has sustained, there is a third course open to a defrauded vendee. He may set up the seller's fraud as a partial defense or counterclaim without any offer of restitution, and recoup his damages in the action brought by the guilty party to the contract. Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 379, 382, 63 P. 692; Hunter v. McKenzie, 197 Cal. 176, 184, 239 P. 1090; Palladine v. Imperial Valley, etc., Ass'n, 65 Cal. App. 727, 749, 225 P. 291. This remedy has been styled "defensive relief," whereby the fraud is set up by way of defense to defeat an action brought to enforce an apparent obligation or liability. Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. R., 98 Cal. 490, 499, 33 P. 550. The fraud, given in evidence as a defense, "will be an answer to the whole demand, or in abatement of the damages, according to the circumstances of the case. This is the true as well as a salutary rule, and well calculated to do final and complete justice between the parties, most expeditiously and least expensively." Field v. Austin, supra, page 382 (63 P. 693). It may also be taken to be well settled in this jurisdiction that in such cases the defrauded party may withhold payments under the contract, to recoup the damages which may be recovered. Pembroke v. Houston, 41 Cal. App. 54, 181 P. 828; Palladine v. Imperial Valley, etc., Ass'n, supra. But in any event the party guilty of the deceit is entitled to have the damages mitigated to the extent of the nonperformance of the other party to the contract.

[7, 8] We therefore see no good reason why a party affirming a contract for the purchase of real property, and seeking damages for a collateral fraud, must allege willingness and ability to perform the terms of the contract in order to maintain his action, or defensive relief. The language of the court in Hines v. Brode, supra, on which respondent relies, was used in a case in which the plaintiff, claiming to be defrauded, had paid only a trifling part of the purchase price, and expressly averred that he was only willing to complete it up to the time of the discovery of the fraud. The court held that he neither pleaded in rescission nor for damages after affirmance, and in reversing the case said that leave should be given to him to amend his complaint so as to state in understandable terms the position upon this all-important question which he elected to take, which, the court said, would be only one of two—damages after rescission or damages after affirmance, “with alleged and proved willingness and ability to perform the terms of the contract.” The authorities cited in the opinion do not support the quoted expression. In the light of a clear understanding of the real question there involved, and of the theory on which actions for deceit are based, the quoted language does not lay down a correct legal proposition. Correctly understood, the court, in Hickman v. Johnson, 36 Cal. App. 342, 178 P. 145, also relied on by the respondent, merely applies the rule announced in Hines v. Brode, supra, that the pleader in such case must elect and stand squarely either upon rescission, or upon affirmance, and not, as in that case, show an unwillingness to perform. Whatever may appear to be the effect of the language (quoted, supra), its application as contended for by respondent cannot be approved. In denying a petition for hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal in Hullinger v. Big Sespe Oil Co., 50 Cal. App. 6, 194 P. 742, this court said (page 10, 194 P. 743):

“We do not approve those portions of the opinion [of the District Court of Appeal] which declare that it is essential for a plaintiff in an action for damages on the contract, whereby the contract is affirmed, to allege or prove his willingness and ability to perform the contract according to its terms. The law as to the amount that may be recovered in such an action and what must be set off against any damage proved is sufficiently declared in Hines v. Brode.”

See, also, Pembroke v. Houston, supra; Foster v. Gorham, 63 Cal. App. 601, 604, 219 P. 476; Webb v. Emerson, etc., Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 227 S. W. 499.

The objection to the introduction of any evidence in the trial court on the question of appellant's damages rested solely on the lack of an allegation that the appellant had complied, or was ready and willing to comply, with the terms of the contract. No exception was taken at any time, in so far as we are informed by the transcript, to any other alleged insufficiency of the pleadings. They appear to have been deemed by the parties as otherwise sufficient to raise the issue here considered, and the objection to the introduction of appellant's evidence should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed.

MIDWEST AIR FILTERS PACIFIC, Inc., v. FINN, Sheriff, et al. (S. F. 12375.)

Supreme Court of California. July 13, 1927.

1. Corporations ⇨28(1)—Corporation de facto arises where there is charter or general law authorizing incorporation, bona fide attempt to organize, and user of corporate franchise.

Requisites to constitute corporation de facto are charter or general law under which corporation might be lawfully organized, bona fide attempt to organize thereunder, and actual user of corporate franchise.

2. Corporations ⇨28(3)—Entity organized in compliance with law and conducting business under franchise becomes de facto corporation, though it failed to file copy of articles in county where principal business is to be transacted (Civ. Code, § 296).

Where requirements of law as conditions precedent to organization of corporation have been fully complied with and stockholders and directors have proceeded to act under corporate franchise, the entity becomes de facto corporation, notwithstanding its noncompliance with Civ. Code, § 296, requiring as condition precedent to transaction of business filing of copy of articles of incorporation in county where principal business of corporation is to be transacted.

3. Corporations ⇨18—Requirement that articles be filed in county where corporation transacts principal business is not condition precedent to corporate organization, though it may be ground for forfeiting charter (Civ. Code, § 296).

Requirement of Civ. Code, § 296, that copy of articles of incorporation be filed in county wherein corporation is to transact its principal business is not condition precedent to organization, but condition subsequent, noncompliance with which does not affect corporate existence, though it may be ground for proceeding by state to forfeit charter or franchise.

4. Corporations ⇨25—Conditions precedent to right to engage in business are conditions subsequent, not affecting corporate existence.

Conditions precedent to right to engage in business after corporation has been formed are conditions subsequent, which do not affect legal existence of corporation.

5. Corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 28(2)—Corporation making bona fide attempt to incorporate under general law held de facto corporation when entering into contract subsequent to receiving certificate (Civ. Code, § 296).

Where bona fide attempt was made to organize corporation under general law authorizing its incorporation, and officers thereof exercised powers under corporate franchise, presumption being in favor of honest intention to form corporation, such corporation was at least de facto corporation when it entered into contract for purchase of automobile subsequent to receiving certificate of incorporation from secretary of state, though it failed to file copy of articles in county where its principal business was to be transacted, as required by Civ. Code, § 296.

6. Corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 29(2)—Legal existence of de facto corporation cannot be called into question collaterally (Civ. Code, § 358).

Where corporation making bona fide attempt to incorporate under general law was at least de facto corporation, its legal existence cannot be called into question collaterally, in view of Civ. Code, § 358.

7. Corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 25—De facto corporation is not precluded from asserting property rights acquired prior to filing copy of articles required as condition precedent to doing business (Civ. Code, § 296).

Corporation becoming at least de facto corporation by bona fide attempt to organize under general law and acts of user under franchise is not precluded from asserting any property rights acquired by it prior to filing copy of articles, as required by Civ. Code, § 296, as condition precedent to doing business.

8. Frauds, statute of $\Leftrightarrow$ 90(1), 95(1)—Contract for sale of automobile paid for in part and delivered to purchaser satisfied statute (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 4).

Where corporation paid part of contract price of automobile purchased and accepted delivery of automobile through its authorized agent, provisions of Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 4, providing that written contract or memorandum shall not be required where there has been either part payment or delivery under agreement of parties, were satisfied and rendered unnecessary consideration of question whether contract was properly executed.

9. Fraudulent conveyances $\Leftrightarrow$ 147(1)—Purchase by corporation of automobile from owner to whom it had been returned by original purchaser and delivery to corporation from owner held valid against creditors of original purchaser (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Where original purchaser of automobile under conditional sales contract returned same to legal owner for inability to pay installments and automobile was purchased by and delivered to corporation while in possession of legal owner, purchase of automobile by corporation did not violate Civ. Code, § 3440, as against creditors of original purchasers.

10. Corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 1—Equity will look behind corporate entity, when necessary to promote justice, and law will follow equity.

In proper cases, equity will look behind corporate equity and consider who are real and substantial parties in interest, whenever it becomes necessary to promote justice, or obviate inequitable results, and law will follow equity in this respect.

11. Corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 1—Corporation formed by individual held distinct entity, in absence of showing of bad faith, or that stock was not actually paid for.

Where copartners were agents for eastern company requiring formation of corporation to handle their business, formation of corporation by one partner was separate and distinct entity, and not same as individual, where record showed nothing to challenge good faith in forming corporation, or to contradict testimony that incorporators subscribed and paid for shares of stock in corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by the Midwest Air Filters Pacific, Inc., against Thomas F. Finn, Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Simeon E. Sheffey, of San Francisco, for appellants.

James C. Espey, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal has been prosecuted by the defendants from a judgment of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco. The cause was taken over by this court after decision by District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 2. 51 Cal. App. Dec. 458. We adopt the following portion of the opinion of that court as containing a correct statement of the facts giving rise to this litigation.

"This case was tried before the court sitting without a jury and resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against both defendants in the sum of $428.05, from which both defendants have appealed on a typewritten record, under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. * * *

"The defendant William Warren recovered two judgments, aggregating $300, in the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco against one Walter B. Lomax. On January 2, 1924, execution was issued on these judgments and placed in the hands of the defendant sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, with instructions to levy upon a certain King 8 automobile, then in the possession of Walter B. Lomax. The sheriff seized and took into his possession the automobile on or about January 24, 1924, in pursuance of said instructions. A third party claim was immediately filed with the sheriff on behalf of the plaintiff and respondent, Midwest Air Filters Pacific, Inc., a corporation, demanding that said car be released, and alleging that said respondent was the owner and entitled to the possession of said automobile. Upon receipt of this third party claim, the sheriff informed said William Warren that, unless a bond was filed to indemnify him against damages for holding said automobile, the same would be released to claimant, Midwest Air Filters Pacific, Inc.; whereupon the attorney for Warren and the attorney for said corporation entered into a stipulation by which they agreed to, and did deposit, with the said sheriff the sum of $428.05, being the amount agreed upon to be necessary to satisfy said two judgments against the said Walter B. Lomax. They further stipulated that the money was to be held by the sheriff in lieu of the automobile, and that the automobile should be immediately released, and that a court of competent jurisdiction should thereafter determine the ownership of the automobile. Pursuant to this stipulation, the automobile was thereafter returned to Walter B. Lomax, acting for said corporation, and thereafter the said sum of $428.05 was paid by the said sheriff to the said Warren. Thereupon plaintiff commenced this action against the sheriff and Warren for the recovery of said sum of $428.05.

"On July 6, 1922, the said Walter B. Lomax purchased this same automobile from the Kings Coast Parts Distributing Company, under a conditional sales contract, in which the Kings Coast Parts Distributing Company retained the title. The car was duly registered for the year 1922 in the name of H. S. Smith, of San Francisco, as legal owner, and Walter B. Lomax as registered owner. Lomax took possession of the car, used it in his business for some months, and made certain payments under the contract, but being unable to keep up the payments, suit was instituted to recover possession of the car, but before judgment was entered in this action, Lomax, in the early spring of 1923, surrendered the car to Max Arnold, who was supposed to be the agent of the legal owner. Mr. Lomax had an understanding with Mr. Arnold that the car would be sold by Arnold, and if it brought in excess of the amount due on the car, then the excess was to be paid to Lomax. Lomax at that time signed his name on the registration certificate as registered owner. Arnold kept the car in his garage, or the garage of the Kings Coast Parts Distributing Company, without any attempt to re-register the car with the motor vehicle department, until about the 25th of August, 1923, when he sold it again under a conditional sales contract to plaintiff, Midwest Air Filters Pacific, Inc., a corporation, but all of the business pertaining to this second sale and purchase was had with Lomax, and in the second transfer a new registration was issued by the motor vehicle department and registered in the name of the Kings Coast Parts Distributing Company as legal owner, and Midwest Air Filters Pacific, Inc., as registered owner, and the car turned over again to Walter B. Lomax, who continued to keep it in his possession, and use it in his business as traveling salesman until taken by the sheriff on or about the said 24th of January, 1924. Between the time that Lomax returned the car to Max Arnold, in default of payments on the first purchase, and the time he received it back on or about the 25th of August, 1923, he had incorporated the plaintiff corporation, under the laws of the state of California, and on the 22d day of July, 1923, received a certified copy of the articles of incorporation from the secretary of state. At this point it is well to state that Midwest Air Filters Pacific, Inc., was almost entirely, if not wholly, governed and controlled by Walter B. Lomax; he was a stockholder and its general manager. The other stockholders and officers were his wife and a lady by the name of Luce, who lived in the Lomax family, but apparently had no knowledge of the affairs of the corporation. Lomax had been the agent of certain Eastern manufacturers on the Pacific Coast before this corporation was formed, and continued to represent the same manufacturers through this corporation after its incorporation.

"Defendants contend that the conditional sales contract from Max Arnold, as seller, to the plaintiff, Midwest Air Filters Pacific, Inc., a corporation, buyer, dated August 25, 1923, under which the plaintiff claims to own the car in question, is illegal and void for the reason that the said plaintiff was not at that time authorized to transact any business.

"This contention is based upon that portion of section 296 of the Civil Code which provides that no corporation shall be authorized to transact any business until it shall have filed, in the office of the county clerk of the county in which its principal business is to be transacted, a copy of the articles of incorporation, certified by the secretary of state.

"It will be remembered that the plaintiff corporation received its certificate of incorporation from the secretary of state on the 22d day of July, 1923, and that its principal place of business, as stated in the articles of incorporation, was the city and county of San Francisco, and that the certified copy of the articles of incorporation were not filed in the office of the county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco until the 29th of January, 1924, just a short time prior to the commencement of this present action. Therefore, at the time the contract in question was entered into for the purchase of the car, to wit, August 25, 1923, the plaintiff corporation had not complied with all the provisions of said section 296 of the Civil Code. Thus we have a situation where the statute expressly prohibits a corporation from transacting any business until a certified copy of its articles of incorporation are filed with the county clerk of the county where its principal business is to be transacted, but does not prescribe a penalty for a violation thereof. Neither does it state that any contract made in the transaction of any business before the requirement is fulfilled is void."

[1] We cannot accede to the appellants' contention, which contention was sustained by the District Court of Appeal, supra, that the contract under which the respondent corporation asserts title to the automobile in question is illegal and void for the reason that respondent had failed to seasonably comply with the provisions of section 296 of the Civil Code. In our opinion the respondent must be deemed to have been at least, a de facto corporation at the time of its execution of said contract. The requisites to constitute a corporation de facto are three: (1) A charter or general law under which such a corporation as it purports to be might lawfully be organized; (2) a bona fide attempt to organize thereunder; and (3) an actual user of the corporate franchise. Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Shepard, 185 U. S. 1, 13, 22 S. Ct. 531, 46 L. Ed. 773; Westlake Park Inv. Co. v. Jordan, 198 Cal. 609, 613, 614, 246 P. 807; Vallejo, etc., R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 560, 147 P. 238; Newcomb-Endicott Co. v. Fee, 167 Mich. 574, 133 N. W. 540, 542; 6 Cal. Jur. 656, § 66.

[2] The particular question presented in this action has arisen upon numerous occasions in other jurisdictions having statutes substantially identical in form with our section 296 of the Civil Code. Research of the authorities has disclosed that, where the requirements of the law as conditions precedent to organization have been fully complied with and the stockholders and directors have proceeded to act under the corporate franchise, the entity becomes a de facto corporation, notwithstanding its noncompliance with a statute requiring, as a condition precedent to the transaction of business, the filing of a copy of the articles of incorporation in the county where the principal business of the corporation is to be transacted. Newcomb-Endicott Co. v. Fee, supra; Tisch Auto Supply Co. v. Nelson, 222 Mich. 196, 192 N. W. 600, 602; Swofford Bros. Co. v. Owen, 37 Okl. 616, 133 P. 193, 196, L. R. A. 1916C, 189; Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 397, 25 L. Ed. 1050; Inter-Ocean Newspaper Co. v. Robertson, 296 Ill. 92, 129 N. E. 523, 524; The Joliet v. Frances, 85 Ill. App. 243, 249, 250; American University v. Wood, 216 Ill. App. 189, 194.

Newcomb-Endicott Co. v. Fee, supra, was an action to recover the price of certain goods. The statute therein involved likewise required, as a condition precedent to the transaction of business by a corporation, that a copy of its articles be filed in the county where the principal business of such corporation was to be transacted. At the time the indebtedness was incurred the corporation had not complied with said statute, though, as here, it subsequently made the necessary filing. It was held in that case that the entity constituted a de facto corporation, notwithstanding its failure to file a copy of its articles of incorporation prior to the commencement of business.

In Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. Ed. 1050, the court, after referring to the point made by counsel that the corporation at the date of the order was forbidden to do any business, not having then filed its articles of association as required by the statute, said:

"The restriction imposed by the statute is a simple inhibition. It did not declare that what was done should be void, nor was any penalty prescribed. No one but the state could object. The contract is valid as to the plaintiff, and he has no right to raise the question of its invalidity."

[3, 4] The requirement of section 296 of our Civil Code that a copy of the articles of incorporation be filed in the county wherein the corporation is to transact its principal business is not a condition precedent to corporate organization. Provisions in general incorporation laws, prescribing conditions precedent to corporate existence, must be distinguished from provisions merely prescribing conditions to be complied with after acquiring corporate existence. Noncompliance with such a condition subsequent does not affect the existence of the corporation, although it may be ground for a proceeding by the state to forfeit the charter or franchise. Mokelumne Hill Min. Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 424, 426, 73 Am. Dec. 658. Conditions precedent to the right to engage in business after the corporation has been formed are conditions subsequent, a noncompliance with which, while it may give the state a right to maintain proceedings to forfeit the franchise, does not, in the absence of such proceedings, in any way affect the legal existence of the corporation.

[5-7] Prior to the respondent's filing of a copy of its articles of incorporation in the county of its principal place of business and at the time it contracted to purchase the automobile in question, there existed the three necessary elements to constitute it a de facto corporation, viz.: A general law authorizing its incorporation, a bona fide attempt to organize thereunder, and a user of the corporate franchise. No other objection than the one under consideration has been urged by the appellants as to the respondent's corporate existence. It is undisputed that there was a bona fide attempt to organize a corporation under our statutes. The presumption, in view of such circumstance, is strongly in favor of an honest intention to form a corporation. It follows, therefore, both from principle and by the great weight of authority, that the respondent at the time it contracted for the acquisition of the automobile in question was, at least, a de facto corporation. Had a copy of its articles of incorporation been filed with the clerk of the county wherein its principal business was to be transacted, it would have been, so far as the record before us discloses, a de jure corporation. The copy not having been seasonably filed, the right of the then de facto corporation to act within the scope of its corporate authority and to bind and be bound by its acts was none the less effective. This being so, the then legal existence of the respondent corporation cannot now be called into question collaterally. Section 358, Civ. Code. Nor is the respondent now precluded from asserting any property rights acquired by it prior to the filing of a copy of its articles as provided in section 296 of the Civil Code. Utah L. & T. Co. v. United States (C. A.) 230 F. 343, 346.

It is stated in Westlake Park Inv. Co. v. Jordan, supra, that:

"The philosophy upon which the courts of practically every state and of the United States have gone far toward upholding the existence de facto of corporations which have colorably attempted to organize under statutes permitting incorporation for the general purposes which the persons forming the same seek to incorporate, and which have thereafter in good faith proceeded to function as such corporations, is that the law encourages and shares in the universal desire for the stability of business transactions, and that, where such an organization has thus attempted to be created and has in fact organized and entered upon the transaction of business in good faith, the validity of its existence ought not to be inquired into collaterally."

[8] The appellants next urge that the contract, under which the respondent asserts title to the automobile, was not properly executed. In support of this contention it is asserted that said contract does not comply with the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 1624 of the Civil Code, in that the duplicate copy of the purchase order, introduced in evidence as "Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1," does not bear the signature of either the purchaser or seller. It is expressly provided in subdivision 4 of section 1624 of the Civil Code that a written contract or memorandum thereof covering the sale of personal property at a price in excess of $200 is not required when there has been either a part payment or delivery under the agreement of the parties. The record in the instant case discloses that the respondent corporation had not only paid a part of the contract price of the automobile but had accepted delivery of said vehicle through its authorized agent. The provisions of the statute of frauds (subdivision 4, § 1624, Civ. Code) were therefore satisfied. This conclusion renders unnecessary any discussion as to whether the original copy of the contract, which was not introduced in evidence, bore the signatures of the parties thereto, as asserted by the respondent.

[9] We are unable to agree with the appellants' further contention that said contract is void as being in violation of section 3440 of the Civil Code. The record discloses that Walter B. Lomax, the original purchaser of the car under a conditional sales contract, had returned the same to the legal owner after the latter had procured a judgment or was about to procure a judgment against him in an action instituted to recover the unpaid installments of the purchase price. Some months thereafter, and while the car was still in the possession of the legal owner, it was purchased under the contract in question by the respondent corporation and delivery thereof was then made by the legal owner. In view of these circumstances, it cannot be said that the purchase of the automobile by the respondent corporation violated in any manner the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code. There was, in fact, a change of possession from the legal owner to the respondent corporation, thus distinguishing this case from Abrahams v. Hammel, 40 Cal. App. 11, 180 P. 41, and Joseph Herspring Co. v. Jones, 55 Cal. App. 620, 203 P. 1038, cited by the appellants. Moreover, "Defendant's Exhibit 2," appended to the transcript, reveals that the division of motor vehicles had on August 27, 1923, and prior to the levy of execution, issued its certificate of registration designating the respondent corporation as the registered owner of the automobile in question.

[10, 11] It is next urged by the appellants that the respondent corporation did not constitute a separate and distinct legal person from Walter B. Lomax, and that the corporation and the individual should be treated as identical. In proper cases, equity will look behind the corporate entity and consider who are the real and substantial parties in interest, whenever it becomes necessary to promote justice, or obviate inequitable results, and the law will follow equity in this respect. Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 10, 200 P. 641. In this case it appears that Walter B. Lomax and John R. Steffens, copartners, were agents for certain eastern companies, which required the formation of a corporation in order to handle their business. Steffens retired from the partnership and Lomax formed the corporation, now the plaintiff here. There is nothing in the record to challenge the good faith of the parties in the formation of the corporation, or to contradict the testimony that the incorporators, other than Walter B. Lomax, subscribed and actually paid for shares of stock in the corporation. Mrs. Lomax appears to have been its financial backer. No issue was tendered by the pleadings in the court below on the question now raised by appellants. The evidence is insufficient to support the contention now raised and the findings are silent on the subject.

201 Cal. 502

PRICE et al. v. SIXTH DIST. AGRICULTURAL ASS'N et al. (L. A. 8448.)

Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1927.

1. Judgment ⇨720—Issue determined in former suit is conclusively settled by judgment as between parties (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1908, 1909).

Fact or question actually in issue in former suit and there judicially passed on by court of competent jurisdiction is conclusively settled by judgment as concerns parties under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1908, 1909.

2. Judgment ⇨720—Judgment holding lease valid in mandamus action held res judicata of validity of subsequent lease covering identical subject-matter in injunction suit involving same parties.

Where same parties were involved, judgment in mandamus action against mayor and chairman of board of supervisors of county, holding lease agreement from city to community development association, in consideration of erection of stadium, valid, held res judicata of question of validity of later contract covering same subject-matter, in suit to enjoin erection of stadium under such contract.

3. Judgment ⇨725(6)—Adjudication as to written instrument is binding between parties when identical issue is again raised, notwithstanding subject-matter of second action is different.

Where contract, lease, conveyance, or other obligation has been adjudicated as to its existence, validity, or construction in one action, judgment is res judicata when identical issue is raised in another action between same parties, though immediate subject-matter of two actions is different.

4. Judgment ⇨713(2)—Previous determination of issue held binding on parties notwithstanding possible omission to urge matters which might have produced opposite result.

Where issue as to validity of lease contract was determined by judgment in former action, such judgment was binding in subsequent action between same parties litigant, notwithstanding parties may have omitted to urge for or against it matters which, if urged, would have produced opposite result.

5. Judgment ⇨713(2)—Inquiry respecting issue litigated is foreclosed between identical parties as to all matters urged or which might have been urged.

When issue has been litigated, all inquiry respecting such issue is foreclosed as between identical parties, not only as to matters urged, but also as to matters which could have been urged in support of or in opposition thereto.

6. Judgment ⇨702—Joinder of other defendants in suit against city and county to enjoin improvement under lease similar to that previously upheld held not to prevent application of rule that parties are deemed the same (Code Civ. Proc. § 1910).

Joinder of other parties with city and county as defendants, in suit to enjoin construction of stadium on ground of invalidity of lease given development association by city and county, held not to prevent application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1910, under which it is assumed same parties were involved as in former suit to require city and county officers to execute lease, making former decision as to validity of similar lease conclusive.

7. Judgment ⇨702—Judgments against municipal corporation or its officers on matters relating to public interest are binding on citizens.

Judgment for or against municipal corporation, county, town, or other local governmental agency or district or its officers is binding on residents, citizens, and taxpayers in respect to matters adjudicated which are of public and general interest.

8. Judgment ⇨702—Public interest in suit in which municipality is interested may be represented by mayor or chairman of board of supervisors.

Where fraud and collusion are absent, public interest may be represented by mayor or chairman of board of supervisors of county as well as by set of taxpayers, so as to render judgment in suit in which city or county is so represented binding on taxpayers or residents.

9. Judgment ⇨702—Suit by taxpayers against city and county and others to enjoin improvement under alleged invalid lease held to involve same parties as former mandamus action by city and county against officers to require execution of similar lease (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1908, 1909, 1910).

Injunction suit by citizens and taxpayers against city and county and others to enjoin construction of stadium under alleged invalid lease from city and county held to involve same parties as former mandamus action brought by city and county against mayor and chairman of board of county supervisors to require execution of previous lease contract covering same subject-matter, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1908, 1909, 1910, rendering former adjudication binding on parties to second suit.

10. Judgment ⇨552—Doctrine of res judicata applies to judgments in mandamus proceedings, if rendered on merits.

Doctrine of res judicata is not impaired because former suit in which judgment was rendered was mandamus proceeding, provided judgment was on merits.

11. Action ⇨8—Implied finding in mandamus action by city and county against officers that action, though friendly suit, was not collusive held supported, where litigation was carried to highest court.

Implied finding of court, in mandamus proceedings previously brought by city and county to require officers to execute lease to development association for erection of stadium, that proceedings were not collusive, held supported in injunction suit to prevent such erection, notwithstanding litigation constituted friendly suit, where it was fought in good faith through District Court of Appeal and carried to Supreme Court.

12. Judgment ⚖️725(6)—Binding decision in former action as to validity of contract held to apply to lease under which contract was executed.

Adjudication of validity of contract between city and county and development association for erection of stadium held to involve question of validity of lease of property to city making lease's validity res judicata in subsequent action between same parties involving identical issue.

13. Municipal corporations ⚖️1000(1)—Taxpayers suing to enjoin construction of improvement held barred by laches from attacking validity of lease of speedway to city (St. 1880, p. 62).

In suit by taxpayers to enjoin construction of stadium on property leased to development association by city, plaintiffs held barred by laches from attacking validity of lease of speedway from agricultural association organized under St. 1880, p. 62, to city under original trust created in property, where lease was entered into with plaintiffs' knowledge eight years previous.

14. Pleading ⚖️380—Facts to be relied on must be pleaded.

Facts cannot be relied on at trial unless pleaded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Suit by Charles C. Price and others against the Sixth District Agricultural Association and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Kiggins & Hoffman, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent Sixth District Agricultural Ass'n.

Edward T. Bishop, Co. Counsel (1924), Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and Albert Leeds, Deputy Co. Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for respondent County of Los Angeles.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., Lucius P. Green, Asst. City Atty., Charles MacCoy, Deputy City Atty., and Jerrell Babb, Deputy City Attorney, all of Los Angeles, for respondent City of Los Angeles.

Flint & MacKay, and William A. Bowen, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Community Development Ass'n.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel (1927), and Pierce Works, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent County of Los Angeles.

PRESTON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the trial court in favor of defendants in an action brought by plaintiffs as citizens and taxpayers of the city and county of Los Angeles to enjoin the construction of a public improvement known as a stadium, or "Coliseum," in Exposition Park, Los Angeles, and to have canceled and set aside certain lease agreements relative thereto. Sixth District Agricultural Association will be referred to hereinafter as "Sixth District," Community Development Association as "Association," city of Los Angeles as "City," and county of Los Angeles as "County."

In the year 1885 the territory known as Exposition Park was conveyed to Sixth District, a public corporation organized under the Act of April 15, 1880 (Stats. 1880, p. 62), to be held by it in perpetuity upon the following trusts:

"* * * In trust nevertheless for the following uses and purposes, to wit: That is to say that the said lands first hereinbefore described shall be held in perpetuity as a place for holding agricultural exhibitions or fairs, and shall be managed and controlled by the party of the second part for that purpose; and also for the purpose so far as consistent therewith of leasing or otherwise managing the same so as to raise a revenue for meeting the expenses of holding such exhibitions or fairs; and especially so far as consistent with the above purposes, for the purpose of holding exhibitions of horses, cattle and other stock, and of the agricultural, horticultural, viticultural, mechanical, manufacturing and domestic products of Agricultural District No. 6, with a view to the improvement of all the industries in the same. * * *"

That portion of the tract lying outside the race track or speedway is referred to as parcel A, that portion lying within the speedway is referred to as parcel B, and the third portion is designated as the speedway itself.

On February 23, 1910, the city leased a portion of this territory from Sixth District for a term of 50 years. This lease was supplanted by a subsequent agreement, dated May 21, 1912, by the terms of which Sixth District leased to the city parcels A and B for a period of 50 years running from date of the first lease, February 23, 1910, with a right of renewal on the part of the city for a second 50 years. Certain reservations were made in favor of the lessor. The city agreed to lay out and improve the land as and for a public playground and athletic field, under the direction of the playground commissioners, subject to approval of the lessor. It was also agreed that the premises should at all reasonable times be open to the public as a place for exhibiting agricultural, horticultural and botanical products and for the recreation and enjoyment of all persons.

On December 31, 1914, the Sixth District leased to the city the third portion of said tract, to wit, the speedway, grandstand, and stables, thus making the city the lessee of practically the entire territory known as Exposition Park.

On June 21, 1920, a lease agreement was drawn up and approved by Sixth District, whereby the city agreed to lease parcel B to Community Development Association, a "non-profit co-operative corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, with the power and for the purpose of holding and maintaining industrial exhibitions, agricultural fairs, street pageants, athletic exhibitions, and other performances designed to foster, promote, and promulgate the industries and industrial welfare of the people of the state of California, and to lease and rent lands and construct buildings thereon for any or all of said purposes, and to lease out such buildings when constructed." By the proposed convention, the "principal consideration" passing from the association to the city was the erection and construction of a certain stadium; the lease was to terminate February 23, 1960, but the interest of the association after ten years was to be merely nominal; upon construction the stadium was to be leased to the city and county at certain stated periods, subject to certain reservations in favor of Sixth District, and in consideration of such lease of the structure the city and county each agreed to pay rentals to the association as follows: $50,000 within six months after commencement of construction; $62,000 within thirty days after its completion; $68,000 one year after date of the last preceding payment; $65,000 two years after that date; $62,000 three years after that date; $59,000 four years after that date; $56,000 five years after that date; and $53,000 six years after that date—or the total sum of $475,000 from each of said bodies politic, a total of $950,000 from the two together.

It further provided that at the expiration of ten years the association should vacate the demised premises and deliver possession to the city and county.

This proposed agreement was approved and accepted by the board of supervisors of the county and the council of the city, but Jonathan S. Dodge, as chairman of said board, and Meredith P. Snyder, as mayor of the city each refused to execute the instrument. Mandamus proceedings were instituted against each of these officials; the two cases were tried together, and a decision was handed down upholding the validity of the stadium lease agreement and ordering its execution by the respective officers on behalf of said city and county, whereupon said instrument was duly executed. County of Los Angeles v. Dodge and City of Los Angeles v. Snyder, 51 Cal. App. 492, 197 P. 403, petition for hearing in this court denied, April 23, 1921.

Subsequent to the above decision, however, said lease agreement was redrafted, and a new instrument, dated November 15, 1921, was duly executed to replace the former agreement of June 21, 1920. But three slight changes were made, however, altering description of the property and amounts of rental payments and adding a clause releasing officers and members of the association from personal liability. It is upon said agreement of November 15, 1921, attempting to ignore the prior contract of June 21, 1920, that this action is based. At the time of the trial the stadium was far on the road to completion and the race track had been repaired and substantially restored to its former good condition.

The court in this behalf, on undisputed evidence, found as follows:

"That thereafter, said lease agreement was amended by changing the date thereof, by changing the sums of money to be paid thereunder by the defendants, the county and the city, to the defendant Community Development Association, by changing the description of the property referred to in said lease agreement, and by adding the provisions set forth in lines 20 to 31, page 25 of plaintiffs' complaint, by reference to the personal liability of the officers and members of the Community Development Association.

"That said lease agreement as amended was in substance the same as the lease agreement set forth in said petitions, and contained in substance the same terms, conditions and provisions, and described in substance the same property. That so amended said lease agreement was duly re-executed by the respective parties thereto, and is the agreement referred to in paragraph XIII in said complaint on file herein.

"That said lease agreement as amended was approved by the city counsel of the city of Los Angeles, and by the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles, and the mayor of said city was by said city council and the chairman of said board was by said board of supervisors duly ordered to execute said lease agreement as so amended, and the same was duly executed in accordance with said authority.

"That there was made or could properly have been made in said proceedings had before said District Court of Appeal, each and every contention or claim made in the above entitled action, that the said lease agreement referred to in paragraph 13 of said complaint is illegal or that any or all of the terms and conditions thereof is or are unlawful or unenforceable, or that it is unlawful or wrongful to construct the stadium referred to in said lease agreement, or that it is illegal or wrongful for the county of Los Angeles and the city of Los Angeles to pay to the Community Development Association any or all of the moneys agreed in said lease agreement to be so paid by the county of Los Angeles and the city of Los Angeles.

"That plaintiffs in the present case were represented by the respective parties in those certain actions entitled City of Los Angeles v. Meredith P. Snyder and County of Los Angeles v. Jonathan S. Dodge [197 P. 403], filed in the District Court of Appeal of the State of California, Second Appellate Division, No. 2, on the 21st day of June, 1920.

"That in and by the pleadings of the respective parties in said cases, all of the questions and issues, both of fact and of law, which are now presented to this court for determination, were or could have been in said cases presented to said District Court of Appeal, and the Judgments of said court in said cases rendered on the 23d day of February, 1921, are binding and conclusive upon the parties hereto."

[1, 2] Respondents assert that the foregoing findings show that the cause of action in the former suit and in the present suit are identical and that under section 1910 of the Code of Civil Procedure the parties are likewise identical, and that such facts compel the application of the rule announced in 23 Cyc. 1215, as follows:

"A fact or question which was actually and directly in issue in a former suit, and was there judicially passed upon and determined by a domestic court of competent jurisdiction, is conclusively settled by the judgment therein, so far as concerns the parties to that action and persons in privity with them, and cannot be again litigated in any future action between such parties or privies, in the same court or in any other court of concurrent jurisdiction, upon the same or a different cause of action."

This rule is similarly stated in 34 Corpus Juris, § 1162, p. 750, where it is said:

"A judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction on the merits is a bar to any future suit between the same parties or their privies, upon the same cause of action, in the same or another court, so long as it remains unreversed and not in any way vacated or annulled."

It is stated in 15 Ruling Case Law, § 429, pp. 950, 951, as follows:

"Briefly stated, this doctrine is that an existing final judgment or decree rendered upon the merits, and without fraud or collusion, by a court of competent jurisdiction, upon a matter within its jurisdiction, is conclusive of the rights of the parties or their privies, in all other actions or suits in the same or any other judicial tribunal of concurrent jurisdiction, on the points and matters in issue in the first suit."

In sections 1908 and 1909 of the Code of Civil Procedure this rule has likewise been announced. It has also been adhered to in scores of cases in this court which need not here be cited. Appellants, admitting the general rule, however, seek to avoid the effect thereof by asserting that the causes of action are not the same; that the contract of June 21, 1920, made the subject of judgment by the District Court of Appeal on February 23, 1921, is not the basis of the cause of action here involved predicated upon the contract of November 15, 1921. But it is undisputed that the latter contract is but a recast of the former and that the subject-matter covered by the two contracts is the same. The issue tendered by both agreements is as to the power of the city or county to contract in the same way respecting identical subject-matter. In that sense the causes of action are identical. Appellants make no attack upon the contract of November 15, 1921, because of the amendments thereto. They assert no infirmity in the latter contract that is not likewise applicable, if correct, to the former. In order to overthrow the latter contract, it is necessary to overturn in toto the former. Indeed, it is axiomatic that if the former contract is legal and valid, the latter is valid also. We have no hesitancy, therefore, in concluding that the causes of action are substantially the same and that the rule of law above announced is applicable, provided always that the parties are identical.

[3] Moreover, it is immaterial under the peculiar facts of this case whether the causes of action be the same or not. Appellants in this connection cite Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.) pp. 1416, 1417, as follows:

"* * * A former adjudication may be used for two different purposes, namely, either as a complete bar to the relitigation of the same cause of action, or as conclusive evidence of some fact or issue common to different causes of action."

See, also, Horton v. Goodenough, 184 Cal. 451, 461, 194 P. 34.

But the fact is that the issue determined by the former suit is the only issue presented by the present suit. Quoting again from Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.) § 672, p. 1418:

"If the existence, validity or construction of a contract, lease, conveyance or other obligation has been adjudicated in one action it is res judicata when it comes again in issue in another action between the same parties, though the immediate subject-matter of the two actions be different."

The principle above announced has been sustained in numerous cases before this court, some of which are the following: Koehler v. Holt Mfg. Co., 146 Cal. 335, 337, 80 P. 73; Borland v. Borland, 56 Cal. App. 638, 206 P. 478 (rehearing denied by Supreme Court). Federal cases: Southern Pacific v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 18 S. Ct. 18, 42 L. Ed. 355, 357; Bissell v. Spring Valley Township, 124 U. S. 225, 8 S. Ct. 495, 31 L. Ed. 411, 413; Mason Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 638, 25 L. Ed. 1072; Fitch v. Stanton Township (C. C. A.) 190 F. 310. These cases are, of course, to be distinguished from a case where a cause of action arises out of the same subject-matter, but upon a new set of facts not obtaining at the time of the former judgment. This principle is illustrated by the case of Silva v. Reclamation Dist. No. 1001, 41 Cal. App. 326, 329, 182 P. 786. See, also, Jones v. Petaluma, 36 Cal. 230; Shanklin v. Gray, 111 Cal. 88, 43 P. 399; People v. Rodgers, 118 Cal. 393, 46 P. 740, 50 P. 668.

[4, 5] Appellants, however, apparently have a misconception of this rule. They seem to contend that an issue heard and determined in a former case is binding only as to such grounds supporting or opposing said issue as were actually urged and litigated. But an issue may not be thus split into pieces. If it has been determined in a former action, it is binding notwithstanding the parties litigant may have omitted to urge for or against it matters which, if urged, would have produced an opposite result. In other words, when an issue has been litigated all inquiry respecting the same is foreclosed, not only as to matters heard but also as to matters that could have been heard in support of or in opposition thereto. This rule has been aptly stated as follows:

"It is important to note in this connection, however, that even though the causes of action be different, if the second action involves a right, title or issue as to which the judgment in the first action is a conclusive adjudication, the estoppel so far as that right, title or issue is concerned must likewise extend to every matter which was or might have been urged to sustain or defeat the determination actually made." Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.) § 677, p. 1432.

To the same effect see Sullivan v. Triunfo Gold, etc., Min. Co., 39 Cal. 459. Numerous California cases may be found where this rule has been applied.

This principle also operates to demand of a defendant that all his defenses to the cause of action urged by the plaintiff be asserted under the penalty of forever losing the right to thereafter so urge them. The rule has been stated as follows:

"The defendant in an action is ordinarily required to set up all his defenses which do not constitute separate causes of action, and if he neglects to do so is concluded by the judgment rendered in such action. The judgment operates as res judicata, not only in regard to the existence of the plaintiff's cause of action, but as to the nonexistence of the defense which was not pleaded. The reason for this rule lies in the principle that there must be an end to litigation, and, where a party has an opportunity to present his defense and neglects to do so, the demands of the law require that he should take the consequences." 15 Ruling Case Law, § 446, pp. 969, 970.

This principle is illustrated in our California decisions by such cases as Bingham v. Kearney, 136 Cal. 175, 177, 68 P. 597, where it is said:

"It is not the policy of the law to allow a new and different suit between the same parties, concerning the same subject-matter, that has already been litigated. Neither will the law allow the parties to trifle with the courts by piecemeal litigation. When plaintiff was brought into court by defendant in the former case, she certainly knew her rights. If she wished to rescind the contract, or if she had rescinded it, as she said in her answer she had done, then and there was the time to present her pleadings and evidence, and insist upon all rights to which she was entitled under the law. If she could not get the award of the law upon the facts in the lower court, she could have appealed. She did not do so. She is now met by the presumption that all the facts and matters in controversy were disposed of in the former suit, and the further presumption that the judgment in the former suit is correct. If she failed to assert her claim properly, or to present the proper evidence in the first suit, she will not now be permitted in a second to litigate it. The principles herein stated are elementary. They are stated in the late case of Quirk v. Rooney, 130 Cal. 510 [62 P. 825]."

In said case of Quirk v. Rooney, 130 Cal. 505, 510, 62 P. 825, 827, it was said:

"The facts stated are substantially the same, and the object sought precisely the same. The court below evidently thought that the letter of May 1, 1892, was sufficient to establish and charge appellant as trustee of the lands for the plaintiff as one of the heirs of Bryan Lynch. If so, it is unfortunate for plaintiff that the letter was not introduced in evidence in the former suit; but the plaintiff had her day in court, her case was tried upon the evidence she then had, and a final judgment reached. If a new action could be commenced and a case retried because of the discovery of new facts, after the case had been finally disposed of, there would be no end of litigation, and a case could be kept in court forever."

Practically the whole contention of appellants may be summed up in this: They contend that the causes of action are different, and because of such fact they may litigate the entire subject-matter of the contract on November 15, 1921, without regard to the fact that the objects sought are precisely the same as those sought by the defendants in the former actions, to wit, to have it declared that the city or county may not contract in the manner proposed respecting the construction of a public improvement such as a stadium; and, furthermore, they assert that if the above stated position be not sound, nevertheless, they should be allowed to urge any point going to the validity of the contracts of 1920 and 1921, which was not specifically urged as a defense to said former suits. The rules of law and the authorities above set forth conclusively show appellants to be mistaken as to both these propositions. We therefore conclude without hesitation that if the parties be assumed to be identical, every issue raised by the pleadings in the present cause has been conclusively adjudicated against the contention of appellants, and they and each of them are bound by such adjudication. And this is true in the case whether or not the causes of action are in fact the same.

[6, 7] This brings us to the question as to whether or not the parties are the same. The fact that there are defendants and respondents other than the city and county does not prevent the application of the rule that the parties are deemed to be the same. Code Civ. Proc. § 1910; Suisun L. Co. v. Fairfield School Dist., 19 Cal. App. 587, 594, 127 P. 349.

"In the absence of fraud or collusion, a judgment for or against a municipal corporation, county, town, school or irrigation district, or other local governmental agency or district, or a board or officers properly representing it, is binding and conclusive on all residents, citizens, and taxpayers in respect to matters adjudicated which are of general and public interest, such as questions relating to public property, contracts, or other obligations." 34 Corpus Juris, § 1459, p. 1028.

See, also, 23 Cyc., p. 1269.

The principle above announced is of universal application, and appellants occupy no different position than other taxpayers of the city or county and in the absence of fraud or collusion there appears no valid reason for denying application of the rule to them.

[8, 9] Appellants make the point that, inasmuch as the former suits were in reality County of Los Angeles v. Chairman of the Board of Supervisors and City of Los Angeles v. Mayor, the rule should not apply. If, however, fraud and collusion be absent, the public interest may be as well represented by the mayor or chairman of the board of supervisors as by any set of taxpayers. For example, the fact that a man has been elected mayor of the city is no reason to suspect that he will not properly represent the public interest, and when such officer defends an action relating to a public contract, no reason can be found why he may not be a suitable, if not the most suitable, representative of the public interest in the matter. This very question was raised in State ex rel. Davis v. Willis, 19 N. D. 209, 124 N. W. 706. There the estoppel by judgment was made to rest upon the case of State ex rel. McCue v. Blaisdell, 18 N. D. 31, 119 N. W. 360, which was a suit by the Attorney General applying for a writ of certiorari against the Secretary of State, and in this connection the court, in disposing of the contention that the taxpayer was not a party to the suit, said:

"Appellant urges, however, that he is not bound by any of the facts adjudged in that proceeding, for the reason that he was not a party thereto, and that the record of that proceeding nowhere discloses any connection of his with that case. It is apparent, however, that plaintiff, acting as he does in a representative capacity, is, constructively at least, a party to any action or proceeding in which the same interest was plaintiff. * * * Standing as he does as representative in a matter of general interest to all of the citizens of Ward county, he is concluded with reference to any state of fact which was or might have been adjudged against that interest in a former action in which the same interest was plaintiff or defendant."

See, also, Floersheim v. Board of Commissioners, 28 N. M. 330, 212 P. 451, where the court said:

"Where a suit is brought to determine a public right, involving a matter of general interest, as, for example, the suit of Martinez as a resident and taxpayer in behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, to enjoin the issuance of courthouse and jail bonds by Harding county, all citizens and taxpayers of the county are parties to the proceeding by representation, and are bound by the judgment, not only as to matters which were litigated, but also as to matters which existed at the time and which could have been litigated in the case, the same as the actual formal parties on the record, regardless of whether they had actual notice of the pendency of the suit or not [citing many cases]."

See, also, Pear v. East St. Louis, 273 Ill. 501, 113 N. E. 60.

[10] This doctrine is not impaired because the former suits were judgments in mandamus proceedings so long as the judgments were on the merits.

"It is well settled that a final judgment rendered upon the merits of an application for a peremptory writ of mandamus comes within the principle of res judicata, and is a bar to another application for the same writ by the same party under the same circumstances, or to another action involving the same issues and in which the same relief is sought." 34 Corpus Juris, p. 760, § 1173.

See Visher v. Smith, 92 Cal. 60, 28 P. 94; Santa Cruz Gap Turnp. Joint-Stock Co. v. Santa Clara County, 62 Cal. 40; Cohn v. Isensee, 45 Cal. App. 509, 188 P. 278; Sauls v. Freeman, 24 Fla. 209, 4 So. 525, 12 Am. St. Rep. 190; Ashton v. Rochester, 133 N. Y. 187, 30 N. E. 965, 31 N. E. 334, 28 Am. St. Rep. 619; Montgomery v. Walker, 154 Ala. 243, 45 So. 586, 129 Am. St. Rep. 54; Shanahan v. South Omaha, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 466, 89 N. W. 285. In Sauls v. Freeman, supra, the court said:

"If the judgment in mandamus was not as effectual, upon the principle of res adjudicata, against the inhabitants of the county as it is against the county commissioners, there would be no end to litigation in such cases or in any cases against county officials as such."

This doctrine is likewise recognized by California in the case of Suisun L. Co. v. Fairfield School Dist., supra. The cases relied upon by appellants such as Price v. Gwin, 144 Ind. 105, 43 N. E. 5; People ex rel. Graff v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 247 Ill. 340, 93 N. E. 422; and No. Pac. R. Co. v. Snohomish County, 101 Wash. 686, 172 P. 878, are cases where either this question is not discussed, or where the taxpayer had a special interest in the litigation, or where the party did not represent the public interest. In other words, in all said cases where the question was discussed, special circumstances were present making inapplicable the rule above announced, but in no case cited is the existence of the rule denied. In the case of In re Central Irrigation District, 117 Cal. 382, 49 P. 354, the statement made is obiter, and, moreover, the doctrine of the law of the case is there confused with the doctrine of estoppel by judgment. Furthermore, that case is not followed in any of the later cases on this subject.

[11] Appellants, in an apologetic manner, also raise the question of collusion between the parties to the aforesaid mandamus proceedings. The court impliedly found against this contention and, we think, properly so. It may well have been that the mayor of the city and the chairman of the board of supervisors would have liked to see this public improvement carried out; nevertheless, it is a fact found by the court and warranted by the evidence that these officers doubted the legal validity of the contract and the power of the city and county to enter into it. It is also true that reputable counsel of high standing representing the interested parties denied the validity of the contract and the power of the city and county to enter into it and the interests financing the construction of the improvement refused to proceed until the validity of the contract had been determined. The litigation was thereupon fought in good faith with fairness and earnestness, not only through the District Court of Appeal, but through to the Supreme Court of the state, and upon such a showing the conclusion must be that the court's implied finding that collusion was absent, is supported. In Floersheim v. Board of Commissioners, supra, speaking of this contention, the court said:

"It will be seen from an examination of the allegations of the reply, heretofore quoted, that the substance and effect of the allegations is that the suit was a friendly suit, and the plaintiff was, in fact, desirous that the validity of the bonds should be established. If a real controversy existed, as it evidently did in this case, as to the validity of these bonds, the action of a qualified person in behalf of himself and others represented by him is not condemned by the law merely because the suit is a friendly suit, but, on the other hand, the law commends such action. 1 C. J. p. 974; Parker v. State, 132 Ind. 419, 31 N. E. 1114; State v. Dolley, 82 Kan. 533, 108 P. 846; Ex parte Steele (D. C.) 162 F. 694; Adams v. Union R. Co., 21 R. I. 140, 42 A. 515, 44 L. R. A. 273. The personal desires of the parties as to the result of the litigation are of no moment provided no fraud or collusion is resorted to."

We therefore, conclude that not only was the cause of action in the prior litigation the same as in the present, but that the parties were likewise the same and that the judgments entered in said former proceedings are conclusive upon appellants here as to the validity of the contract of November 15, 1921.

[12, 13] Further attacks are made directly against the agreements known as the lease of May 21, 1912, and the lease of December 31, 1914. The lease of May 21, 1912, was made an exhibit to the former proceedings. Indeed, it furnished the very basis upon which the contracts of 1920 and 1921 were executed. The validity of this lease was necessarily involved in said prior actions and, therefore, what was adjudicated therein with respect to said contracts is equally applicable to this lease. The contract of December 31, 1914, was given by Sixth District to the city and comprised, as above noted, the so-called speedway, stables, grandstand, and other equipment connected with the race track on said property. The city agreed to maintain the property in first-class condition at its own expense and to use it to the fullest extent "in encouraging horse raising, training, speeding exhibits and contests." This contract, as shown by its date, was made 8 years prior to the commencement of the present action, and it is conceded by appellants that the city and county have been maintaining at considerable expense the speedway, grandstand, and barns thereon, and the court found that all injury done to said speedway by the construction of said stadium has been substantially repaired and the race track restored to practically its original condition. Under such facts a court of equity should not hesitate to declare the existence of laches on the part of appellants, whom the court also found to have had knowledge of said contract of lease from the time of its execution. The court concluded that appellants were guilty of laches and denied equitable relief to them. We think the court was amply authorized by the evidence in the case in so holding.

[14] Appellants' theory that they are suing also in the capacity of members of Sixth District is likewise without support in the pleadings or evidence. This fact must be pleaded, if true, before it can be relied upon. Pennie v. Hildreth, 81 Cal. 127, 132, 22 P. 398. Judgment affirmed.

BORGNIS v. CALIFORNIA OREGON POWER CO. (Civ. 3268; Sac. 3794.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 15, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 12, 1927.

1. Electricity ⇨17—Power company, in lawful possession of right of way on which accident occurred, must be treated as owner in considering negligence.

In action against power company for personal injuries, defendant, which was in lawful possession of right of way on which accident occurred, must be treated as owner in so far as question of negligence is concerned.

2. Electricity ⇨15(1)—One fishing on hotel company's land, injured while crossing power company's right of way, was mere "licensee," and cannot recover.

One who is not patron of hotel but fishing on its land, who was injured while crossing power company's right of way, held "licensee" rather than invitee, and cannot recover for such injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Licensee.]

3. Innkeepers ⇨10—Hotel owes guest's guest same degree of care as guest.

Hotel ordinarily owes to its guest's guest same degree of care as to guest himself.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; C. J. Luttrell, Judge.

Action by Frank Borgnis against the California Oregon Power Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Preston & Duncan, of San Francisco, Henry McGuinness, of Dunsmuir, and J. P. McNamara, of Yreka (Robert E. Hatch, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, and Taylor & Tebbe and H. V. Ley, all of Yreka, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when a steel fishing rod, which he was carrying, came in contact with a sagging wire of the defendant's power line. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

The action is based upon the alleged negligence of the defendant in allowing the power wire to remain in such sagging condition. Respondent contends that the plaintiff was a mere licensee on the defendant's right of way, and that the judgment, therefore, must be affirmed; there being no proof or claim that the defendant willfully or wantonly injured the plaintiff. Appellant contends that he was an invitee of the defendant, for whose safety the latter was bound to exercise ordinary care, commensurate with the dangerous character of the agency under its control.

The accident occurred while plaintiff was on a fishing trip along Shovel creek, near Klamath Hot Springs, in Siskiyou county, on land owned by the Klamath Hot Springs Hotel Company. The company there owns about 2,000 acres of land, through which Shovel creek flows for about 2½ miles. "Fishing is one of the attractions of the place." No objection has been made "to the public coming in and fishing on this property." "The public has availed itself of the opportunity to fish in this stream on this property for the past 5 or 6 years. * * * Fishing was encouraged so far as guests were concerned." "There is lots of people from around the county here that goes up on Sundays that never patronize the hotel, that camp on the creek and along the river there. Of course, people coming from any distance, why they usually stay at the hotel. Probably about 75 per cent. of the fishermen are guests of the hotel and 25 per cent. not guests." The plaintiff was not a guest at the hotel and had no business dealings there. He testified:

"I did not stay at the hotel because I am camping outside every time when I go out. * * * I used to go up Shovel creek several times each season. I always saw lots of people up there fishing. * * * I have seen lots of people fishing in this stream near the place where I was hurt at previous times. * * * Nobody told me I couldn't fish or forbade it on these premises. * * * You can fish all along the stream. There are no fences. I did not stay at or take any meal at or have any business dealings at the hotel the time I was hurt."

The defendant has acquired a right of way 75 feet wide through the lands of the hotel company, and the power line in question was on and along this right of way. The grant of the right of way contained the following provision: "The party of the second part agrees not to erect any adjoining fences along its right of way."

The accident occurred during the afternoon of May 12, 1923. The defendant introduced evidence tending to show that shortly before 8 o'clock in the morning of the same day an insulator near the scene of the accident was struck by lightning and broken, thereby causing the wire attached to the insulator to drop to a point within 8½ feet of the ground, and that the defendant was not negligent in failing to discover the sagging condition of the wire prior to the accident.

[1] The defendant was in the lawful possession of the right of way upon which the accident occurred, and, "so far as the question of negligence is concerned, was clothed with the rights of the owner, and must be treated as such." Lindholm v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. (Cal. App.) 248 P. 1033; Waller v. Smith, 116 Wash. 645, 200 P. 95. The view most favorable to the plaintiff is to assume that the defendant was bound to exercise the same degree of care for his safety as the hotel company would have been required to exercise if it had owned and controlled the power line on its own land. This assumption will be indulged throughout the discussion of the case. Respondent contends that it occupied a more favorable position than that so assumed.

[2] Where one "expressly or by implication invites others to come upon his premises, whether for business or for any other purpose, it is his duty to be reasonably sure that he is not inviting them into danger, and to that end he must exercise ordinary care and prudence to render the premises reasonably safe for the visit." Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) p. 1259. On page 1265 of the same work it is said:

"One is not invited into danger when his entrance upon dangerous premises is simply not opposed and prevented. Thus, one whose unenclosed grounds people cross without objection is not liable to one who falls into an unguarded cistern there."

"An invitation to use the premises of another is inferred where there is a common interest or mutual advantage, while a license is inferred where the object is the mere pleasure or benefit of the person using them." Bush v. Weed Lumber Co., 63 Cal. App. 426, 432, 218 P. 618, 620.

"Mere permission, or a habit, * * * of an owner of allowing people to enter and use a certain portion of his premises is indicative of a license merely, and not of an invitation." Herzog v. Hemphill, 7 Cal. App. 116, 119, 93 P. 899, 900. "Simple permission does not make one an invitee. Permission and community of interest are necessary." Kinsman v. Barton & Co. (Wash.) 251 P. 563. "To come under an implied invitation, as distinguished from a mere license, the visitor must come for a purpose connected with the business in which the occupant is engaged, or which he permits to be carried on there. There must at least be some mutuality of interest in the subject to which the visitor's business relates, although the particular thing which is the object of the visit may not be for the benefit of the occupant." Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426, 31 N. E. 128, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463; Coburn v. Village of Swanton, 95 Vt. 320, 115 A. 153.

An implied invitation "arises in the case of customers who for the purpose of trade or other business enter a store, or other place of business, and in the case of persons attending public places of amusement, or other places where persons have paid for the privilege of being or placing their property." 29 Cyc. 455. All are invitees who are expressly invited, regardless of any question of benefit or advantage to the inviter, even though the invitation be not individual, but to the public generally. Chafor v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 478, 163 P. 670, L. R. A. 1917E, 685, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 106; Richmond & M. R. Co. v. Moore's Adm'r, 94 Va. 493, 27 S. E. 70, 37 L. R. A. 258; Peckett v. Bergen Beach Co., 44 App. Div. 559, 60 N. Y. S. 966. "Merchants invite the public to enter their stores to buy wares. It cannot be said that they invite the entrance of those who accompany them, but who have no intention of purchasing; such persons are mere licensees." Fleckenstein v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 91 N. J. Law, 145, 102 A. 700, L. R. A. 1918C, 179.

In Means v. Southern California Ry. Co., 144 Cal. 473, 477, 77 P. 1001, 1002 (1 Ann. Cas. 206), the plaintiff was injured while sitting in defendant's freight house, waiting to see a person about a matter in which the defendant had no interest. The evidence showed:

"That numerous persons, having no business to transact with the defendant company, had been, for years, permitted to be around and about such freight platform, and were not ordered away by the officers of defendant."

The court said that the plaintiff—

"was not upon the premises by the invitation express or implied, of the defendant, nor for any business purpose connected with defendant, nor in relation to any business for which the freight house, * * * was used. * * * As a mere licensee, the defendant owed him no legal duty, except that while upon the premises no wanton or willful injury should be inflicted upon him."

In Hafey v. Dwight Mfg. Co., and Hafey v. Turners Falls Power & Electric Co., 240 Mass. 155, 133 N. E. 107, the power company maintained a power line across the land of the manufacturing company, such land including a "large portion" of Caleb's island. The court said:

"Caleb's Island, including the part owned by the Dwight Manufacturing Company, had been used for many years for playing baseball and other games. * * * There was a well-beaten path on the island, and the evidence showed that the plaintiff's intestate was walking on this path when his fishing pole came in contact with the uninsulated wire which had been allowed to sag within 10 feet of the ground, thereby causing his death. In order to reach the island, the plaintiff's intestate had to cross the Boston & Maine Railroad bridge, on either side of which there was a sign which forbade trespassing. There was no evidence that any invitation, expressed or implied, was at any time given by either defendant to the plaintiff's intestate to go upon the land or use the premises for any purpose. * * * The mere fact that the owner of the land did not take active measures to prevent its use, in the way shown on this record, did not amount to an inducement or invitation to use the premises."

It was held that the plaintiff's intestate was not an invitee of either company, but a mere licensee. Two facts were there proved which do not appear in this case: The injury occurred on a "well-beaten path" and trespass signs were posted on either side of the railroad bridge. It does not appear whether such signs referred to the island or to the bridge.

In Douglas v. Bergland, 216 Mich. 380, 185 N. W. 819, 20 A. L. R. 197, the plaintiff was injured while fishing from defendant's wharf or rollway. Plaintiff had fished from the same place for nine seasons. The court said:

"The testimony shows that plaintiff, his wife, and others fished off these rollways. On one occasion defendant pointed out to plaintiff's wife where he thought she could catch a fish. We think this testimony established license at most and did not establish that plaintiff was an invitee."

The reason for holding that mere acquiescence in cases such as this does not imply an invitation is well stated in Long v. Pacific Ry. & Nav. Co., 74 Or. 502, 144 P. 462, 145 P. 1068, L. R. A. 1915F, 1151, where it is said:

"The right of way of the defendant was used by residents of that vicinity as a walkway for foot travel. * * * It is a matter of common knowledge that such rights of way and the tracks are commonly used by foot passengers wherever they are more convenient than the ways constructed by public authorities. It goes without saying that such use is not desired or encouraged by the railway authorities, but merely suffered because of the difficulties of preventing it. Such use is never of any advantage to the transportation companies. * * * The deceased was a mere licensee."

[3] A trout stream is a valuable adjunct to a hotel or pleasure resort. "Fishing is one of the attractions of the place" here in question. Doubtless many guests are attracted to the hotel by the fact that "Shovel creek is a good fishing ground." It certainly would be of no advantage to the hotel company for campers who do not patronize the hotel to deplete the stock of trout and thereby diminish or destroy one of the principal attractions of the place. "It goes without saying" that proprietors of pleasure resorts, through whose lands trout streams flow, do not desire or encourage fishing therein by persons who do not patronize the resort, but merely suffer it "because of the difficulties of preventing it" and there is nothing in this case to indicate that the hotel company desired or encouraged campers to occupy the premises or fish in the stream, but at most the evidence shows a mere passive acquiescence therein. A hotel or pleasure resort of the character here in question is not a "public place" in the broad sense, but in the sense only that it is open to such part of the public as patronize the place or seek to do so. Its implied invitation is no more extended to the person who goes there for reasons merely personal to himself than is that of a store or other place of business. It is true that a hotel ordinarily owes to its guest's guest the same degree of care as to the guest himself, but for reasons which are wholly absent in this case. Goldstein v. Healy, 187 Cal. 206, 210, 201 P. 462. Appellant says:

"There was a distinct benefit, even if it was no more direct than advertising. Thus, should Mr. Borgnis, for instance, find the fishing good, he would naturally tell his friends about it; they would in turn patronize the resort, and consequently more people would visit the resort."

The same line of reasoning might be applied to one who enters a store or other place of business for purposes having no relation to such business. In such a case there is no mutuality of interest. There is an implied invitation to prospective purchasers to enter places where goods are kept for sale, but the courts have never gone further than to hold this implied invitation broad enough to include one who "entered the store with a vague purpose of buying something if she saw anything that she took a fancy to." MacDonough v. F. W. Woolworth Co., 91 N. J. Law, 677, 103 A. 74. The evidence in this case does not show that the plaintiff had even a vague purpose of patronizing the place. He was a mere licensee as shown by the uncontradicted evidence and by his own testimony. Since this fact precludes a recovery, it would be idle to consider the alleged errors of which complaint is made and which have no bearing upon the question of whether the plaintiff was an invitee or a licensee.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; GLENN, Justice pro tem.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for hearing herein is denied. In denying the same, however, we withhold our approval of that portion of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal wherein it is decided that the plaintiff herein was a mere licensee of the owner of the premises upon which the accident and the resulting injuries to him occurred, since, whether the plaintiff was a licensee or an invitee upon said premises, it was for the jury to determine whether the defendant had failed to exercise the degree of care which the circumstances of the situation required. The jury, upon the evidence in the case, resolved that question in favor of the defendant. It follows that the judgment upon such verdict was properly affirmed.

Mr. Justice PRESTON, being disqualified, does not participate in the consideration of the above petition.

HOFFMAN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(Civ. 3257.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 1, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1927.

1. Railroads $\S$ 351(2)—Automobile driver's attempt to cross railroad in fog without stopping furnished evidence requiring instructions on contributory negligence, whether pleaded or not.

In action for injuries sustained in collision of train with automobile at crossing, proof that plaintiff driving between 25 to 30 miles per hour through dense fog attempted to cross tracks without stopping after seeing train 100 feet away when he was 5 or 6 feet from nearest rail furnished substantial evidence of lack of ordinary care in approaching railroad crossing, and required proper instructions to be given jury on question of contributory negligence, whether pleaded or not.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 171(1)—Record showing plaintiff's counsel questioned jurors on contributory negligence showed that case was tried on theory that contributory negligence was proper issue.

In suit for injuries sustained in collision between train and automobile at crossing, record showing plaintiff's counsel questioned jurors on knowledge of plea of contributory negligence showed that cause was tried on theory that contributory negligence was proper issue in case.

3. Trial $\S$ 105(2)—Trial court must instruct jury on contributory negligence as requested, where case was tried on theory that pleadings presented issue, and evidence supported same

Where case was tried by parties on theory that pleadings present an issue of contributory negligence, and no objection has been made to form of pleading, and there is substantial evidence to support such issue, it becomes duty of trial court to give jury such appropriate instructions on subject as have been offered by defendant.

4. Negligence $\S$ 117—Contributory negligence must be specially pleaded, but may be relied on, where appearing from complaint or plaintiff's evidence.

Generally, contributory negligence of plaintiff must be specially pleaded by defendant in order that defendant may rely on defense; but, where plaintiff's contributory negligence appears from allegations of complaint, or from evidence introduced in plaintiff's behalf, plea of contributory negligence is available to the defense, though not pleaded in answer.

5. Negligence $\S$ 117—Facts of each case determine allegations necessary for plea of contributory negligence.

Allegations sufficient to constitute adequate defense on plea of contributory negligence depend on particular facts of each case.

6. Negligence $\S$ 117—Plea of contributory negligence must allege facts showing want of ordinary care contributing to injuries, though specific term need not be used.

In pleading contributory negligence, it is not necessary to use specific term, though concise statement of facts indicating commission or omission of acts which would be required of one under similar circumstances in exercise of ordinary care and which would appear to directly contribute to injuries must be alleged.

7. Pleading $\S$ 8(17)—Allegation in form of conclusion that acts complained of were due to negligence of plaintiff is not sufficiently pleaded contributory negligence.

In pleading contributory negligence, it is not sufficient to merely allege in form of conclusion that acts complained of were due to negligence or carelessness of plaintiff.

8. Negligence $\S$ 117—Doctrine of contributory negligence is not plea of "confession and avoidance."

Doctrine of contributory negligence is not plea of "confession and avoidance," and does not require defendant to confess negligence on his own part before he can set out plaintiff's negligence as defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Confession and Avoidance.]

9. Pleading $\S$ 94—Defendant may set up inconsistent defenses, if separately stated (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 441).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 441, defendant may set forth in answer as many defenses as he may have, so long as they are separately stated, and separate defenses may be absolutely inconsistent.

10. Railroads $\S$ 344(10)—Answer alleging plaintiff, knowing danger, negligently drove over railroad crossing without stopping, looking, or listening, sufficiently pleaded contributory negligence.

In action for injuries sustained in collision between train and automobile at crossing, answer particularly specifying in separate, affirmative cause of defense that plaintiff, knowing of danger of crossing, negligently drove his automobile over crossing without stopping, looking, or listening for approaching train, constituted sufficient statement for special defense of contributory negligence.

11. Negligence $\S$ 141(2)—Refusal of instructions on contributory negligence held reversible error, where issue was raised by pleading and evidence.

In action for injuries sustained in collision of train with automobile at crossing, refusal of requested instructions that negligence constituting cause of action requires injured party to be free from contributory negligence, defined as want of ordinary care by injured party contributing to injury, and to deny recovery, if plaintiff was guilty of such contributory negligence, held reversible error, where pleading and evidence properly raised issue of contributory negligence.

12. Railroads $\S$ 351(16)—Instruction on duty to look and listen, given with modification requiring railroad to be free from negligence, held error.

In action for injuries sustained in collision of train with automobile at crossing, requested instruction that person approaching railroad crossing must look and listen for approaching trains, especially if view of track is obstructed, and that fact of injury raises presumptions that person did not take precautions, if he would have seen or heard train by exercising care, given with modification requiring defendant to be free from negligence, held error.

13. Railroads ⚡328(8)—Traveler must use greater caution in fog and cannot recover, if he fails to use caution in looking and listening for train.

Where plaintiff is familiar with railroad crossing, and has reason to expect passing of train momentarily, and his view is greatly obstructed by dense fog, he should use greater caution in approaching track, and cannot recover damages for injuries sustained in collision with train, if he carelessly attempts to cross tracks without exercise of due caution and use of faculties to carefully look and listen for approaching train.

14. Railroads ⚡350(26)—Person crossing railroad in dense fog may be negligent in failing to stop automobile; question being for jury.

Where view of railroad track is obscured by dense fog, and train is momentarily expected, person prevented from listening for approaching train by noise of his automobile may be negligent in failing to stop automobile, so that he could listen to better advantage which question is for jury.

15. Railroads ⚡347(11)—Testimony that person riding with plaintiff stated plaintiff was going at pretty good clip before struck by train should have been admitted on issue of contributory negligence.

In action for injuries sustained in collision of train with automobile at crossing, deposition of witness that person riding with plaintiff had stated to stranger at scene of accident immediately after it occurred, who was engaged in taking number of automobile, that "train was going a pretty good clip, and so were we," was improperly excluded to impeach plaintiff's companion, but should have been submitted to jury on question of contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by R. A. Hoffman against the Southern Pacific Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Levinsky & Jones, of Stockton, for appellants.

Ostrander & Ostrander, of Merced, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment and the verdict of a jury awarding plaintiff $16,175 damages for personal injuries sustained in a railroad crossing accident. Appellants seek a reversal of the judgment on practically all of the statutory grounds, but rely chiefly upon the refusal of the trial court to charge the jury with respect to the doctrine of contributory negligence.

The injuries complained of were the result of a collision between a Buick automobile driven by plaintiff and the passenger train of defendant Southern Pacific Company, at a railroad crossing 5 miles northerly from Merced, which accident occurred about 7:30 o'clock on the morning of January 5, 1924. The Oakdale branch of the Southern Pacific Railway runs from Merced to Stockton through an open and flat country. From Merced northerly to and beyond the crossing where the accident occurred the Cox Ferry highway extends parallel with and adjacent to the railroad right of way. Upon this highway and about one mile southerly from the point of the accident toward Merced the plaintiff had lived for about a year and was perfectly familiar with the crossing in question, with the entire surroundings, and in a general way was familiar with the train schedule on that branch of the railroad. He knew that the morning train was due to leave Merced for Stockton and would reach the crossing in question about 7 or 7:30 o'clock every morning. At the point where the accident occurred a roadway crossed this Cox Ferry highway and the railroad track at right angles. There was a slight elevation from the Cox Ferry road to and across the railroad track. This crossing was open, and the view was entirely unobstructed by buildings, trees, or other obstacles both up and down the track as far as one could see, except for a dense fog that prevailed that morning. The train was due to leave Merced at 7 o'clock a. m., was 25 minutes late, and, because of the heavy fog, it was running with the headlight turned on. There was the usual sharp conflict of evidence as to whether the warning whistle of the engine was blown or the bell rung upon approaching the crossing. The witnesses differ materially as to the distance at which the approaching train could be seen through the fog. This distance varied from 100 feet to 200 yards. There is no substantial evidence to the effect that the train was running at an unusually high rate of speed. All witnesses agree that a heavy fog prevailed and that the headlight was turned on. Plaintiff was engaged in drilling a well westerly of the railroad track at a point in the vicinity of the crossing where the accident occurred. About 7:20 or 7:30 o'clock in the morning, in company with his associate, E. B. Hawkins, the plaintiff drove his open Buick car from his home at the rate of 25 or 30 miles an hour along this Cox Ferry highway within 50 or 60 feet of the railroad track. The train was approaching from his rear, but he neither heard it nor saw it, nor did he look for it. He admits that he never thought of it nor paid any attention to it. Plaintiff operated the car, and Hawkins sat upon his right in the front seat. When they reached the crossroad leading at right angles over the railroad track, plaintiff claims that he slowed down his machine and turned abruptly to his left to cross the track. Neither of the occupants of the automobile had seen or heard the approaching train. When the machine was within 5 or 6 feet of the nearest rail, they discovered the train about 100 feet distant bearing down upon them. Both saw it about the same instant. Plaintiff then slipped his clutch into the intermediate gear and without stopping attempted to cross the track ahead of the approaching train. The left hind wheel of his machine was struck by the engine, and the occupants of the automobile were hurled from the vehicle, which was completely demolished. Hawkins was practically unhurt, but the plaintiff sustained serious injuries. His right hand was lacerated, his body was severely bruised, and a triangular fracture of the frontal bone of the skull occurred, which penetrated to the brain and exposed the cerebrum. He was taken to the hospital, where his wounds were treated, and the fractured skull was trephined. In the course of a number of months his recovery appeared to have been practically complete.

With respect to the manner in which plaintiff approached and attempted to cross the railroad track, the following evidence is pertinent in determining whether the trial court was warranted in refusing defendants' instructions on the question of contributory negligence. E. B. Hawkins, who was called in behalf of the plaintiff, testified in part as follows:

"Q. * * * Where was the front of your machine * * * at the time you first saw the train? A. Well, when he turned to go on the road, turning in to his left here, to approach the railroad, I looked down behind him, I looked right that way down the railroad, and we must have seen the train just at that same instant. * * * I say I must have been 5 feet from the track, from the front wheel, as near as I could guess at it. * * *

"Q. You were very close to the rail? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Practically on the rail? A. Yes; that is what I thought at the time.

"Q. How far would you judge * * * the train was away from you? A. Well, * * * I thing somewhere in the neighborhood of 100 feet.

"Q. Was the headlight burning? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. But he shifted from high into second? A. Certainly.

"Q. At about what time did he do that? A. Well, just as he seen the train, he just turned to me, and he said, 'Look there,' and just as he said that, he shifted his machine down that way into second."

On cross-examination Mr. Hawkins testified that they drove down that Cox Ferry road about 25 or 30 miles an hour, but slowed down as they turned to their left onto the crossing. He testified that he did not know exactly when the train came by there, but he did know that it "came along there a little after 7." Then he testified:

"When I first looked * * * his machine was turning in the crossing; I was looking down the track like that * * * behind Mr. Hoffman. I never turned my head; I was still looking that way when I seen the train. Just as I seen it, he seen it at the same instant. * * * I have seen the train go by there many times; assuredly I have. * * * I never heard any sound until I seen the train. * * * I was not thinking anything about the train."

During their ride to the crossing Mr. Hoffman had not mentioned the train to Hawkins. There were no buildings, fences, or trees to obscure the view.

The plaintiff testified that they drove down the Cox Ferry road about 25 or 30 miles an hour; that there was about as heavy a fog that morning as they had had that winter. He said that they made the turn onto the crossing road about 10 or 12 miles an hour, and he further testified as follows:

"Q. As you came along the road, approaching that crossing from your house, were you looking, or expecting the approach of any train? A. I never looked back at all; I was looking straight ahead. * * *

"Q. You say you did not turn around and look back? A. No, sir; I did not. * * * I was driving an open car, with a one-man top; * * * no curtains were on the car. * * * As soon as I turned the corner, I looked for the train, to see if any train was coming from toward Merced. * * * I could see no train. * * * I could hear no noise of an approaching train. * * *

"Q. Did you see any train before the accident? A. I heard it and saw it about the same time. I saw the headlight first. * * * It was about 80 or 100 feet distant. * * * I was almost on the track when I first saw the train; * * * about 5 feet away, I should say. * * * As soon as I saw the train I shifted on the second. If I had stepped on the gas, on high, I would have killed my engine * * * so I shifted into intermediate."

The witness Violet Gray, called for defendants, testified that she looked out from her window that morning and saw the train through the fog and observed the Hawkins automobile going down the Cox Ferry road "about two lengths of a car ahead of the train."

[1] From the foregoing it may be fairly inferred that the plaintiff, knowing that it was about time for the morning train from Merced on its way to Stockton, drove his open Buick automobile down the Cox Ferry highway a distance of over half a mile parallel with and adjacent to the railroad track through a dense fog, which obscured the view for a distance beyond 100 feet, running his machine at from 25 to 30 miles per hour; that upon reaching the crossing he slowed down materially, turning to his left some 50 or 60 feet directly onto the railroad crossing without attempting to stop his machine; that when he reached a point about 5 or 6 feet from the nearest rail he discovered the train about 100 feet away with its headlight turned on and bearing down upon him; that he then shifted his clutch into the intermediate gear and attempted to cross ahead of the engine. The plaintiff admitted that he did not turn around or look back for the train as he drove down the highway by the side of the railroad track. His associate, Hawkins, said that he never turned around and was not thinking about the train on their ride to the crossing. The train was not mentioned by either of them until it was discovered by both of them about the same time when they were within 5 or 6 feet of the rail. It must be said that this furnishes substantial evidence of a lack of ordinary care in approaching a railroad crossing which under appropriate pleadings, or even in the absence of a plea of contributory negligence, would require proper instructions to be given to the jury with relation to the application of that doctrine.

After specifically denying plaintiff's charges of negligence contained in the complaint, the defendants, "further answering said complaint, as and for a further, separate, and distinct defense to the alleged cause of action therein set forth," pleaded:

"That the accident referred to in said complaint was caused solely and wholly by, and was the proximate result of, the carelessness, recklessness, and negligence of said plaintiff in this, that said plaintiff, at the time and place set forth in the complaint, prior to, and at the time of said accident, did not exercise due, or any, care, and was negligent, careless, and reckless in this, that although said plaintiff well knew that he was about to cross a railroad crossing, over which crossing many trains pass in both directions at all hours of the day and night, said plaintiff drove his automobile up to, upon, and over said railroad crossing without stopping, or looking, or listening for any approaching train; nor did he take warning from the stationary warning sign at said crossing, but, notwithstanding all of the aforesaid, said plaintiff negligently, carelessly, and recklessly drove up to, on, and upon said crossing."

[2] From the record it appears that this cause was tried upon the theory that contributory negligence was a proper issue in the case. In the course of the examination of Carrie A. Wall, a juror, on her voir dire the following occurred. Mr. Ostrander, examining the juror in behalf of the plaintiff, asked:

"Q. Mrs. Wall, are you familiar with what is known as the plea of contributory negligence? A. No.

"Q. Well, that means where one person is charged with injuring another by reason of his negligence, he replies to this effect. 'Well, I was guilty of negligence, but the other party was guilty of negligence, too, that contributed to the injury,' that is what is meant by contributory negligence. It is the confession of negligence on the part of the person charged with negligence, but, for the purpose of the pleading, it confesses negligence, but alleges contributory negligence; in other words, where both are negligent, neither can recover.

"Mr. Levinsky: I object to the question, and move the court that it be stricken out; it is a statement and not a question.

"Mr. Ostrander: Here is an attempt to plead contributory negligence, because it is further and separate and distinct defense. Now, we have the right to assume from this they are going to plead contributory negligence. Now, if they don't plead contributory negligence, if that is so understood, then there is no purpose in my asking these questions at all, if it is so understood.

"Mr. Levinsky: There is no understanding at all; I don't have to announce anything other than from the pleadings.

"The Court: Well, the statement is made in the presence of the jury, so that is all right; we may as well go on.

"Mr. Levinsky: The pleadings speak for themselves.

"Mr. Ostrander: Does the jury understand you have stated you don't plead contributory negligence?

"Mr. Levinsky: I say the pleadings stand for themselves.

"Mr. Ostrander: Q. Now, assuming that the defense of contributory negligence is made in this case, and the court should instruct you that the burden is upon the defendant to prove that fact, you would be guided by that instruction, would you not? A. Yes, sir."

[3] Where a case is tried by the respective parties on the theory that the pleadings present an issue of contributory negligence, and where no objection has been made to the form of the pleading, and there is substantial evidence to support this issue, it becomes the duty of the trial court to give to the jury such appropriate instructions on this subject as have been offered by the defendant. 14 R. C. L. 785, § 50; Kelly v. Santa Barbara R. Co., 171 Cal. 415, 153 P. 903, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 67; Schuh v. Herron Co., 177 Cal. 13, 169 P. 682; Busch v. Los Angeles R. Co., 178 Cal. 536, 174 P. 665, 2 A. L. R. 1607; Perry v. Angelus Hospital Ass'n, 172 Cal. 311, 156 P. 449; Kofoid v. Beckner, 70 Cal. App. 624, 234 P. 113.

[4] As a general rule the contributory negligence of the plaintiff must be specially pleaded by the defendant in order that he may rely upon this defense. 19 Cal. Jur. 681, § 104. But where plaintiff's contributory negligence appears from the allegations of his complaint or from the evidence introduced in his behalf, this plea is available to the defense, although it is not pleaded in the answer. 19 Cal. Jur. p. 681, § 104, p. 697, § 119; 20 R. C. L. 182, § 151; 20 Standard Enc. of Proc. 317; Green v. S. P. Co., 132 Cal. 254, 64 P. 255; Kenny v. Kennedy, 9 Cal. App. 350, 99 P. 384.

[5-7] Where neither the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint nor the testimony introduced in his behalf show that the plaintiff is guilty of negligence which directly contributes to the injuries which he sustains, the defendant may not avail himself of the plea of contributory negligence in the absence of a special defense setting up the facts upon which he relies. It has been a perplexing question upon which the courts have differed widely as to just what allegations would be sufficient to constitute an adequate defense upon a plea of contributory negligence. It is apparent that no fixed rule in this regard can be assigned which will fit all classes of cases; each case will depend upon the particular facts involved. It is not necessary to use the specific term of contributory negligence, although a concise statement of the facts indicating the commission or omission of acts which would be required of one under similar circumstances in the exercise of ordinary care and which would appear to directly contribute to the injuries complained of must be alleged. It is not sufficient to merely allege in the form of a conclusion that the acts complained of were due to the negligence or carelessness of the plaintiff. 20 R. C. L. 183, § 152; 29 Cyc. 582; 5 Elliott on Railroads, 813, § 2805. In the case of Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. M. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 P. 714, it is said:

"Contributory negligence in this state is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded. While the pleader may charge the contributory negligence in general terms, yet he must plead the facts of such negligence, and the facts pleaded must show a causal connection with the injury. Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95, 27 P. 29; Stephenson v. Southern Pac. Co., 102 Cal. 144, 34 P. 618, 36 P. 407."

[8, 9] Among the authorities in California and in some other states the careless use of a familiar term has occasionally led to the inaccurate statement that the doctrine of contributory negligence is a plea of confession and avoidance. This has led to much confusion, and a common impression exists that however innocent the defendant may believe himself to be, before he may accuse the plaintiff of negligence, which caused his injuries, the defendant must first confess negligence on his own part. Upon a careful examination of every case in California involving this doctrine which has been called to our attention we are convinced not only that this is an erroneous statement of the law, but that similar language used in each and every one of these cases is mere dicta, either because in each instance the form of pleading declared a mere conclusion, or because the case was really decided upon some other issue. This objectionable language was unnecessary to the determination of the appeals in question. This error may have been aided because of the rule which prevails to the effect that, where there is no negligence shown on the part of the defendant, he is, for that reason alone, free from liability. 19 Cal. Jur. 647, § 76. But under the statute of California and in nearly all Code states the defendant may set forth in his answer as many defenses as he may have, so long as they are separately stated. Code Civ. Proc. § 441. And these separate defenses may also be absolutely inconsistent. American Nat. Bank v. Donnellan, 170 Cal. 9, 148 P. 188, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 744; Shepherd-Teague Co. v. Hermann, 12 Cal. App. 394, 107 P. 622; Calexico Lumber Co. v. Emerson, 54 Cal. App. 239, 201 P. 612.

It is quite apparent that to hold that a defendant must first confess his own negligence before he will be permitted to charge the plaintiff with contributory negligence is in direct conflict with the clear declaration of the Legislature and the uniform decisions of our courts with respect to the right to set up various conflicting defenses. Moreover, that doctrine would appear to be a denial of justice and would often preclude one from making a meritorious defense to a charge of actionable negligence. Can it be said that a defendant who is charged with negligence and who conscientiously believes himself to be innocent of that charge, but who is also possessed of facts which lead him to believe that the injuries of which the plaintiff complains were sustained as a direct result of his own lack of ordinary care, must first stultify himself by verifying his answer and swearing that he is guilty of negligence, believing in his own heart that that statement is false, before he will be permitted to set up a valid defense of contributory negligence? Surely this cannot be the law.

In 29 Cyc. p. 582, the rule is thus stated:

"A general denial and plea of contributory negligence do not constitute inconsistent defenses and may be pleaded together, and negligence on the part of the defendant is not admitted by a plea of contributory negligence following a general denial."

Similarly the text found in 6 Current Law, at page 768, is stated as follows:

"While a denial of negligence and an allegation of contributory negligence are verbally inconsistent, they are not so in practice, and a defendant need not elect between the two defenses; nor does the plea of contributory negligence, when properly pleaded, admit the negligence as charged in the petition."

So also in 1 Thompson on Negligence (2d Ed.) 375, § 390, it is said:

"In Louisiana it is held that a plea of contributory negligence admits an issue of negligence on the defendant's part. But if this means that the plea of contributory negligence is in the nature of a plea of confession and avoidance, admitting the negligence of the defendant and avoiding it by showing that the plaintiff was also negligent, then it is unsound and incorrect, unless in a special application to rules of pleading peculiar to particular states. The pleading of contributory negligence as a special defense is not inconsistent with a denial of the negligence of the defendant. * * * Hence the defendant cannot be required to elect between two separate paragraphs of his answer, one of which denies any negligence on his part, while the other sets up contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. A defendant may then both traverse the complaint and plead contributory negligence; but as the defenses are distinct and different, they should be set out in separate paragraphs of his answer."

It is interesting to note that upon a rehearing of the Louisiana case above cited by the author of Thompson on Negligence as an authority for the statement that contributory negligence is a plea of confession and avoidance that court in Bomar v. Louisiana N. & S. R. Co., 42 La. Ann. 1206, 9 So. 244, says:

"We have not held, and we are far from holding, that the plea of contributory negligence by a defendant sued for negligence operates as an admission of the negligence charged. * * * The admission that there is an issue of negligence is very different from, and indeed contradictory of, an admission of the negligence itself, which latter admission would eliminate and destroy the issue of negligence."

In 5 Elliott on Railroads (3d Ed.) 811, § 2805, the rule with respect to pleading contributory negligence is stated as follows:

"In jurisdictions where contributory negligence is regarded as an affirmative defense to be specially pleaded, it is generally held that the pleading should state the facts upon which the conclusion of contributory negligence is predicated. It is not enough to merely state that the plaintiff or person killed or injured was guilty of negligence contributing to his injury, as that would be a conclusion of law. A plea is too general which merely charges that the injuries occurred from the plaintiff's own carelessness and negligence. In a jurisdiction in which the burden is upon the defendant it has been held that the defendant must plead contributory negligence if he relies on that defense, though the plaintiff alleges freedom from contributory negligence in the complaint. * * * The general denial and the plea of contributory negligence are not generally regarded as inconsistent. The authorities hold that a case may be tried upon either or both defenses. The allegation of contributory negligence is not considered an implied admission of negligence on the defendant's part so as to dispense with proof of such negligence by plaintiff. *McDonald v. Montgomery*¹ St. Ry. Co., 20 So. 317; Fowler Co. v. Brooks, 70 P. 600; Charping v. Toxaway Mills, 70 S. C. 470, 50 S. E. 186; Wright v. Southern Ry. Co., 155 N. C. 325, 71 S. E. 306; Weingartner v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 42 S. W. 839; Wallace v. Portland Ry. L. & P. Co., 103 Or. 68, 204 P. 147; Day v. Kelly, 50 Mont. 306, 146 P. 930."

The last two cases cited contain vigorous challenges to the mistaken doctrine that the defense of contributory negligence constitutes a plea of confession and avoidance or requires the admission of guilt on the part of the defendant before he may avail himself of the defense. The last case cited contains a list of authorities of considerable length, which decisions are opposed to this doctrine. In accordance with our view that the California cases in which it has been held that the defense of contributory negligence was inadequately pleaded are not out of harmony with the doctrine that the defense of contributory negligence is not a plea of confession and avoidance, the following brief statement of the essential facts determined is made. These cases do not refer to the doctrine of confession and avoidance, but merely hold that the pleadings were defective. Meinderssee v. Meyers, 188 Cal. 498, 205 P. 1078, was a suit for damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff's wife in falling into an excavation left in the street. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff the Supreme Court said:

"No offer or attempt to plead it [contributory negligence] was made by appellant. * * * Consequently the appellant was not in a position to, and apparently did not, urge the point in the court below and certainly may not do so here."

In the case of Western States Co. v. Bay-side L. Co., 182 Cal. 140, 187 P. 735, judgment for damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate was recovered. In affirming the judgment the court said:

"The court instructed the jury that the contributory negligence, if any, of the deceased, was not a defense in the action. This instruction was evidently based upon the fact that contributory negligence was not pleaded as a defense. The answer alleged that the injury was wholly the result of the negligence of the deceased which amounted to nothing more than a denial of negligence on the part of the defendant."

In Hughes v. Warman Steel Casting Co., 174 Cal. 556, 163 P. 885, in affirming a judgment for plaintiff, in which the defendant had alleged as a special defense "that any injury sustained by plaintiff was the proximate result of his own negligence and carelessness, particularly in standing in front of the casting which he was trimming instead of standing at the side, where, defendant alleged, he was ordered to stand; and, second, that the plaintiff entered upon the work of cutting said nails with knowledge of the dangers, and hence assumed the risk incident to such work," the court said:

"It is contended by defendant under its special defense interposed in that regard that the evidence shows that the injury to plaintiff was entirely caused by his own negligence. This, of course, is not a plea of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. Such a defense is an affirmative one, and must be pleaded. No attempt to plead it appears in this case."

In Starck v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 172 Cal. 277, 156 P. 51, L. R. A. 1916E, 58, in reversing a judgment against defendant for negligence, the court said:

¹ Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; not reported in full in 65 Kan. 861 Reports.

"Plaintiff filed a memorandum * * * to the effect that appellant might not complain of the instructions upon contributory negligence because that defense was not affirmatively set up in the answer. The respondent is in error. The defense of contributory negligence was pleaded as 'a further, separate, and distinct answer and defense,' and not merely in denial of the allegations of the complaint. The issue was tendered, we think, sufficiently and in form."

In Kofoed v. Beckner, 70 Cal. App. 624, 234 P. 113, affirming a judgment for plaintiff, this court said:

"In the answer filed by the defendants, it appears that, coupled with a paragraph denying negligence on the part of the defendants, there are these words: 'And, by way of further and separate defense, allege that the injury and collision in said complaint described, if any there was, was solely and proximately caused by the fault and negligence of the plaintiff, himself, and without any fault on the part of said defendants, or either of them. * * * It is elementary that a defense of new matter should be pleaded. * * * Such defense of new matter must necessarily be complete and single, as much so as each cause of action, and should be separately stated in a plea by itself.'"

In Dover v. Archambeault, 57 Cal. App. 659, 208 P. 178, affirming a judgment for plaintiff, the court approved striking out from defendant's answer the following language:

"And in that behalf this defendant avers that, if the plaintiffs or either of them was injured at the time and place as stated in their complaint, it was by and through the negligence of [plaintiff] who at said time and place negligently drove his said automobile on to the automobile of this defendant, which was rightfully standing still in said highway, and not moving at all in any direction, at the time of said accident."

The court added:

"The language above quoted added nothing to that denial. * * * Where the defense is not pleaded, and where the facts in support of such defense have not been developed by the evidence presented by the plaintiff, it is not error for the court to ignore that defense in presenting the case to the jury."

And in Off v. Crump, 40 Cal. App. 173, 180 P. 360, a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed, and the court says:

"The only matter in the answer suggesting a defense of contributory negligence is that, after controverting the allegations of the complaint charging negligence of defendant in driving his automobile, it is denied 'that the plaintiff was struck by said automobile from any cause other than his own negligence,' and it is alleged that, 'on the contrary, the collision with the plaintiff, and any injuries which the plaintiff may have received therefrom, were wholly and solely due to the negligence of the plaintiff.'"

In that case the trial court found that no negligence of the plaintiff contributed to or was the proximate cause of the accident.

It is quite clear that the foregoing cases were very properly decided upon the facts and pleadings presented, and that in every instance the attempt to set up contributory negligence on the part of the defendant failed because the allegations were mere conclusions. In none of these cases is it said that the defense failed because defendants did not first confess their own negligence.

In the following three cases the court did say in effect that contributory negligence was predicated upon the existence of negligence on the part of the defendant. But in these cases the language used in an effort to plead contributory negligence consisted also of mere inadequate conclusions, and the employment of the characterization of the defense of contributory negligence as a plea of confession and avoidance was unnecessary to the determination of the cases and was therefore dicta.

In Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. Min. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 P. 714, affirming a verdict for plaintiff, where the answer merely affirmatively declared that the death was "caused by his own gross negligence and failure to exercise and use ordinary care for his own protection," the court said:

"Appellant's plea is therefore not a plea of contributory negligence, but consists of a denial of negligence upon the part of the pleader and an assertion of gross negligence upon the part of the deceased."

In Gett v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 192 Cal. 621, 221 P. 376, affirming a verdict for plaintiff solely upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the defendant's guilt of negligence and the plaintiff's freedom from negligence, the court ex industria used the term "confession and avoidance." But the question of the pleadings was not involved in that case, and the statement was clearly dictum. The judgment was properly affirmed and would be just as firmly established if this statement were eliminated from the opinion. Finally, the case of Bauman v. Edgar, 72 Cal. App. 448, 236 P. 943, affirmed a judgment for plaintiff in an automobile collision case solely upon the evidence, wherein the court says:

"The plea of the defendant that the plaintiff could have avoided the accident after he saw the danger is nothing more than a plea of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. This plea raises the question whether the facts are such as to constitute contributory negligence in law, or whether the issue is one to be left to the court or jury on the evidence."

The pleadings were therefore not questioned. In Lemmermann v. Pope & Talbot, 42 Cal. App. 192, 183 P. 467, the appeal was from a judgment of nonsuit, which was affirmed upon the specific ground that "the facts disclosed by the evidence sustained the affirmative defense pleaded by defendant." The court said:

"The defense here pleaded is neither that plaintiff assumed the risk of his employment, * * * nor is it a pleading of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, which assumes negligence on the part of defendant, but is a charge that the accident was caused solely by the plaintiff's negligence."

In spite of the foregoing statement and regardless of defendant's effort to plead affirmatively contributory negligence, this case was affirmed upon the ground that the record presented no substantial evidence of negligence of the defendant, and therefore the statement with relation to the confession and avoidance rule was also dicta.

[10] Assuming from the foregoing that it is therefore unnecessary for a defendant to first confess the negligence with which he is charged before he may plead contributory negligence, we are of the opinion that the special defense in the instant case entitled the defendant to the benefit of that plea, for he particularly specified in a separate, affirmative cause of defense that knowing of the danger of the crossing in question the plaintiff negligently "drove his automobile up to, upon, and over said railroad crossing without stopping or looking or listening for any approaching train." We are of the opinion that this constitutes a good and sufficient statement of the special defense of contributory negligence.

[11] All instructions on the subject of contributory negligence were refused. At the conclusion of the evidence the defendants offered the following instructions, among others, which correctly stated the law on the subject of contributory negligence, and which under the pleadings and the evidence should have been given to the jury and the refusal to give which constituted reversible error, to wit:

"Negligence constituting a cause of civil action consists in the omission by one to use that degree of care which it is his or her legal duty to use with respect to another to protect such other from injury, by which omission, as the proximate cause thereof, such other, without contributory negligence on his or her part, sustains injury to his or her person or property.

"It is a well-settled rule of law that, if the negligence of plaintiff contributed proximately to the injury of which the plaintiff complains, he cannot recover. And if you so find from the evidence, then your verdict must be against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendants.

"Contributory negligence is the want of ordinary care and prudence on the part of the person injured contributing directly and proximately to the injury."

[12] The following instruction offered by defendants also correctly stated the law, but was erroneously modified by the trial judge adding the last two lines which are here italicized and which addition affirmatively directed the jury that the principle there announced was not applicable to the law of the case and would not exempt the defendants from liability unless the evidence indicated that they (the defendants) were not negligent. This instruction read:

"The railroad track of a steam railway must itself be regarded as a signal of danger, and one intending to cross must avail himself of every reasonable opportunity to look and listen for approaching trains. If the view of the track is obstructed, he should take greater pains to listen. If taking these precautions he would have seen or heard the approaching train, the very fact of his injury will raise a presumption that he did not take the required precaution, and in such circumstances if defendants were not negligent, plaintiff cannot recover."

[13] Where a plaintiff is familiar with a crossing and has reason to expect the passing of a train momentarily and his view is greatly obstructed by a dense fog, he should use greater caution in approaching the track. Under such circumstances a person will not be absolved from negligence and may not recover damages for injuries sustained, if he carelessly attempts to cross the track without the exercise of due caution and the use of his faculties to carefully look and listen for an approaching train. 22 Cal. Jur. 318, § 68, p. 335, § 80, p. 342, § 84; Heitman v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 10 Cal. App. 397, 102 P. 15. Where the view of the track is obscured by physical objects, dense fog, or a cloud of dust, greater care should be used in attempting to cross the track. Flemming v. Western Pac. Ry. Co., 49 Cal. 253; Hager v. Southern Pac. Co., 98 Cal. 309, 33 P. 119. In Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 182 Cal. 378, 190 P. 40, it is said:

A traveler is "bound to look and listen, and, if necessary, * * * stop * * *," and that obligation [is] increased rather than diminished by his knowledge that * * * a train was approaching."

[14] Where the view of a track is obscured by a dense fog and a train is momentarily expected and on account of the noise created by the operation of his automobile one is prevented from listening for the approach of the train, it might amount to negligence, if under such circumstances one failed to stop his vehicle so that he could listen to better advantage.

All these are questions which the jury had a right to consider under appropriate instructions upon the subject of contributory negligence.

In the supplement to Thompson on Negligence, p. 56, §§ 425 and 427, the rule is thus stated:

"It is a restatement of a familiar principle to say that, if there is any doubt as to whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, the question is not one of law for the court, but is one of fact for the jury. It is the province of the jury to determine the question whenever there may be reasonably a difference of opinion as to the inferences and conclusions from the facts. * * * It is always for the jury where the evidence is conflicting. 29 Cyc. 631; Kelly v. Santa Barbara R. Co., 171 Cal. at page 423, 153 P. 903, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 67."

[15] The exclusion of the following testimony was also error. During the examination of the witness Edward B. Hawkins, for the purpose of laying the foundation for impeachment of the witness, the following proceedings were had:

"Mr. Levinsky: Did you make this remark to them (Mrs. Gray and Mrs. Wyatt): 'I consider myself lucky; that train was going like hell, and so were we?' A. No, sir; I did not.

"Q. And nothing like that? A. Nothing like that."

Later in the reading of the deposition of this Mrs. Gray the following occurred:

"Mr. Levinsky: Q. State whether or not at the scene of the accident you heard a conversation between Mr. Hawkins and some man who was taking the number of the car in which that man said, 'The train was going pretty fast,' and Hawkins said, 'I will say it was going a good clip, and so were we.' A. That is what he said exactly.

"Q. Who said that? A. Mr. Hawkins; that is the only remark I ever heard him make."

To this the court sustained plaintiff's objection on the ground that the conversation was with a different person. The time was fixed at the scene of the accident soon after it occurred, and the incident was referred to as the time when a man was taking down the number of the machine of plaintiff which had been demolished. Later, over the objection of defendant, the witness Hawkins was permitted to deny this statement in spite of the fact that the evidence of Mrs. Gray had been ruled out as follows:

"Mr. Ostrander: Q. Now, Mr. Hawkins, did you have a conversation with Mrs. Gray, or when Mrs. Gray was present, with a man who may have looked at the number of the automobile, at any time during that day * * * in which conversation you made a statement to this effect, that upon being asked by the man, 'Well, the train was going pretty fast, at a pretty good clip, wasn't it?' and you replied, 'I will say it was, and so were we.' A. I did not make that statement."

It was apparently an issue in the trial of the case on the part of defendant as to whether plaintiff with his associate, Hawkins, did not drive down upon the crossing at a reckless rate of speed without stopping at the crossing. The witness Mrs. Gray had said in her deposition that Hawkins had stated to a stranger at the scene of the accident immediately after it occurred, who was then engaged in taking the number of the demolished machine: "The train was going a pretty good clip, and so were we."

This court is neither deciding nor inferring that the evidence disclosed by the record in this case conclusively establishes the fact that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, but is merely holding that those facts furnish substantial evidence, which under the special defense pleaded and the evidence developed from plaintiff's witnesses should have been submitted to the jury for its consideration under appropriate instructions which were offered with relation to the subject of contributory negligence.

It is unnecessary to pass upon other grounds urged by defendants for reversal.

The judgment is reversed.

HITTSOON v. STANICH. (Civ. 4736.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 14, 1927.

1. Trial $\Leftrightarrow$ 388(2)—Where judgment was by default, court's refusal to sign findings of fact and conclusions of law held proper.

In action on notes, where judgment was by default and no issues were joined, refusal of court to sign findings of fact and conclusions of law prepared by plaintiff and presented for signature held proper.

2. Arrest $\Leftrightarrow$ 15—Statute providing for defendant's arrest, where obligation sued upon was incurred by fraud, held to authorize arrest only on mesne process and not after default (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 482, 483, 486, 715; § 479, subd. 4).

Code Civ. Proc. § 479, subd. 4, providing for the arrest of a defendant who is guilty of fraud in incurring the obligation sued upon, held to authorize remedy only on mesne process, in view of sections 482, 483, 486, and 715, and hence not to authorize issuing process ordering defendant's arrest on default judgment in action on notes alleging fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action upon promissory notes by W. J. Hittson against Elid Stanich, also known as Saint Millard. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William Lewis and Guy Lewis, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

YORK, J. This is an action to recover judgment for nonpayment of several promissory notes and attorneys' fees, and for the arrest of defendant, and his confinement in the county jail in Los Angeles county, etc., on the alleged ground that the defendant obtained from plaintiff the moneys for which said notes were given by false and fraudulent representations.

The defendant was personally served with summons and complaint in Los Angeles county. He failed to appear, and his default was duly entered.

On a hearing in the superior court, judgment was entered for plaintiff for the amounts due plaintiff on the promissory notes and for attorneys' fees, but not for the arrest of defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and "from the whole and every part thereof." The judgment recites that the case came on for trial on the 26th day of December, 1923, "and evidence, both oral and documentary," was introduced, and "the court, having filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, ordered the entry of the judgment." But no findings of fact or conclusions of law were made. In support of his appeal, plaintiff prepared what is designated a bill of exceptions. It recites the filing of the complaint, which it sets forth in hæc verba, the entry of the defendant's default; that it was difficult to locate the defendant, and that it took nearly three months to do so; that a warrant was out for his arrest on various charges, and that the plaintiff asked the court for a judgment for the arrest of defendant, and his confinement in the county jail; that the court denied the motion and entered the judgment on January 7, 1924, for the amount prayed for in the complaint with attorneys' fees; that plaintiff prepared findings of fact and conclusions of law and presented them to the court for signing, and that the court refused to sign them or to sign any findings of fact whatsoever, and then follows in said proposed bill of exceptions a copy of the proposed findings of fact so prepared and presented to the court. The fact that the plaintiff did not waive findings of fact, and the court refused to sign any findings, is clearly embodied in the record before us.

[1] The first question raised by appellant is that the court should have signed findings of fact and conclusions of law prepared by him and presented to the court for signature. This was a default action, and no issues were joined, and the matter clearly is within the rule stated in 24 California Jurisprudence, § 191, p. 950. "The court cannot properly make findings of fact and conclusions of law unless issues are joined and a trial had thereon. Accordingly, findings need not be made where judgment is rendered by default because of a failure to file an answer." In the case of Waldecker v. Waldecker, 178 Cal. at page 568, 174 P. 37, the court says:

"On the contrary, our conclusion is that in divorce cases, * * * findings are required only upon a trial of issues of fact raised by the pleadings of the respective parties, and only then in cases where findings have not been waived by the parties as provided in section 634 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It follows that in the instant case findings were not required to be filed by the court upon a denial of the divorce."

In Hamblin v. Superior Court, 195 Cal. at page 370, 233 P. 339, 43 A. L. R. 1509, the court says:

"It is to be noted, however, that the taking of testimony in the present case did not constitute the holding of a trial in the strict sense of the word. There were no issues of fact upon which a trial was required. The default of the defendant admitted all of the allegations of the complaint. Upon the entry of such default the court might have rendered judgment for the plaintiff without the taking of any evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 585; City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles F. & M. Co., 150 Cal. 647, 89 P. 615), except for the requirement of section 130 of the Civil Code, which forbids the granting of a divorce upon the default of the defendant or upon the uncorroborated admissions of the parties. This section * * * is not to be construed * * * as requiring written findings of fact and conclusions of law (Waldecker v. Waldecker, 178 Cal. 566, 174 P. 36)."

In Shepard v. Shepard, 65 Cal. App. at page 314, 223 P. 1014, the court says:

"We are satisfied that the judgment must be reversed, and, inasmuch as no findings were required by reason of the default, * * * the reversal should carry directions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the appellant."

It was held in Re Cook's Estate, 77 Cal. 230, 17 P. 923, 19 P. 436, 1 L. R. A. 567, 11 Am. St. Rep. 267, that under the provisions of section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure in cases of default findings are not necessary and form no part of the judgment roll.

[2] As to the second point raised that the court upon demand should have ordered judgment for execution against the person of defendant, we note that the complaint in the instant case requests only:

"Fifth. That the defendant be arrested and confined in the county jail of Los Angeles county, state of California, under the provisions of subdivision IV of section 47a of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California et seq."

There being no such section as 47a, we conclude that appellant was attempting to refer to section 479 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is the only section that we can find that deals with an order of arrest for fraud in a civil action after judgment except after execution issued. However, this section appears under title 7, headed "Provisional Remedies in Civil Actions." Subdivision 4 of section 479 in chapter 1 of title 7 provides for arrest—

"as hereinafter prescribed. * * *"

"4. When the defendant has been guilty of a fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation for which the action is brought; or in concealing or disposing of the property for the taking, detention, or conversion, of which the action is brought."

The following provisions of chapter 1 provide that it is necessary that an affidavit of plaintiff or some other person make it appear to the judge that sufficient cause of action exists, and that the case is one of those mentioned in section 479, and it provides that, if an order of arrest be made, the affidavit must be filed with the clerk of the court. Section 482 provides that, before making the order, the judge must require a written undertaking on the part of the plaintiff, with sureties in an amount to be fixed by the judge, which must be at least $500, to the effect that plaintiff will pay all costs which may be adjudged to the defendant, and all damages which he may sustain by reason of the arrest, if the same be wrongful, or without sufficient cause, and that the undertaking must be filed with the clerk of the court. Section 483 provides that the order may be made at the time of issuing of the summons or at any time before judgment, and section 486 provides for discharge of the defendant at any time before execution, either upon giving bail or depositing the amount mentioned in the order of arrest. And it appears from title 7 that part of the Code refers only to provisional remedies. Under chapter 2 of part 2, title 9, are found as shown by the heading of that chapter, "Proceedings Supplemental to Execution"; and under section 715 is provided: "Proceedings to compel debtor to appear. In what cases he may be arrested. What bail may be given." Therefore, we conclude that the remedy requested by the plaintiff in his complaint herein is one that could be used only on mesne process and is not a process to be issued on final judgment. We note that in support of his said second ground of appeal no cases have been cited by appellant, decided since our Code has been in existence.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore affirmed.

HALE v. GIESEA et al. (Civ. 5817.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 13, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 8, 1927.

1. Partnership ⇨216(1)—Defendants' assertion of being joint adventurers held without allegations, where, after complaint alleging copartnership, they appeared and filed answer as such.

Where defendants, in action wherein complaint alleged that defendants were copartners, appeared as copartners, filed an answer as such, and did not deny that they were copartners, subsequent assertion that they were joint adventurers was entirely without allegations of pleadings, and did not present issue on that subject to trial court.

2. Partnership ⇨267—That copartnership ceased to produce entertainments for which it was organized on certain date did not show dissolution.

Mere fact that copartnership ceased to produce entertainments for which it was organized on certain date did not in itself show a dissolution on that date.

3. Partnership ⇨146(2)—Manager of copartnership had authority to execute notes to take up duebills given to creditors (Civ. Code, § 2429).

Under Civ. Code, § 2429, manager of copartnership, with full power to hire and discharge, collect receipts, pay bills and employees, held to have had power to execute notes in name of partnership to take up duebills executed by him to creditors.

4. Husband and wife ⇨267(2)—Assignee of notes by wife without husband's consent had right to sue thereon (Civ. Code, § 954; Code Civ. Proc. § 370).

Assignee of notes assigned by wife without consent of husband had right to sue thereon, in view of Civ. Code, § 954, and Code Civ. Proc. § 370, authorizing wife to sue alone on such claim.

5. Bills and notes ⇨523—Notes were properly admitted in action thereon by assignee, where his testimony regarding title was uncontradicted.

Where in action on notes by assignee, plaintiff testified regarding his title to notes, and no evidence was introduced contradicting his testimony in that regard, the notes were properly received in evidence.

6. Pleading ⇨380—Trial ⇨396(3)—Complaint pleading note authorizing attorney's fees and praying for reasonable attorney's fee authorized proof thereof without so pleading in each count and sustained finding of $250 attorney's fee.

Complaint, in action on notes, pleading each note in hac verba, with clause providing for reasonable attorney's fees, with prayer for a reasonable attorney's fee to be allowed in premises, held sufficient to admit proof thereof, though not pleading reasonable attorney's fee in each count, and finding separate amount of principal and of interest on each note, "plus $250 attorney's fee," was sufficient to sustain judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Theodore Hale against F. A. Glesea and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Silverstein, Collier & Silverstein, of Oakland, for appellants.

Theodore Hale, Barry J. Colding, Wm. M. Abbott, and K. W. Cannon, all of San Francisco (Enid Childs, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to recover on six separate promissory notes. All defendants answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff, and, from a judgment based thereon, the defendants have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Each note was dated March 26, 1923; each note was for a different amount; each note was payable to a different payee; but otherwise each note was in the same general form and was a demand note bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent., payable in San Francisco, and contained a provision for an attorney fee if suit were brought, and each note was signed, "Cosmopolitan Producing Company, by Dick Wilbur, Manager."

[1-3] It is contended by the defendants that they were not copartners. It was alleged in the complaint that they were copartners, and the defendants appeared as copartners, filed an answer as copartners, and did not deny that they were copartners. The denial that was interposed was a denial as to what business, if any, the copartnership undertook. The defendants assert that they were joint adventurers. That assertion is entirely without the allegations of the pleadings. No issue on that subject was presented to the trial court. The last contention made by the defendants is that, if the relationship of the defendants was that of copartners, the defendant Dick Wilbur had no power to execute the notes. In this connection it may be stated that all of the individuals are actors. Prior to the month of November, 1922, they entered into a plan and arrangement to produce certain entertainments at different places in the state of California. Commencing in about the month of November they proceeded to carry out the plan. Mr. Rusco acted as advance agent and proceeded ahead of the theatrical troupe, making arrangements, etc. Mr. Wilbur acted as manager, and as such had full power to hire and discharge, to collect the receipts, pay the bills and pay the employees. Each week he rendered accounts to each of his four partners. The enterprise was a failure, and came to an end about the 17th of March, 1923. At that time Mr. Wilbur executed to each of the creditors a duebill. Thereafter the notes in suit were executed to the payees and the duebills were taken up. The defendants vigorously complain because the plaintiff, as assignee of his clients, insisted upon and, in fact, induced Mr. Wilbur to execute the notes and take up the duebills. In this connection the defendants strenuously contend that, although the shows did not stop until March 17, 1923, the partnership was dissolved and no act of a partner could be performed as such by Mr. Wilbur on March 26, 1923, the date of the notes—nine days thereafter. From the record before us, it is clear that the partnership was formed as early as November, 1922. The defendants cite no part of the record showing a dissolution of the partnership prior to March 26, 1923, nor at any other time. The mere fact that the association ceased to produce entertainments on March 17, 1923, did not in itself show a dissolution on that date. The defendants further contend that as manager Mr. Wilbur did not have the power to execute the notes. The contention is entirely without merit. Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 338, 341, 342, 66 P. 309; Civ. Code, § 2429.

The defendants contend that the relation existing among them was an agreement merely for financing. As stated above, such a contention is entirely without the issues in the case. Moreover it is in direct conflict with much of the evidence.

[4] The defendants assert that one of the notes was made payable to Ivy Mertons; that she was at all times mentioned in the pleadings the wife of Mr. Wilbur; that the note in her favor was community property; that the husband has the management of the community property; and that the assignment of the note to the plaintiff without the consent of the husband was invalid. There is no evidence that the assignment was without the husband's consent. Our statute authorizes a wife to sue alone on such a claim. Civ. Code § 370. No reason appears why her assignee may not sue thereon. Civ. Code § 954.

[5] Objection was made in the trial court, and is made at this time, that the notes were improperly received in evidence. The plaintiff was sworn as a witness and testified regarding his title to the notes. No evidence was introduced contradicting his testimony in that regard. Each note bore an indorsement in blank which purported to be the signature of the payee. The notes were produced out of the possession of the plaintiff. The trial court did not err in receiving them in evidence. Edwards v. Wagner, 121 Cal. 376, 53 P. 821; Vance v. Gilbert, 178 Cal. 574, 174 P. 42; Bickerdike v. State, 144 Cal. 698, 700, 701, 78 P. 277.

[6] In drawing his complaint, the plaintiff pleaded each note in hæc verba; as recited above, each note contained a clause that a reasonable attorney's fee might be allowed by the court in case suit was brought; in each count the plaintiff did not plead what was a reasonable attorney's fee, but in his prayer he did ask for "a reasonable attorney's fee to be allowed in the premises." In making its findings, the trial court, "as conclusions of law," found separately the amount of the principal, the amount of interest, "plus $250 attorney's fee." The pleading was sufficient to admit the proof and the findings were sufficient to support the judgment. Conner v. Dale, 63 Cal. App. 338, 341, 342, 218 P. 462.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. LOS ANGELES
PACIFIC NAV. CO. et al. ★
(Civ. 4641.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 12, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 8, 1927.

1. United States ⇄ 52½—Agreement between United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and shipping company for operation of ship held to create agency.

Agreement between United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and shipping company for operation of steel cargo vessel, wherein company agreed to perform customary duties of management and operation subject to corporation's orders and to deposit moneys collected as trust fund, held not demise but contract creating agency for performance of specific duties.

2. United States ⇄ 52½—Shipping company, operating under agency agreement with Emergency Fleet Corporation, held to act solely as agent of United States in employing captain.

Shipping company, operating under agency agreement with Emergency Fleet Corporation, held to act solely as agent of the United States, the owner of the ship, in employing captain, so that captain was not the company's employee.

3. Collision ⇄ 115—Shipping company, operating under agency agreement with Emergency Fleet Corporation, held not liable for reckless navigation by captain (Civ. Code, § 2351).

Shipping company, operating under agency agreement with Emergency Fleet Corporation, held not liable for damages resulting from collision caused by reckless navigation by the captain, a subagent of the United States, employed by the company on the government's behalf, since, under Civ. Code, § 2351, original agent is not responsible to third persons for act of subagent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action to recover damages for injuries to property through negligence, brought by the City of Los Angeles against the Los Angeles Pacific Navigation Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff against the defendant named, and that defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. R. Young, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jess E. Stephens and Charles B. MacCoy, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The findings of the court include the following facts: On the 15th day of April, 1920, the plaintiff was the owner of a motorboat named "Thais," which was moored at a wharf or dock known as the First street dock, in and upon the waters of Los Angeles harbor. On the morning of that day appellant was operating and had the exclusive control and management of the freight steamer West Hixton, which was then being operated, managed, and directed by appellant, and was under the command of Lewis C. Drewson, captain of said vessel. The West Hixton was proceeding under the direct command of Drewson down channel to said First street wharf or dock under and by virtue of orders so to do issued to Capt. Drewson by the port captain of appellant. Drewson was employed as captain of said vessel by appellant, and his salary as such captain was paid by appellant. But in its operation of the West Hixton, and in its employment of Drewson, appellant claims that it was acting only as agent of the owner, out of whose funds Drewson's wages were paid.

At the same time the motor ferry T. F. was owned and being operated by the defendant San Pedro Transportation Company in ferry service. Shortly before the collision hereinafter mentioned, the ferry T. F. started upon a trip across the harbor from the east side of the channel to the First street ferry slip on the west side of the channel. As the ferry T. F. proceeded down channel for the purpose of docking at the First street wharf, the West Hixton struck it, and then struck the north end of the First street wharf, thereby displacing certain large timbers of the wharf, some of which fell upon the motorboat Thais, then moored under said dock, and thereby caused the damage of which plaintiff complains. The West Hixton at the time of and just prior to the said collisions was navigated by said Capt. Drewson in a careless, reckless, and negligent manner, thereby causing said collisions. The court further found that there was no negligence in the management of the ferry T. F., and that the damage was caused solely by the negligence of appellant. Accordingly, judgment was rendered against the Los Angeles Pacific Navigation Company alone, and that defendant appeals from the judgment.

Appellant makes no attack upon the finding that the cause of collision and resulting damage was the negligent navigation of the West Hixton by Capt. Drewson. Appellant presents as the sole ground of appeal its contention that it was not liable for the negligent navigation of the West Hixton by Capt. Drewson. As stated by counsel for appellant, the question for consideration here narrows itself to a pure question of law, whether or not, under the undisputed evidence, Capt. Drewson, as a matter of law, was an employee of the Pacific Navigation Company, or whether he was, as a matter of law, a subagent or coagent of that company, both the company and Drewson being agents of the owner of the West Hixton, the United States of America. It is conceded that if the captain was a servant and employee of appellant, then appellant was liable for his negligent acts, and the judgment should be affirmed. On the other hand, appellant claims that, if the captain was the servant and in the employ of the United States Shipping Board, then appellant was not liable for his acts, and the judgment should be reversed.

In support of said contention of appellant, three points are made: First, that defendant's relation to the West Hixton was fixed by contract between the defendant and the United States of America, owner of the ship, and that under that contract appellant was but an agent of the United States for the performance of specified duties, which did not include responsibility for the vessel's navigation. Second, that, in navigating the vessel, the master of the West Hixton was the agent and employee of its owner, the United States of America, and that, in relation to appellant, the master was but a co-agent of appellant. Third, that an agent is not liable to third parties for the negligent acts of his principal, nor for the negligent acts of subagents or coagents of the principal.

The contract under which the West Hixton was being operated is in a standard form, known as "Form MO3." In part, it reads as follows:

"Agency Agreement for Managing and Operating Steel Cargo Vessels.

"This contract, dated this 17th day of March, 1920, between the United States of America, owner of certain vessels, represented by the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, hereinafter called the corporation, and Los Angeles Pacific Navigation Company, managing agent, hereinafter called the agent, witnesseth:

"1. The corporation appoints the agent as its agent for the management, operation, and conduct of the business of such vessels as it has assigned and may assign to the agent for such purposes.

"2. The agent agrees to act as such agent and to manage, operate, and conduct the business of such vessels as have been assigned or may be assigned for such purpose. While the agent is to be held responsible for the management of the vessels, he shall be subject to the orders of the corporation as to all matters affecting the use of the vessels when the corporation deems the exercise of such power to be in the public interest.

"3. The agent agrees to man, equip, victual, and supply the vessel, to provide and pay for all provisions, wages, fuel, fresh water, stevedoring, port charges, pilotage, agencies' commissions, consular charges, cabin, deck, engine room, and other stores, and all other costs and expenses incident to the management, operation, and conduct of the business of the vessel except as is otherwise provided herein. * * *

"5. The agent agrees to exercise reasonable care to avoid damage of every nature and to see that no damage to the vessel arises from loading improper cargo, from improper stowage, or from improper berthing of the vessel, and to see that all freight is prepaid, except when otherwise instructed by the corporation, or where the prevailing customs in the particular trade as to prepayment of freight is to the contrary, in which case the utmost diligence on the part of the agent shall be exercised both as to the acceptance of the cargo and in the collection of the freight money; failing to exercise such diligence, the agent shall be liable therefor.

"6. The agent agrees to perform all the customary duties of a managing and operating owner of the vessels, and to perform, or cause to be performed, all the customary agency duties concerned with loading and discharging cargoes at all ports included in the vessel's itinerary and all things necessary for the protection and safeguarding of the interests of the corporation. * * *

"8. The agent, on behalf of the corporation, agrees to collect at the proper time all freights and other moneys arising out of the management, operation, and business of the vessel and to advance all disbursements for customary cargo, managing, and operating expenses, and for all other reasonable expenses properly to be paid by a vessel owner, and to do all things which the corporation is required in law and custom to do, either as owner of the vessels or as carrier of cargo."

The contract then provides for deposit in bank, by the agent, of all moneys collected on behalf of the corporation, as a trust fund, which moneys shall be the property of the corporation. The contract further provided that the agent "shall not mingle the same with moneys owned or held by the agent, but shall make from such fund all disbursements authorized to be paid by the agent for the account of the corporation and shall, at such times and in such form as may be directed by the corporation, render a full account of all moneys received. * * *" It was provided further that the agent "shall keep separate books of account in such manner and form as may be prescribed by, or approved by, the corporation, devoted exclusively to its agency business with the corporation." The agent was to be compensated by a fixed fee, plus a stated commission on all net profits. For the purpose of determining net revenue, certain rules were established, one of which was that "general average, collision, and other claims shall be charged to the vessel only to such extent as they are not completely covered and reimbursed by insurance."

[1] We are satisfied that under this contract appellant was merely an agent of the United States for the performance of specified duties. In Mallory S. S. Co. v. Garfield, 10 F.(2d) 664, in the Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, this same form of contract MO3 was fully considered, and the court said:

"The terms of this agreement establish an agency. It clearly appears that the relation existing between the Fleet Corporation and the Mallory Steamship Company was that of agency, with duties and authority fully expressed."

Accordingly the Mallory Steamship Company was held not liable for damages for delay in transportation of merchandise delivered to it for such transportation. In that case a petition for certiorari was denied October 18, 1926, by the United States Supreme Court. It is true that the Circuit Court in its decision distinguished between the liability on contract and a liability arising out of tort. "If a duty rested upon the Mallory line in its character apart from its agency, and was one that the law imposed upon it, independent of its agency employment, then it might be liable for tort."

[2] So here, if appellant was itself guilty of negligence proximately causing the injury for which respondent seeks to recover damages in this action, the agency contract would not protect appellant against that liability. The further question, therefore, is, "Was the negligence of Capt. Drewson the negligence of appellant?" Appellant contends that the answer here depends upon the further question, "Was Drewson an employee of appellant?" We are of the opinion that, in employing Drewson, appellant was acting solely as agent of the owner of the ship, and that Drewson was the employee of the owner and not of the agent. Conceding that, as respondent contends, the employee was under the control and subject to the orders of appellant, yet that control was merely control by the principal through the agent. The negligence did not occur by reason of appellant's direction to Drewson to move the ship to a certain place. It was negligence by the captain, consisting of carelessness in his manner of operation of the ship while executing the order. Under these circumstances the negligence must be attributed, not to the agent who gave the order under which the ship was being moved, but to the owner whose employee was guilty of that negligence.

[3] If there had been a demise charter of the West Hixton to appellant, so that for the time being the ship was being operated by appellant as owner, appellant might well be held responsible for the captain's negligence. But the contract was not a demise charter. If it had been intended that appellant should run the ship as owner and not as agent, naturally the wages of the captain and other employees would have been made payable by appellant out of its own funds and not out of the funds belonging to the United States. Here, appellant was acting as an agent in providing the ship with officers and a crew. The contract throughout indicates that intention. "If, under the circumstances, it appears that the agent employed the subagent for his principal, and by his authority, expressed or implied, then the subagent is the agent of the principal; * * * and, if damage results from the conduct of such subagent, the agent is only responsible to his principal in case he has not exercised due care in the selection of the subagent. For the torts of such subagent to third persons, the agent would not be liable merely by virtue of this relation, but the principal would be liable as for the torts of any agent." Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) § 332. The Civil Code, § 2351, says:

"A subagent, lawfully appointed, represents the principal in like manner with the original agent; and the original agent is not responsible to third persons for the acts of the subagent."

Again:

"The rule is that an agent is not in general liable to third persons for the misfeasance or malfeasance of a subagent employed by him in the service of his principal, unless he is guilty of negligence in the employment of such subagent or improperly co-operates in the latter's acts or omissions." Baisley v. Henry, 55 Cal. App. 760, 763, 204 P. 399.

The judgment is reversed.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF LA HABRA v.
CALDWELL et al.

SAME v. ANNECHINI et al.

(Civ. 5058.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 15, 1927.

1. Escrows ⇨8(2)—Reasonable time for examining title and issuing certificate and guaranty is for court or jury, under circumstances of particular case.

Question of reasonable length of time for examination of title and issuance of certificate and guaranty as bearing on right to rescind escrow instructions is for court or jury to decide on all circumstances of particular case in issue.

2. Escrows ⇨8(2)—Evidence held to support finding that vendors' delay in delivering certificate of title and guaranty was unreasonable.

Evidence held to support finding of trial court that from the 7th day of June to the 21st day of September was unreasonable length of time for vendors of percentage of interest in mineral rights in certain property to deliver certificate of title and guaranty in accordance with escrow instructions.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Judgment will not be disturbed, where finding appears supported by evidence.

Where evidence appears to support finding of trial court, judgment will not be disturbed on appeal.

4. Escrows ⇨8(2)—Purchasers of interest in mineral rights could rescind escrow instructions on vendor's failure to deliver certificate of title and guaranty for unreasonable time (Civ. Code, §§ 1492, 1657).

Purchasers of interest in mineral rights held entitled to rescind or cancel escrow instructions after delay from June 7th to September 21st in delivering certificate of title and guaranty, though there was no time limit placed in escrow instructions, trial court finding that reasonable time allowed in such case, under Civ. Code, § 1657, had elapsed and delay not being capable of exact and entire compensation, as required by section 1492.

5. Escrows ⚡8(2)—Purchasers of interest in mineral rights were not required before rescinding escrow instructions to offer to return deeds not coming into their possession (Civ. Code, § 1057).

Purchasers of interest in mineral rights were not required before rescinding escrow instructions to return deeds as prerequisite where deeds never came into their possession or under their control, since placing of deed in escrow did not make it an executed instrument, within Civ. Code, § 1057.

6. Escrows ⚡8(1)—Escrow holder is agent of purchaser as to deed deposited with him and of seller as to money paid him by grantee.

Where a deed is deposited in escrow by grantor to be delivered to grantee on payment to escrow holder of sum of money to be delivered by him to grantor on production of satisfactory certificate of title, escrow holder is as to such deed and money agent of both parties until such time as satisfactory certificate is produced.

7. Escrows ⚡9—Escrow agent did not become purchasers' agent as to deeds, where satisfactory certificate of title was not produced before rescinding escrow instructions.

Where satisfactory certificate of title was not produced before rescission of escrow instructions, escrow agent did not become purchasers' agent as to deeds, and purchasers were never entitled to possession, making it unnecessary that they offer to return deeds as prerequisite of rescission.

8. Appeal and error ⚡1058(2)—Error did not result from refusing expert testimony as to time for examination of title, where it was permitted on cross-examination.

Where, in action involving rescission of escrow instructions, objection was sustained to question asked secretary of title company as to his opinion on reasonableness of time taken by title company in issuing certificate, prejudicial error did not result where he was permitted, on cross-examination, to testify over objection as to ordinary time it would take to check title to real estate.

9. Evidence ⚡570—It is not mandatory that trial court accept expert's conclusion.

It is not mandatory that trial court accept conclusion of an expert, even though it is contradicted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Separate suits by the First National Bank of La Habra against W. W. Caldwell, Elva May Beer, and Leslie P. Beer, wherein defendant Caldwell filed a cross-complaint against defendants Beer, and defendants Beer filed a cross-complaint against defendant Caldwell, and by the First National Bank of La Habra against Joe Marcell Annechini, Elva May Beer, and Leslie P. Beer, wherein defendant Annechini filed a cross-complaint against defendants Beer, and defendants Beer filed a cross-complaint against defendant Annechini. Judgment for defendant Caldwell in the first action, and for defendant Annechini in the second action, and defendants Beer appeal. Affirmed.

Owens & Wingert, of Whittier, for appellants.

Howard S. Lewis and Clarence E. Fleming, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Defendants and cross-complainants Elva May Beer and Leslie P. Beer appeal from judgments rendered in favor of defendants and cross-complainants Caldwell and Annechini, except from that part of said judgment discharging the First National Bank of La Habra from liability as escrow holder. By stipulation of the parties, the two cases were tried together, and by further stipulation the cases were consolidated on appeal.

On the 7th day of June, 1923, Elva May Beer and Leslie P. Beer deposited with the First National Bank of La Habra their deeds conveying to W. W. Caldwell and Joe Marcell Annechini each a 2 per cent. of the entire mineral rights in certain real property situated in Los Angeles county, Cal., which property the Beers had previously sold, retaining one-sixth of the oil rights. They deposited therewith their escrow instructions covering such deeds, agreeing to a delivery thereof to Caldwell and Annechini upon the payment of $15,000 in cash. On the same day Caldwell and Annechini each deposited with the same bank the sum of $1,000, each giving their written escrow instructions as follows:

"To the First National Bank of La Habra.

"I herewith hand you $1,000, later I will deliver you $8,000 additional, this money is for your use when you can deliver me a deed, executed by Elva May Beer and husband, conveying 2 per cent. of the oil rights of lots 87, 89, 91, 93, and 94, Dunn, Smith and Cornell's addition, in Los Angeles County, Cal. I have this day marked my initials in lead pencil on this deed to identify it. I am to be furnished a certificate of title to show that the grantors of within deed reserved one-sixth interest in the oil right of this property, and further that said interest has not been conveyed by them, nor incumbered in any way, and that they still hold this interest, excepting the 2 per cent. interest sold to myself, and 2 per cent. sold to Joe Marcell Annechini in this escrow.

"We are to be charged only with the expense of recording our deed, and the new ownership fee on this certificate of title. It is understood that certificate of title shall be guaranteed for at least $4,500, a per cent. of the interest conveyed, and shall be extended to show the deed conveying 2 per cent. grow oil interest to us, on record.

"We agree to deposit the additional $8,000 with you at such time as the title company reports the title to the above interest is as called for above, in the event that we fail to make this additional deposit, you are to deliver the within $1,000 to Elva May Beer and her husband, as liquidated damages to them."

The bank thereupon ordered the certificate of title from the Los Angeles Title Insurance Company. On June 25th the title company gave the bank a preliminary report, and on July 9th, a further report as follows. This exhibit is on the letter head of the Los Angeles Title Insurance Company:

"Los Angeles, Cal., July 9, 1923, at 8 a. m. In reply refer to order 234360. (Pencil notation on said document, 'Recd July 13—23.')

"First National Bank, La Habra, California. —Gentlemen: We have made an examination of the title * * * and from such examination find that on January 28, 1922, Elva May Schandoney was vested with the fee title to said property, free from incumbrances.

"By a deed dated April 21, 1922, recorded April 26, 1922, in Book 937, page 353, of Official Records, Elva May Beer, who acquired this title as Elva May Schandoney, and Leslie P. Beer, her husband, executed a deed for said property to Albert L. Tilton, which deed contains the following:

"Excepting therefrom one-sixth ($\frac{1}{6}$) of all the mineral rights which the above Elva May Beer is to retain and which if oil is found on any of the above lots or in any pool of lots which the above lots or parcels of land happen to be in, mineral rights in this deed means, oil, gas, or any hydrocarbon substance which may be found on any of the above-described property."

"A further examination of the title to said property subsequent to January 28, 1922, shows that the said Elva May Beer has not conveyed, incumbered, or suffered any incumbrances of her interest in said property reserved by the above-mentioned deed.

"Awaiting your further instructions, we are.
* * *

This latter report was copied by the bank and sent to both Caldwell and Annechini with the following letter, on July 13th:

"In connection with the escrow wherein you are buying an oil interest from Mrs. Elva May Beer.

"We are herewith inclosing you a copy of the report as to the title of this property made by the California Title Insurance Company, of Los Angeles, dated July 9, received by us today.

"It is the writer's opinion that if we can obtain a formal certificate of this company to the facts as set out on this report, with an additional statement that, the rights described in the deed to you from Mrs. Beer had been conveyed to you, and that this deed was of record, it will comply with your instructions to us

"When you were here we prepared a copy of this Beer deed, but find you failed to take it with you, thinking possible you might wish to consult with your attorney before closing this am sending this copy.

"Mrs. Beer is anxious to get her money, and would appreciate it if you would make the additional deposit to complete purchase price at once, at which time we will attempt to complete matters with as little delay as it is possible."

Upon the 18th day of July Caldwell and Annechini deposited the further sum of $8,000 each with the bank. On July 19th the bank transmitted to the title company a copy of the deeds which the Beers had placed in escrow, and ordered a certificate guaranteed in the amount of $9,000 as to each deed, showing the 2 per cent. interest of oil rights described in each of said deeds vested in the grantee. On July 25th the title company acknowledged receipt of the foregoing, and stated:

"The only guaranty this company can issue is one that will show that Beer is the owner of the interest retained in the deed to Albert L. Tilton, dated April 21, 1922, and recorded April 26th, as follows:

"Excepting therefrom one-sixth of all the mineral rights which the above Elva May Beer is to retain and which if oil is found on any of the above lots or in any pool of lots which the above lots or parcels of land happen to be in, mineral rights in this deed means, oil, gas, or any hydrocarbon substances which may be found on any of the above-described property; and that such interest has not been conveyed or incumbered by the owner. If such a guaranty will be satisfactory, kindly advise, and we shall proceed."

The foregoing letter was shown to Caldwell and Annechini. It thus appears that the title company, on July 25th, refused to issue the guaranty as required by the escrow instructions, though willing to issue a certificate of title for the land and oil rights without the guaranty of $4,500, a per cent. of the oil rights. Notwithstanding this refusal of the title company to issue a guaranty certificate, the bank, with the consent of all parties, continued its efforts to secure said certificate, and on several occasions reported to Caldwell and Annechini that the certificate would be issued within a few days. On September 14th Owens & Wingert, attorneys for appellants Beer, addressed a letter to Annechini in which appears the following:

"We understand that the first National Bank of La Habra will, if it has not already, receive a certificate of title covering this land and showing 16% per cent. of the production of this lease vested in Elva May Beer and Leslie P. Beer. The reservation of the land royalty contained in the deed from Elva May Beer and Leslie P. Beer to Albert L. Tilton is not stated clearly, and they have employed us to bring an action to reform the instrument so as to conform to the intent of the parties at the time. From the evidence which we have at hand, there is no doubt in our minds but that we can reform the instrument to definitely express the intent of the parties at the time of the transfer."

Finally, on September 21st, Caldwell and Annechini demanded the return of the money which had been deposited with the bank in escrow, under date of June 7th, on the grounds that a certificate of title had not been furnished within a reasonable time, and that the Beers were unable to furnish a certificate. The title company was immediately notified by the bank to discontinue work. Appellants demanded completion of the escrow and the payment of the money, and on October 11th the title company signified its willingness to issue the guaranty certificate. These suits were brought by the bank as escrow holder, offering to deposit the money in court so that the conflicting claims of the respective parties might be determined, and that the bank be discharged of liability. Defendants and appellants Beer filed their answer and cross-complaint demanding that Caldwell and Annechini be compelled to complete the escrow instructions and pay over the moneys to defendants and appellants Beer. Defendants and respondents Caldwell and Annechini filed their answer and cross-complaint, demanding judgment for the payment of the money deposited in escrow, and that defendants and cross-complainants Beer take nothing under their cross-complaint. At the trial the plaintiff bank was by order of court released from further liability as to the money, and the cases were tried upon the respective cross-actions.

[1-3] The principal question before the trial court was whether the vendees, Caldwell and Annechini, were entitled to rescind their escrow instructions and to have the purchase money returned to them by the escrow holder. This, in turn, depends upon whether the time elapsing between the 7th of June and the 21st of September is an unreasonable length of time for the examination of title and the issuance of the certificate and guaranty of title.

The question of what is a reasonable length of time is one for the court or jury to decide upon all the circumstances of the particular case in issue. It is primarily a question of fact for the trial court. Hoppin v. Munsey, 185 Cal. 678, 198 P. 398; Adams & McKee Land Co. v. Dugan, 68 Cal. App. 226, 228 P. 681. With respect to the work done by the title company, the principal difficulty seemed to be the question of the matter of policy whether or not the company would issue the guaranty of $4,500, a per cent. of the interest conveyed, such form of guaranty not having been issued before by the title company. On July 25th the title company by letter signified their unwillingness to issue such form of guaranty. Appellants insist that all parties waived any right they may have had to rescind the agreement by proceeding with the escrow after receipt of the letter of July 25th from the title company, and that the Beers were then entitled to reasonable time to furnish the certificate to comply with the escrow instructions. Conceding, without deciding, this point, it is to be remembered that reasonable time is to be determined under all the circumstances of the case. The title company was ready to issue a certificate on the 25th day of July, and, according to the testimony of the assistant secretary of the title company, in order to issue a guaranty it was further necessary to examine 421 instruments to learn whether or not the Beers had joined in a community lease, so as to determine whether the Beers had conveyed away their interest in the oil rights. Other witnesses testified that this work did not require a detailed examination of the various instruments, but merely required an examination of the names of the parties to those conveyances in order to determine whether the Beers had joined in executing them. But the evidence was in conflict as to the time required by a title company to issue a similar certificate and guaranty. A witness from the title company testified that anywhere from three weeks to four months would have been a reasonable time to issue a certificate, and that thirty days was the usual time. One witness testified that six months would be required; another, that thirty days would be sufficient, and in less time where a rush order is given in an oil deal. The witness from the title company testified that the additional search was completed about September 15th, and also testified that the company flatly refused to issue the guaranty up to the time it received notice about September 21st to discontinue the work, and would not have issued the guaranty at the time it received notice from the bank to proceed no further. After a careful review of all the evidence and circumstances in the case, we cannot say that there was no evidence to support the finding of the trial court that from the 7th day of June to the 21st day of September was an unreasonable length of time for the appellants to deliver a certificate of title and guaranty. It should further be understood that we are not deciding as a matter of law that three and one-half months is an unreasonable time for the delivery of a certificate and guaranty in all cases, but merely that, under all the facts and circumstances in this case, there was some evidence to support the finding of the trial court that such time was unreasonable. Where such evidence appears to support the finding, as we have frequently held, the judgment will not be disturbed on appeal.

[4-7] We see no force in appellants' argument that respondents had no right to rescind or cancel the escrow instructions. True, there was no time limit placed in the escrow instructions, and where no time is specified for the performance of an act required to be performed, a reasonable time is allowed. Civ. Code, § 1657. According to the finding of the trial court, such reasonable time had elapsed. Nor was the delay in performance capable of exact and entire compensation, as required by the provisions of section 1492 of the Civil Code. Neither is there any evidence of an offer of such compensation, as required by said section. Respondents were under no obligations to offer to return the deeds as a prerequisite of rescission, since the deeds never came into their possession nor under their control. The placing of the deed in escrow did not make it an executed instrument. There had been no delivery to the purchasers and no transfer of title. Civ. Code, § 1057; Craig v. White, 187 Cal. 489, 497, 202 P. 648. At no time were respondents entitled to demand the deeds from the escrow agent until the conditions therein were performed; namely, the issuance of a certificate and guaranty. Whenever a deed is deposited in escrow by the grantor to be delivered to the grantee upon payment by him to the escrow holder of a sum of money, to be by the latter delivered to the grantor upon the production by the latter of a satisfactory certificate of title, the escrow holder is, as to the said deed and money, the agent of both parties until such time as the said satisfactory certificate is produced, and he thereupon becomes the agent of the purchaser as to such deed and of the seller as to such money. Shreeves v. Pearson, 194 Cal. 699, 707, 230 P. 448; Hildebrand v. Beck, 196 Cal. 141, 236 P. 301, 39 A. L. R. 1076. In the case at bar a satisfactory certificate of title necessarily included the guaranty. It was not produced before the rescission; hence the escrow agent never became the agent of respondents as to the deeds, and respondents were never entitled to their possession.

[8, 9] Appellants complain of error committed by the trial court in sustaining an objection to a question asked the assistant secretary of the title company as to whether, in his opinion, the time taken by the title company in issuing a certificate of title was a reasonable time. The objection was sustained on the ground that that was a matter for the court to decide. It has frequently been held that it is not error to admit such evidence for the reason that it is because a man's professional pursuit, his peculiar skill and knowledge in some department of science, not common to men in general, enable him to draw an inference, where men of common experience, after all the facts proved, would be left in doubt. Vallejo & Northern R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 571, 147 P. 238; Sheehan v. Board of Police Commissioners, 197 Cal. 70, 78, 239 P. 844. In admitting such testimony the court does not empower the expert witness to decide the facts, nor is the court or jury bound to accept his assertion. Lemley v. Doak Gas Engine Co., 40 Cal. App. 146, 153, 180 P. 671. But we observe no prejudicial error in the court sustaining the objection in the case at bar for the reason that the witness was, on cross-examination, permitted to testify, over objection, that the ordinary time to check the title to a piece of real estate would be anywhere from three weeks to four months, and for the further reason that we have been cited to no case holding it is error to exclude such evidence. It is not mandatory that the trial court accept the conclusion of an expert, even though it is uncontradicted. Layne & Bowler Corporation v. Grogan, 56 Cal. App. 31, 204 P. 252; Spencer v. Collins, 156 Cal. 298, 104 P. 320, 20 Ann. Cas. 49. In many jurisdictions such testimony has often been excluded. Estate of Iser, 52 Cal. App. 405, 198 P. 1014.

The burden of proof was sustained by respondents in furnishing evidence sufficient to support the findings of the trial court.

There being no prejudicial error, the judgments are ordered affirmed.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 5731.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. July 25, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⇨417(7)—Award of Industrial Accident Commission on evidence is conclusive (Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, § 3, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 911).

Appellate court cannot weigh the evidence, on application for certiorari to review an award of compensation, under Workmen's Compensation Act 1917 (St. 1917, p. 833), § 3, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 911, by the Industrial Accident Commission.

2. Master and servant ⇨417(7)—Award supported by evidence that disability was caused wholly by accidental injury cannot be attacked because it was caused partly by pre-existing disease (Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, § 3, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 911).

Where there was evidence that employee's disability was caused wholly by accidental injury, award of compensation for temporary total disability cannot be successfully attacked on ground that claimant was entitled to compensation for only such proportion of disability as was due to aggravation of pre-existing disease, under Workmen's Compensation Act 1917 (St. 1917, p. 833), § 3, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 911.

Proceedings for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Charles M. Whyte, employee, opposed by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, insurance carrier. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation, the insurance carrier applies for certiorari. Writ denied.

Edward C. Mills and Harold J. Hunter, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Commission.

CONREY, P. J. It is conceded that petitioner is under liability to pay compensation to respondent Whyte, at least as for disability caused in part by the accident of June 23, 1926. The award as made is for temporary total disability from that date to December 28, 1926, and thereafter until termination of disability or until further order of the commission.

Petitioner contends that claimant, at and after the time of the accident, was suffering from a pre-existing active disease, contributing to the disability, and therefore that the claimant is entitled to compensation for only such proportion of the disability as is due to the aggravation of the pre-existing disease. This contention rests upon subdivision 4 of section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917, as amended in the year 1919 (St. 1919, p. 911), which provides that, under the stated condition, "compensation shall be allowed only for such proportion of the disability due to the aggravation of such prior disease as may reasonably be attributed to the injury."

Respondent commission admits the fact of the pre-existent and continuing disease, concurrent with the injury resulting from the accident, and that the question of apportionment of compensation may arise upon a subsequent consideration of the case by the commission upon an application to secure a rating for permanent disability when the disability has become permanent. But the commission contends that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of temporary total disability produced solely as a result of the accidental injury.

On June 23, 1926, the applicant, Whyte, while working as a painter, fell 12 feet to the ground, by reason of the breaking down of a scaffold on which he was standing. Prior to that time, notwithstanding his disease, he had suffered no disability in the performance of his work as a painter. The fall and injury were the immediate cause of his disability to work, which began at that time. There is evidence tending to prove that at some early date after June 23, 1926, the disease would have interfered with Whyte's ability to work. How soon that interference would have manifested itself if there had been no accident, is a fact not known. The arthritis and the "decompensating heart" were not caused by the accident, but they now coexist with the injuries resulting from the accident. Dr. Schott thinks that the accidental injury "probably lighted up" an old hypertrophic arthritis in the hips and in the lower back and lower dorsal spine. Dr. Chaf-fin (July 24, 1926) thought that Whyte's present disability "is due to his hyper-thyroidism and heart condition and is not a result of the injury sustained June 23, 1926."

On the other hand, Dr. Baker (December 28, 1926), said:

"Where his pain is and what is preventing him from work is where he was injured, and the other (the heart condition) was nothing to do with that, other than it might shorten his general existence here on earth." * * * "To the best of your judgment, what part of the disability do you think is due to the injury, and what part due to the old conditions?" "I would say entirely to his accident."

[1, 2] It is not for this court to weigh the evidence. We have referred to only a part of the evidence. The evidence would have sustained a finding that the disability is in part caused by disease, and on that evidence an apportionment of the causes of disability might have been made. But there also is evidence tending to prove that the disability thus far has been caused wholly by the accidental injury. This being so, the award could not be successfully attacked, and it would be useless to grant a writ of review. We think that the argument of counsel for respondent, on the present status of the case, should be sustained.

The petition is denied.

WIDNEY v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 5764.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 19, 1927.

Mandamus  46—Mandamus will not lie to require court to allow jury trial which has been denied.

Mandamus held not appropriate remedy to compel superior court to allow jury trial in case where right to trial by jury has been denied.

Application by A. B. Widney for mandamus, to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arthur Keetch, Judge, to compel the allowance of a jury trial. Writ denied.

R. M. Widney, of Pacoima, and Frank L. Muhleman, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. In substance, the petitioner herein prays for a writ of mandate to compel the superior court to allow a jury trial in a case wherein the right of trial by jury has been denied. On the stated facts set forth in the petition mandate is not the appropriate remedy. Donohue v. Superior Court, 93 Cal. 252, 28 P. 1043.

Wherefore it is ordered by the court that the petition for writ of mandate be denied.

GOLDBERG v. STANTON. (Civ. 4694.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 29, 1927.

1. Fixtures § 15.—Tenant's heavy refrigerator, attached only by quarter-round molding tacked to ceiling, held not "fixture" (Civ. Code, § 660).

Heavy refrigerator installed by tenant in storeroom for use in grocery business, not attached to building except by quarter-round molding tacked to ceiling and to refrigerator, held not a "fixture," within Civ. Code, § 660, defining a fixture.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fixture.]

2. Landlord and tenant § 161 (1)—Tenant may remove from demised premises refrigerator not constituting fixture, but is answerable for injuries caused thereby (Civ. Code, § 1019).

A tenant may remove from demised premises refrigerator belonging to him and not constituting a fixture, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 1019, authorizes removal by tenant only if removal can be without injury, but, if in so doing he injures the premises, he is answerable in damages to the landlord.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action for damages by Philip Goldberg against Daniel E. Stanton and Daniel E. Stanton, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of the Bay Cities Mercantile Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appeals. Findings and judgment modified, and judgment, as modified, affirmed.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bearman & Engelhardt and George Appell, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for damages alleged to have been caused to him by reason of the removal by defendant of a refrigerator from certain premises which defendant leased from plaintiff.

It appears that the building in which the refrigerator was installed had no studding in its construction, but that the walls thereof were built by placing wooden boards in an upright position and thereafter covering the cracks between such boards with battens. When the refrigerator was installed a section of the side wall of the building was removed and the refrigerator was taken into the building through the opening thus made. There was no floor in the floor space of the building occupied by the refrigerator, so that the refrigerator rested directly on the floor joists. The refrigerator was taller than the height of the walls of the building, and it became necessary to remove a part of the roof of the building in order to install the refrigerator, after which that part of the roof which had been cut away was rebuilt so as to form a proper but detached covering for the refrigerator, as well as for the building in which the refrigerator was located. No part of the refrigerator was physically attached by nails, bolts, screws or otherwise, to any part of the building excepting that on each of the sides of the refrigerator, at a point where it passed through the ceiling of the building, a strip of quarter-round molding was tacked to the ceiling and to the refrigerator, "making a neat looking job inside of the building." It further appears that defendant was engaged in conducting a grocery business in the storeroom in which the refrigerator was placed, and that it was used by defendant in connection with the operation of his business as a grocer.

[1] The principal questions in the case are whether the refrigerator was a fixture, and whether the tenant had the right to remove the refrigerator. Section 660 of the Civil Code provides that:

"A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws."

In the case of Marker v. Williams, 39 Cal. App. 674, 179 P. 735, it was held (syllabus) that:

"Where refrigerating plant was installed in a hotel building, under a conditional sale contract, in such manner that none of the machinery, pipes, or boxes constituted any part of the support of the building or any of its walls, although the removal of the machinery, piping, and boxes would leave the brackets attached to the walls and would leave apertures in the walls in one or two places requiring the plastering thereof, the character of the machinery, the use for which it was intended in connection with the hotel, the manner in which it was installed, and the apparent intention of its annexation, filled all the requirements of sections 660 and 1013 of the Civil Code to constitute it a fixture as between a grantor and a grantee, relying in good faith on appearances, and without notice of anything to the contrary, yet it was not so incorporated in the building as to be an integral part thereof, and, being removable without serious injury to the real property, it might under section 1019 of the Civil Code, be detachable as a 'trade fixture.'"

In the instant case it is apparent that in no just sense could the flimsy attachment of the refrigerator to the ceiling of the storeroom by means of the quarter-round molding be considered as "permanent," within the meaning of the language contained in section 660 of the Civil Code. It occupied no different position in the storeroom than did possibly the counters, standing desks, or the showcases which, although resting on the floor, may have been lightly tacked thereto for the purpose of helping to better secure them in their respective locations. In other words, in the circumstances here present, the refrigerator might be regarded simply as a piece of heavy furniture, like a steel safe, or equipment of any sort, either necessary or useful in the conduct of the business in which the defendant was engaged. The mere fact that some light nails were used in attaching the quarter-round molding to the ceiling and to the refrigerator cannot be considered as sufficient to create a condition by which the bulky refrigerator was "permanently attached" to the realty.

[2] It is suggested that the provisions of section 1019 of the Civil Code would bar defendant from removal of the refrigerator from the leased premises. That section is as follows:

"A tenant may remove from the demised premises, any time during the continuance of his term, anything affixed thereto for purposes of trade, manufacture, ornament, or domestic use, if the removal can be effected without injury to the premises, unless the thing has, by the manner in which it is affixed, become an integral part of the premises."

In other words, if the refrigerator had not been so affixed to the premises as to become an "integral part" thereof, it might have been legally removed, provided that in effecting such removal no injury was done to the premises.

From what heretofore has been stated herein, it has been attempted to show that in the opinion of this court the attachment of the refrigerator to the ceiling of the storeroom by means of the quarter-round molding did not have the effect of making the refrigerator an "integral part of the premises" nor any part thereof. Primarily, the refrigerator was defendant's property and he had a right to its possession. But in its removal from premises belonging to plaintiff, defendant was bound, at his peril, to do no injury to property belonging to plaintiff. The evidence shows that a portion of the roof and one wall of the building was torn out by defendant in effecting the removal of the refrigerator, and consequently that considerable "injury to the premises" was thus effected. It is therefore proper that defendant respond in damages. With reference thereto, the findings by the trial court are:

"That by reason of the removal of said roof and wall of said building, * * * plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $309.50. * * *"

The trial court included in its judgment damages in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $500 as the value of the refrigerator which defendant removed from the premises. In view of the fact that defendant was the legal owner of the refrigerator, we think error was committed in allowing plaintiff damages for its value.

It is ordered that finding 2 and the findings concerning damages by reason of the removal of said refrigerator, in the loss to plaintiff of the value thereof, be modified in accordance with the views hereinabove stated, and that the judgment be and hereby is so modified that thereby plaintiff shall have and recover of and from defendant the sum of $309.50, with costs; and that, as so modified, the judgment shall be and it is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

LOCKE v. DUCHESNAY et al. (Civ. 3013.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 15, 1927.

1. Joint adventures —Evidence held to show joint adventure by defendants, sued for value of work done in improving land.

In action against landowner, real estate agent, and latter's wife, to whom land was conveyed without cash consideration, for value of work done in plowing, grading, and leveling land, evidence held to show joint adventure by defendants in improvement thereof for sale.

2. Appeal and error  1170(3)—Permitting amendment of complaint to charge one of several joint adventurers with liability as principal held not reversible error (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Permitting amendment of complaint, in action for value of work done in plowing, grading, and leveling land, to charge one of three defendants, whom evidence showed were joint adventurers, with liability as principal, held not reversible error, as showing miscarriage of justice as to him within Const. art. 6, § 4½, though amendments were filed before court order permitting them; such defendant being individually liable in either case.

3. Joint adventures  7—One liable as joint adventurer is individually liable.

One liable with others as joint adventurer in improving land for purpose of sale, for value of work done in plowing, grading, and leveling it, is individually liable.

4. Appeal and error  994(3)—Credibility of testimony and effect of defendant's denials are for trial court.

Credibility of witnesses' testimony and effect to be given defendant's denials are purely for consideration of trial court.

5. Contracts $\S$ 324(1)—When contract is fully performed, except for payment of money by defendant, plaintiff may declare specially thereon, or generally in indebitatus assumpsit.

When contract has been fully performed, and nothing remains to be done under it but payment of money by defendant, plaintiff may declare specially on contract, or generally in indebitatus assumpsit.

6. Pleading $\S$ 237(6)—On variance between allegations in indebitatus assumpsit and proof of express contract, fully performed except for payment of money by defendant, pleading is amendable.

When contract has been fully performed, and nothing remains to be done thereunder but payment of money by defendant, there is no fatal variance between allegations in action of indebitatus assumpsit and proofs of express contract, and pleadings may be amended to conform to proofs.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 170(7)—Permitting plaintiff's witness to refresh memory from books, showing time afterward testified to by defendant from his own records, held not reversible error (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

Permitting plaintiff's witness, in action for value of work done, to refresh his memory from time-books in testifying to work performed, was without prejudice to defendant, and hence not reversible error, under Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, where defendant afterward testified without contradiction as to identical time from his own records.

8. Payment $\S$ 17—Judgment for plaintiff held excessive by amount realized by discounting defendants' note; transaction constituting payment of such amount.

Judgment for plaintiff, in action for value of labor performed, held excessive by amount realized by plaintiff by discounting note, executed by defendants to enable plaintiff to raise money due him by using defendants' credit; such transaction constituting payment of such sum, though note was still held by bank.

9. Assignments $\S$ 115—Assignee of account, after assignment of note for part of amount due, cannot recover amount of note.

One to whom account for work done was assigned, after assignor's assignment to bank of note for part of sum due, could not recover amount of such note from parties for whom work was done.

10. Appeal and error $\S$ 880(3)—Default against defendants not appealing cannot be considered on codefendant's appeal from judgment against him.

Whether default against defendants not appealing or complaining was erroneous cannot be considered on codefendant's appeal from subsequent judgment against him.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by N. H. Locke against A. E. J. Duchesnay and others. From a judgment against defendant Silva, he appeals. Modified, and affirmed as modified.

Driver, Driver & Tade, Driver & Driver, and B. F. Driver, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Parkinson & Parkinson, of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment in an action to recover for work and labor performed, etc., in plowing, grading, and leveling a certain tract of land situate in the county of San Joaquin, and the defendant Silva appeals.

The appellant assigns five specific errors, as reasons for reversal of the judgment herein, to wit: (1) Error of the trial court in allowing amendments to pleadings to conform to the proofs; (2) errors of the trial court in admitting evidence; (3) error in denying appellant's motion for a nonsuit; (4) that the findings of fact and conclusions of law are not supported by the evidence; (5) that the judgment of the court is not justified by the pleadings, by the findings of facts, or conclusions of law.

Before referring to the alleged errors of the court, reference may properly be had to section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, wherein it is provided that:

"No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, in any case, on the ground of misdirection of the jury, or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading, * * * unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

By this section, unless the alleged errors of the court relating to the pleadings and the admission of evidence, or refusal to strike out evidence, have led to a miscarriage of justice, then, even though it be admitted that the points made by appellant are technically correct, a case has not been made out for the reversal of the judgment. It may be stated that a careful review of the evidence and a thorough reading of the amendments allowed to the pleadings by the court fail to reveal any grounds upon which we could predicate a conclusion that there has been a miscarriage of justice. We will first consider the alleged error of the court in permitting amendments to the pleadings to conform to the proof.

The original complaint setting forth the cause of action charged the defendants as co-partners, liable for the payment of certain work done and performed by one A. W. Curtis, in plowing, grading, subsoiling, and leveling on a certain 200-acre tract situate in San Joaquin county. The complaint charges the reasonable value of the work to be the sum of $3,051; that the work was done during the year 1923; that it was to be paid for as follows: $1,000 on the 1st day of July, 1923, and the balance thereof on the 1st day of August, 1923; that there has been paid on account of the said work and labor performed the sum of $1,557.42 and no more, leaving a balance thereon due and payable in the sum of $1,493.58. The complaint then contains allegations showing assignment of said cause of action to the plaintiff herein. The second cause of action is set forth against the same defendants to recover the sum of $346, the value of board, etc., furnished men and teams pursuant to an agreement with the said A. W. Curtis. This cause of action was likewise transferred to the plaintiff.

The defendants Duchesnays defaulted. At the conclusion of the trial the court awarded judgment in favor of the plaintiff as against the appellant Silva in the sum of $1,559.58 and costs.

The specific amendment complained of by the appellant is designated in the transcript as the one setting forth a tenth and separate cause of action alleging the employment of the said A. W. Curtis to perform the labor, work, etc., herein referred to by the defendant Charles F. Silva. This count or cause of action was based upon the alleged reasonable value of the work. The court permitted this amendment to the pleadings to be made, but directed further that it also be amended, so as to set forth a cause of action upon an express contract for the payment of the sum of money herein referred to, for the work and labor to be performed, wherein it was alleged that the defendant promised to pay the said A. W. Curtis for plowing, grading, subsoiling, and work on said farm, as follows, to wit: $2 per hour for each hour upon which each tractor should be operated by said Curtis in said work, and at the rate of $9 per day for each day that each team should be employed by said Curtis upon said work; that pursuant to said agreement said A. W. Curtis operated tractors upon said premises for a total of 972 hours and operated teams on said premises for a total of 123 days, aggregating the total value of the work as agreed upon, in the sum of $3,041, on which amount there had been paid the sum of $1,557.42 and the further sum of $270.

The court found, among other things, that the said Charles F. Silva and the defendants A. E. J. Duchesnay and Loulou Duchesnay were not copartners and were not engaged as joint adventurers, but did find that the defendant Charles F. Silva was engaged in the operation, development, and improvement of a certain tract of land near Dry creek, in the county of San Joaquin, and that he entered into an agreement with A. W. Curtis to perform work and labor thereon, consisting of plowing, grading, subsoiling, etc., and that the work was to be paid for as set forth in the amendment to the complaint.

[1] The transcript shows the following facts: That prior to any negotiations with the said A. W. Curtis by either A. E. J. Duchesnay or Charles F. Silva, the defendant Charles F. Silva was the owner of 200 acres of land situate near Dry creek, in the county of San Joaquin; that he was desirous of having his land improved; that on the 22d day of March, 1923, the said Silva and A. E. J. Duchesnay, as parties of the first part, entered into a contract with one John Strieff, as party of the second part, to improve said 200 acres by plowing, scraping, leveling, etc., said lands and premises to be paid for as follows: Tractor, including scraper and driver, $2 per hour; four-horse team and driver, $9 per day; two-horse team and driver, $6.50 per day.

The record further shows that John Strieff "fell down" on his contract and did not attempt to perform the work therein covenanted by him to be done and performed upon the 200 acres of land belonging to the said Silva; that, at the beginning of the negotiations with the said Curtis for the performance by him of work upon the premises, a conversation was had between the said Curtis and the defendant A. E. J. Duchesnay, during which conversation the said Curtis showed the original of the contract that had been entered into between the said Strieff and the defendant Silva and A. E. J. Duchesnay for the plowing, scraping, and leveling work to be done upon the premises referred to. Thereafter the said Curtis and the said A. E. J. Duchesnay went to Sacramento and had a conversation with the defendant Silva. In this conversation the Strieff contract was referred to, and in this conversation and subsequent conversations the manner of financing the improvement about to be made was mentioned, in which conversation the defendant Silva stated that he would assist in the financing by securing money through mortgages on the premises. Before this had occurred, however, the following transaction had taken place: The defendant Charles F. Silva had executed a deed of conveyance purporting to transfer the 200 acres of land referred to to the defendant Loulou Duchesnay, the wife of the defendant A. E. J. Duchesnay, and while the lands were estimated by the said Silva, according to his own testimony, to be of the value of $40,000, the said Loulou Duchesnay did not pay any sum of money to the said Silva for and on account of the conveyance to her. She did, however, execute in favor of the said Silva a mortgage in the sum of $10,000, and assumed a further indebtedness of $12,000, evidenced by a mortgage upon the lands and premises in favor of some bank in San Jose.

The testimony of Silva and Duchesnay, taken together, shows the following in relation to the property: First mortgage, $12,000; lien of reclamation taxes, about $9,000; second mortgage, in favor of Silva, $10,000; improvements to be placed on the premises, $10,000; total value represented by mortgages and improvements, $41,000; estimated selling price, $60,000; Silva's share, $10,000; by payment of his mortgage share of A. E. J. Duchesnay, $9,000.

The testimony of A. E. J. Duchesnay shows that he was a real estate agent, endeavoring to sell the property. The testimony of Curtis is to the effect that the defendant Silva stated in some of the conversations had, when he and Silva and A. E. J. Duchesnay were having conversations relative to the work, that he, Silva, and Duchesnay were "together in the land." The testimony of Silva is further to the effect that, while the arrangement was made with the Strieff Bros., the contract entered into with John Strieff was actually signed after the ranch had been transferred by him to the defendant Loulou Duchesnay. The testimony of the defendant Silva is that he sold the ranch to Loulou Duchesnay, but the contract with Strieff relative to the improvement of land, the showing of the contract to Curtis after the Strieff Bros., to use the language of the witness, "fell down on the contract," and the willingness of Curtis to take up the work on the same terms, and the statement of Silva that he was willing to assist in financing the improvement, by borrowing the money, were all matters before the court, for the court to determine and decide whether there had been, in fact, any actual sale of the premises, or whether Silva was still an owner therein, and liable for the improvements made upon the premises, even though the defendant A. E. J. Duchesnay made the agreement, or the principal part of the agreement, with Curtis for the work, and looked after the execution thereof, and supervised it during the time the improvements were being carried forward. The fact that Loulou Duchesnay, not shown to have any financial resources whatever, was the nominal purchaser of a 200-acre ranch without paying a cent therefor, was another circumstance for the trial court to consider in ascertaining who was liable for the payment of the improvements made thereon.

[2, 3] We think the testimony in this case clearly shows a joint adventure. It would require many pages to set it all forth, but we have stated the substance of what it shows. There were many conversations relative to the raising of money, and just how the $1,557.42 paid on account of the work was raised does not clearly appear from the transcript; but the inference is that it was raised by mortgages given to, or money borrowed from, a real estate firm in the city of Stockton. The court, however, found that there was no joint adventure, and permitted an amendment to the pleadings charging the defendant Silva liable as principal. Does this show a miscarriage of justice, so far as the defendant Silva is concerned? We think not. What we have said shows that he was liable as a joint adventurer, which made him liable for the payment to A. W. Curtis of the value of the improvement, or of the amount agreed to be paid therefor, and, so long as he was liable in the capacity of a joint adventurer with the Duchesnays in the improvement of the land, for the purpose of sale, he suffered no imposition on the part of the court when he was charged in the complaint as an individual, for the simple reason that he was individually liable in either case. The court, apparently, viewed the testimony as showing more clearly that A. E. J. Duchesnay was simply acting as agent for the defendant Silva in making the improvement of the premises for the purpose of selling and that the transfer of the paper title from Silva to Loulou Duchesnay was simply in furtherance of the plan to improve and sell; Silva's possible profits being represented by the $10,000 mortgage executed to him by the said Loulou Duchesnay, and the profits of the defendant A. E. J. Duchesnay whatever he would realize upon the sale of the premises, over and above the liens to which we have referred.

The amendments to the complaint to which we have referred were filed prior to the time of the order of the court permitting the same; but, as appears from what we have stated, it is evident that the appellant suffered no damage by reason thereof.

[4] The testimony of the appellant to the effect that he had no interest in the lands and premises being improved after making the transfer thereof to Loulou Duchesnay, the wife of the defendant A. E. J. Duchesnay, without any consideration being given or paid therefor, except as to the promises herein referred to, does not affect anything we have said in relation to the amendments to the pleadings, because the credibility of witnesses' testimony and the effect to be given to his denials are matters purely for the consideration of the trial court. From the findings of the trial court it is evident that the court rejected the appellant's testimony, and, if we accept the appellant's denials for their face value, a conflict of evidence only would be presented.

[5, 6] The appellant's objection as to the variance in the testimony is completely answered by the rule found in 5 Corpus Juris, pp. 1386 to 1388, and quoted with approval in Willett & Burr v. Alpert, 181 Cal. 652, at page 659, 185 P. 976, 979. The rule there set forth is in substance and effect that, when the contract has been fully performed, and nothing remains to be done under it but the payment of money by the defendant, the plaintiff may, at his election, declare specially upon the contract or generally indebitatus assumpsit. Under such circumstances there is no fatal variance between the allegations and the proofs, and an amendment to conform the pleadings to the proofs is proper. Had the court concluded that the true relation of the parties was that of a joint adventure under the allegations of the complaint, judgment might have been awarded against the appellant. Vail v. Fish Products Co., 243 P. 869, at page 875.

From what we have heretofore said, based upon what took place between Curtis, A. E. J. Duchesnay, and the appellant, Silva, it is evident that the appellant's motion for a nonsuit was properly denied.

[7] As to the objection that the court erred in the admission of testimony, our attention is called to the transcript, where the witness A. W. Curtis was permitted, in testifying to the work and labor performed, to refresh his recollection by examining certain time-books, wherein was kept an account of the time put in by the different workmen engaged in the improvements referred to; the objection to the testimony being based on the ground that the record was not all kept by the witnesses. We do not need to examine into the correctness of the objections, or determine whether it was or was not well based, from the simple fact that thereafter the defendant A. E. J. Duchesnay testified to the time based upon his own records, which was identical with the time-books used by the witness Curtis in refreshing his memory. No attempt whatever was made to question the accuracy of the time as kept by the defendant Duchesnay. This testimony stands absolutely uncontradicted. The ruling of the court, if admitted to be error, in allowing the witness Curtis to refresh his memory from the time-books or time-sheets, was without any prejudice or injury to the appellant, and brings the objection squarely within the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

Appellant's objection that there was no testimony showing the number of hours constituting a day's work is not borne out by the record. The transcript contains testimony to the effect that nine hours constituted a day's work.

[8] It is finally urged by the appellant that the amount of the judgment should be reduced in the sum of $250 on account of a certain note executed by A. E. J. Duchesnay and the appellant, and delivered to A. W. Curtis, which enabled the said Curtis to raise the sum of $250, by discounting the note, and that said sum constituted a partial payment for the work and labor performed. The uncontradicted testimony both of Curtis and of the defendant A. E. J. Duchesnay is to the effect that Curtis was in need of said sum of money and was pressing for the payment of the amount due him, and that in order to raise some money the appellant and the said defendant Duchesnay executed said note and delivered the same to the said Curtis, and thus enabled him to realize the said sum of $250. The testimony further shows that this note is still in the possession of the bank, to which it had been delivered, and is outstanding in the full sum of $250 and the interest thereon. The testimony of Curtis is further to the effect that the payments set forth on account of the work and labor performed and the credits given in the complaint do not include the said sum of $250, and while the testimony of Curtis is to the effect that the receipt of the note by him executed as herein stated, and the obtaining of the money therefor by discounting the same at a bank at Galt, was only to enable him to obtain that sum, on account of the work and labor performed by him, it is evident that the obtaining of money due him by means of the use of the credit of appellant and the defendant A. E. J. Duchesnay did amount to and constituted a payment of that sum of money, as the defendant A. E. J. Duchesnay testified:

"I told Silva that we had to get some money for Curtis. I told him that I had taken the matter up with Curtis, and he thought it would be best to finance through his bank at Galt for that note; that the note was given to Curtis, so he could discount it at the bank at Galt."

The witness further testified:

"Q. Was that note delivered to Mr. Curtis by you? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was that a payment on the contract for doing work on the ranch? A. Well, it was not a payment. It was more of some assistance in financing Mr. Curtis' work.

"Q. Your name is on that note; you have not been sued for it; your bank still holds it? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was not that a payment on this job? A. If it had been paid, yes, sir; but it has not been paid."

This testimony shows that Curtis had the benefit of the $250; that it was a method of financing the work, so that Curtis could obtain that sum of money. The fact that the note is still held by the bank does not render it any less a payment of that sum of money to Curtis, because he obtained the benefit of that sum of money. The legal conclusion of the witness that it was not a payment, because the note was still held by the bank, and he and Silva were liable on it, does not affect the legal conclusion that should have been drawn from the transaction that Curtis had received the sum of $250, and therefore the additional credit in that sum should be given on account of the contract. Otherwise, the judgment would be for $250 more than Curtis was entitled to; the defendants still owing the note upon which Curtis had received such sum of money. In other words, Curtis is not entitled to collect $250, by discounting the note given to him by the defendants, and then again collect another $250 on the judgment, which takes no notice of this part of the method of financing the work. Whatever may be the final result in relation to said $250

note, it does appear that in the present action, based upon the work and labor performed, Curtis has received the sum of $250, for which credit has not been given in this action, and that the judgment against the appellant is greater than it should be in just that sum.

The note to which we have referred in the foregoing was dated May 23, 1923, payable on July 15th of that year for the sum of $250, bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum until paid, and signed by the defendants A. E. J. Duchesnay and Charles F. Silva, and thereafter delivered by the defendant Duchesnay to the said Curtis. In the offering of this note in evidence counsel for plaintiff made the following statement:

"We offer this note in evidence as showing payment on account, and that there was more than that amount due with these various small deductions taken out."

The latter portion of the sentence, of course, has no bearing upon the present subject under consideration. It does show, however, that the note was offered in evidence as showing part payment on the account for work and labor performed by Curtis, as alleged by him, upon the contract theretofore entered into between Curtis and the defendants A. E. J. Duchesnay and Charles F. Silva, for the performance of the work herein referred to.

[9] But whether the note was or was not executed and delivered as a part of the method of financing the work referred to in this action, and to enable Curtis to obtain $250 by assigning the same to a bank at Galt, was such as to constitute payment on the account; by the assignment of the note to the bank by Curtis, that much of his claim against the defendants A. E. J. Duchesnay and Charles F. Silva was transferred to the bank. Thereafter his assignment to the plaintiff in this action transferred to the plaintiff only what remained of the account subject to transfer, after deducting the previous assignment, representing $250 worth of the work performed by the said Curtis. In other words, the plaintiff in this action is entitled to recover under his assignment only that portion of the account subject to assignment by Curtis at the date of the assignment. At this date the account shown, by what we have hereinbefore stated, was less in the sum of $250 than that allowed by the trial court.

[10] It is finally urged on the part of appellant that the default against the defendants A. E. J. Duchesnay and Loulou Duchesnay is erroneous. As the Duchesnays are not appellants and are making no complaint, this contention, if true, is not before us for consideration. The whole record in this case shows that the deflation in the selling price of real estate, which occurred during the time the appellant and the other defendants were engaged in making the improvements on the lands and premises referred to, in order to put the same upon the market, caused the method of financing adopted by the parties to miscarry, and therefore led to this litigation.

It follows, from what has been said, that the judgment of the trial court should be, and the same is, modified by striking therefrom the sum of $250, and, as so modified, the judgment will stand affirmed; the appellant is allowed his costs on appeal.

PADDOCK v. FONNER. (Civ. 5799.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 28, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 26, 1927.

1. Gifts ⇐80—Gift day before death by one suffering from cancer would be presumed made "in contemplation of death," under statute (Civ. Code, § 1150).

Gift made day before death by one suffering from cancer, who had expressed opinion she was getting worse, would be presumed to have been made "in contemplation of death," under Civ. Code, § 1150, providing when a gift is presumed to be in view of death.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Contemplation of Death.]

2. Gifts ⇐66(2)—Delivery of passbook and order directing bank to pay money was sufficient "delivery" of funds to constitute gift causa mortis.

Delivery on day before deceased's death, to niece, of bank passbook and order directing bank to close account and pay money was a sufficient "delivery" of funds to constitute a gift causa mortis to the person named in the order, if other elements of valid gift were present.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Delivery.]

3. Gifts ⇐82(1)—Evidence that donee received passbook and order directing bank to deliver funds to donee was sufficient to show acceptance of gift causa mortis.

Evidence that one named in deceased's order to bank directing delivery of funds to him received the passbook and order was sufficient proof of acceptance of funds as gift causa mortis.

4. Gifts ⇐76—Donee's offer to turn over to administratrix passbook for purpose of adjudication of dispute could not affect validity of gift causa mortis.

Offer by one to whom deceased had caused to be delivered during her lifetime a passbook and an order on a bank directing payment of money to him to turn passbook over to administratrix for the purpose of adjudication of dispute could not affect the validity of alleged gift causa mortis.

5. Gifts $\hookrightarrow$ 82(2)—Evidence sustained trial court's finding that decedent authorized defendant to draw money in bank for use and benefit of decedent and that no gift was intended.

Evidence that decedent did not intend to make absolute gift of fund in bank to defendant, but that she merely made him her agent to draw money from bank to be used for her living expenses, held to authorize trial court's finding that decedent authorized defendant to draw such money for decedent's use and benefit and that no gift was intended.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action for money had and received by B. H. Paddock, as administrator of the estate of May Howe, deceased, substituted in the case for B. E. Paddock, against John F. Fonner. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry L. Corson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. W. Henderson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of May Howe, sued the defendant for money had and received. The complaint alleged that on June 21, 1923, May Howe was the owner of money on deposit in a savings account in the Anglo-California Trust Company, and of Liberty bonds held by the same bank, amounting in all to $3,949.27; that on said day she authorized the said bank to pay the money to defendant for the use and benefit of May Howe; and that on June 22, 1923, defendant received said sum of money from said bank and has retained the same. The answer denied that May Howe authorized the defendant to withdraw the money from the bank for her use and benefit, and alleged that the defendant has claimed and still claims the money as his own. Trial was had before the court without a jury, and judgment went for the plaintiff for $3,634.11, being the amount claimed, less the sum of $315.16, which defendant had paid out to meet the funeral expenses of the deceased. From this judgment the defendant has appealed on a typewritten record.

The trial court found that:

"On the 21st day of June, 1923, at Los Altos, Santa Clara county, Cal., said May Howe, in writing, authorized and instructed the said trust company to sell the said Liberty bond and pay the proceeds thereof, together with the said account, to the defendant, John F. Fonner, for the use and benefit of the said May Howe, and deliver the said writing to Edith Bagot, a niece, who delivered it to the defendant on the 22d day of June, 1923; that thereafter and on the

It was also found that the defendant received from the bank the money in suit and the proceeds of the Liberty bonds, all of which he converted to his own use, except the sum paid by him for the funeral expenses of the deceased. Through the pleading of the ownership of the fund the defendant raised the issue that it came into his possession as the result of a voluntary gift causa mortis. The whole case was tried upon the theory that this issue was properly pleaded, and, in fact, no other issue was heard by the trial court and this appeal is presented on that point alone. Both parties argue the weight of the evidence—the appellant insisting that he has proved every essential element of a gift causa mortis, while the respondent claims that the evidence shows that the attempted gift was incomplete. The evidence tending to prove the gift is found in the testimony of the appellant, of his brother, and of Mrs. Bagot, a witness who was distinctly hostile to the appellant.

The deceased was a widow who had been seriously ill for more than a year prior to her death, suffering from a cancer for which she had undergone an operation; the appellant had occupied a room at her house for more than ten years and the two were very friendly; for some years prior to her death the deceased had been estranged from other members of her family; this unfriendly feeling of the family included the appellant and was carried to the extent of their refusal to attend the funeral; about four weeks before she died the deceased went to Los Altos, where she occupied a house belonging to appellant's brother and where she was under the care of a niece, Mrs. Edith Bagot; about two weeks before she died, the deceased told the appellant that she was giving him the money and Liberty bond because of the many kindnesses he had shown her during her illness, and that she wanted him to pay the funeral expenses out of it and keep the balance; a short time thereafter she told him she would prepare an order on the bank authorizing him to draw the fund; and on the Sunday preceding her death she told the appellant's brother that she was giving the fund to appellant under these same conditions. On the evening preceding her death she dictated to Mrs. Bagot an order on the bank, reading as follows:

"Los Altos, Calif., June 21, 1923. Anglo-California Trust Co. Sirs: Inclosed please find pass books. I wish to close my account and if possible to sell my Liberty bond. Kindly pay the balance of my account to John F. Fonner. It is necessary to close the account at once as I am very ill and must have the money. Sincerely yours, Mrs. May Howe."

She then directed Mrs. Bagot to place this order with her passbook and to deliver them to appellant; this was done on the following day prior to the death of the decedent.

This written order was the basis of the finding of the trial court that the deceased authorized the bank in writing to pay over the money in the bank and the proceeds of the bond to the appellant for her own use.

The essentials of a valid gift causa mortis are outlined in 28 Corpus Juris, p. 687, as follows:

"To constitute a valid gift causa mortis, the gift must be made in view of the donor's impending death, the donor must die of the disorder or peril, and there must be a delivery of the thing given. In addition to this, there must be a donor competent to make the gift, an intent on his part to do so, and an acceptance by the donee."

[1-4] It is conceded by the parties that if any one of these essentials is absent the validity of the gift cannot be sustained. Respondent argues that the evidence fails to show that the gift was made in view of the donor's impending death; that there was a delivery of the subject of the gift, an intention to make a donation, or an acceptance by the donee. We are not able to follow respondent in his argument that the gift was not made in contemplation of impending death, in view of the presumption found in section 1150, Civil Code, and the evidence which disclosed that the decedent was suffering from an incurable malady, and that she had on a number of occasions expressed the view that she was continually getting worse. The evidence of delivery of the passbook and order to Mrs. Bagot as agent for the decedent was a sufficient delivery of the funds represented by the passbook, and would constitute a valid gift causa mortis if the other elements were present. Snidow v. Brotherton, 140 Va. 187, 124 S. E. 182, 40 A. L. R. 1246, and 1255, note. The evidence of acceptance of the gift on the part of the appellant was sufficient for this purpose, as it shows that he received the passbook and order and thereby took into his possession the means of obtaining the funds on deposit in the bank. The fact that he at a later date offered to turn the book over to the administratrix of the estate for the purpose of adjudication of the dispute between the parties cannot affect the validity of the gift made on June 22 so far as the element of his acceptance is concerned.

[5] However, the important element of intention to make the gift is the one in which appellant's proof has failed. It appears that on a number of occasions the decedent told the appellant that she was going to turn over the money and Liberty bond in the Fillmore Bank to him; that she wanted him to pay her funeral expenses out of this money, and "the rest I am giving to you." This is practically the same language that is used in Knight v. Tripp, 121 Cal. 674, 679, 54 P. 267, 269, where the Supreme Court held that the statement of the deceased, "I want to give it to you, or place all of it in your hands, and tell you those whom I want should have it," merely indicated a purpose or desire on the part of the decedent as to the disposition of the property and was not sufficient to disclose an intention to make a gift of it. It was said in Hart v. Ketchum, 121 Cal. 426, 428, 53 P. 931, 932:

"If the donee is merely empowered to draw the money, and is thereafter to dispose of it in accordance with instructions from the donor, he is only an agent of the donor and his agency terminates with the death of the donor."

Here the evidence is that when the decedent delivered to the appellant her passbook she gave him a written order upon the bank authorizing him to collect the money on deposit and the proceeds of her Liberty bonds, and that in this order she stated that "it is necessary to close the account at once because I am very ill and must have the money." It is a fair interpretation of this language that the decedent did not intend to make an absolute gift of the fund to the appellant, but that she merely made him her agent for the purpose of drawing the money out of the bank to be used for her living expenses. It was the function of the trial court in the first instance to interpret this writing for the purpose of determining the essential question as to whether the decedent intended to make a gift of the fund on deposit in the bank, and, the trial court having found that the decedent authorized the appellant to draw this money for the use and benefit of the decedent we cannot say that there is not evidence sufficient to support that finding.

Judgment affirmed.

HASSELL et al. v. DENNING et al.
(Civ. 5512.)District Court of Appeal, First District.
Division 1, California. July 19,
1927.1. Landlord and tenant §164(1)—Absent fraud, concealment, or covenant in lease, landlord is not liable to tenant for injuries from defective condition or faulty construction of premises.

Under doctrine of caveat emptor, and in the absence of fraud, concealment, or covenant in lease, a landlord is not liable to a tenant for injuries due to the defective condition or faulty construction of demised premises, though different rule obtains where lessee's injuries are caused by defects in premises known to lessor and unknown to lessee, if lessor through fraud or concealment allows lessee to occupy premises in ignorance of such risk.

2. Landlord and tenant §162—Landlord, reserving portion of premises for use in common by himself and tenants, or by different tenants, must use ordinary care to keep such portions in safe condition.

Where portion of demised premises is reserved by a landlord for use in common by himself and tenants, or by different tenants, a duty is imposed on him to use ordinary care to keep those particular portions of the premises in a safe condition.

3. Landlord and tenant §169(11)—Whether landlord reserved portion of premises for common use with tenants is question of fact, affecting his liability for injuries.

As affects lessor's liability for injury from defective premises, it is question of fact whether he reserved the defective portion of the premises for common use of himself and tenants, or whether such portion of premises was under exclusive dominion of tenant.

4. Landlord and tenant §164(1)—Landlord's liability for injury from defect in premises reserved for common use of tenants is not affected by number of tenants.

Landlord's liability for injuries from defective portion of premises reserved for common use of tenants is not affected by fact that at time accident occurred premises were temporarily occupied by one or two tenants rather than a larger number.

5. Landlord and tenant §169(3)—Complaint in action against landlord for injuries to tenant's wife from fall from stairway held to state cause of action.

Complaint in action against landlord for injuries to tenant's wife, sustained when railing on landing of outside rear stairway collapsed, held sufficient to state cause of action, under rule making landlord liable for defect in portion of premises reserved for common use of tenants, or tenants and landlord.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Frank J. Hassell and another against Clarence E. Denning and another.

Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Chauncey Gardner and Edward C. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank C. Prescott, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. The plaintiffs, Frank J. and Winifred Hassell, as husband and wife, brought this action to recover damages on account of personal injuries sustained by the latter in falling from a landing at the top of an outside stairway in the rear of a two-story dwelling; plaintiffs being at the time the occupants of a portion of said dwelling and alleging that said landing was used jointly by them and defendants. The immediate cause of the accident was the collapse of a wooden railing inclosing said landing; plaintiffs alleging that the same was faultily constructed, insecure, latently defective, and constituted a dangerous nuisance, and that its defective condition was at all times known to defendants, but unknown to plaintiffs. Separate demurrers, identical in form, to the second amended complaint, were sustained, with leave to amend; but plaintiffs declined to amend, and judgments of dismissal were thereupon entered, from which judgments these appeals have been taken.

The record does not disclose upon which of the numerous grounds set forth in the demurrers the same were sustained; but in defendants' brief, after quoting certain Code sections and excerpts from a number of decisions in this state under the heading "Responsibility of Landlord," it is stated:

"The complaint wholly fails to fix a liability under the above rules. No fraudulent concealment is alleged against the landlords. No reasons are shown why this is not an ordinary case of tenants charged with the duty of examining premises themselves trying to throw responsibility on the owners."

[1] With respect to these contentions, it may be conceded that under the doctrine of caveat emptor, and in the absence of fraud, concealment, or covenant in the lease, a landlord is not liable to a tenant for injuries due to the defective condition or faulty construction of the demised premises; but, as indicated, the rule just stated is not absolute, it being held that a lessor is liable for personal injuries to the lessee caused by defects in the premises, known to the lessor and unknown to the lessee, because arising from some cause not extraneous, if the lessor through fraud or concealment allows the lessee to occupy the premises in ignorance of such risks. Daley v. Quick, 99 Cal. 179, 33 P. 859; 15 Cal. Jur. 705. In other words, as stated in 2 Underhill on Landlord and Tenant, p. 788:

"As to all patent defects which may be discovered by an examination of the premises, the rule of caveat emptor applies. The tenant will be charged with constructive notice or knowledge of patent defects which exist in that portion of the premises leased to and actually occupied or used by him. As to concealed defects attended with personal danger to the tenant, and which no examinations upon his part would reveal, the rule is otherwise. The landlord is bound to disclose concealed defects, if their existence is known to him at the date of the letting, provided they are such as the incoming tenant would not discover by a reasonable inspection in order that the latter may guard against them. Where a landlord knows the premises which he is about to let are defective, and in an unsafe and dangerous condition, and especially if such dangerous or defective place is not obvious, or is not discoverable by the tenant by the exercise of ordinary care, and the landlord does not inform the tenant of the defective or dangerous place, and injury is occasioned thereby to the tenant or a member of his family who is not aware of such defective or dangerous place while in the exercise of ordinary care, the landlord is liable in damages. If, therefore, the landlord shall remain silent when it is his duty to speak about the defective condition of the premises, or if he expressly or by implication misrepresents the actual condition of the premises, either as to patent or latent defects, he will be liable to the tenant for all the injuries which naturally result from his silence or misrepresentation."

[2-4] Another qualification of the doctrine of caveat emptor in its relation to demised premises is that, where a portion of the premises is reserved by the landlord for use in common by himself and tenants, or by different tenants, a duty is imposed upon him to use ordinary care to keep those particular portions of the premises in a safe condition; and if he is negligent in this regard, and a personal injury results to a tenant by reason thereof, he is liable therefor. 16 R. C. L. p. 1037; Merchants Loan & T. Co. v. Boucher, 115 Ill. App. 101; Gaucso v. Levy, 89 Conn. 169, 93 A. 136; Cook v. Simon, 98 Conn. 98, 118 A. 634; Hinthorn v. Benfer, 90 Kan. 731, 136 P. 247, L. R. A. 1915B, 98; Maionica v. Piscopo, 217 Mass. 324, 104 N. E. 839. Under such circumstances, and in the absence of a covenant in the lease to the contrary, it becomes a question of fact, to be determined by the trial court or jury, whether the lessor reserved the defective portion of the premises for such common use, or whether the same were under the exclusive dominion of the tenant who is injured thereby (Miller v. Geeser, 193 Mo. App. 1, 180 S. W. 3; Loucks v. Dolan, 211 N. Y. 237, 105 N. E. 411); and this latter rule as to the landlord's liability is not affected by the fact that at the time the accident occurred the premises were temporarily occupied by only two tenants, or even by only one, rather than by a larger number (Flanagan v. Welch, 220 Mass. 186, 107 N. E. 979; Dillehay v. Minor, 188 Iowa, 37, 175 N. W. 838, 11 A. L. R. 106).

[5] The complaint under consideration contains the following allegations:

"That, in addition to the ordinary use of said stairway for the purpose of ingress and egress, the defendants, at the time of the letting of the premises to plaintiffs, had provided and maintained on the wooden railing on the top landing thereof, for the convenient use of the premises, a certain mechanical device, consisting of a wire rope running through pulleys, one pulley being securely fastened to the said wooden railing, and the other being attached to a stationary object in a horizontal direction at a distance of about 15 feet. The said mechanical device was provided by the defendants for the joint use of plaintiffs and defendants as aforesaid, and the same was intended by the defendants to be used as a clothesline, and plaintiffs and defendants so used the same; that the said device was operated by hand at the terminal which was fastened to the said wooden railing as aforesaid; * * * that on or about the 14th day of August, 1923, the plaintiff Winifred Hassell was standing on the top landing of said stairway, and while she was operating the said device, and while she was then and there attempting to use the same as a clothesline, which was the use for which the said clothesline and mechanical device were intended to be used by the defendants, she, the said Winifred Hassell, while then and there using the same as aforesaid, observed the said wooden railing and mechanical device, both of which appeared to her to be sound and secure, when suddenly and without warning, and through no fault or negligence on her part, the said wooden railing collapsed and gave way because of its faulty construction, insecurity, and latent defectiveness, of which she was not aware and of which she could not have been aware by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, thereby causing the plaintiff Winifred Hassell to fall to the ground, a distance of about 15 feet, whereby she sustained serious injuries. * * *"

It is further alleged:

"That the said device and wooden railing, because of their respective faulty construction, insecurity, and latent defectiveness, constituted, and each was, a dangerous nuisance, at the time of the said letting and at all times thereafter, all of which was at all times known to the defendants, and each of them, but which was at all times unknown to the plaintiffs or either of them," and " * * * that the said fall and accident to the plaintiff Winifred Hassell as aforesaid was caused alone by the negligence and carelessness of the defendants and each of them, in that they failed: (a) To have the said wooden railing and mechanical device properly constructed and in a safe and sound condition for the purpose of their intended use at the time of the said letting and at all times thereafter; (b) to give the plaintiffs or either of them at the time of the letting or at any time thereafter or at all any notice of the dangerous and unsafe condition thereof."

We are of the opinion that the facts thus alleged, when read in connection with the others set forth in said complaint regarding plaintiffs' legal relationship to defendants as tenants, the nature and extent of the personal injuries suffered by Winifred Hassell as a result of the alleged negligence, and the elements and amounts of damage sustained by plaintiffs therefrom, are sufficient to constitute a cause of action under either of the two theories hereinabove mentioned; the element of concealment being sufficiently charged in those portions of said complaint alleging that the latent defect which caused the accident was "at the time of the said letting and at all times thereafter * * * known to the defendants and each of them, but which was at all times unknown to plaintiffs or either of them," and that defendants failed "to give plaintiffs, or either of them, at the time of the letting, or at any time, thereafter, or at all any notice of the dangerous and unsafe condition thereof."

The authorities cited and relied upon by defendants relate to causes of action entirely different from those upon which plaintiffs' complaint is grounded, and therefore they are not in point. They pertain either to dilapidations occurring to demised premises subsequent to the letting thereof, in which case the provisions of sections 1941 and 1942 of the Civil Code are controlling, or to patent defects, of which the tenant is bound to take notice under the doctrine of caveat emptor, or to latent defects, unknown to the landlord and which he would not have discovered by the exercise of ordinary care prior to the letting of the premises, under which circumstances he is not liable. The instant proceeding is on demurrer to the complaint, and therefore, until issues as to the elements mentioned are brought into the case by answer, none of them can be properly considered.

For the reasons stated, the judgments appealed from are reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrers.

BECKLEY v. HARRIS. (Civ. 5204.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 26, 1927.

1. New trial ⚡162(1)—Court may make conditional order, granting new trial, unless plaintiff remits portion of damages awarded.

Trial court has power to make conditional order granting new trial, unless plaintiff remits portion of damages awarded.

2. New trial ⚡76(1)—New trial should not be granted for excessive damages, unless indicative of passion or prejudice.

New trial should not be granted for excessive damages, unless so excessive as to indicate that verdict was given under influence of passion or prejudice.

3. Appeal and error ⚡979(5)—Order granting new trial for excessive damages will not be disturbed, unless discretion was clearly abused.

Court's order granting new trial for excessive damages will not be disturbed on appeal, unless it clearly appears that its discretion was abused.

4. Appeal and error ⚡854(6)—Order granting new trial, unless plaintiff remits portion of damages awarded, may be sustained on any ground assigned, where record does not disclose ground.

Where record does not disclose ground of conditional order, granting new trial unless plaintiff remits portion of damages awarded, it will not be assumed to have been made on ground that passion and prejudice influenced verdict, but may be sustained on any ground assigned.

5. New trial ⚡163(2)—Order granting new trial, unless plaintiff remits portion of damages, on all grounds stated in notice of intention, held to support conclusion that insufficiency of evidence was one ground (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

Conditional order, granting new trial unless plaintiff remits portion of damages awarded, on all grounds set forth in notice of intention, one of which was insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict, substantially complied with requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 657, and supported conclusion that latter was one ground on which granted, where precise ground did not appear.

6. New trial ⚡71—Court may grant new trial, if verdict is not supported by, or is contrary to, evidence, though evidence is conflicting.

Though motion for new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict may properly be refused, if there is substantial conflict in evidence, trial court may grant motion, if satisfied that verdict is not supported by, or is contrary to, evidence, though evidence is conflicting.

7. Appeal and error ⚡979(2)—Order granting new trial for insufficiency of evidence is conclusive on appeal, absent abuse of discretion.

Trial court's order, granting new trial for insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict, is conclusive on appeal, in absence of abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Nellie Peirce Beckley against Theodore Harris. Judgment for plaintiff. From an order granting a new trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

Griffith Jones and John J. Craig, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jud R. Rush and Wm. B. Beirne, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from an order granting a new trial. An action for slander was brought by appellant, in which a jury returned a verdict against respondent in the sum of $2,000.

The latter moved for a new trial on several grounds, among which were that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict, that the damages awarded were excessive, and the verdict given under the influence of passion and prejudice. An order denying the motion was entered as follows:

"The motion for a new trial coming on for hearing, the court stated that if plaintiff will consent to reduce the verdict to $500 as punitive damages and $50 as compensatory damages, and plaintiff not consenting to that reduction of the verdict, whereupon it is ordered that motion for new trial be and is hereby granted upon all the grounds stated in the notice of intention to move for a new trial in the files and minutes of the court."

It appears to be conceded by counsel that none of the grounds for a new trial specified in the notice of intention, other than those mentioned above, was urged at the hearing, and it is contended by appellant that the evidence fully sustains the verdict, and that nothing appears from the record that supports the conclusion that the verdict was excessive, or given under the influence of passion or prejudice.

[1-3] That the court had the power to make a conditional order granting a new trial unless the plaintiff should remit a portion of the damages is well settled (Domico v. Casasas, 101 Cal. 411, 35 P. 1024; Bentley v. Hurlburt, 153 Cal. 796, 803, 96 P. 890), and while a new trial should not be granted for excessive damages, unless so excessive as to indicate that the verdict was given under the influence of passion or prejudice, its action thereon will not be disturbed on appeal, unless it clearly appears that its discretion was abused (Sherwood v. Kyle, 125 Cal. 652, 58 P. 270).

[4, 5] It is not, however, to be assumed that such order was made on the ground that passion and prejudice influenced the verdict; and where the record does not disclose the ground of the conditional order, it may be sustained on any ground assigned. Swett v. Gray, 141 Cal. 63, 74 P. 439. Here the precise ground on which the order was based does not appear, but, having been granted on all the grounds set forth in the notice of intention, one of which was the insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict, the order substantially complied with the requirements of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and supports the conclusion that this was one of the grounds on which the motion was granted. Marr v. Whistler, 49 Cal. App. 364, 193 P. 600.

[6, 7] Although a motion for a new trial on this ground may properly be refused, if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the trial court is not bound by the rule as to conflicting evidence (Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150

Cal. 238, 88 P. 911), and it may grant the motion, if it is satisfied that the verdict is not supported by or contrary to the evidence, although the evidence is conflicting, and its order is conclusive on appeal, in the absence of an abuse of discretion (Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 506, 123 P. 288).

After a careful review of the evidence, we are unable to say that the trial court in granting the motion abused its discretion.

The order is affirmed.

PEREIRA v. TOSCANO et al. (Civ. 3290.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 22, 1927.

1. Infants ⇨58(2)—Proceeds of sales of calves, etc., held not chargeable to minor disaffirming contract to purchase dairy business and live stock, if reasonably used in paying business expenses.

Proceeds of sales of calves and hogs by minor contracting to purchase dairy business and live stock on monthly installments requiring over 10 years to complete payments held part of income of business, not chargeable to him on disaffirming contract, if reasonably used in paying expenses of business; such sales not constituting conversion, as parties did not contemplate holding and accumulation of live stock and increase thereof for 10 years.

2. Infants ⇨105—Vendor crediting minor, disaffirming contract to purchase live stock, with price of his pre-existent interest in cows purchased by his partner, could not complain of judgment requiring accounting for half of value of such cows.

Seller crediting buyer of half interest in dairy business, live stock, etc., with $5,250, agreed to be paid buyer by his partner for former's interest in cows already owned by them, could not complain of judgment requiring accounting to buyer, after his disaffirmance of contract on ground of minority, for $1,700, being half of value of such cows, less $600 received from sale of part of live stock purchased, on theory that buyer transferred his interest in cows to seller, who then sold it to buyer's partner.

3. Infants ⇨58(1)—Minor's oral disaffirmance of contract held sufficient.

Minor's oral disaffirmance of contract to purchase dairy business, live stock, etc., held sufficient.

4. Infants ⇨58(1)—Minor's action for purchase money paid held sufficient notice of disaffirmance of contract.

Minor's commencement of action to recover amount paid on contract for purchase of dairy business, live stock, etc., constituted sufficient notice of disaffirmance thereof.

5. Infants ⇨58(2)—Evidence and answer, in minor's action for amount paid on disaffirmed contract, held to show futility of offer to restore property and consideration received.

In minor's action to recover amount paid on disaffirmed contract to purchase dairy business, live stock, etc., evidence and answer, denying that plaintiff gave, or had any right to return of, consideration, held to show that offer by plaintiff to restore property and consideration received would have been futile.

6. Tender ⇨16(2)—Generally, tender is waived or unnecessary, when reasonably certain that offer will be refused.

Generally, tender necessary to establish right against another party is waived or becomes unnecessary when it is reasonably certain that offer will be refused.

7. Infants ⇨73—Court has broad discretion to see that equity is done in minor's action for amount paid on disaffirmed contract.

In minor's action to recover amount paid on disaffirmed contract of purchase, trial court is vested with broad discretion to see that equity is done.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Francisco Pereira, a minor, by John Cunha, as guardian ad litem, against James V. Toscano, in which John Cunha was made cross-defendant. From a judgment for plaintiff and cross-defendant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward Bickmore and A. R. Schottky, both of Merced, and G. P. Ross, of Los Banos, for appellants.

Thomas F. Lopez, of Fresno, and Hugh K. Landram, of Merced, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, brought this action to recover the amount which he alleges he paid on a contract for the purchase from defendant of a dairy business, live stock, and other personal property, and which contract the plaintiff disaffirmed on the ground of his minority. The court found in effect that the plaintiff had so paid the sum of $2,300, and that he had received from the sale of a part of the live stock the sum of $600, leaving a balance in his favor of $1,700. Judgment was entered accordingly and the defendant has appealed.

Appellant urges two grounds for reversal of the judgment:

"First, that the evidence does not support or sustain the finding that plaintiff paid defendant the sum of $2,300 on account of the purchase price of said dairy. * * * Second, that the evidence does not sustain the finding that plaintiff disaffirmed said contract of purchase or offered to restore to the defendant the property and consideration received from defendant, and did further offer to pay defendant the equivalent of all property that plaintiff has received from defendant and could not return to defendant."

There is a substantial conflict in the evidence in some respects, but it is amply sufficient to support the findings. The evidence is clearly sufficient to establish the following facts: At the times of the transactions referred to herein, the defendant was president of the First National Bank of Los Banos, and his son, J. L. Toscano, was cashier thereof. Prior to December 1, 1920, the owner of a two-thirds interest in the dairy business and property involved in this action was indebted to the bank in the sum of $24,000, and J. L. Toscano took over the property and assumed such indebtedness. On December 1, 1920, he sold an undivided half of such dairy business and property to the plaintiff for the sum of $20,000, of which sum the plaintiff paid in cash $3,000. At the same time cross-defendant Cunha purchased the other half interest in the business and property. Prior to the time of such purchase the plaintiff and Cunha, as partners, owned 37 cows, for which they had paid $4,400. Neither of them can read English. Without their knowledge, but apparently without any fraudulent intent, J. L. Toscano caused these 37 cows to be included in the contracts which he executed with plaintiff and Cunha, thus making them appear to be buying their own cows from him. In January, 1921, J. L. Toscano assigned his interest in such contracts and the property therein described to the defendant. In August, 1921, Cunha sold his undivided half of the business and property which he had purchased from J. L. Toscano to Antone Gonsalves. About the same time Cunha agreed to purchase the plaintiff's interest in the said 37 cows for $5,250. It was agreed that Cunha would pay this sum to the defendant, and that the latter would give the plaintiff credit for that amount. For the purpose of carrying out this agreement, the parties executed three instruments. The defendant and Cunha entered into what purports to be a conditional sales contract, by the terms of which the former agreed to sell and the latter to buy the 37 cows for $5,250, payment to be made in installments of $75 a month. The defendant executed and delivered to the plaintiff a receipt reading as follows:

"Received from Francisco Pereira $5,250 for account of dairy business. Balance due $12,250."

Plaintiff's indebtedness under the old contract had increased to $17,500 by the accumulation of interest, and the defendant and the plaintiff executed a new conditional sales contract, by the terms of which the former agreed to sell to the latter the property purchased by the plaintiff from J. L. Toscano. The consideration expressed in the new contract was $12,250, being the amount due upon the old contract, less the credit given on account of the agreed price of the 37 cows. Two or three months thereafter the plaintiff orally notified the defendant that he disaffirmed the contract and demanded the return of the consideration given therefor. The plaintiff testified:

"I told him to take the business back; that I was a minor and that I did not want the business; * * * that I did not have my age, * * * and if I was in arrears on the ranch to take it out of the * * * money that I had paid on the business. * * * Toscano said he did not owe me any money. * * * He said he would not take the business.

"Q. Did you ever have any further conversation with Toscano * * * about taking the business back? A. Yes; he went there once at the ranch. * * *

"Q. What conversation did you have with him on that occasion? A. I told him the same thing. * * *

"Q. And what did Toscano say? A. Well, what Toscano said, I don't remember; * * * I was sitting down on the Ford, and Toscano jumped on the machine, and he wanted to choke my neck.

"Q. Did he say he would take the business, or would not take the business back? A. He said he would take the business back and for me to go away; that I had nothing there. * * * He said he would not give me any money."

The defendant thereupon took back the business and property, but refused to return the consideration received by him from the plaintiff. Prior to the commencement of this action the defendant "branded the cattle with his brand."

[1] The court found that the plaintiff received no profits from the business and no money "except the sum of $350 received by plaintiff from the sale of live stock" prior to the execution of the new contract and "the further sum of $250 * * * from the sale of part of the personal property and its increase" after the execution of such contract. Appellant has not called attention to any evidence tending to show that the amounts so found by the court are incorrect. The plaintiff testified that he received some money from the dairy, "but it was to pay bills; * * * everything was to pay bills"; that there was no profit. It appears from testimony quoted by appellant that the property which the plaintiff sold consisted of calves and hogs. Such sales are ordinarily as much a part of the business in which plaintiff was engaged as the daily sales of milk and cream. Included in the property purchased by plaintiff from defendant were 90 cows, 20 heifers, and 50 hogs. Plaintiff agreed to pay for the property in monthly installments of $100 each. At that rate it would have required more than 10 years to complete the payments. It would be absurd to say that the parties contemplated the holding and accumulation of the live stock and the increase thereof for a period of 10 years. The sale of calves arriving in the dairy herd and of hogs when ready for the market did not constitute a conversion thereof by the plaintiff, but the amount received therefor must be treated as a part of the income of the business, and if, as plaintiff testified, the money so received was reasonably used in paying the expenses of the business, the plaintiff should not have been charged therewith. Le Baron v. Berryessa Cattle Co., (Cal. App.) 248 P. 779.

[2] The appellant has no cause to complain of the judgment against him for $2,300, less the offset judgment in his favor for $600. The trial court apparently treated the transactions of August, 1921, relative to the 37 cows, as a transfer of the plaintiff's interest therein to the defendant, and the sale thereof by defendant to Cunha. On this theory, the court required defendant to account, not for the amount which Cunha had agreed to pay him, the amount with which he had credited the plaintiff, but only one-half of the value of the 37 cows. At the time of the trial, which was about 18 months after the transactions in question, Cunha testified that he had regularly paid the defendant $75 a month on the purchase price of the 37 cows. The judgment against the defendant is for the least possible amount consistent with any reasonable theory of the case, if the plaintiff is entitled to recover at all. By selling the 37 cows to Cunha, the defendant put it beyond his power to restore them to the plaintiff, and it would have been an idle act to have demanded the return thereof.

[3-7] It is clear that the plaintiff's oral disaffirmance of the contract was sufficient. Spencer v. Collins, 156 Cal. 298, 303, 104 P. 320, 20 Ann. Cas. 49. The commencement of this action constituted a sufficient notice of disaffirmance. Abdullah v. Abdullah, 50 Cal. App. 115, 119, 194 P. 511. The foregoing testimony shows that the defendant would have refused any offer of restoration which the plaintiff might have made. The answer denies that the plaintiff had any right to a return of the consideration given by him in the purchase of the property and denies that plaintiff gave any consideration therefor. Any offer of restoration by the plaintiff, therefore, would have been futile.

"It is a general rule that, where necessary to the establishment of any right against another party, tender is waived or becomes unnecessary when it is reasonably certain that the offer will be refused." 24 Cal. Jur. 514.

As applied to the disaffirmance of their contracts by minors it is said:

"In accordance with the general rule governing tenders a tender sometimes may be excused, as where it is known that it will be refused." 31 C. J. 1074.

In cases such as this "the trial court is vested with a broad discretion to see that equity is done." Le Baron v. Berryessa Cattle Co., supra. No abuse of such discretion appears in this case to the prejudice of defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HEBERN. (Cr. 1355.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 29, 1927.

1. Criminal law ⚡1158(1)—Appellate court will not disturb order granting new trial after conviction, where there was evidence in conflict with that supporting verdict.

The appellate court will not disturb the action of the trial court in granting defendant a new trial after conviction for violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), even though the evidence appears sufficient to support the verdict, where there was evidence in conflict with that on which the verdict rested.

2. Criminal law ⚡913(1)—Trial court may grant new trial after conviction, where it determines miscarriage of justice has resulted.

The trial court may grant defendant a new trial in a criminal case, when it determines that, notwithstanding the jury's verdict, miscarriage of justice has resulted under the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Ed. H. Hebern, charged as Ed. L. Hebern, was granted a new trial after conviction of violation of the Corporate Securities Act, and the People appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Earl Warren, Dist. Atty., and R. H. Chamberlain, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for the People.

T. C. West, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Defendant was tried on an information charging a violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673). The jury returned a verdict of conviction, but the trial judge granted defendant's motion for a new trial made upon all the statutory grounds. From this order the state has appealed upon a typewritten record.

The information charged that the defendant, as president of the Hebern Electric Code, Inc., authorized and assisted in the sale of 200 shares of second preferred stock of said corporation at a price of $5 per share, which price was in excess of the price fixed by the terms of the permit of the commissioner of corporations authorizing the issue of said securities. Ample evidence was offered to prove all the essential facts alleged in the information, but this was controverted to some extent by testimony offered by the defendant, tending to show that the stock sold to the complaining witness was at the time owned by the defendant's brother-in-law, to whom it had previously been sold by the defendant at a price not disclosed. Because of this testimony the defendant insisted that no crime was committed, inasmuch as the Corporate Securities Act only covered the sale of stock to which the corporation had title. In rebuttal of this testimony the state attempted to trace the stock back to an original issue of treasury stock from the corporation to the defendant, which issue it claimed to be void, because the stock had not been paid for by the defendant.

[1] If the verdict had been allowed to stand, we would have been compelled to say that it was amply supported by the evidence, as all the testimony offered by the state tended to show a deliberate effort on the part of the defendant to proceed in violation of the terms of the Corporate Securities Act.

[2] However, discretion has been reposed in the trial judge to pass upon the evidence, notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, and the rule has become fixed that, when the trial judge, having reviewed the evidence, reaches the determination that a miscarriage of justice has resulted, it is his province to grant a new trial.

The function of an appellate court, on an appeal from an order granting a new trial in a criminal case, is stated in People v. Brooks, 90 Cal. 174, 27 P. 72, where the court said:

"And when one of the grounds upon which it [a new trial] is asked is that the verdict is contrary to the evidence given in the cause, the action of that court in granting the motion will not be reversed by this court, unless the record clearly shows that there was no evidence which conflicted with that upon which the verdict rested."

The order is affirmed.

CONLIN v. TRAEGER, Sheriff. (Civ. 5498.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 5, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 3, 1927.

1. Exemptions ~~§ 690~~ 44—Physicians' automobiles are not exempt from execution or attachment; "other equipments" (Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 6).

The phrase "or other equipments," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 6, exempting from execution or attachment certain vehicles of conveyance used by physicians in their practice, does not exempt automobiles, as the rule of ejusdem generis applies.

2. Exemptions ~~§ 690~~ 4—Exemption statute should not be extended judicially to confer privileges and benefits not intended (Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 6).

While the court should construe liberally the statutory exemptions from execution and attachment provided by section 690, subd. 6, Code Civ. Proc., it should not indulge in such liberal construction as will confer privileges and benefits not intended by the Legislature.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. W. Guerin, Judge.

Action by B. M. Conlin against William I. Traeger, Sheriff of Los Angeles County. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. E. B. Conlin and E. R. Simon, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward T. Bishop, Co. Counsel, and Ernest Purdum, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by appellant, who is a physician practicing his profession at Long Beach, Cal., to recover damages against respondent, who, as sheriff, attached an automobile belonging to appellant. The only question presented is whether an automobile used by a physician in the legitimate practice of his profession is exempt from attachment or execution under section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff is a physician, duly licensed to practice medicine and surgery in the state of California, and that on March 29, 1923, and prior thereto, he was actually engaged in the practice of his profession as such physician and surgeon in the city of Long Beach, Cal., and that on said date he was in the actual possession of and entitled to the immediate possession of a certain Reo roadster automobile, which was then the vehicle of and part of the equipment used by him in the legitimate practice of his profession as a physician and surgeon, and on said date the defendant, as sheriff of Los Angeles county, Cal., without plaintiff's consent, wrongfully, and without right and legal authority, seized said automobile and took possession thereof under a writ of attachment, and ever since said date has continued to and does now retain possession of said automobile without right or legal authority; that at the time of the seizure said automobile was of the value of $1,000, and that the value of the use of said automobile is $10 per day, and that plaintiff has been damaged by the detention of said automobile in the sum of $3,300; that demand was made for the return thereof and that defendant refused and still refuses to return the same to plaintiff. Defendant filed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was sustained by the court without leave to amend, and judgment was thereafter entered in favor of defendant, from which judgment plaintiff has appealed.

The portion of section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure which is involved here reads:

"The following property is exempt from execution or attachment, except as herein otherwise specially provided: * * * (6) * * * One horse with vehicle and harness or other equipments, used by a physician, * * * in the legitimate practice of his profession or business."

The statute exempts one horse with vehicle and harness, or whatever other equipment is used with or on the horse, and does not mention automobiles. If we are to give the statute a "liberal and forward-looking interpretation," as contended for by appellant, and concede that the words "horse with vehicle and harness or other equipments" include any means of transportation, then such language not only includes automobiles, but also any other method of transportation used by a physician, no matter how different from those mentioned in the statute or how valuable. As the court said in Estate of Brown, 123 Cal. 399, 55 P. 1055, 69 Am. St. Rep. 74:

"Exemptions are the creatures of statutes and exceptions to the general rule. No property is exempt unless made so by express provision of law. No assumed legislative policy can justify the courts in adding to the statutory list of exemptions. Legislators are presumed to understand the force and effect of the language which is used and to have contemplated all circumstances which would make it desirable that other property not in the list of exemptions should be added thereto. The language used is entirely unambiguous. The legislative intent is clear, and is to no extent defeated by executing the law as it reads. Under such circumstances it is fruitless to talk of the literal meaning of the language, and of other meaning than the literal meaning. * * * And, besides, we do not expect to find in such a statute negative words, for nothing is exempt save what is expressly made so, and when a statute gives a list of exempt property it expressly provides that no other property is exempt. To construe an unambiguous statute is an attempt to defeat the expressed legislative will and not to ascertain it. * * * It is said that the statute is remedial and should be liberally construed to effect the purpose of the Legislature.

That is so; but that is not a liberal construction, which defeats the plainly expressed purpose of the Legislature."

[1] The words "or other equipments" do not enlarge the statute, so that it means something different from the articles named. These words are not separated from the words "horse with vehicle and harness." They clearly refer to other equipments which can be used with a horse. They are general words which follow a specific enumeration, and by the rule of ejusdem generis can mean, not equipments in general, but like articles to the vehicle and harness, such as saddles and saddlebags. Giving the language of the statute the broadest construction of which it is susceptible, we could only say that other equipments might be used with the horse in place of the vehicle and harness, but we cannot separate the equipments from the remainder of the sentence without doing violence to the English language, the rules of punctuation, the law of construction known as ejusdem generis, and the inherent probabilities of the legislative action.

The Legislature has not included automobiles in the statute, and for the court to do so would be judicial legislation. As is said in Stanton v. French, 91 Cal. 276, 27 P. 657, 25 Am. St. Rep. 174:

"In the list of property allowed peddlers by statute as exempt from execution, we find no article answering in name or use to a breadbox, and a debtor's claims are limited by the words of the statute." Italics ours.

In Crown Laundry, etc., Co. v. Cameron, 39 Cal. App. 617, 179 P. 525, in which it was claimed that an automobile used in the business of collecting clothes and garments from patrons and returning them after they had been laundered was exempt from attachment, the court says:

"The sole question presented is as to whether the automobile was exempt from execution under the provisions of subdivision 6 of section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In that subdivision it is provided that the following property shall be exempt from execution: 'Two horses, two oxen or two mules, and their harness, and one cart or wagon, one dray or truck, one coupe, one hack, or carriage, for one or two horses, by the use of which a cartman, drayman, truckman, huckster, peddler, hackman, teamster or other laborer habitually earns his living; * * *'. Clearly it appears to us that a motor driven vehicle is not a cart, wagon, dray, truck, coupe, hack, or carriage, as those terms are used in the section. The section plainly says that such exempt vehicles are vehicles which may be drawn by 'one or two horses.' If the Legislature intended that a motor vehicle should be exempt from attachment, we think that it would have so declared in plain terms. For the courts to add to the statute any articles not enumerated would in effect be judicial legislation."

The same question was raised in Re Wilder (D. C.) 221 F. 476. There the bankrupt claimed as exempt under section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure a taxicab automobile. The court says:

"This taxicab does not fall within the literal terms of the section and while those provisions are to be construed liberally, yet the court is not warranted in creating by interpretation new exemptions. The Legislature of this state has been in session several times since taxicabs have been in very general use, and might well have included them in the exempt list. As the Legislature has not done so, I do not feel warranted in doing so by an interpretation of the language of the section which at the best would be a forced one."

[2] While the statute should be liberally construed, it has been held that construction should not be indulged in to the extent of conferring privileges and benefits by construction which were not intended to be conferred by the Legislature, or to the extent of doing violence to the terms of the statute. So, where a specified article of personal property is made exempt, the courts are not authorized to extend the exemption by construction to any other or different article. Kennedy v. Hills (C. C. A.) 233 F. 666. As the automobile is an invention which was not in use when the statute was passed, it, of course, was not mentioned therein, and was not within the intent of the Legislature; and as the Legislature has been in session many times since the automobile came into common use, and has not seen fit to include it in the statute as exempt from attachment or execution, when used by a physician in the practice of his profession, we must hold that it does not come within the provisions of the statute, and is therefore not exempt.

Appellant, in support of his contention, cites us to Spangler v. Corless, 61 Utah, 88, 211 P. 692, 28 A. L. R. 72; Lames v. Armstrong, 162 Iowa, 327, 144 N. W. 1, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 691, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 511; Roberts v. Parker, 117 Iowa, 389, 90 N. W. 744, 57 L. R. A. 764, 94 Am. St. Rep. 316; Patten v. Sturgeon (C. C. A.) 214 F. 65; Webb v. Brandon, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 285; and Favers v. Glass, 22 Ala. 621, 58 Am. Dec. 272. The Utah case is the only one among the cases cited which is in conflict with the conclusion reached here. We agree with the Utah court that "an automobile is as essential to a physician now as a horse and buggy were in the past," but we cannot avoid the conclusion that the duty of substituting the term "automobile" for "one horse with vehicle and harness" rests with the Legislature, and not with the court, and for the court under the guise of interpretation to make the change would be an usurpation of the power of the Legislature. In the Iowa cases, in which it was held that automobiles were exempt, it is sufficient to say that the statute there construed contained the general term "or other vehicle" which is quite different from the California law. In Patten v. Sturgeon the federal court, in construing an Oklahoma statute, merely held that an automobile is a carriage within the meaning of the statute; while the Tennessee and Alabama cases hold that a wagon with four wheels was exempt under the terms of the statute exempting "one ox cart," although lexicographers ordinarily define a "cart" as a two-wheeled vehicle.

In our opinion, the ruling on the demurrer was correct, and the judgment entered proper. The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 28, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 26, 1927.

1. Corporations $\S$ 121(5)—Evidence held to sustain findings that representations of seller of mining stock as to tonnage of mine and cost of extracting minerals were mere statements of opinion.

In action to rescind contract for purchase of shares of stock in mining corporation on ground that defendant falsely represented tonnage of ore in mine and cost of extracting minerals, evidence held to sustain findings that defendant's statements were opinions only and were treated as such by plaintiff.

2. Contracts $\S$ 94(1)—Truth of any one of material misrepresentations alleged in complaint for rescission will entitle aggrieved party to judgment.

If any one of material misrepresentations, upon which complaint for rescission of contract is based, is true and other elements entitling party to rescission are present, party aggrieved is entitled to judgment.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1170(3)—Admission in answer of some of misrepresentations alleged, by failure to deny misrepresentations separately in action for rescission, held not ground for reversal where plaintiff was not prejudiced (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

In action to rescind contract for purchase of mining stock on ground of misrepresentations, admission of some of misrepresentations by answer which failed to deny each representation separately held not ground for reversal of judgment for defendant, under Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, where defect in pleadings was not called to attention of trial court and where plaintiff received fair and impartial trial and was not prejudiced.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1170(3)—To avoid judgment for error in pleadings, appellant must show miscarriage of justice resulted (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

When attack upon judgment is based upon error in pleadings, burden is on appellant to demonstrate that error complained of has resulted in miscarriage of justice, under Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 1170(3)—Court may not reverse judgment for defect in pleadings without considering entire case, including evidence (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

Under Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, providing no judgment shall be set aside for error as to any matter of pleading unless miscarriage of justice resulted, appellate court must examine entire case, including evidence, before reversing for defect in pleadings.

Plaintiff sued for the rescission of a contract for the purchase of shares of stock in a mining corporation, alleging fraudulent misrepresentations as an inducement to the execution of the contract. Judgment went for the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed upon a bill of exceptions.

The complaint alleged that on November 21, 1921, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written agreement wherein the plaintiff agreed to purchase and the defendant agreed to sell 250,000 shares of the capital stock of the Consolidated Virginia Mining Company, a corporation, for the total purchase price of $152,005; that upon the execution of the agreement the sum of $20,822.25 was paid by the plaintiff to the defendant in cash, and at the same time plaintiff delivered to the defendant his promissory note for the balance, secured by the shares of stock covered by the purchase and also by other collateral; that for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to enter into said agreement the defendant represented to him that the said corporation "contained known ores and minerals and ore bodies situate in the so-called 'Old Bonanza Stopes,' in said mine, and between the 1,500 and 1,600 foot levels, in said mine, amounting to 2,000,000 tons of ores and minerals, that were valued at from $20 to $25 per ton; that all of said ores, minerals, and ore bodies could be mined, extracted, and reduced at a cost of not exceeding $3 per ton"; and that within a very short time thereafter the stock of said corporation would greatly increase in value and large dividends thereon would be paid; "that the representations so made, by the defendant, to the plaintiff, as aforesaid, were and are untrue, and were then known to the defendant to be false and untrue, and the said representations were fraudulently made, by the defendant, with the intent to mislead and deceive the plaintiff, and to induce him to enter into the agreement, aforesaid;" that the plaintiff, believing and fully relying upon said representations, was induced to enter into said agreement because of them; that the plaintiff did not discover the falsity of said representations until about July 30, 1923, and that upon discovering the facts which entitled him to rescind said agreement he immediately gave notice of rescission thereof to the defendant; that the defendant for many years past has been a stock broker and engaged in the business of promoting, operating and dealing in mining properties, but that the plaintiff was practically unfamiliar with the business of mining or the manipulation of the stocks of mining corporations. The answer alleged that for some time prior to the execution of the agreement the plaintiff had become interested in the purchase of mining stocks of corporations operating in the vicinity of the Consolidated Virginia and had urged the defendant to sell to him some of the stock of the latter company believing that because of renewed activity of operations in that locality the stock of the Consolidated Virginia would enhance in value; that the plaintiff had been to Virginia City, Nev., where the properties of these corporations were located, and had familiarized himself with the Consolidated Virginia mine and with other properties in the immediate neighborhood; that the stock was sold to the plaintiff at the latter's solicitation and upon the basis of quotations then made on the San Francisco Stock Exchange. The answer further denied that the "defendant estimated or represented to the plaintiff the amount or value of said ores described in said complaint, or at all, or made any representations or inducements that led the plaintiff to purchase any of said stock, or at all." The answer further denied that the defendant "represented to the plaintiff that the old Bonanza stopes in said mine between the 1,500 and 1,600 foot levels contained ore amounting to 2,000,000 tons; that said ore was valued at $20 to $25 per ton; that said ore minerals and ore bodies could be mined and extracted at a cost of $3 per ton; that dividends would be paid; or at all made any representations or extended any inducements to plaintiff of any nature relative to the purchase by the plaintiff of any stock in said company."

[1] On this appeal it is contended on behalf of appellant that the decision is not sustained by the evidence; that the decision is against law; that the decision does not sustain the judgment; and that the judgment is erroneous and against law. Although on the face of the briefs it appears that four separate points are raised in the attack upon the judgment, there is but one, as all four points advanced are really an attack upon the nature of the denials in the answer. In reference to the first three charges of fraudulent representations—the tonnage in the Bonanza stopes, the value thereof, and the average cost of extracting and treating the ore therefrom—the trial court found that the respondent did inform the appellant that the old Bonanza stopes contained approximately 2,000,000 tons of ore of a value of $20 to $25 a ton, but that in this connection the appellant knew that the respondent had no information as to the amount of the tonnage or the value of the ore, but was merely giving an estimate or opinion based upon information given him by others, and that there was no evidence that the ore in said stopes did not amount to said quantity or that it was not of said value. The court expressly found that it was not true that there was not 2,000,000 tons of ore in said stopes of the value of $20 to $25 per ton. It was further found that the respondent told the appellant that with improved facilities for treating ore at the mine the ore taken from said stopes could be extracted and reduced at a cost of about $3 per ton, and that under such circumstances large profits would result from the operation of said mine, and that the dividends to be paid upon said stock would greatly increase. In this connection, however, it was found that these statements were also opinions only, were understood as such by the appellant, and were not treated by him as representations of fact. These findings were amply supported by the evidence. The properties of the Consolidated Virginia had been operated for a period of about 50 years prior to the execution of the contract. The old Bonanza stopes were known to have contained much valuable ore, but because of a fire which occurred therein in the year 1878 they had been bulkheaded off and had not been mined. The opinion had been freely expressed by those familiar with the conditions of the mine that these stopes would run 2,000,000 or more tons of ore of a value of $20 to $25 a ton. The problem which confronted those interested in the operation of the mine was to extract this ore, and the appellant and others interested in the affairs of the company entered upon this project in anticipation of procuring this large body of ore. However, some time after the execution of the contract, when the stopes were opened for the purpose of extracting the ore, operations were stopped because of a recurring fire. There is really no conflict in the evidence which goes to support these findings of the trial court. In fact, the appellant frankly stated that he had no information as to the quantity of ore or its value or as to the cost of extracting and treating it if the proposed new mill and improved facilities were put in operation.

[2, 3] As we have said, the real ground advanced by the appellant on this appeal is that, because of the character of the denials in the answer, the falsity of representations charged in the complaint was admitted, that, therefore, the findings should have been in accord with the admissions of the pleading, rather than upon the evidence adduced at the trial, and, consequently, the decision is against law and does not sustain the judgment. The theory of the appellant is that as the complaint alleged misrepresentations in respect to the quantity and quality of the minerals contained in the old Bonanza stopes and the cost of mining and reducing said ores and alleged that each of said representations was false and known to be false by the defendant, while the answer denied these allegations in the language of the complaint and did not deny in the disjunctive that each alleged representation was false or that the respondent knew each to be false or that each of such representations was made with intent to mislead and deceive appellant, or that appellant acted or relied upon any one of said representations or was misled or deceived by any one of them, the answer must be treated as an admission of any one of the alleged false representations. From this it is argued, in accordance with the well-settled rule, that, if any one of the material representations upon which the complaint for rescission is based is true and the other elements entitling a party to a rescission are present, the party aggrieved is entitled to judgment. 2 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (2d Ed.) § 880.

If the appellant had moved for judgment upon the pleadings upon the ground of respondent's failure to specifically deny the allegations of the complaint noted, there would be some merit in his attack upon the answer. However, he was not content to do this, but proceeded to trial upon the theory that the issues were properly presented. This trial commenced on December 26, 1923, and after a number of witnesses were called, was continued to January 10, 1924, for further hearing. At this time other testimony was heard and another adjournment to January 24, 1924, was taken, at which time further testimony was taken all on the subject of the issues raised by the complaint, that is to say, the truth or falsity of the representations upon which the appellant relied and the truth or falsity of his allegations of lack of knowledge or means of knowledge of the conditions of the mine and the quantity and value of the ore bodies located therein. Throughout the trial no objection was made to the admission of any of this evidence, and no suggestion was made until the opening brief was filed on this appeal that any of the facts alleged in the complaint were admitted by the answer.

[4, 5] The cause having been tried upon the theory that the issues were properly pleaded, we are now asked to reverse the judgment for the sole reason of an error in the answer which was not suggested to the trial court at any stage of the proceeding. Section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution provides that:

"No judgment shall be set aside * * * for any error as to any matter of pleading, * * * unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

Under the terms of this section when the attack upon the judgment is based upon an error in the pleadings, it is incumbent upon the appellant to demonstrate before the appellate court that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. But even in such a case the appellate court may not reverse the judgment except upon an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence. Where, therefore, upon an examination of the evidence, the appellate court is satisfied that the error complained of has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice, but that in fact it has not affected the substantial rights of the appellant in any particular, it would be a distinct violation of this section of the Constitution to reverse the judgment solely upon the ground of the error occurring in the pleadings. Our examination of the record here discloses that the appellant suffered no prejudice because of any defect in respondent's pleading, but that, to the contrary, the pleading was treated as having fully tendered the issues to be tried by the trial court, and that after a fair and impartial trial of those issues the trial court found against the appellant upon substantial evidence, which in all essential matters was uncontradicted.

84 Cal. App. 499

LINDSEY et ux. v. WRIGHT et al.
(Civ. 5495.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 20, 1927.

1. Continuance ⇨12—Illness of party or member of his family does not necessarily require granting motion for continuance.

Illness of a party or of a member of his family does not ipso facto require granting of motion for continuance, since except when otherwise expressly provided by statute the granting of a continuance is within the sound discretion of the trial court.

2. Appeal and error ⇨966(2)—Granting or refusal of continuance because of illness of member of party's family will not be disturbed, unless discretion is abused.

Trial court's action in granting or refusing continuance because of the illness of a member of a party's family will not be disturbed, unless there has been a plain abuse of discretion.

3. Continuance ⇨12—Refusal of continuance of foreclosure case on physician's certificate of illness of defendants' son held not abuse of discretion.

Trial court's refusal of continuance of trial for foreclosure of land contract on physician's certificate that the son of defendants was suffering from acute throat and tonsilar inflammation, which might be diphtheritic, held not abuse of discretion, where none of the parties were under quarantine, and their presence at home was not shown to be necessary.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨172—Land contract, provision making time essential, held to apply to interest payments on mortgage assumed by purchasers.

Provision of land contract making time essential held to apply to promise by purchasers to pay interest installment on prior mortgage lien which they assumed, quarterly as required by the mortgage, though contract provided that interest on deferred payments should be paid annually.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨78—Time is not of essence of land contract, unless intention clearly appears expressly or by implication.

Time is not of essence of a contract for the sale of real property, unless it clearly appears from terms of agreement, expressly or by implication, that the parties so intended.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⇨172—Intention that time is of essence of land contract may be inferred from necessity of prompt payments on prior lien to protect vendor, though forfeiture provisions must be strictly construed (Civ. Code, § 1442).

Intention that time is of the essence of a contract for the purchase of land as to quarterly payments of interest on a prior lien assumed by the purchasers may be inferred from the provisions of the contract and the necessity of prompt payment to protect the vendor, though, under Civ. Code, § 1442, a condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly construed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action to foreclose the right of purchase under a contract for the sale of real estate by G. W. Lindsey and wife against A. M. Wright and wife. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Earl L. Wisdom, of Los Angeles, and Dorsey Whitelaw, of El Centro, for appellants.

J. S. Larew, of El Centro, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment foreclosing the right of appellants to purchase under a contract for the sale of real property.

The parties, on December 1, 1922, entered into a contract in writing by which respondents agreed to convey to appellants certain land in Imperial county; the consideration being the promise by the latter to pay therefor the sum of $80,000.

The contract with respect to payment provided as follows:

"The parties of the second part, in consideration of the premises, agree to pay to the parties of the first part the sum of eighty thousand and 00/100 dollars in lawful money, together with interest on all deferred payments at seven per cent. per annum, payable annually. Payable as follows, to wit: Fourteen thousand ($14,000.00) dollars, equity in Lemon Grove lemon orchard and nineteen thousand ($19,000.00) dollars by the assumption of a certain mortgage for like amount, made by the first parties, with interest at seven per cent. per annum, payable quarterly, and forty-seven thousand ($47,000.00) dollars payable on or before ten (10) years after date with interest at seven per cent. per annum, payable annually."

Time was made of the essence of the contract, and it was further provided that, in the event the vendees should fail to make the deferred payments, or any of them at the times and in the manner provided, the contract should become null and void, and the vendors released from any and all obligation to convey, it being further agreed that it would be impossible to fix and determine the actual damage which would arise in the event of a failure by the vendees to make the deferred payments, and that all moneys paid on the purchase price should be retained by the vendors as liquidated damages caused by the failure to comply with the terms of the contract.

It was also provided that the agreement with a deed to the property and a certificate of title should be placed in escrow with a bank at El Centro, Cal., to be delivered to the vendees upon receipt of full payment, but to be returned to the vendors, "in case of failure of said second parties to comply with any or all of the terms of said agreement promptly as therein specified," and, further, "that, in case of the death, physical or mental disability of the second parties, the settlement of his or their equity shall be by arbitration."

The complaint alleged that by the terms of the mortgage assumed by appellants and of the note thereby secured it was provided that, in the event of any installment of interest thereon becoming delinquent, the whole of the principal sum should, at the option of the holder, become immediately due and payable; that the contract provided that appellants should assume and pay as a part of the purchase price the note with the interest according to its terms; that appellants had failed to pay a quarterly installment of the interest due thereon; and that respondents had elected to terminate the contract.

A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and appellants by their answer admitted the foregoing allegations of the complaint, but alleged, as a defense, and by their cross-complaint for a rescission of the contract and the recovery of the property conveyed to respondents, that the failure to perform was caused by the physical disability of appellant A. M. Wright, which disability continued to exist.

It was further alleged, in effect, that the only means by which appellants could meet the payments was from the income produced from the land, and that, due to the physical condition of appellant Wright, they were unable to remain thereon or to make the payments provided by the contract; that they had offered and were ready to surrender possession to respondents upon an equitable adjustment of their rights being made as provided by the contract.

The foregoing allegations were denied by respondents, who subsequently, by leave of the court, filed a supplemental complaint, alleging that, since the commencement of the action three additional installments of interest on the mortgage, together with the annual interest on the balance of the purchase price, had become due, all of which appellants had failed to pay.

On the day fixed for the trial appellants moved for a continuance on the ground of the illness of a member of their family, and in support of the motion filed a written certificate, which was as follows:

"La Mesa, Calif. 2/25/24.

"To Whom It May Concern:

"This is to certify that I have this day visited professionally Baron Wright, son of A. M. Wright of La Mesa, Calif.—and find said Baron Wright suffering from acute throat and tonsillar inflammation which may be diphtheritic. The earliest possible report from a throat swab will be Wednesday morning Feb. 27, 1924. Until a negative report shall be had it will be dangerous for the family of A. M. Wright to be at large.
L. W. Zochert, M. D."

The motion was denied, whereupon the trial proceeded in the absence of appellants, and findings of fact having been waived by their counsel, a judgment was entered for respondents.

A motion for a new trial was denied, and an appeal taken from the judgment.

[1, 2] Appellants contend that the denial of their motion for a continuance was an abuse of discretion, and that the original complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

An application for a continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and while in a proper case a continuance should be granted because of the illness of a party (Morehouse v. Morehouse, 136 Cal. 332, 68 P. 976), or of a member of his family (Langdon-Creasy Co. v. Rouse, 139 Ky. 647, 72 S. W. 1113, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 292; Skinner v. Bryce, 75 N. C. 287; In re Townsend, 122 Iowa, 246, 97 N. W. 1108), this does not ipso facto require the granting of the motion, as it is for the trial court in all cases, except where otherwise expressly provided by statute, to determine whether or not the circumstances shown are such as to make it proper that a continuance be granted, and its conclusion thereon will not be disturbed, unless there has been a plain abuse of discretion. Lynch v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 123, 88 P. 708.

[3] In the instant case the application was not supported by an affidavit showing that the testimony of appellants would be relevant or material to the issues, and, while it might be inferred from the pleadings that appellant A. M. Wright would have been a material witness, the materiality of the testimony of his wife does not appear. Moreover, the nature of the illness of their son was undetermined, and, although the certificate states that it might prove to be diphtheria, none of the parties was under quarantine, and the presence of either appellant at the home on the day of the trial was not shown to have been reasonably necessary.

[4] The mortgage provided for quarterly payments of interest, and it is contended by appellants that, in view of the provisions of the contract, that interest on all deferred payments should be paid annually, and that the failure to make the deferred payments or any of them should relieve respondents from further obligation thereunder, the clause making time essential should be held to refer only to such payments of interest as were to be made directly to respondents, and not to the promise to pay the interest on the sum secured by the mortgage.

[5] As provided by section 1442 of the Civil Code, a condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly construed against the party for whose benefit it is created, and it is the rule that time is not of the essence of a contract for the sale of real property, unless it clearly appears from the terms of the agreement that the parties so intended.

[6] Such intention, however, need not be expressly declared (Martin v. Morgan, 87 Cal. 203, 25 P. 350, 22 Am. St. Rep. 240; Depavo v. Rizzo, 27 Cal. App. 200, 149 P. 793), but may be inferred from the provisions of the contract (Bennett v. Hyde, 92 Cal. 131, 28 P. 104), or implied where the benefit to accrue from the consideration to be paid materially depends upon strict performance in point of time (Kirby v. Harrison, 2 Ohio St. 326, 59 Am. Dec. 677), or the relations and situation of the parties render such performance necessary for the protection of the vendor (Wachung Realty, etc., Co. v. Llewellyn Holding Co., 96 N. J. Eq. 498, 126 A. 326; Garrett v. Cohen, 63 Misc. Rep. 450, 117 N. Y. S. 129; Ruckman v. King, 19 N. J. Eq. 360).

It being a part of the consideration that appellants should meet the interest payments on the mortgage which, in the event of the default the mortgagee had the right to foreclose, and it also being necessary for the protection of the vendors that the promise be promptly performed, the reasonable construction of the provisions of the contract supports the conclusion that it was the intention of the parties that the clause making time essential should apply to this provision equally with that requiring the payment of interest on the final installment of the purchase price.

The further contention is made that the court erred in failing to determine the rights of appellants under the provision of the contract that the physical disability of either should excuse performance, but, as stated, the facts alleged as grounds for relief under this provision were denied, and no evidence in support of the allegations was adduced.

We are of the opinion that the complaint stated a cause of action, and that the denial of the motion for a continuance was not an abuse of discretion.

The judgment is affirmed.

DAVIS v. PACIFIC STUDIOS CORPORATION. (Civ. 5480.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 27, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 22, 1927.

1. Corporations ⇨518(1)—Defendant corporation must allege and prove ultra vires defense.

Where a defendant corporation seeks to avoid its contract on the ground of ultra vires, the burden is upon it to allege and prove such defense.

2. Corporations ⇨374—Corporations have implied power to do everything necessary to exercise powers expressly conferred (Civ. Code, § 354).

Under Civ. Code, § 354, every corporation, in addition to powers expressly granted, has the implied power to do all acts necessary to enable them to exercise the granted powers and accomplish the objects for which they were created.

3. Corporations ⇨487(1)—Ultra vires doctrine is not favored, and its application will be limited.

Where contracts of corporations are not malum in se or malum prohibitum, the doctrine of ultra vires is not favored, and should be limited in its scope and application.

4. Corporations ⇨388(2)—Where corporation received benefit of plaintiff's work, claim of ultra vires held inequitable.

Where corporation received the benefit of plaintiff's work, claim that the agreement to pay him for such work was ultra vires held inequitable.

5. Corporations ⇨580—Evidence held to sustain finding that new corporation was continuation of old, and hence its agreement to pay debt of old corporation was valid.

Evidence held to sustain finding that new corporation was formed to carry on business originally planned for old and was continuation of the old corporation, and hence its agreement to pay the debt of the old corporation incurred for services of plaintiff from which it had derived benefits was valid.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

Where there is substantial evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court on conflicting evidence they will not be disturbed on appeal.

7. Corporations ⇨580—Evidence held to sustain findings that corporation ratified agreement to pay for services performed for another corporation of which it was continuation.

Evidence that corporation board of directors had or should have had knowledge of agreement made by its general manager and president to pay for services performed for a former corporation of which it was a continuation, and that no objection was made, held to sustain finding that the corporation ratified the agreement.

8. Corporations ⇨432(6)—Authority of corporation officer may be shown by proof of course of business and knowledge of board of directors.

The authority of a corporation officer to make an agreement may be shown by evidence that the officer does business for the corporation with the acquiescence of its directors and that the directors knew or might be presumed to know of the agreement which it is claimed the officer had authority to make.

9. Corporations ⇨397—Corporation is bound by acts and declarations of its officer within scope of the business intrusted to him.

Where certain business of a corporation is shown to be habitually done by one of its officers with the knowledge and acquiescence of the board of directors, the corporation is bound by the acts and declarations of its officer within the scope of the business intrusted to him.

10. Corporations ⇨426(10)—Where agreement to pay for services was made by general manager and known to president and most of directors, corporation held estopped from claiming that directors did not ratify agreement.

Where agreement made by general manager to pay for services from which the corporation had received benefits was known to president and most of the directors, corporation held estopped from claiming that the acts of its directors did not constitute a ratification of the agreement.

11. Corporations ⇨513(4)—Estoppel of corporation from claiming that directors had not ratified an agreement to pay for services need not be pleaded.

Plaintiff claimed corporation was liable on agreement to pay for his services which he had made with the president and general manager. The corporation claimed its officers had no authority to make the agreement. Held that plaintiff might claim that the corporation was estopped from denying that its board of directors had ratified the agreement without pleading the estoppel.

12. Evidence ⇨357—Letters from defendant corporation's general manager to plaintiff and corporation president held admissible, though not under seal, to prove agreement to pay plaintiff.

Letter from defendant corporation's general manager to plaintiff and an order to the corporation president, both written on corporation's stationery, though not under seal, held admissible to prove agreement to pay plaintiff for services.

13. Corporations ⇨519(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff believed services were worth what he had demanded from corporation.

In action against corporation on agreement to pay for services performed by plaintiff, where plaintiff had demanded from the general manager payment in excess of that allowed in the agreement, evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff believed his services were reasonably worth what he had demanded.

14. Corporations ⇨519(3)—Corporation's agreement to pay sum of money for services held sufficient to sustain finding that services were worth amount agreed.

Finding in action against corporation for services that plaintiff's services were reasonably worth $5,000 held supported by defendant's own agreement to pay him such sum.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Harry F. Davis against the Pacific Studios Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sidney Rhein, of San Francisco, and Kirkbride & Gordon, of San Mateo, for appellant.

Preston & Duncan, of San Francisco, George W. Murphy, of Santa Rosa, and Robert E. Hatch, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of respondent and against appellant on account of a compromise agreement. The allegations of the complaint may be summarized as follows:

In May, 1920, A. W. Scott and Frank Burt were promoting the Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation and engaged plaintiff as fiscal agent for the sale of its stock, agreeing to pay him 12½ per cent. brokerage or commission "of the amount of all stock issued or subscribed for"; that plaintiff commenced preparations for the sale of the stock, etc., but that before the conditions of the corporation commissioner's permit had been complied with Scott and Burt "and said Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation decided to organize another corporation to take the place of said Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation," and organized Pacific Studios Corporation, defendant herein; that prior thereto the employment of plaintiff "ceased and was terminated by mutual consent of the parties, without prejudice, however, to the claim of plaintiff for commissions," etc.; that there had been obtained subscriptions for $85,000 of the stock of Golden Gate Cinema Studios, a corporation; that plaintiff was therefore entitled to $10,625 brokerage. Plaintiff then alleges that defendant was organized for the purpose of carrying on the business originally planned by Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation, "which business said Pacific Studios Corporation has taken over and is now conducting," and that this defendant "has also taken over and appropriated, without consideration, all of the assets of Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation of the value of more than $10,000; that by reason thereof Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation is insolvent, etc.; that thereafter plaintiff performed certain services for Pacific Studios Corporation of the reasonable value of $2,500; and that on November 12, 1920, defendant Pacific Studios Corporation agreed to pay plaintiff and plaintiff agreed to accept the sum of $5,000 in full satisfaction of both said claims in installments, of which but $1,000 has been paid, and plaintiff therefore prays judgment for the balance of $4,000."

The answer admits the first contract (Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation with Davis), but denies, among other things, that Pacific Studios Corporation was organized to take the place of Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation, or to carry on its business, or that it took over any assets of Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation, denies that any valid subscriptions were obtained by Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation, and denies that it agreed to pay plaintiff anything, admits that there was paid to plaintiff on November 12, 1920, the sum of $500 and on February 7, 1921, the sum of $500, but that each of them was made by said Scott and Burt without warrant or authority from this defendant.

Thereafter permission was obtained by plaintiff to file a "second amended and supplemental complaint," in the main similar to the former amended and supplemental complaint, but adding a final installment of $500.

The court found in accordance with the allegations of the complaint and entered judgment for respondent in the sum of $4,000. From this judgment appellant Pacific Studios Corporation has appealed.

Appellant urges: (a) That the Scott-Burt and Davis agreement was beyond the power of the corporation to make; (b) that it was made without sanction or ratification of the board of directors of the corporation; (c) that this defendant is in no sense a continuance of Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation, and that defendant received no property whatever from Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation; (d) that the court erred in admitting in evidence the Scott-Burt and Davis agreement, and the order on Scott; (e) that the evidence is insufficient to support certain of the findings.

[1, 2] Under the assignment of error that the agreement was beyond the power of the corporation to make, it is questionable whether the defense of ultra vires is properly before the court, as there is no allegation in defendant's answer of such defense. If the defendant seeks to avoid its contract upon the ground of ultra vires, the burden is upon it to allege and prove such defense. Brown v. Board of Education, 103 Cal. 534, 37 P. 503; Morgan v. Board of Education, 136 Cal. 247, 68 P. 703. But even if the defense of ultra vires were pleaded, there is no showing that the contract sued upon was beyond the power of the corporation. The articles of incorporation are not before the court, nor has appellant attempted to define its powers. Corporations, in the absence of express restrictions, have, in addition to the powers expressly granted them, the implied power to do all acts that may be necessary to enable them to exercise the powers expressly conferred upon them and accomplish the objects for which they were created. "Whatever transactions are fairly incidental or auxiliary to the main business of the corporation and necessary or expedient in the protection, care, and management of its property, may be undertaken by the corporation and be within the scope of its corporate powers." Teele v. Rockport Granite Co., 224 Mass. 20, 112 N. E. 497. Every corporation has the power to enter into any obligations or contracts essential to the transaction of its ordinary affairs. Civ.

Code, § 354. "Whether a contract is 'essential' to the transaction of its ordinary affairs, or for the purposes of the corporation, is to be determined by the corporation, or those to whom the management of its affairs is intrusted. If it is within the apparent scope of its organization, the fact that the contract has been entered into by it, or by its representative, is a determination on the part of the corporation that it is essential, and the corporation will not be permitted thereafter to question its effect." Bates v. Coronado Beach Co., 109 Cal. 160, 163, 41 P. 855, 856.

[3, 4] The defense of ultra vires, urged by appellant, is no longer looked upon by the courts with favor, particularly when relied upon as a shield to escape liability. It is the policy of the law and the endeavor of the courts to hold corporations as well as natural persons to their contracts. Such defense introduced against a contract which has been executed in whole or in part by the corporation is looked upon with disfavor. As to contracts of corporations that are malum in se or malum prohibitum, they will not be enforced; but as to contracts not thus objectionable, justice and public policy require that the doctrine of ultra vires should be limited in its scope and application. McQuaide v. Enterprise Brewing Co., 14 Cal. App. 315, 111 P. 927. Here there is nothing in the contract that is either malum in se or malum prohibitum; the corporation received the benefit of the work done by respondent and the consequences to him render inequitable a claim of ultra vires by appellant.

"Where, as was clearly the case here, an officer of a corporation is held out by such corporation to be possessed of power to perform all acts involved in its ordinary or usual business, the law will not permit third parties to suffer from such acts of such officer by the plea of the corporation that the ostensible authority of such officer was not in fact conferred upon him." Stevens v. Selma Fruit Co., 18 Cal. App. 242, 250, 123 P. 212, 216.

And in Brown v. Crown Gold Milling Co., 150 Cal. 376, 387, 89 P. 86, 91, the court says:

"The majority of the board having knowledge of the facts, it was not necessary, to conclude the company defendant in favor of plaintiff, that his employment should be ratified at a regular meeting of the board. It was sufficient that the majority of the board individually were advised of the terms of the employment of plaintiff by Mr. Doe, and took no measures to disaffirm as directors that employment."

And in Irwin v. Colburn, 56 Cal. App. 41, 204 P. 551, the court uses this language:

"It nowhere appears that such action by these officers was prohibited. Authority to bind the corporation may be proved by evidence that such officers have been allowed to conduct its business and that third persons have acted upon the authority which the corporation has thus permitted them to assume."

Appellant urges that at best respondent's claim was against Scott, Burt, and the Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation; that while there are allegations in the complaint alleging that Pacific Studios Corporation absorbed the assets of the former corporation, the testimony fails to show that the first corporation ever possessed anything; therefore, that while Scott and Burt may have been willing to pin the Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation indebtedness on Pacific Studios Corporation, something more must be shown before the corporation itself can be held liable for an attempt to foist upon it a debt wholly unconnected with its affairs. The evidence, however, establishes the fact that the debt is not, as appellant contends, a debt wholly unconnected with its affairs. It is not a case of one corporation paying the debt of another. In the first place, some of the services for which judgment was rendered were performed for appellant itself. The court so found, and there is sufficient evidence to support such finding. Mr. Davis testified that the new corporation reaped the benefit of the work that had been done through his activities and efforts as well as that of others, including Mr. Gerson, Mr. Gallagher, Mr. Burt, and Mr. Scott; that at a meeting at the company's office in the Hewes building, the office of the old and new corporation, Mr. Burt, general manager, stated to him (Davis) that he was authorized to offer him $5,000 in full settlement of all his claim for brokerage ($10,625 due from the old company) and services rendered defendant corporation ($2,500), totaling $13,125; that the $5,000 was to be in settlement of all respondent's rights under the contract and for additional services rendered for and in behalf of the new company; that Mr. Burt represented to him that he had been authorized to offer him $5,000; no more; no less. Appellant then stated to Burt that inasmuch as his (Davis') claim was for a brokerage of 12½ per cent. on $85,000 and in view of the services he had rendered the new corporation, he felt that he was entitled to founders' shares in the new corporation and to a larger cash sum than $5,000; that Burt did not deny that he was entitled to founders' shares, but stated to him that on that matter he had no voice; that he (Davis) had numerous telephones, long distance and otherwise, from Mr. Scott and Mr. Burt, requested him to take up with Mr. Stephens of Stephens & Co. the carrying on of the financing, they urging him to recommend the project to Mr. Stephens as a good offering; that he recommended that they procure the services of John Jasper of Hollywood to build the studios; that that was subsequently done, and that Mr. Jasper called upon him for inside information, and that he recommended him to Mr. Scott and Mr. Burt. That some service was performed for the new corporation was admitted in a letter of Mr. Burt, manager of the new corporation, written to respondent. The letter is dated November 12, 1920, and written on the letter head of appellant corporation and addressed to respondent, and is as follows:

"Confirming verbal conversation of even date regarding your claim against the Pacific Studios Corporation for services rendered, it is understood between us that these services will amount in the aggregate to $5,000 and that you will accept as payment the sum of $500 monthly until same is liquidated, it being understood, however, that if at any time the company desires to pay in excess of this sum it is at their option. I am inclosing herewith order for the first payment of $500 and will see that similar order is delivered into your hands every 30 days from this date. Kindly acknowledge receipt of this letter and verification of its acceptance. Very truly yours, Pacific Studios Corporation, by Frank Burt, General Manager."

The letter of even date from Frank Burt to A. W. Scott, president of Pacific Studios Corporation, is as follows:

"Will you kindly pay to Mr. Harry F. Davis on presentation of this order the sum of $500 in keeping with agreement entered into with Mr. Davis of even date? Very truly yours, Pacific Studios Corporation, by Frank Burt, General Manager."

[5] Furthermore, this is not a case of one corporation paying the debt of another. The evidence amply sustains the finding of the court that the appellant, Pacific Studios Corporation, was formed for the purpose and with the intent to carry on the business originally planned and intended to be carried on by the Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation and was in fact a continuation of the old corporation.

Mr. Davis, who was himself a subscriber to the first corporation, testified that the new company was formed to take over the assets of the old company, that it took over all the assets of the old company, took over the same option for a site at San Mateo, and the indorsements and subscriptions that were on hand, and the contracts with production companies for making pictures, occupied the same offices in San Francisco, and that its officers and directors were substantially identical with the old company. The Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation had planned to build at San Mateo on the same site. The directors of the new corporation are, with one exception, the same as the old corporation. They have the same president and the same general manager. They had been proceeding under a wrong plan, and it needed revamping. They needed more capital to carry out the undertaking as it was then being planned. This testimony is corroborated by the testimony of Mr. Scott, which shows that the new corporation took a lease on the San Mateo site upon which he had previously taken an option for the earlier company, and which same site so leased was referred to in the prospectus of the Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation and the permit granted to it by the corporation commissioner and, in the later prospectus, of the Pacific Studios Corporation. It also shows that the indorsement of the Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation, made and ratified by the board of supervisors of San Francisco, was appropriated and used by Pacific Studios Corporation for the purposes of promotion, and that they likewise took advantage of the indorsement of the committee appointed by the mayor of San Francisco, which appeared as an "advisory board" on the prospectus of the Golden Gate Cinema Studios Corporation and the indorsement of the Civic League. Furthermore, in a letter written by Mr. Scott, president of the new company, to Mr. Merk, editor of "The Advance," for publicity purposes, August 12, 1920, only a few days after the incorporation of the new company. Mr. Scott wrote:

"I know you will be interested to learn that our plans for the building of a motion picture studio enterprise in your city are rapidly approaching consummation. As you know we started out some months ago with a plan contemplating the investment of some $300,000 for this project. Discussion of the plan in San Francisco and consultation with experts in this line with financial interests brought us to the conviction that the situation justifies the building of the enterprise on a more comprehensive scale and the investment of a considerably greater sum of money, and we have arranged our plans to that end and changed the name of the company to the Pacific Studios Corporation, and our ultimate investment in your community will probably approximate $1,000,000. * * * Several contracts have already been arranged which assures us of the success of the enterprise."

Mr. Gallagher, who was a director in both corporations, considered the new corporation liable to him for his own claim for moneys advanced to the old corporation and that the new corporation is the result of the work they did with reference to the old corporation.

Mr. Gerson, who claimed to be the originator of the idea of the studios and who performed services in the formation of the first corporation and was one of its directors, claimed founders' shares in the new corporation for the work done for the old corporation. Mr. Kirkbride, who assisted in securing the San Mateo and Burlingame subscriptions, testified that about two-thirds of the persons who pledged subscriptions to the first corporation subscribed to the second.

[6] Continuance of the old corporation in the new is also evidenced by a stipulation showing the personnel of the new corporation to be substantially identical with that of the old. It is also evidenced by the fact that the new corporation assumed and paid obligations of the old corporation, to wit: The printing bill, a claim for publicity work by Mr. Crowley, Mr. Scott's account for advancements made to the old corporation, and that founders' shares were given to Gerson, Gallagher and Scott for services rendered to the old corporation. To be sure, some of the witnesses for appellant deny the identity of the new corporation with the old, but such testimony only creates a conflict of evidence, and there being substantial evidence in the record to sustain the findings of the trial court, under the well-established rule they will not be disturbed on appeal.

[7] The evidence also sustains the conclusion that the contract was sanctioned and ratified by Pacific Studios Corporation. Mr. Burt, who wrote the letter of November 12, 1920, was the general manager of appellant corporation, held out as such to the public by the corporation through its circulars and prospectus. The corporation had an executive committee with extensive powers appointed pursuant to its by-laws, which committee at the time respondent's claim was adjusted consisted of Mr. Burt, Mr. Scott, Mr. Gallois and Mr. Pearson, and both Mr. Scott and Mr. Burt obviously authorized and approved the settlement with Mr. Davis, and there is no direct evidence that Mr. Gallois and Mr. Pearson disapproved it. In addition, Mr. Bell, a director and attorney for the corporation, approved the settlement. He stated to Mr. Lum, representing respondent, that he would recommend to appellant a settlement of $5,000 net cash. Mr. Stephens knew of respondent's claim and that negotiations for settlement were going on and offered to take up with Mr. Scott the matter of settlement. He advised respondent to accept $5,000 on the partial payment plan and himself approved it. Mr. Caswell, treasurer of the corporation, signed the checks by which two $500 payments on the contract were made by the corporation. Also, Mr. Burt testified that Mr. Caswell, Mr. Bell and Mr. Scott were in favor of the settlement. Mr. Gallagher, also a director of the new corporation, favored the settlement and also testified that "there was a continuous discussion of the Davis claim running through the boards of the old and the new corporation," showing knowledge of the corporation. Mr. Burt in a letter of October 1, 1920, to Mr. Davis stated that the settlement of this claim was placed in the hands of Mr. Bell "by instruction of the board of directors." Mr. Davis testified that he had conversations with all the different members of the board, including Mr. Burt, Mr. Scott, Mr. Stephens, Mr. DeCamp, Mr. Gallagher and others before November 12th, the date of the accord. Mr. Burt testified:

"Q. Did you tell Mr. Stephens that you had settled this claim with Mr. Davis after you had written this letter of November 12th? A. I presume I told the board about my action, for I regularly made a written report of my activities.

"Q. Do you know whether you reported that to the board? A. I said I presumed I reported it."

There is no evidence that the directors ever repudiated the agreement until the answer was filed in this action.

[8] Existence of authority may be shown by proof, of course of business, the knowledge of the board of directors of the corporation, and by presumptions of such knowledge. Mahoney Min. Co. v. Anglo-Cal. Bank, 104 U. S. 192, 26 L. Ed. 707. Authority of the corporation may be shown by evidence that the person does business for the corporation and on its behalf as agent with the knowledge and acquiescence of its directors or by their direction.

[9] The corporation in such case is bound by his acts and declarations within the scope of the business entrusted to him. It is not the law that the authority of the agent or officer to act for a corporation can be proven only by the minutes of its board of directors or by a contract in writing. Venice v. Short Line Beach Land Co., 180 Cal. 447, 453, 181 P. 658; Aigeltinger v. Burke, 176 Cal. 621, 169 P. 373; Sessions v. Pacific Imp. Co., 57 Cal. App. 25, 206 P. 653; Betts v. So. Cal., etc., Exch., 144 Cal. 402, 77 P. 993; Irwin v. Colburn, 56 Cal. App. 41, 204 P. 551; Raftis v. McCloud River Lumber Co., 35 Cal. App. 397, 400, 170 P. 176.

[10, 11] But even if the acts of the directors do not constitute a ratification of the contract, they are estopped from so claiming, and such estoppel need not, as claimed by appellant, be pleaded. In Blood v. La Serena L. & W. Co., 113 Cal. 221, 41 P. 1017, 45 P. 252, the court held that an estoppel in pais may be shown without pleading it by way of equitable rebuttal to defendant's proof of want of authority to execute a note and mortgage sued upon after plaintiff had established a prima facie case, and that it is only when a plaintiff must rely on an estoppel in pais in order to maintain his action against defendant that it must be pleaded.

Eells v. Gray Bros., etc., Co., 13 Cal. App. 33, 108 P. 735, holds that if a corporation clothes its officer or agent with apparent authority to act for it in a particular matter, it will be estopped to deny such authority as against persons dealing with such officer or agent in good faith and in ignorance of any limitations on his authority. See, also, Fowler Gas Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 180 Cal. 471, 181 P. 663; Union Oil Co. v. Purissima Oil Co., 181 Cal. 479, 482, 185 P. 381; Doerr v. Fandango, etc., Co., 31 Cal. App. 318, 160 P. 406.

"It is a general rule that notice to an officer or agent of a corporation is notice to the corporation if in matters in which such agent or officer would have authority to act for the corporation or whose duty it would be to communicate it to the board of directors or to an officer who had some power or authority in the matter. Such agents or officers are conspicuously the president of the corporation, the general manager, if it have one, the secretary and a bank cashier." Clarke, California Corporations, § 586.

"But if full knowledge was necessary, it must be presumed that the corporation had full notice of all the facts which were known to the president. The president of a corporation is a proper person to whom notice, which is to affect a corporation, is to be given. The corporation has no eyes, ears or understanding save through its agents. The president is considered the head of the corporation, and it is his duty to report to the trustees information affecting the interests of the corporation. And the presumption is that he does so. Usually this is a conclusive presumption." Thompson on Corporations, § 5228.

This rule is cited with approval in Balfour v. Fresno Canal, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 397, 55 P. 1062; Fresno St. Ry. Co. v. Southern Pacific Co., 135 Cal. 202, 67 P. 773; Montecito Valley, etc., Co. v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 597, 77 P. 1113; Lowe v. Yolo County, etc., Water Co., 157 Cal. 513, 108 P. 297; Goodwin v. Central Broadway Bldg. Co., 21 Cal. App. 376, 131 P. 896; Jan Wai v. Smith-Riddell Co., 55 Cal. App. 63, 202 P. 952.

Appellant cites Guernsey v. Johnson Organ & Piano Co., 29 Cal. App. 699, but that case is not analogous. There the only evidence that the defendant corporation assumed the indebtedness of the Harris company was a letter written by the secretary, who stated that it was written as a means devised by himself to assist the Harris Company. There was no evidence that the defendant corporation received any benefit nor, as the court says, "is it shown by a scintilla of evidence that [the secretary] had any ostensible authority to act in the matter. * * * The cause of action was based solely upon the letter without any other showing whatsoever."

Nor is Bonner Oil Co. v. Pennsylvania Oil Co., 150 Cal. 658, 89 P. 613, cited by appellant, in point. There the secretary of the corporation who signed the composition did so without the knowledge or consent of the other corporation officers, and there was no consideration moving to the corporation for the signature to the compensation. In Fontana v. Pac. Can Co., 129 Cal. 51, 61 P. 580, quoted by appellant, certain elements were lacking, and their absence was held fatal in that case, but these very elements are present in the instant case. There was no evidence that either the president or secretary who signed the contract had any powers from which it might be inferred that they or either of them could make such a contract.

There was no claim or evidence of subsequent ratification and "no evidence that the directors ever knew of the contract, much less authorized it by their conduct or acts."

International Magazine Co. v. National Radio Co., 67 Cal. App. 498, 227 P. 918, cited by appellant, is also distinguishable from this case. There the contract in question was signed by the president alone, though it appeared that the corporation had a general manager at the time. Also there was no evidence that the directors had knowledge of the action of the president, and there was no evidence of his ostensible authority or that the plaintiff had relied upon such authority. The court recognized and asserted the rule that the authority of the president to contract "may arise from his having assumed and exercised that power in the past; or the corporation may ratify his contract or accept the benefits of it, and thereby be bound."

Pacific Bank v. Stone, 121 Cal. 206, 53 P. 634, and Hoffman v. Gottstein Inv. Co., 101 Wash. 428, 172 P. 573, are likewise distinguishable from the instant case. Here appellant had knowledge of the agreement with respondent and received the benefits. The negotiations were known to the president and the general manager, the agreement itself was known to most of the directors and the records of the corporation showed two payments made to respondent on account thereof.

From what has been said it follows that there is no merit in appellant's assignments "that the Scott-Burt and Davis agreement was beyond the power of the corporation to make, that it was made without sanction or ratification of the corporation, that this defendant is in no sense a continuance of Golden Gate Studios, and that defendant received no property whatever from Golden Gate Studios."

[12] As to the assignment "that the court erred in admitting in evidence the Scott-Burt and Davis agreement and the order on Scott," for the reason, as urged by appellant, that such evidence is incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant and not binding on the corporation because not authorized and because it bears no seal, it is sufficient to say that it is not a deed as was the case in Barney v. Pforr, 117 Cal. 59, 48 P. 987, cited by appellant, and the only effect of the seal attached thereto would be to constitute prima facie evidence of its execution by the corporation in the absence of affirmative proof of authority. See Leitch v. Marx, 21 Cal. App. 212, 131 P. 328. The letters were both written on the stationery of the corporation and signed by the general manager, and, while not conclusive evidence of the accord, they were obviously admissible as elements of the transaction between the parties. They were no less competent than the oral communications between respondent and the officers of the corporation to which the witnesses freely testified.

[13, 14] As to the assignment "that the evidence is insufficient to support certain of the findings," there is likewise no merit. The findings which it is claimed are unsupported are finding 6, that defendant has taken over and appropriated without consideration the assets of the Golden Gate Studios and that such assets are worth $10,000; finding 7, that plaintiff believed there was due him $10,625, and that he performed certain services for defendant and plaintiff believed the reasonable value of such services to be $2,500; finding 10, that the reasonable value of the service rendered by plaintiff to both corporations is $5,000; finding 9, to the effect that defendant duly and regularly agreed to pay plaintiff $5,000; findings 12 and 13, relating to the agreement to pay plaintiff $5,000, and finding 14, finding many of the denials in the answer untrue. As to finding 7, the evidence shows that defendant assumed and agreed to pay the claim of plaintiff; therefore it is not important what was the value of the assets of the former corporation; however, there is evidence of such assets and their value, which, if necessary, is sufficient to sustain the finding. As to finding 7 the court was justified in finding from the demands made by plaintiff upon Mr. Burt, the general manager, for such amounts that plaintiff believed that his services were reasonably worth what he demanded. Finding 10, that plaintiff's services were reasonably worth $5,000, finds sufficient support in defendant's own agreement to pay him such sum therefor, even if there were no evidence of their value in the record. As to findings 11, 12, and 13, relative to the agreement of defendant to pay plaintiff $5,000, such findings are supported, as is shown by the evidence herein set out, and there is likewise no error in finding 14, wherein the denials of defendant are found to be untrue.

The judgment is affirmed.

84 Cal. App. 382

PEOPLE v. GODDARD. (Cr. 1407.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 8, 1927.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 274—Refusing permission to change plea of guilty was not error, because counsel had advised defendant to plead guilty if he desired probation.

It was not error to refuse defendant, charged with bigamy, permission to change his plea of guilty, on the ground that his counsel had advised him that it would be better to enter a plea of guilty, if he desired to obtain probation.

2. Courts $\S$ 95(2)—In construing Constitution or statutes of another state, its highest court should be followed.

In determining construction or effect of the Constitution or statutes of another state, the court should follow the decisions of the court of last resort of that state, even though they would be inclined to place a different construction on a similar provision in their own Constitution or statutes.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 320—California court may assume that Oregon law respecting application of statute regulating marriage after divorce is same as California law, in absence of contrary holding by Oregon's highest court.

California court may assume that law of Oregon respecting the application of its statute declaring party to divorce incapable of marriage to a third party until the expiration of six months after the divorce decree should be entered is the same as the law of California on the subject, in absence of contrary holding by Oregon court of last resort.

4. Bigamy $\S$ 1—As regards bigamy, marriage in California within six months after divorce in Oregon was valid, though contrary to Oregon statutes.

As regards offense of bigamy, one who secured divorce in Oregon, whose statutes declared party to divorce incapable of marrying third party for six months after date of the decree of divorce, may contract a valid marriage to a third party in California before the expiration of the six months, since Oregon statute has no extraterritorial effect.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Pruette Kearns Goddard was convicted of bigamy, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Soren X. Christensen and J. C. Wood, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Earle Warren, Dist. Atty., and Leonard J. Meltzer, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. On the 10th day of December, 1926, the district attorney of Alameda county filed an information against the defendant, charging him with the crime of big-

amy. On December 14 the defendant entered a plea of not guilty. By consent the cause was set for trial on January 10, 1927. On that date the trial was continued until a subsequent date. However, on January 12, 1927, by consent, the last-named order was set aside and the trial was taken up immediately by consent. Acting upon the request of the defendant, he was allowed to withdraw his plea of not guilty and to enter a plea of guilty. At the request of the defendant the cause was ordered referred to the probation officer, and the further proceedings were continued until January 25, 1927. From time to time the hearing was further continued. On March 19, 1927, the hearing was again taken up, and at that time the defendant asked permission to withdraw his plea of guilty and to enter a plea of not guilty. Argument was had, and the further proceedings were continued until March 22, 1927. On that date the trial court denied the defendant's motion to change his plea, and also denied him probation, and thereupon the court proceeded to sentence the defendant. Immediately thereafter counsel for the defendant made a motion that the sentence and judgment be set aside, and renewed his motion that the defendant be permitted to withdraw his plea of guilty and to enter a plea of not guilty. In support of his motion the defendant offered in evidence an affidavit theretofore made by him, and at the same time he took the stand and was examined and cross-examined.

From the evidence introduced it transpired that the alleged offense of the defendant rested on the fact that he married Audrey Ethel Hargraft at Oakland, Cal., on the 3d day of August, 1926. Prior to that date he married Marjorie K. Roys at Sacramento, Cal., who was still living, and that marriage had never been dissolved or annulled. It also appeared that Marjorie K. Roys had formerly married Reuben F. Roys, and that they had been divorced by a decree of the circuit court of the state of Oregon in and for the county of Multnomah on the 28th day of August, 1923. It was not contended in the trial court, and it is not contended in this court, that Mrs. Roys and the defendant left Oregon and went to Sacramento to be married, and did so for the purpose of evading the laws of the state of Oregon. The trial court denied the motion to set aside the sentence and judgment, and from the judgment entered against the defendant he has appealed.

Both in the trial court and in this court the defendant contended (1) that he had been induced to enter a plea of guilty because he would surely secure probation; and (2) under the laws of Oregon Marjorie K. Roys was not legally divorced before she married the defendant, was not entitled to contract marriage, and that the intermarriage of the defendant and Marjorie K. Roys was void.

[1] An examination of the record discloses that the defendant did not contend that the trial court or any officer thereof stated or intimated to the defendant that he would surely secure probation if he would enter the plea of guilty. It does appear that the defendant's counsel advised the defendant that, if he desired to obtain probation, it would be better to enter the plea of guilty. Such facts were not sufficient to sustain the claim that the trial court erred in refusing the defendant permission to change his plea. People v. Manriquez, 188 Cal. 602, 605, 206 P. 63, 20 A. L. R. 1441.

The second point made by the appellant involves no question of fact, but solely a question of law as to whether Marjorie K. Roys was, under the laws of Oregon, at liberty to contract a valid marriage at Sacramento, Cal., on November 30, 1923. In open court counsel for both parties stipulated that the laws of Oregon on the subject were embodied in the statutes and decisions from which we have quoted, or which we have cited below. The original statutory provision will be found in 1 Hill's Annotated Laws, § 503. Later that statute was amended to read as follows:

"A decree declaring a marriage void or dissolved at the suit or claim of either party shall have the effect to terminate such marriage as to both parties, except that neither party shall be capable of contracting marriage with a third person, and if he or she does so contract, shall be liable therefor as if said decree had not been given, until the suit has been heard and determined on appeal; but in no case until the expiration of six months from the date of said decree."

In the case of Twigger v. Twigger, 110 Or. 520, 223 P. 934, the Supreme Court of Oregon reviewed its statutes and decisions, and then, at page 936 (110 Or. 527) it said:

"* * * This court has decided that, where parties resident of this state, one or both of whom have been divorced by our courts within six months, go into the state of Washington, are there married, and return to this state to reside, the marriage is void. This results from a construction of the divorce statutes as they then stood; that is to say, the legislation in its then condition assumed to invalidate for all purposes in this state a marriage contracted in a sister state under the circumstances mentioned. None of those decisions, however, go so far as to say that the marriage would be otherwise than valid for all purposes in Washington."

[2] "Where a question as to the construction or effect of the Constitution of statutes of a state arises in the courts of another state, or of the United States, such courts should follow the decisions of the court of last resort of the state whose constitutional or statutory provisions are involved, even though they would be inclined to place a different, or even an opposite, construction upon a similar provision if it appears in the Constitution or statutes of their own state." 15 C. J. 927, § 316.

In McGrew v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 132 Cal. 85, 64 P. 103, 84 Am. St. Rep. 20, a question arose regarding the laws of Hawaii on the subject of divorce. The respondent made certain contentions as to what should be the holding on that subject. Mr. Justice McFarland, speaking for the court, on page 89 (64 P. 104), stated as follows:

"* * * But, admitting these legal propositions to be correct, the courts of Hawaii have held otherwise, and their construction of the statutes of their own country cannot be here assailed. McGrew v. McGrew, 9 Hawaii, 475. Full effect must therefore be given to the judgment in the divorce suit."

[3] These authorities lead us to the conclusion that the highest court of Oregon has decided that that court has never held that the Oregon laws of divorce have any extraterritorial application to marriage contracted in some other state. We are entitled, therefore, to assume that the law of Oregon is the same as the law of the state of California.

[4] However, the law of the state of California on the subject has been very clearly defined. In the case entitled Estate of Wood, 137 Cal. 129, 69 P. 900, the validity of the marriage of Abbie Rose Wood and Joseph M. Wood at Reno, Nevada, on January 1, 1898, was involved. At the time of the marriage Wood was a single man, but Mrs. Wood had been divorced by decree rendered August 19, 1897. At that time section 61 of the Civil Code provided:

"A subsequent marriage contracted by any person during the life of a former husband or wife of such person, with any person other than such former husband or wife, is illegal and void from the beginning, unless: 1. The former marriage has been annulled or dissolved; provided, that in case it be dissolved, the decree of divorce must have been rendered and made at least one year prior to such subsequent marriage."

The court made an exhaustive examination of the decisions, and on page 135 (69 P. 902) Mr. Justice Garoutte, speaking for the court, quoted and followed State v. Shattack, 69 Vt. 403, 38 A. 81, 40 L. R. A. 428, 60 Am. St. Rep. 936, as follows:

"The language of our statute is general, and it is a fundamental rule that no statute, whether relating to marriage or otherwise, if in the ordinary general form of words, will be given effect outside of the state or country enacting it. * * * Hence, if a statute, silent as to marriages abroad, as ours is, prohibits classes of persons from marrying generally, or from intermarrying, or declares void all marriages not celebrated according to prescribed forms, it has no effect upon marriages, even of domiciled inhabitants, entered into out of the state. Those marriages are to be judged of by the courts of such state, just as though the statute did not exist."

We think that the rule just quoted is clearly applicable to the facts of this case and determines the question as against the appellant. Under these circumstances the trial court committed no error in denying defendant permission to withdraw his plea of guilty and to enter a plea of not guilty.

The judgment is affirmed.

WEST GLENDALE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH v. McCLELLAN et al. (Civ. 5327.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 16, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 12, 1927.

1. Taxation ~~§~~251—Allegation in mandamus to compel cancellation of assessment on church property held insufficient as allegation that board of supervisors had acted on petition to cancel (Pol. Code, § 3804a).

In mandamus to compel board of supervisors to cancel assessment on property used for religious purposes, allegation that board of supervisors had refused to direct auditor to cancel and latter had refused to cancel assessment and tax based on failure of plaintiff to make statutory affidavit held not an allegation that board of supervisors had conducted a hearing on petition to cancel assessment or passed on questions of fact involved, as required by Pol. Code, § 3804a.

2. Taxation ~~§~~251—Court could not act in mandamus to compel cancellation of assessment on church property until board of supervisors acted on petition to cancel (Pol. Code, §§ 3804a, 3611).

Courts were without jurisdiction to act in mandamus proceeding to compel board of supervisors to cancel assessment on property used for religious purposes, where petitioner had not made return as required by Pol. Code, § 3611, and property had been assessed, until board of supervisors had acted on petition to cancel tax under section 3804a and upon finding facts in petitioner's favor had refused to cancel tax.

3. Taxation ~~§~~497—Jurisdiction of board of supervisors to cancel tax erroneously assessed is quasi judicial as regards right to mandamus (Pol. Code, § 3804a).

Jurisdiction of board of supervisors, acting on petition to cancel tax erroneously assessed as provided in Pol. Code, § 3804a, is quasi judicial, as regards right to mandamus to compel such action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Mandamus action by the West Glendale Methodist Episcopal Church against R. F. McClellan and others, as members of the Board of Supervisors of and the County of Los Angeles, H. A. Payne, Auditor, and another, to compel cancellation of assessment on property used for religious purposes. From a judgment of dismissal following sustaining of demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George H. Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward T. Bishop, Co. Counsel, and J. A. Tucker, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MURPHY, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal following an adverse ruling of the superior court on demurrer without leave to further plead. The plaintiff, a nonprofit religious corporation, was assessed during the year 1923 for its church property, consisting of a lot of land and the church buildings erected thereon. This proceeding is in mandamus, and is brought to compel the defendants, the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county and the county auditor, to proceed under section 3804a of the Political Code to cancel the assessment on said building and lot, with a further prayer that the tax collector be restrained from certifying said tax as delinquent and selling the property according to law.

Section 1½, art. 13 of the Constitution of the state of California, under which the personal property is exempt from taxation, reads as follows:

"All buildings, and so much of the real property on which they are situated as may be required for the convenient use and occupation of said buildings, when the same are used solely and exclusively for religious worship shall be free from taxation; provided, that no building so used which may be rented for religious purposes and rent received by the owner therefor, shall be exempt from taxation."

This amendment was read into the Constitution in 1900 and in 1903 the Legislature, as an emergency measure, added section 3611 to the Political Code, which, after quoting the constitutional provision above set out, provides that:

"Any person claiming property to be exempt from taxation under this section shall make a return thereof to the assessor annually, the same as property is listed for taxation, and shall accompany the same by an affidavit showing that the building is used solely and exclusively for religious worship, and that the described portion of the real property claimed as exempt is required for the convenient use and occupation of such building, and that the same is not rented for religious purposes and rent received by the owner therefor."

The property having been assessed for the year 1923, this action is prosecuted under section 3804a of the Political Code, which provides that when property exempt from taxation has been erroneously assessed,

"* * * the board of supervisors may, upon satisfactory proof thereof, with the written consent of the district attorney, and by an order entered upon its minutes, direct the auditor to cancel such assessment." Application was regularly made to the board of supervisors, with the written consent of the district attorney, to cancel this assessment. This the board refused to do. The complaint, in apt language, brings the property owned by the plaintiff clearly within the provisions of the constitutional exemption, but does not allege that the plaintiff has complied with the requirement of section 3611, supra, of the Political Code. The trial court held that the failure of plaintiff to file with the assessor the report and affidavit required by that section was fatal to his cause of action. The correctness of that ruling is the sole matter to be determined in this appeal. Appellant in his closing brief, in vigorous and somewhat intemperate language, characterizes this proceeding as follows:

"I covet a consideration according to 'ideas in their just relation.' Sophistry, detraction, consideratum, and even systematization, when employed to defeat or suspend, or curtail the operation of a clear, unambiguous, mandatory, and prohibitory provision of the Constitution, is nothing less than destructive and damnable."

Nothing in the act or in the practical operation thereof justifies these denunciatory expletives. The act was passed two years after the constitutional exemption became operative. It was passed as an emergency measure, and it may be fairly inferred that its enactment came in response to difficulties and complications encountered by administrative officers in performing their duties. This regulatory statute does not, on its face or its practical application, impair or destroy the right guaranteed by the Constitution. (If such were its effect it would undoubtedly be ineffective and void.) What it does do is to require the exemptioner to identify its property, or so much of its property as it claims to be covered by the beneficial purposes of the law. The failure of a property owner to comply with the requirements of section 3611 does not abrogate the right of exemption. It simply postpones its right of enjoyment until such time as it shall arouse itself from a state of morbidity and disclose to the proper officers the nature and character of its property. The nature, character, and use to which property is subjected is not evident from its outward appearances. In determining this matter, we should bear in mind that the right of exemption from taxation is purely statutory, and the statute must be strictly construed against the taxpayer. 2 Cooley on Taxation, p. 1404; Vesty on Taxation, p. 108; and Estate of Brown, 123 Cal. 399, 55 P. 1055, 69 Am. St. Rep. 74, wherein the Supreme Court says:

"Exemptions are the creatures of statutes and exceptions to the general rule. No property is exempt unless made so by express provision of law. No assumed legislative policy can justify the courts in adding to the statutory list of exemptions. Legislators are presumed to understand the force and effect of the language which is used, and to have contemplated all circumstances which would make it desirable that other property not in the lists of exemptions should be added thereto."

Neither should we lose sight of the fact that all presumptions and intendments are in favor of the constitutionality of the statutes. This is clearly expressed in 5 Cal. Jur. 628, wherein it is said:

"The undisputed general rule is that all presumptions and intendments are in favor of the constitutionality of statutes; that all doubts are to be resolved in favor of and not against the validity of a statute; that before an act of a co-ordinate branch of the government can be declared invalid by the judiciary for the reason that it is in conflict with the Constitution, such conflict must be clear, positive, abrupt and unquestionable; and that in case of fair, reasonable doubt of its constitutionality, the statute should be upheld, and the doubt be resolved in favor of the expressed wishes of the people as given in the statute."

The constitutional provision does not exempt all church property or all used church property. The kind of church property exempted is specifically limited and circumscribed. In order to entitle it to the privilege of exemption it must measure up to these requirements. Section 1½, art. 13 of the Constitution, provides that: (1) It must be used; (2) it must be used for religious worship; (3) it must be used for no other purposes; (4) the real property exempted must be required for the convenient use and occupation of the buildings occupied; and (5) that the property used is not rented property. These are questions of fact that must be determined in some reasonable and practicable way to effectuate the purposes of the above-quoted section of the Constitution. It was to meet this condition that the Legislature enacted section 3611 of the Political Code. Under such and similar conditions it has been repeatedly held that such regulatory measures are not only proper but necessary to facilitate and effectuate, without confusion, the purpose of the people expressed in the Constitution. In Washburn College v. Commissioners of Shawnee County, 8 Kan. 344, the Supreme Court of that state, speaking through Mr. Justice Brewer, said:

"To bring this property within the terms of the section quoted it must be 'used exclusively for literary and educational purposes.' This involves three things, first, that the property is used; second, that it is used for educational purposes; and third, that it is used for no other purpose. * * * If the framers of the Constitution had intended to exempt all property belonging to literary and charitable institutions from taxation, the language employed would have been very different. They would have used the simple ordinary language for expressing such intention. The fact that they ignored 'ownership,' and made 'use,' the test of exemption, shows clearly that they recognized the essential distinction between the two, and established the latter rather than the former as the basis of exemption."

In the case of Capen v. Foster, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 485, 23 Am. Dec. 632, where the question of the reasonableness of regulatory provisions and the election laws were under consideration, Chief Justice Shaw said:

"The right of any individual person, claiming the privilege of voting, may involve an inquiry into the fact of citizenship, sex, age, domicile within the commonwealth, domicile within the town or district, the payment of taxes, exemption by law from the payment of taxes, and the fact of his being a pauper or under guardianship, or otherwise. All these are questions of fact, open to proof of various kinds. * * * If then the Constitution has made no provision, in regard to the time, place and manner, in which such examination shall be had, and yet such an examination is necessarily incident to the actual enjoyment and exercise of the right of voting, it constitutes one of those subjects, respecting the mode of exercising the right, in relation to which it is competent for the Legislature to make suitable and reasonable regulations, not calculated to defeat or impair the right of voting, but rather to facilitate and secure the exercise of that right."

This case concludes with the statement that it was competent for the Legislature to enact the regulatory measures, which, not being repugnant to the Constitution, are valid and binding laws, to which both voters and presiding officers at election are authorized and bound to conform. Our own Supreme and appellate courts have repeatedly upheld such regulatory legislation. Bergevin v. Curtz, 127 Cal. 86, 59 P. 312; Minges v. Board of Trustees, 27 Cal. App. 15, 148 P. 816; and Chester v. Hall, 55 Cal. App. 611, 204 P. 237. In each of these cases it is held that the Legislature may enact regulatory measures to facilitate the operation of constitutional enactments and place safeguards around their exercise so long as the right itself is not curtailed. This power is expressly given in section 13, art. 13, of the Constitution, wherein it is said: "The Legislature shall pass all laws necessary to carry out the provisions of this article." Section 8 of article 13 of the Constitution provides:

"The Legislature shall by law require each taxpayer in this state to make and deliver to the county assessor, annually, a statement, under oath, setting forth specifically all the real and personal property owned by such taxpayer, or in his possession, or under his control, at twelve o'clock meridian on the first Monday of March."

It will thus be observed that the primary duty and obligation is upon the taxpayer to make return to the county assessor and to list all the real and personal property owned by him whether exempt or not exempt, and under section 3611 of the Political Code the further requirement is put upon him by the Legislature to declare such of his property as he claims to be exempt under the laws of this state. The question involved in this litigation has been determined adversely to appellant's contention by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of Great Western Power Co. v. City of Oakland, 189 Cal. 649, 209 P. 553, wherein it is substantially said: The provision of section 10 of the act of the Legislature (Stats. 1911, p. 530) adopted to carry into effect the provisions of section 14 of article 13 of the Constitution separating state and local taxation, that when the assessor of any county finds in the report of operative property in his county made to the state by a public service corporation, any property which he regards as nonoperative property, he shall within thirty days thereafter notify the state board of equalization of his claim, and that such board shall investigate and determine the proper classification of such property, is mandatory, and the failure to file such notice is jurisdictional in so far as the right to thereafter claim that such property is nonoperative property or to assess the same locally as such is concerned. It would seem to be a logical conclusion that if the Legislature may require a public utility to file with the local assessor a copy of the return made to the state board of equalization before the utility is entitled to its exemption from local taxation, surely, the Legislature may require a church claiming such exemption to perform the acts entitling it to be placed within the exemption. Section 3611 of the Political Code places no greater burden upon the taxpayer than does section 3665 of the Political Code. The Great Western Power Company Case is a tax case, and the principle involved may not in our opinion be distinguished from that in the case at bar.

In response to the appellant's contention that section 3611 does not impose any conditions to the enjoyment of the constitutional exemption and basing its claim on the fact that the section does not in terms declare what shall be the effect of the failure to comply with its requirements the trial court said:

"This construction of the section amounts to a nullification of its provisions and reduces it to the level of good advice offered by the Legislature which the persons affected by it are at liberty to accept or not if they see fit * * * the section declares in unequivocal language that any person claiming property to be exempt from taxation * * * shall make a return."

This is mandatory language, and its proper effect is that any one who does not make a return removes himself from the class of those claiming exemption, or, in other words, waives the exemption.

The judgment is affirmed.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. I concur.

[1-3] I agree with the conclusion reached in the foregoing opinion, but for reasons other than those therein stated. The Political Code, § 3804a, provides that:

"When property that is exempt from taxation has been erroneously assessed, * * * the board of supervisors may, upon satisfactory proof thereof, with the written consent of the district attorney, and by an order entered upon its minutes, direct the auditor to cancel such assessment. * * *"

It is obvious that this provision contemplates a hearing of some character by the board of supervisors, in order that they may pass upon the questions of fact involved. The petition is somewhat uncertain in its allegations in paragraph 7, having to do with the presentation of a petition to the board of supervisors for cancellation of the tax. However, construing the pleading most strongly against the pleader, no allegation appears therein that the board of supervisors have conducted any such hearing or passed upon the questions of fact involved. The allegation that "at all times since said board of supervisors has refused to direct the auditor to cancel, said auditor has refused to cancel said assessment and tax, and have based their refusal solely upon the ground that plaintiff failed to make an affidavit [as authorized by Political Code, § 3611] between the first Monday in March and the first Monday in July, 1923," does not constitute an allegation such as is required. From this statement it seems that the board of supervisors has refused to consider the petition that the tax be canceled, or to determine the truth of the essential allegations contained in it to the effect that the property in question belonging to petitioner is used solely and exclusively for religious worship, is required for the convenient use and occupation of any building located upon the premises, and that the same is not rented for religious purposes and the rent received by the owner. In order to entitle the property of the church to be exempt from taxation these facts must be found to exist. In addition to the provision for tax exemption contained in section 3611 of the Political Code, and the requirement contained in the same section for the filing of an affidavit by the owner of property used for religious worship, the Legislature has seen fit to place in the hands of the board of supervisors authority to direct the cancellation of the tax erroneously assessed, as stated in the above quotation from section 3804a of the Political Code. This remedy provided by the Legislature has apparently not been resorted to by the petitioner. True, it has asked the board of supervisors, and the district attorney as well, to cancel the tax. The latter has no authority under the provisions of section 3611 to do more than consent to the petition being presented to the board of supervisors, but if that board has failed to conduct a hearing to determine the truth of the allegations contained in the petition presented to it by the petitioner herein the immediate remedy of the latter is to seek to require by writ of mandate the performance of that duty on the part of the board. Until this step shall have been taken the courts are without jurisdiction to act. The jurisdiction of the board of supervisors in this behalf is clearly quasi judicial. If it should determine the issues of fact presented by the petition alleged to have been filed with it adversely to the petitioner, that determination, if supported by substantial evidence, would be final. If the findings should be in favor of the petitioner, but such board should still refuse to cancel the tax because of a failure to file the affidavit contemplated by section 3611 of the Political Code, then, and not until then, should a proceeding such as that before us be instituted.

Petitioner makes no point of the fact that the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and the matter was apparently heard and passed upon by the trial court upon the theory that the petitioner had stated its full case in the petition, otherwise the question might arise as to its rights to further amend.

THOMPSON, J. I concur.

I am impressed with the fact that the petitioner should have sought to compel the board of supervisors to hear and determine its petition, and that for us to pass upon any other question would be obiter. For that reason I concur in the foregoing concurring opinion.

WILSON et al. v. MATTEI. (Civ. 5832.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 26, 1927.

1. Evidence $\S$ 265(3)—Silence and subsequent statement of defendant's attorney held to warrant finding that validity of certain items of labor and material furnished by plaintiff was conceded.

In action for labor and material furnished, silence of defendant's attorney, when plaintiff's attorney stated that defendant admitted certain items, and his subsequent statement that two items were admitted, when plaintiff's attorney asked witness whether one of them was admitted, held to warrant finding that validity of such items was conceded by defendant.

2. Stipulations $\S$ 14(4)—Findings of fact admitted by stipulation are unnecessary.

When an issue is admitted by stipulation, findings as to such fact are unnecessary.

3. Work and labor $\S$ 30(4)—Finding, in action for labor and materials furnished, that certain pipes were to be installed by plaintiff at his cost, held not inadvertent.

Where paramount issue, at trial of action for labor and materials furnished, was whether plaintiff or defendant was required to bear cost of installing safety valve and vent pipes, and evidence as to former was conflicting, finding that they were to be installed by plaintiff at his own cost held not inadvertent, but finding intended.

4. Stipulations $\S$ 18(6)—Finding conflicting with stipulation should be disregarded.

Finding in conflict with admissions, stipulated to at trial, should be disregarded, as not within issues.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 932(1)—Appellate court must assume that court, definitely specifying items allowed, intended to disallow omitted items.

Where court definitely specified each item and amount allowed, in action for labor and materials furnished, it must be assumed on appeal that omission to allow other items indicates court's intent to disallow them.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 1033(7)—Defendant, appealing from judgment for plaintiffs, cannot complain of omission to allow certain items for which plaintiff claimed credit.

Defendant, appealing from judgment for plaintiffs in action for labor and materials furnished, cannot complain of court's omission to allow certain items for which plaintiffs claimed credit; such failure being favorable to defendant.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 1071(1)—Inaccurate conclusion or erroneous computation of aggregate amount of judgment, satisfactorily appearing from findings, is not reversible error.

Mere inaccurate conclusion and erroneous computation of aggregate amount of judgment, which satisfactorily appears from face of findings, is not reversible error, and should be reconciled, giving way to true sum, secured by correct computation of value of items specifically enumerated in findings.

8. Trial $\S$ 404(4)—Specific findings, inconsistent with general findings, control.

Specific findings control in case of inconsistency with general findings.

9. Trial $\S$ 404(1)—Findings should be liberally construed to support judgment, and reconciled, if reasonably possible.

Findings should be liberally construed in support of judgment, and reconciled, if reasonably possible.

10. Appeal and error $\S$ 1071(1)—Judgment will not be reversed for conflict in findings, unless clear and irreconcilable.

Judgment will not be reversed because of conflicting findings, unless conflict is clear and irreconcilable.

11. Appeal and error $\S$ 1071(6)—Failure to find that damages resulted to defendant's property from fire held not reversible error, in absence of evidence of amount of his pecuniary loss.

Failure to find, in action for labor and materials furnished, that any damages resulted to defendant's property from fire, which court found injured and destroyed work and materials of plaintiff, held not ground for reversal of judgment for plaintiff, in absence of evidence of amount of pecuniary loss sustained by defendant.

12. Work and labor $\S$ 9—Contractor, completing work, accepted by owner, could sue for value of materials and labor, instead of suing on contract.

Where contracts were completed and accepted by owner, and nothing remained except payment of money, contractor was authorized to sue on common counts for value of materials furnished and labor performed, instead of suing on contract.

13. Work and labor $\S$ 27(4)—Contract was competent evidence in action for value of materials furnished and labor performed thereunder.

In action on common counts for value of materials furnished and labor performed under contract, contract was competent evidence as admission of standard of value or proof of any other fact necessary to recovery.

14. Work and labor $\S$ 23—One, sued for value of labor and materials, waived defense by not pleading noncompliance with contract provision for arbitration.

By failing to plead plaintiff's noncompliance with provision of contract for submission to arbitration of value of extra materials furnished, defendant waived such defense to action for value of labor and materials furnished.

15. Work and labor $\S$ 23—Failure to plead contract provisions for authorization of extra work by architect, and settlement of controversies by him and engineer, was waiver of such defenses to action for value of labor and materials furnished.

Defendant's failure to plead, as bar to action for value of labor and materials furnished, provision of contract that all extra work be first authorized by architect, and clause authorizing engineer and architect to settle all controversies over meaning of plans and specifications, was waiver of such defenses.

16. Pleading ⚡106(1)—Defense based on plaintiff's incapacity to sue is plea in abatement.

A defense based on plaintiff's incapacity to sue is regarded as a plea in abatement.

17. Parties ⚡76(3)—Plaintiff's incapacity to sue, not apparent on face of complaint, is deemed waived, unless raised by answer.

Where plaintiff's incapacity to sue does not appear on face of complaint, it must be raised by answer, or is deemed waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by Albert J. Wilson and another, co-partners doing business under the firm name and style of the William F. Wilson Company, against A. Mattel. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Modified, and affirmed, as modified.

Lewis H. Smith and Claude L. Rowe, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Gallaher, Simpson & Hays, of Fresno, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment against the defendant A. Mattel for the sum of $3,026.66 for labor and materials furnished. The complaint was drawn in three counts. The first cause of action was based upon an alleged open book account; the other two causes were stated upon the common counts for the reasonable value of materials furnished and labor performed incident to certain contracts, which were not set up in the pleadings.

The appellant seeks a reversal (1) because the contracts required all extra work to be previously authorized in writing by the architect; (2) the contracts provided that all disputes concerning extra work must be submitted to arbitration as a condition precedent; (3) that the contracts authorized the architect and the engineer to settle all disputes regarding the meaning of the plans and specifications; (4) that the findings are uncertain and contradictory; and (5) that the court failed to find no material issues.

Plaintiff's assignor entered into two separate contracts with the defendant A. Mattel, one for the construction of a building on defendant's lots in the city of Fresno, and the other for the installing of a heating plant in that same building. Some time after the completion of the contracts and acceptance of the work by the defendant, the plaintiff brought this action, not upon the contracts, but for the reasonable value of materials furnished and labor performed, without enumerating specific items. Without demurring, the defendant answered to the merits of the cause categorically denying his liability, but affirmatively alleging the payment of $912.91 to plaintiff on account, and claimed credit for the payment of two additional items amounting to the sum of $129.86. He also set up by way of counterclaim damages in the sum of $271.84 incurred as the result of a fire, which occurred from the alleged negligence of plaintiff in the course of the construction of the building. The contracts incident to which said extra materials and labor were supplied by plaintiff were set up in neither the complaint nor the answer. The cause was tried upon its merits. The contracts were received in evidence. The testimony was conflicting, but there was substantial evidence to the effect that plaintiff furnished the items of extra materials and labor not included within the contracts, and of the reasonable value thereof. There was no substantial evidence of the existence of a book account. At the trial plaintiff offered proof concerning 18 separate items, aggregating the sum, of $4,158.49, a list of which items plaintiff's attorney read to the court as follows:

1. Installing extension loops.....	$ 347 00
2. Work and material, fire loss.....	78 21
3. Changing radiator, first floor.....	365 00
4. Extending chilled water pipe.....	492 00
5. Balance due on original contract.....	153 26
6. Making steam changes.....	306 15
7. Changing pipes	49 12
8. Changing gas meter.....	102 98
9. Changing pipes	32 20
10. Changing sprinkler main	39 94
11. Safety valve and pipe.....	1,315 70
12. Steel plate under meter.....	4 50
13. Running water to turbine.....	54 28
14. Running water to turbine.....	24 92
15. Changing radiator, sixth floor.....	170 11
16. Changing radiator, sixth floor.....	25 34
17. Turnbuckle hanger	255 30
18. Vent pipe from blow-off tank.....	342 38
Total	$4,158 49

[1] After reading this list, plaintiff's attorney, Mr. Gallaher, said:

"Of these items the defendant admits the following: 3, 4, 5, 15 and 17."

This statement was not contradicted by defendant's attorney. His silence, together with the subsequent colloquy between counsel on this subject, impels the court to conclude that defendant assented to this statement, and warrants a finding that the validity of these five items was conceded by defendant. Subsequently, in the examination of a witness on the subject of these items, Mr. Gallaher said: "17 was admitted?" To which Mr. Smith, defendant's attorney, replied: "Yes; and 18." From the record, it must therefore be assumed that defendant stipulated to the validity of these 6 items.

It was also conceded that defendant paid plaintiff on account of these items the sum of $912.91. Defendant also claimed credit for the balance of said stipulated items in damages alleged to have been sustained on account of the fire, and for the payment of two additional bills in behalf of plaintiff. The trial court found that the contracts had been fully performed, and that "it is true that * * * the defendant did become indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $4,069.43 upon an account for labor and materials furnished to the defendant * * * by the plaintiff; * * *" that the defendant had paid plaintiff, and was entitled to credit on that account, for the sum of $912.91, together with two additional items amounting to $129.86, making a total credit due defendant of the sum of $1,042.77.

The court then specifically found that the plaintiff did supply materials and furnish labor at the special instance and request of defendant, of the reasonable value specifically enumerated, and that "all of said charges and items herein specified * * * were extra, and not included within the work specified in said contract. * * *" The items so allowed plaintiff in the findings were:

Changes in first floor radiators.....	$ 365 00
Extending water pipes.....	492 00
Changes in sixth floor radiators.....	170 11
Installing turnbuckle hangers.....	255 30
Replacing gas meters.....	102 98
Installing expansion loops in main pipes....	347 00
Changing steam pipe apparatus.....	306 15
Changing pipe at ceiling.....	32 20

[2] The court failed to adopt a specific finding with reference to the foregoing item No. 5 for $153.36. But, when an issue is admitted by stipulation, findings as to such fact become unnecessary. Alderson v. Cutting, 163 Cal. 503, 126 P. 157, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1; Fernandez v. Watt, 26 Cal. App. 86, 146 P. 47. In the last case cited the court said:

"It needs no citation of authority to support the proposition that findings upon admitted facts are not required, and that a judgment will not be disturbed because of a real or apparent conflict in such findings."

[3] With respect to items numbered 11 and 18, the first being the sum of $1,315.70 for "safety valve pipes," and the latter for the sum of $342.38, being for "vent pipes from blow-off tank," the court found:

"That said safety valve escape pipe and said vent pipe from the blow-off tank were to be installed under said contract by the plaintiff at his own cost and expense."

It is contended by respondent that the court inadvertently found that these two items

"were to be installed * * * by the plaintiff at his own cost," whereas it intended to find that they were to be installed by the defendant at his own cost. This contention is strongly supported by the provisions of the contract which was received in evidence. But the paramount issue at the trial was the question as to whether plaintiff or defendant was required to bear the cost of installing these items. There is a conflict of evidence with respect to the first item for $1,315.70, which was not stipulated to. Under this state of the record, it cannot be said on appeal, that the term "plaintiff" was inadvertently used, instead of that of defendant. This court must hold that the trial court intended to find just as it did find that this item "was to be installed by the plaintiff at his own cost."

[4] But with respect to the last item No. 18, for the sum of $342.38, the finding is flatly in conflict with the admission stipulated to at the trial. So far as that particular item is concerned, the finding should therefore be disregarded, and the stipulation should control. By the stipulation that item No. 18 was taken out of the issues of the trial; no finding on that subject was necessary, and the erroneous finding should therefore be disregarded. This will have the effect of crediting this item to plaintiff as a stipulated fact.

"A court in its findings should not deviate from the facts * * * which are contained in a stipulation of the parties made in the course of a trial as a substitute for evidence. Findings contrary to such admissions are outside the issues." 24 Cal. Jur. 982, § 211; Carpentier v. Small, 35 Cal. 346; Henning v. Wuest, 48 Cal. App. 147, 191 P. 713. Where the court finds adversely to stipulated, or admitted, facts, such findings should be disregarded. Welch v. Alcott, 185 Cal. 731, 754, 198 P. 626.

[5, 6] There was no specific finding with respect to other items for which plaintiff claimed credit, aggregating the sum of $242.42. Since the court definitely specified each separate item allowed, together with the respective amounts, it must be assumed that the omission to allow certain items indicates that the court intended to disallow them. Since this failure to allow these additional items is favorable to the defendant, he may not complain of this omission.

It therefore appears from the findings, by mere mathematical calculation, that the total reasonable value of materials and labor supplied by the plaintiff, and either found by the court or stipulated to, amounts to the sum of $2,675.52, instead of the sum of $4,069.43, inaccurately stated by the court as the total sum, and that after deducting the sum of $1,042.77, found to be a valid credit to which defendant is entitled, there remains due to the plaintiff the net sum of $1,632.75. This solution appears from a construction of the findings upon their face.

[7, 8] A mere inaccurate conclusion or erroneous computation of figures as to the aggregate amount of a judgment, which satisfactorily appears from the face of the findings, is not reversible error, and should be reconciled, giving way to the true sum secured by a correct computation of the value of the items specifically enumerated in the findings. "Where the court, in addition to general findings, makes specific findings, * * * the latter control in the case of inconsistency." 24 Cal. Jur. 974, § 206.

[9, 10] Findings should be liberally construed in support of a judgment, and should be reconciled, if reasonably possible, and, unless a conflict is clear and irreconcilable, a judgment will not be reversed. Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 390, 35 P. 1005; Price v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 169 Cal. 800, 147 P. 1175; Goodwin v. Snyder, 70 Cal. App. 98, 232 P. 763; Breyfogle v. Tighe, 58 Cal. App. 301, 208 P. 1008.

[11] The appellant urges the necessity of a reversal for failure of the court to find upon his claim for damages in the sum of $271.84 on account of the fire alleged to have occurred through the negligence of plaintiff. It appears that the court did find "that a fire * * * injured and destroyed work and materials of the plaintiff of the value of $78.21, * * * which were replaced by plaintiff * * * at a cost of $78.21," but failed to find that any damages resulted to defendant's property. This failure, however, is not reversible error, since, while there is ample evidence to indicate that damages did result to defendant's property from a fire which occurred through the fault of plaintiff, yet our attention has been called to no evidence, and we are unable to find any in the record indicating the amount of pecuniary loss, if any, which was sustained by defendant thereby.

[12, 13] The contracts having been completed and accepted by the owner, and nothing remaining except the payment of the money, the contractor was authorized to maintain his action based upon the doctrine of the common counts for the value of the materials furnished and labor performed, instead of suing upon the contract. Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, 258, 23 P. 127; Blodgett Co. v. Bebe Co., 190 Cal. 665, 214 P. 38, 26 A. L. R. 1070. Under such a form of pleading, the contract was competent evidence on the trial "as an admission of the standard of value, or as proof of any other fact necessary to the recovery." Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 108; Castagnino v. Balletta, supra.

[14] The defendant contends that plaintiff is barred from recovery in this action because he failed to comply with the provisions of the contract which required him as a condition precedent to submit the dispute to arbitration. The contract provided:

"Should any dispute arise respecting the value of extra work, or works omitted, the same shall be valued by two men—one selected by the owner, and the other by the contractor, and, in case they cannot agree, these two shall have power to name an umpire whose decision if agreed to by one of the two shall be final."

The general rule with respect to arbitration is announced in 5 C. J. 42, as follows:

"An agreement to submit to arbitration, not consummated by an award, is no bar to a suit at law or in equity concerning the subject-matter submitted."

But, as an exception to the foregoing general rule, that same authority at page 43, § 69, declares that:

"Where a contract contains a stipulation, not that all questions arising thereunder * * * shall be submitted to arbitration, but that the decision of arbitrators on a certain question or questions, such as the quantity, quality, or price of materials or workmanship, the value of work, the amount of loss or damage, or the like, shall be a condition precedent to the right of action on the contract itself, no fixed sum being stated in the contract, such stipulation will be enforced. * * *"

In support of this claim that the plaintiff is barred from maintaining this action, the defendant relies upon the case of Davissou v. East Whittier Land, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 81, 96 P. 88, where the court held that noncompliance with an agreement to arbitrate, which agreement was couched in substantially the same language as the one in the instant case, was a complete bar to recovery for the value of extra work performed. But in that case the defendant set up the arbitration clause of the contract in an amended answer, as a special plea in abatement. In the instant case the contract was mentioned in neither the complaint nor the answer. By his failure to plead plaintiff's noncompliance with the provision of a contract agreeing to submit to arbitration the value of extra materials furnished, the defendant waived that defense. Chamberlain v. Hibbard, 26 Or. 428, 38 P. 437; Borg v. Utah Const. Co., 117 Or. 22, 242 P. 600; 2 Bancroft's Code Pl. 1268, § 869.

[15] Likewise the failure of the defendant to plead as a bar to this action the provision of the contract requiring all extra work to be first authorized by the architect, as well as the clause authorizing the engineer and architect to settle all controversy over the meaning of the plans and specifications, was a waiver of the defenses.

[16, 17] A defense based on the incapacity of a plaintiff to sue is regarded as a plea in abatement. 1 Cal. Jur. 32, § 18. Where the incapacity to sue does not appear on the face of the complaint, it must be raised by answer or it is deemed to have been waived. Reed & Co. v. Marshall, 12 Cal. App. 697, 703, 108 P. 719; Bernheim Distilling Co. v. Elmore, 12 Cal. App. 85, 106 P. 720; California Sav. & L. Soc. v. Harris, 111 Cal. 133, 42 P. 525; 21

Cal. Jur. 139. Chamberlain v. Hibbard, supra, was an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The defendant sought to defeat the action for failure on the part of the plaintiff to submit the dispute to arbitration pursuant to the terms of their contract. Similar to the situation in the instant case, the defendant, in that case failed to set up the arbitration clause of the contract as a plea in abatement. The court said:

"The plaintiff did not set out a copy of said contract in his complaint, but brought his suit for the reasonable value of the extra work; and hence his complaint states a cause of suit. * * * The defendant set out a copy of said contract in his answer, but he did not plead its provisions to settle by arbitration any dispute arising thereunder in abatement of the suit. The defendant's right to have the alterations valued by arbitrators was one which he could waive, and by pleading to the merits he waived the matter in abatement."

We are therefore of the opinion that the findings are not in irreconcilable conflict, that they support a judgment for plaintiff for the sum of $1,632.75, that the findings are sufficiently supported by the evidence, and that defendant waived his defense of lack of authorization for the extras, as well as the requirement to arbitrate, by his failure to plead those provisions of the contract.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is modified to conform to the findings, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment against the defendant for the sum of $1,632.75, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. McKIM. (Cr. 1360.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 29, 1927.

Indictment and information — 154—Objection that information charging contributing to minor's delinquency is not specific held waived unless made under statute (Juvenile Court Act, § 21, and § 1, subds. 1-13; Pen. Code, §§ 950-952, and § 1004, subd. 2).

Objection that information, charging in the language of the Juvenile Court Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3966), § 21, that defendant caused or tended to cause minor to become a person within section 1, subds. 1-13, does not conform to Pen. Code, §§ 950-952, in that it fails to specify the particular element of delinquency, must be taken under section 1004, subd. 2, or will on appeal be deemed to have been waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Alfred McKim (true name Albert McKim) was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor child, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Myron Harris and L. A. Sullivan, both of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was tried before a jury upon an information charging him with contributing to the delinquency of a minor child. From the judgment following the verdict of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, he has appealed upon a typewritten record.

The information charged in the language of section 21 of the Juvenile Court Act that the defendant sold a quantity of intoxicating liquor to a minor of the age of 16 years, and that he thereby caused and tended to cause the said minor to come within the provisions of subdivisions 1 to 13, inclusive, of section 1 of the Juvenile Court Act, and thereby caused said minor to become a person coming within the provisions of the same subdivisions of section 1 of that act. The evidence disclosed that on the day named in the information the defendant, who was conducting a barber shop in the city of Oakland, sold a quantity of whisky to the boy named in the information, who was at the time of the age of 16 years; that this minor, in company with a boy friend, drank the liquor purchased from the defendant and became so intoxicated that he was unable to return to his home, but was taken into custody by the police officers after having slept the greater part of the night in a vacant lot. The testimony also showed that the minor had purchased intoxicating liquor from the defendant on several other occasions prior to the date charged in the information.

On this appeal the defendant has for the first time raised the question that the information failed to state a public offense. The point is that because the information charged a violation of section 21 of the Juvenile Court Act (Deering's General Laws of 1923, Act 3966) in the terms of that section and did not specify the particular element of delinquency covered by subdivisions 1 to 13 of section 1 of that act, it failed to state a public offense. The theory of the appellant is that the information is deficient because it did not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code. The complete and effective answer is that the information stated the acts alleged to have been done by the defendant and which, under the statute, constitute the offense charged, and that any objection going to the failure of the information to specify the particulars in which the acts charged contributed to the delinquency of the minor was an objection which should have been taken by special demurrer to the information, under section 1004, subd. 2, of the Penal Code. Where a party accused fails to demur upon any of the grounds mentioned in section 1004, the objection is to be deemed waived and cannot be presented for the first time on appeal. People v. Welton, 190 Cal. 236, 240, 211 P. 802.

FITZGERALD v. GLOBE INDEMNITY CO. OF NEW YORK. (Civ. 3278.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 2, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 29, 1927.

1. Insurance ⚡524—That professional man makes contracts, keeps bank account, and pays taxes does not conclusively show transaction of business duties preventing recovery under health policy for total disability.

Mere fact that professional man may make contracts in relation to his property, keep bank account and pay taxes, insurance, and other debts, does not conclusively show that he is engaged in business outside his profession, preventing recovery under policy of accident and health insurance permitting compensation for total disability only if insured is unable to transact all business duties.

2. Insurance ⚡524—Transaction of business duties does not prevent recovery for total disability under health policy; the test being not what insured did, but what with prudence and care he was reasonably able to do.

Transaction by insured of business duties does not prevent recovery for total disability under policy of accident and health insurance allowing compensation for total disability only in case of inability to transact all business duties, where insured is in fact not reasonably able to transact such business in exercise of common care and prudence; acts themselves being merely evidence of ability and not conclusive.

3. Appeal and error ⚡1011(1)—Findings based on substantially conflicting testimony are conclusive.

Findings of trial court, based on substantially conflicting testimony, are conclusive on appeal.

4. Insurance ⚡524—Total disability under health policy providing also for partial disability does not require absolute helplessness, but merely inability to perform substantial business duties in customary way.

Provisions of health policies for indemnity in event insured is totally disabled do not require that insured be rendered helpless, but require merely such disability as renders him unable to perform substantial and material acts of his business or occupation in usual and customary way, though policies also provide for partial disability.

5. Insurance ⚡524—Insured's performance and physical ability to perform business duties is not conclusive evidence that disability is not total, if reasonable prudence require that he desist.

Fact that insured may do some work or transact some business duties during time for which he claims indemnity for total disability under health policy, even if he may be physically able to do so, is not conclusive evidence that his disability is not total, if reasonable care and prudence require that he desist.

6. Insurance ⚡665(4)—Evidence held to support finding of total inability of insured to transact business either as physician or walnut grower.

In action by physician, who was also engaged in business of walnut cultivator and grower, to recover indemnity payments for total disability under policy of health insurance, evidence held to sustain findings of trial court that plaintiff, afflicted with Bright's disease, was totally and continuously unable to transact business duties of either occupation at time indemnity was claimed.

7. Appeal and error ⚡1071(5)—Finding that insured was not engaged in growing walnuts prior to issuance of health insurance held immaterial in action for total disability.

In action by person engaged as physician and walnut grower for compensation for total disability under health policy, finding that insured was not engaged in business of growing walnuts for sale prior to time of issuance of policy held immaterial.

8. Appeal and error ⚡1056(1)—Excluding evidence as to how often insured visited ranches held not prejudicial in action for total disability under health policy.

In action to recover compensation for total disability under health policy, by insured engaged as physician and walnut grower, sustaining objection to questions asked on cross-examination as to how many times insured went to his ranches and whether he talked with men in charge held not prejudicial.

9. Appeal and error ⚡1056(1)—Excluding testimony as to whether physician suing for total disability under health policy still received checks from former partner held not prejudicial.

In action by physician to recover compensation for total disability under health policy, overruling objection to question asked plaintiff as to whether he still received checks from former partner on dissolution of partnership held not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by William Wesley Fitzgerald against the Globe Indemnity Company of

New York. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hartley F. Peart, of San Francisco, and George F. McNoble, of Stockton (Charles V. Barfield, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Levinsky & Jones, of Stockton, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action on an accident and health insurance policy issued by the defendant to the plaintiff October 11, 1916. Plaintiff was given judgment for the amount of unpaid indemnity at the weekly rate specified in the policy for total disability caused by disease. The defendant has appealed from the judgment on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

The complaint is in the usual form. It alleges that plaintiff has been totally and continuously unable to transact any business duties since the 9th day of February, 1918, the disability being caused by chronic nephritis, or Bright's disease; that the defendant has paid the indemnity provided to be paid by the policy for total disability up to January 19, 1922, but has refused to pay any indemnity thereafter. A copy of the policy is attached to and made a part of the complaint. It provides for payment of indemnity for total disability caused by disease at the rate of $50 a week, for a period not to exceed 52 weeks, "if such disease causes the insured to be totally and continuously unable to transact all duties pertaining to his occupation"; for intermediate disability at $25 a week if "unable to transact a major portion of all the duties pertaining to his occupation"; and for partial disability at $12.50 a week if "unable to transact a material portion of any or all duties pertaining to his occupation." There is indorsed upon the policy an "amendment rider," which contains the following:

"In consideration of ten dollars additional premium, the undermentioned policy is hereby amended as follows: * * * If such disease causes the insured to be totally and continuously unable to transact all business duties, the company will pay for the entire period thereof, indemnity at the rate per week specified * * * for total disability."

Plaintiff's occupation is stated in the schedule of warranties as follows:

"My occupation and business duties, fully described, are as follows: Physician and surgeon, general practice, which I agree shall be classed as No. 1."

The policy contains a number of provisions, among which is the following:

"If any such injury is sustained by the insured while engaged in an occupation classed as more hazardous than that stated herein, recreation or ordinary duties about the residence excepted, liability hereunder shall be limited to such sum as the premium paid would have purchased for the increased hazard according to the company's table of rates or classification of risks last filed as above provided."

The issues presented on this appeal are clearly stated in appellant's opening brief as follows:

"It is alleged in the answer that respondent was engaged in a dual occupation at the time of the execution of the policy, to wit, his profession of physician and surgeon, and that of a walnut cultivator and grower, and that he has continued in such dual occupation ever since. * * * So far as actual occupations are concerned the policy is ambulatory and in fact contemplates changes therein by reason of the provisions limiting the company's liability in case the insured became engaged and was injured in any occupation more hazardous than that stated in the application. * * * But irrespective of the ambulatory provisions of the policy, the amendment rider eliminates the restriction upon business duties as pertaining to the occupation stated, and expressly prescribed 'all business duties.' There can be no doubt that maintaining walnut orchards and the sale of the produce therefrom is a business and would constitute an additional occupation of the insured."

The court found that subsequent to the 10th day of October, 1916, and up to the 9th day of February, 1918, "plaintiff was engaged in the business of growing and cultivating walnuts for sale in the market." At the oral argument counsel for appellant said:

"The company requested the doctor to submit himself to an examination of a board of physicians composed of Dr. Catton of San Francisco, Dr. Reid of San Francisco, Dr. Eugene Kilgore, Dr. Addis and Dr. Bine. Three of these doctors, as the record shows, Dr. Kilgore, Dr. Catton and Dr. Reid, found, and two so testified, that in their opinion, at least in 1922 when they made this examination, Dr. Fitzgerald was able to transact a portion of his duties as physician and surgeon and practice, as they described it, where free from the heavy strain of operative cases, and free from the infection of the hit and miss run of patients. * * * The two other doctors felt it would be dangerous to engage in any practice. His partner, Dr. Dozier, Dr. Craviotto and Dr. Williamson all felt it was not proper for him to engage in any form of practice. Our position is that, there being a conflict in the record on the testimony of these physicians, we will not present * * * any argument upon that point at all. * * * But that has no relation to the demonstrated ability to perform these other duties."

Appellant's argument is based upon the proposition, asserted in the briefs and at the oral argument, that the plaintiff was not "totally and continuously unable to transact all business duties" pertaining to his farming operations. But the evidence upon this question, also, is conflicting.

At the commencement of his illness the plaintiff was of the age of about 50 years. He had an established and lucrative practice as a physician and surgeon, about five times as much as the indemnity specified in the policy for total disability. He owned two farms, on each of which there were suitable farm buildings. One of these farms contained 100 acres and the other 60 acres. He had planted both farms to walnuts, which were coming into bearing in commercial quantities about the time the policy was issued. Both farms were operated by men employed by the plaintiff and under his general supervision. He had become an expert in the care and cultivation of walnuts. In the early part of 1918 the plaintiff, acting upon the advice of his physicians, entirely abandoned his practice of medicine and surgery. He testified, and the court found, that at the same time he gave up the management and supervision of his walnut groves and farming operations.

Plaintiff's illness commenced with an attack of influenza in November, 1917. This was followed by an acute nephritis, or Bright's disease, which later developed into chronic nephritis. Plaintiff testified:

That he placed a man in "absolute and full charge" of his walnut groves and farming operations in 1918; that he "had a definite understanding" with this man that "he was to take complete charge and I was not to have any responsibility whatever; that I would give him a monthly allowance; * * * and that he would render me a statement at the end of the month, * * * but I didn't want to be bothered about any details. * * * After the commencement of 1919 * * * I left the management of the walnut groves * * * to their entire management. * * * At times I was sick abed. There would be times that I didn't get out of bed. There would be other times that there would be days and weeks that I would not get out of the house scarcely. There would be other times that I would be feeling pretty fair for three or four weeks. * * * I am emotional. I can't control myself, and I have been that way all through my sickness. Little things worry me. Representatives of this company would come to me and try to explain why they didn't pay me. These visits upset me. I would spend six nights afterwards in sleepless nights. * * * After such occurrences I would be prostrated a week and probably confined to the bed or to the couch for several days. * * * I am not doing any business in relation to my walnut groves or any other business since I have been ill; the only business I have done is to notify my manager with the definite instructions that I was to have no responsibility or no cares about it. * * * Up to the time I rented the ranches I got a monthly statement from my man in charge as to their expenses and the like in connection with their operation. I found that annoyed me when they would bring their monthly statement in until I rented the Lodi place with an option of selling at a great sacrifice to relieve me even of the annoyance of having the manager come in with the monthly statement, and also sold half interest in the Cherokee Lane place with a written agreement that the man was to care for the place for a number of years. * * * Generally when these statements were in * * * as a rule I would be ill for three or four days. * * * For that reason I rented or sold the place. * * * I found that it was impossible for me to care for my health and have a monthly statement rendered to me. * * * Sometimes when I went to the place after I became ill I would see my manager there. * * * I generally asked them how things were going. I might ask them if it looked like it was going to be a good crop; * * * but I gave them no orders."

Plaintiff's wife testified that he "has performed or done no * * * business of any kind, character, or description since January 1922"; that since that time "he spent most of the time on his couch or bed. * * * After January, 1922, we went for short rides in the country sometimes. We went to both of the ranches. One ranch is 5 miles out, * * * and the other is 12 miles. * * * Sometimes Dr. Fitzgerald got out of the machine at the ranches and sometimes he sat in the machine. When he got out of the machine he walked around a little bit, I should judge a half a block. He never walked further than a half a block as I recall. * * * When I went with him he drove the car."

Dr. Addis, professor of medicine at Stanford University, who since 1911 has been "mainly engaged in the investigation of Bright's disease," and who, at the request of the defendant, examined the plaintiff in October, 1922, testified:

"Dr. Fitzgerald was suffering from * * * chronic Bright's disease. * * * It is progressive. * * * A relief from mental and physical strain * * * is very important. * * * Dr. Fitzgerald was capable of taking a short walk, * * * of reading light literature, of going to a theater; but much more than that I thought he should not do. * * * I should consider the engaging in any business definitely bad for him. * * * I should be obliged to suppose that even under the best conditions Dr. Fitzgerald will gradually grow worse. * * * He had the mental attitude of strain and a hyperexcitability. * * * I thought any occupation which was not of a more or less automatic nature, and any occupation which would involve any cerebation on his part, would be prejudicial to him at that time. * * * I would not regard work which requires small mental effort for Dr. Fitzgerald as detrimental if it were not accompanied, as it usually is, of course, by responsibilities."

Dr. Dozier, plaintiff's former partner and his attending physician during the entire period of his illness, testified that the plaintiff "would not have lived a period of two years had he attempted to practice medicine and surgery," and that, at no time during his illness has his condition been such as to warrant him in taking "active charge or supervision even of a walnut grove or any other sort of farm." Dr. Williamson testified that the plaintiff is not in condition to take the "responsibility of supervising or managing a ranch." Dr. Hill, clinical professor of medicine at Stanford University, and who examined the plaintiff in February, 1918, and at subsequent times, testified:

"My examination extended over * * * three or four days. * * * Subsequently * * * I examined Dr. Fitzgerald many times, several times at least. * * * The last of these examinations * * * was on April 24, 1923. * * * The disease had progressed from December, 1919. * * * He then maintained a systolic pressure of 158, a diastolic of 105, and there was a trace of albumen, of many glandular casts, and a few hyaline casts. On April 24, 1923, * * * he had a systolic blood pressure of 185 and diastolic blood pressure of 120. He had a heavy cloud of albumen, many large glandular casts and a few hyaline casts. This shows a definite progression from December, 1919, to April, 1923. * * * Physical exertion and nerve strain are most important to be avoided. * * * The condition is not such that he would not be physically able to carry them (professional duties) out. * * * It would have a marked tendency to increase the trouble which he had. * * * Increasing the trouble necessarily would have an effect of shortening his life. * * * I advised him the first time I saw him in February, 1918, to give up his work entirely, not to engage in any sort of work. * * * His condition at no time between 1918 and 1923 has improved to such an extent that my opinion in that regard has been altered. * * * He said he had a walnut ranch, as I remember, and he said he wanted to take care of this walnut ranch, and I said he couldn't do it."

[1-4] The plaintiff frequently drove his automobile on short trips and a few times on longer ones. He drove it down town nearly every day and made purchases of household supplies. He executed the contracts referred to in his testimony quoted herein and a few other contracts. For a time he received and examined monthly reports of the farming expenses. He maintained deposits in two banks and drew checks thereon from time to time. He paid taxes, insurance, and interest on money which he had borrowed. He performed other similar acts. Appellant contends that these acts constituted the transaction of "business duties" within the meaning of that term as used in the policy of insurance. While those acts are business transactions, they do not constitute engaging in business in the sense in which that term is ordinarily used. The mere fact that a professional man may make contracts in relation to his property, keep a bank account and pay his taxes, insurance and other debts does not necessarily show that he is engaging in a business outside his profession. The doctor, the lawyer, the teacher, the preacher, and the priest do all these things without causing any one to think that their occupations are dual. But to concede that the plaintiff's acts amounted to the transaction of business duties within the meaning of the policy would not require a reversal of the judgment. The ultimate fact to be determined is not what the plaintiff actually did in the way of business duties, but what, in the exercise of common care and prudence, he was reasonably able to do. Proof of what he did is merely evidence tending to show his ability to do, just as the opinion of the physicians who testified are evidence tending to show that his disability was or was not total. This expert opinion evidence alone, in view of the nature of the plaintiff's affliction, is sufficient to create a substantial conflict, and the finding of the trial court thereon is conclusive. "The weight of authority supports the view that provisions in accident policies for indemnity in the event the insured is totally or wholly disabled do not require that the accident shall render the insured absolutely helpless, but such provisions are construed as meaning such a disability as renders him unable to perform the substantial and material acts of his business or occupation in the usual and customary way." 41 A. L. R. 1376; 37 A. L. R. 151; 24 A. L. R. 203; L. R. A. 1917B, 108; 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352; 38 L. R. A. 529; Joyce on Insurance, § 3031; May on Insurance (4th Ed.) § 522; Bacon on Life and Accident Insurance (4th Ed.) § 541. An examination of the cases cited herein shows that the same rule applies in cases of disability caused by disease. Appellant concedes "that perhaps the weight of outside authority is that in the ordinary case where provision is made for total disability alone, the courts will give practical construction to the language employed in order to make the policy operative and to prevent a forfeiture," but that the same rule does not apply where the policy provides for "various degrees of disability." No logical reason appears, however, why the same rule should not be applied where the policy provides for both total and partial disability in order to make the total disability clause "operative and to prevent a forfeiture" of the indemnity provided by that clause. In either case a literal interpretation of the total disability clause would defeat the very purpose of insurance against total disability, because it rarely happens that an insured is so completely disabled that he can transact no business duty whatever. The rule quoted has been applied in many cases where the policy in suit provided for both total and partial disability. United States Casualty Co. v. Perryman, 203 Ala. 212, 82 So. 462; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Logan, 191 Ky. 92, 229 S. W. 104; Bachman v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 78 N. H. 100, 97 A. 223; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Joiner (Tex. Civ. App.) 178 S. W. 806; Hefner v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 160 S. W. 330; Commonwealth Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Bryant (Tex. Civ. App.) 185 S. W. 979; North American Accident Ins. Co. v. Miller (Tex. Civ. App.) 193 S. W. 750; Clarke v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 94 Vt. 383, 111 A. 449; Jacobs v. Loyal Protective Ins. Co., 97 Vt. 516, 124 A. 848.

[5] In most of the other cases cited herein, it does not appear whether or not the policies therein considered provided for both total and partial disability. The fact that the insured may do some work or transact some business duties during the time for which he claims indemnity for total disability or even the fact that he may be physically able to do so is not conclusive evidence that his disability is not total, if reasonable care and prudence require that he desist. United States Casualty Co. v. Perryman, supra; Great Eastern Casualty Co. v. Robins, 111 Ark. 607, 164 S. W. 750; American Liability Co. v. Bowman, 65 Ind. App. 109, 114 N. E. 992; *Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. [6] Both the evidence and the law support the conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiff was totally and continuously unable to transact the business duties of either occupation in which he was engaged at the commencement of his illness. His physicians advised him to desist therefrom, and they testified at the trial that he was totally and continuously unable to transact his business duties without increasing bodily waste and hastening the progress of the disease which caused the disability. It cannot be said as a matter of law that the occasional transactions in which he engaged constituted the performance of "the substantial and material acts of his business or occupation in the usual and customary way" or conclusive proof that, in the exercise of reasonable care and prudence he was able to transact such business duties.

[7] The court found that "prior to, and on said 10th day of October, 1916, said plaintiff was not engaged in the business of growing or cultivating walnuts for sale in the market." Appellant contends that this finding is not supported by the evidence. The finding is not material to any issue in the case. The court found that the plaintiff was engaged in such business prior to and at the commencement of his illness and, on the defendant's theory of the case, proof that he was thereafter able to transact the business duties pertaining to that business would have been a complete defense. The answer does not allege that the plaintiff misrepresented his occupation in his application for insurance and counsel for defendant stated at the trial that it did "not claim any fraud on the part of the doctor."

[8] On cross-examination of plaintiff's wife by counsel for defendant, she was asked the following questions:

"On an average how many times would you and the Doctor go out to the ranches a week after January, 1919, that is after this year was past? Would the Doctor on the occasions when he began to go back to the ranch with you after this year following his illness talk with the men in charge of these ranches?"

Counsel for the plaintiff objected "upon the ground that it is not within the scope of the direct examination; we have not gone into the period between 1918 and January, 1922." The court sustained the objection. As a basis for such cross-examination, appellant makes two quotations from the direct examination of the witness as follows:

"To my knowledge after February, 1918, the Doctor never engaged or did anything in the practice of his profession of medicine. People called him in a professional way after 1918. I generally received the phone call or messages. I did not let them talk with him or see him. I told them he was ill. The Doctor spent his time lying down, at home. I was with him all of the time.

"Q. And when he spent the time at home what did he do, did he read? A. Yes, sir." "As far as I can observe there has been changes in Dr. Fitzgerald's mental condition since February, 1918. He is nervous and irritable. He was not nervous or irritable before February, 1918."

Counsel for defendant did not direct the attention of the trial court to the testimony to which it is now contended the cross-examination related. While it may be said that the questions were within the range of liberal cross-examination, it does not appear that the defendant was substantially prejudiced by the ruling. Defendant was permitted to examine the plaintiff as a witness in relation to all his activities during the entire period of his illness. As stated, what plaintiff actually did during that period was important only as tending to show what he was capable of doing. His physical condition, the progress and effect of his disease, and the activities in which he was capable of engaging with prudence, all called for the testimony and opinions of medical experts who had examined him. Against such testimony and opinions it is not probable that the trial court would have acted upon its own conclusions based upon what the plaintiff actually did. In view of the foregoing considerations, it cannot be held that the ruling "complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

The court sustained objections to a series of questions asked the plaintiff regarding the development of his walnut groves, the income therefrom, his work in connection therewith, and his lectures on walnut growing and marketing, all relating to times prior to the issuance of the policy of insurance. While evidence of the character indicated by the questions would have tended to show that plaintiff's farming operations constituted a business, any error in the ruling was harmless, because the court found that the plaintiff was engaged in such business prior to and at the commencement of his illness and, as stated, it is immaterial whether he was engaged in such business prior to the issuance of the policy.

[9] The court sustained objections to the other questions by which the plaintiff was asked what he received from his former partner, Dr. Dozier, on the dissolution of the partnership, when he received the last check in that connection, whether he was still receiving checks from Dr. Dozier, and whether he deposited the checks so received in a bank. Answers to such questions might have had some slight tendency to show business capacity, but the matter is not of sufficient importance to require a reversal of the judgment.

While the weight of the evidence is for the determination of the trial court, an examination of the whole record strongly leads to the conclusion that the judgment is just.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. REED. (Cr. 1403.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 2, 1927.

1. Criminal law ⚡409—Evidence of defendant's admissions relative to uttering fictitious check held admissible under proof that name of purported maker did not appear in records of drawee bank or in city directory (Pen. Code, § 476).

In prosecution for passing fictitious check under Pen. Code, § 476, testimony that name signed to check as maker was not disclosed by records of drawee bank or by city directory held sufficient proof of corpus delicti to render admissible defendant's admissions as to drawing of check which he passed by indorsement.

2. Forgery ⚡44(2)—Showing to common certainty that no person existed in vicinity under name of purported drawer held sufficient to prove fictitious character of check uttered (Pen. Code, § 476).

In prosecution for passing fictitious check under Pen. Code, § 476, state was not required to prove that no person in the world existed under name signed to check as drawer, but was only required to show to common certainty that there was no such person in existence in vicinity of counties connected with particular acts charged.

3. Witnesses ⚡319—Defendant in criminal prosecution may be impeached on cross-examination (Code Civ. Proc. § 2051).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, defendant in criminal prosecution, like any other witness, is open to impeachment on cross-examination.

4. Witnesses ⚡337(6)—Where witness accused of crime testified in his own behalf, cross-examination as to previous convictions for felony held proper (Pen. Code, § 476; Code Civ. Proc. § 2051).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476, for passing fictitious check, in which defendant testified in his own behalf, cross-examination of defendant as to whether he had been convicted of felony in another state, and of previous violation of section 476, held proper, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

J. F. Reed was convicted of violating Pen. Code, § 476, relating to the uttering of fictitious instruments, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Harold Jacoby and E. G. Palmer, both of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. Defendant was tried and convicted upon an information charging the violation of section 476, Penal Code. From the judgment following the verdict, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, he has appealed upon a typewritten record.

The information charged that on the 8th day of September, 1925, in the county of Alameda, the defendant passed a certain fictitious check purporting to be for the payment of money of one E. H. Gould, and drawn upon the Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Sacramento. The check was dated as if made at Sacramento on September 8, 1925, and was made payable to the defendant. It purported to bear the signature of E. H. Gould, who the prosecution claimed to be a fictitious person. On September 8th the defendant indorsed the check on the back as the payee thereof, and delivered it to one Hatherill, who was at the time operating an automobile service station in the county of Alameda, and who at the time deducted from the amount of the check the charge for gas and oil which he served to the defendant, and then delivered to the defendant the balance called for by the check. Upon his arrest the defendant admitted that he had drawn the check; that he recognized Hatherill as the man he had seen at the service station; that he did not know any one by the name of E. H. Gould; that he had procured a number of blank checks of the Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Sacramento while he was passing through Sacramento some time prior to the making of the check; and that he had made and passed other checks of the same character on that bank. When asked whether he had passed the check in evidence on Hatherill on that day, he replied that he had been drinking about that time and that he had passed that check and several others.

[1] On this appeal the appellant insists that the corpus delicti was not established, because it was not shown that there was no such corporation, copartnership, or individual as E. H. Gould in existence at the time the appellant passed the check. The state called as a witness a teller of the Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Sacramento, who testified that he had examined the records of the bank, and ascertained that they disclosed no account in the name of E. H. Gould, and that he had also examined the city directory of the city of Sacramento for the year 1925, and ascertained that it did not contain the name of E. H. Gould. An inspector of police in the city of Oakland testified that he had made a similar examination of the directory of the city of Oakland, and found that it did not contain the name of E. H. Gould. This prima facie showing having been made, the statements of the appellant made to the police officer at the time of his arrest became admissible and completed the proof that the name of E. H. Gould was fictitious. The question was fully considered by this court in People v. Carmona, 251 P. 315, where testimony of similar character was held to be sufficient.

[2] The appellant argues that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that the state was not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that there was no such person in the world as E. H. Gould, but that it was only necessary to show to a common certainty that there was no such person in existence in the vicinity of the county of Sacramento and the county of Alameda connected with the particular acts charged in the information. This instruction was a correct statement of the law as pointed out in People v. Gordon, 13 Cal. App. 678, 685, 110 P. 469.

[3, 4] The appellant criticizes the action of the trial court in permitting the district attorney to ask the appellant upon cross-examination if he had ever been convicted of a felony, and particularly whether he had been convicted of a felony in the state of Washington, and whether he had been convicted of a violation of section 476, Penal Code, in the year 1923. The appellant had taken the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and on direct examination had testified simply that he did not remember having called at the gas station on September 8th because he was drinking about that time. This seems to have been the entire defense appellant sought to urge before the jury—that because of his excessive drinking he was unable to remember whether he had been at the gas station or whether he had passed the check in evidence. The purpose of this line of testimony was to show a want of intent on the part of the accused to pass the check. Like any other witness, he was open to impeachment on cross-examination. Section 2051, Code Civ. Proc.; People v. Muchupoff (Cal. App.) 249 P. 240. The cross-examination of the appellant by the district attorney was entirely within the proper bounds.

In this same connection the appellant now argues that the district attorney committed prejudicial error in asking the questions about prior convictions, but, as we have seen, the questions were proper in the cross-examination of the witness, and hence no error arose.

Judgment and order affirmed.

3. Fraudulent conveyances ⚡58—Conveyances to debtor's wife may be fraudulent, though he kept some property.

That husband kept certain of his property in his own name would not necessarily prevent conveyances to his wife of realty, paid for from his funds, from being fraudulent as to his creditor.

4. Fraudulent conveyances ⚡169—Guilty knowledge of debtor's wife, paying nothing, need not be proved to show fraud in conveyances to her.

Guilty knowledge of wife, admittedly giving no consideration for transfers of realty to her, need not be proved to show that transaction was fraudulent as to husband's creditor.

5. Fraudulent conveyances ⚡57(5)—Conveyances to debtor's wife of realty, paid for by husband without other property, are fraudulent as matter of law, irrespective of grantor's intent (Civ. Code, § 3442).

Under Civ. Code, § 3442, conveyances to debtor's wife of property paid for by husband, who had no other property, are fraudulent as matter of law, irrespective of grantor's intent.

6. Fraudulent conveyances ⚡269(1)—Spouse's testimony as to husband's gifts of purchase money to wife held admissible on issue, tendered by answer setting up agreement relinquishing community interests to her, in action to set aside conveyances to her as fraudulent.

In action to set aside conveyances of realty to wife as defrauding husband's judgment creditor, wife's testimony as to getting purchase money from her husband and how long she had it, and husband's testimony as to his gifts of money to wife, held admissible on issue tendered by them in answer setting up written agreement, relinquishing all his community interests to her.

7. Witnesses ⚡219(2)—Spouse's recording, pleading, and putting in evidence agreement relinquishing husband's community interests in property conveyed to wife waived immunity from inquiry as to her receipt of purchase money from him.

Husband and wife filing for record, pleading in defense to action to set aside conveyances of realty to wife as defrauding husband's judgment creditor, and introducing in evidence written agreement relinquishing his community interest in property to wife, put bona fides thereof in issue, and thereby waived immunity from inquiry as to source of purchase money on ground that neither could testify against other without latter's consent.

8. Witnesses ⚡188(2)—Spouse's testimony as to wife's receipt of purchase money from husband held not inadmissible as privileged in action to set aside conveyances to her as fraudulent.

Wife's testimony that she got money from her husband to pay for property conveyed to her, and his testimony as to his gifts of money to her, held not inadmissible, as concerning privileged communications between them, in action to set aside conveyances as defrauding husband's judgment creditor.

TOBIAS v. ADAMS et ux. (L. A. 9868.)

Supreme Court of California. July 29, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⚡1011(1)—Debtor's statement that entire estate was not put in others' names to defraud creditor would not create bona fide conflict in testimony.

Mere ipse dixit of one keeping his bank account in another's name admittedly to prevent his creditor from reaching it by legal process, and then putting his entire estate in his wife's name, or depositing it in his secretary's name, knowing of judgments against him, that it was not done to defraud judgment creditor, would not create bona fide conflict in testimony, rendering finding for him conclusive on appeal.

2. Appeal and error ⚡1011(1)—To conflict, evidence must present reasonable ground for difference of opinion.

While finding on substantially conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal, evidence, to raise conflict, must be such as to present fair and reasonable ground for difference of opinion.

9. Fraudulent conveyances ☞238—Evidence of husband's insolvency three months after agreement relinquishing community interests held admissible, in action to set aside conveyances to wife as fraudulent.

In action to set aside conveyances of realty to wife as defrauding husband's judgment creditor, testimony as to husband's insolvency at time of trial, about three months after date of written agreement relinquishing all his community interest in property to wife, held admissible preliminary to establishing his insolvency on date of agreement, which was not remote.

10. Fraudulent conveyances ☞57(5)—Insolvent husband's relinquishment of community interests to wife is fraudulent as matter of law (Civ. Code, § 3442).

Under Civ. Code, § 3442, written agreement, relinquishing insolvent husband's community interests in property to his wife, is fraudulent as matter of law.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Frank I. Tobias, as special administrator of the estate of William E. Tobias, deceased, against Francis D. Adams and wife. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Wellborn, Wellborn & Wellborn and Stephen Monteleone, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Francis D. Adams and Earl Curtis Peck, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Some preliminary considerations must be met before we consider the merits of this appeal. The action is by plaintiff and appellant as special administrator of the estate of William E. Tobias, deceased, against Francis D. Adams and Gertrude B. Adams, as husband and wife, defendants and respondents, to set aside certain conveyances of real property made by said husband to his wife, and to have certain property standing in the name of the wife declared the property of the husband on the ground that it was taken and held by the wife as a voluntary transaction at the instance of the husband in order to hinder, delay, and defraud plaintiff's intestate as the judgment creditor of said husband. The husband is an attorney at law, and appeared herein as one of his own attorneys as well as one of the attorneys for his wife.

Appellant has three judgments, all bearing date prior to March 4, 1924, against said husband, on an indebtedness which arose in October, 1923, aggregating some $7,000. He has caused several executions to issue upon said judgments, and the same have been delivered to the sheriff of the county for levy upon the property of said defendant Francis D.

Adams, attorney at law, with a return in each case nulla bona.

It seems, however, that in December, 1925, and during the early months of the year 1926, the husband had a stroke of good fortune. He got together as an attorney's fee some seventy odd thousand dollars, one-half of which belonged to him, and was received by him in liquid assets. The receipt of so large a sum had such an unusual effect upon him that he says he was restless under the weight of it, and could not sleep until the securities by which it was evidenced were deposited with the Bank of America at Los Angeles for safe-keeping; it apparently never occurring to him that he might lessen his responsibility and increase his nightly repose by paying the representative of his deceased judgment creditor the claims in suit, the justice of which he has never at any time heretofore or now disputed.

In due time, however, to wit, on January 5, 1926, Nicholas William Brick and Helen Brick, his wife, deeded to defendant Gertrude B. Adams a valuable piece of real property, for which the sum of $25,000 was paid as follows: $17,000 in cash, and the remainder by the assumption of an existing mortgage upon said property in amount of $8,000. This transfer is directly involved in this action; plaintiff claiming the property is community property of defendants, and, indeed, it is admitted that the cash payment was advanced through defendant husband from said above-mentioned attorney's fee. It is also admitted that a portion of the remainder of said fee was used in paying creditors of said husband other than plaintiff, and the large surplus remaining was safely placed in the name of the law secretary or stenographer of said husband according to a custom which sprang up suddenly at the time plaintiff began in the years 1923 and 1924 to sue out attachments and levy upon his bank account. It is even said that, during the existence of plaintiff's claims, some $27,000 appeared at one time in the name of said secretary. But said husband claims at this time that it was not put in her name for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding creditors, but because it was more convenient to have it in that form.

In this connection it is pertinent to quote some of said defendant husband's testimony, where, after stating that no real property had stood in his name since the year 1923, he said:

"Q. Since that time you have had no property in your name? A. I have had no real property in my name. Q. Do you keep your bank account in your name? A. I have kept a bank account in my name up until some time when you began to attach it every day; then I took it out of my name. Q. When was the last time you had a bank account in your name? A. The last time you attached it. Q. How long ago was that? A. Oh, I think that was some time in '23 or '4; I am not sure which. Q. In whose name did you carry your bank account at the present time? A. I carry my bank account in the name of Edna Smith, my secretary. Q. And all of the fees and money you collect, you deposit in the name of your secretary? A. Well, not all of them; practically all of them; yes, sir."

It should be stated also that said defendant testified that from his law practice in the year 1925 he had an income of $56,243.66; also, from the same source for the first six months of 1926, he had an income of $15,000, but the sheriff, after searching with great diligence, was unable to find a penny to satisfy these several and alias executions. It should also be noted that defendant Gertrude B. Adams had standing in her name several other very valuable pieces of real property acquired by her from her husband after the indebtedness to plaintiff was incurred. It is also true that the family have two automobiles, which were acquired also by said husband but which are now claimed as the separate property of the wife, although the husband says he may, and still does, use them as and when he pleases.

Finally, on September 17, 1926, only a few weeks prior to the trial of this action, said defendants entered into a written agreement, whereby said husband relinquished to his wife all the community interests in the above-mentioned and three other pieces of real property of the community; also all the household furniture and furnishings of their dwelling and the two above-mentioned automobiles. What the defendant husband received in return for his concession of his rights in property worth, he says, more than $100,000, does not appear, except that it was agreed that property, if any, acquired thereafter should be his own, even though it stood in the name of his said wife, and to her he accorded a corresponding right. It will be noted that this written agreement between husband and wife was made an exhibit to the joint answer of defendants; was filed for record in the office of the county recorder; and was by defendants introduced and received in evidence on the trial of this cause.

The defendants had findings and judgment in their favor in the court below. The case is before us now after passing over the road of trial and appellate procedure with unusual celerity. Refusing to check its speed to a final determination, we are considering it out of order and at the expense of other causes, although it is but fair to state that respondents are "riding to a fall." The case was at issue on December 8, 1926; was tried on December 20, 1926; and judgment for defendants ordered the same day. Notice of appeal was filed in due course, and at the May calendar in Los Angeles a motion to dismiss the appeal and for affirmance of the judgment was made and denied. At the July calendar in San Francisco respondents noticed a motion styled a motion to dismiss appeal and for affirmance of the judgment on the ground that a casual inspection of the record would disclose that said appeal was frivolous and not taken in good faith.

We were not impressed with this showing until respondent Francis D. Adams, attorney at law as aforesaid, appeared in his own behalf and in behalf of his said wife, and represented that the respondents were losing thousands of dollars by this litigation; that appellant had filed a lis pendens against "our property," and was harassing and annoying them; that this was one of several suits brought by the same plaintiff; and that, after filing them, plaintiff would make no effort to bring them to trial; that the conduct of plaintiff's attorney in the premises was an "outrage," and said defendant intended to take the matter up with the bar association. Yielding to the prima facie force of these statements, we agreed to entertain the motion in accord with the doctrine announced in Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Doran, 161 Cal. 118, 120, 118 P. 526, where it was said:

"It is a rule of convenience for the expedition of the business of this court that it will not ordinarily entertain a motion to dismiss involving an examination of the record in advance of the hearing upon the merits. But where, as in this case, a mere inspection of the record discloses that no relief can be given to the appellant this court will consider the question, to save unnecessary delay and expense to litigants."

Although this motion is styled a motion to dismiss appeal and affirm judgment, it is tantamount to a motion to advance the cause on the calendar and hear it on its merits with the record in such condition as it is then found to be. In Randall v. Duff, 105 Cal. 271, 272, 273, 38 P. 739, speaking of a motion similar to the one before us, the court said:

"This is in substance only a motion to advance the cause for hearing prior to being reached in its order upon the calendar; and it can be readily seen that, if such procedure is permitted, the number of respondents who will urge an early hearing of their causes on account of the lack of merit in the appeal will be increased to such a degree as to practically dispense with the regular calendars of causes."

In Chino Land, etc., Co. v. Hamaker, 171 Cal. 689, 690, 154 P. 850, it is said:

"This motion is made long before the appeals are reached in regular order for hearing in this court, the real purpose of the motion being, of course, to advance the hearing of the appeals in this court, over many other appeals preceding them on our calendar, when there is in fact no good reason for such advancement. It is apparent that this is not a proper case for such action as is desired. Mere consideration of the motion necessarily involves a full examination of the record and briefs of counsel as to the merits of the appeal, precisely the same examination we would be compelled to make upon the hearing of the appeals on their merits when the cases are regularly reached for hearing."

See, also, 2 Cal. Juris, § 436, p. 749; Id. § 577, p. 979.

Being thus required to examine the record we have done so, although we have not had cited to us by either side a single authority on the questions involved.

[1] Appellant urges as his sole ground on the merits that the evidence shows, without substantial or any conflict, that the transaction in suit, and particularly the deed of January 5, 1926, from Brick and wife to respondent Gertrude B. Adams, and the written agreement of September 17, 1926, were purely voluntary as to her, without consideration moving from her, and with the intent of said defendant Francis D. Adams to hinder, delay, and defraud plaintiff as judgment creditor.

[2] We are much inclined to agree with appellant. For, if a man keeps his bank account in the name of another admittedly to prevent his creditor from reaching it by legal process, and then takes his entire estate, and either puts it in his wife's name, or deposits it in the name of his secretary, knowing that the judgments are in existence, his mere ipse dixit that it is not to defraud his creditor would hardly create a bona fide conflict in the testimony. "While a finding will not be disturbed on appeal if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence from which it springs, 'the evidence, in order to raise a conflict, must be such as to present a fair and reasonable ground for a difference of opinion' (Field v. Shorb, 99 Cal. 661, 34 P. 504; Felsenthal v. Warring, 40 Cal. App. 119, 180 P. 67)." White v. Greenwood, 52 Cal. App. 737, 742, 199 P. 1095, 1098.

[3] Even if said defendant had kept certain of his property in his own name, it would not necessarily have prevented the transaction in question from being fraudulent. Benson v. Harriman, 55 Cal. App. 483, 204 P. 255; First National Bank v. Maxwell, 123 Cal. 360, 55 P. 980, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64.

[4] Neither is it necessary to prove guilty knowledge in the wife, inasmuch as admittedly she gave no consideration for the transfers, which were purely attempted gifts to her. Chalmers v. Sheehy, 132 Cal. 459, 64 P. 709, 84 Am. St. Rep. 62; Judson v. Lyford, 84 Cal. 505, 24 P. 286; Knox v. Blanckenburg, 28 Cal. App. 298, 152 P. 59.

[5] Defendant Francis D. Adams took the stand and was careful not to state that he had any property on September 17, 1926, other than that relinquished to his wife by said written agreement. If this be true, then as a matter of law the conveyances, if they be deemed to have occurred on that date, were fraudulent. Sec. 3442, Civ. Code. The intent of the grantor in such case is immaterial. Atkinson v. Western, etc., Syndicate, 170 Cal. 506, 150 P. 360. If a transaction of this kind were upheld by the courts, then fraud uncurbed and brazen would stalk over all the land. We need not, however, pass definitely upon this question, for the motion must be denied because of failure of the court below to allow and consider material evidence in the case. This action by the court may be illustrated by setting out proceedings upon two occasions during the trial.

[6] The defendant Gertrude B. Adams was called as a witness by plaintiff under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure and testified in part:

"Q. By Mr. Monteleone: When did you acquire that property, Mrs. Adams? A. Last December. Q. How much did you pay for the property? A. Well, do you mean how much it is worth, how much is the value? Q. No, how much did you actually pay for that property? A. $17,000. Q. Is there any mortgage against the property at the present time? A. Yes. Q. Was there a mortgage against the property at the time you acquired it? A. Yes. Q. How much of a mortgage? A. $7,000. Q. You paid $17,000 cash? A. Yes. Q. Now, where did you get the money to buy that property? Mr. Peck: Just a minute, if your honor please. Object to that on the ground it is a privileged communication. If she got it from her husband, it is certainly a communication between husband and wife, about which I believe she cannot testify. The Court: Well, I cannot assume that she is going to testify that she got it from her husband. She may have got it from the estate of some relative. You may answer. A. I got it from my husband. Mr. Peck: Now, we move to strike out the answer, if the court please, as a privileged communication. The Court: The answer will be stricken out as a privileged communication, a transaction between husband and wife under the section. Q. By Mr. Monteleone: How long did you have the $17,000 to apply on that property before you purchased the same? Mr. Peck: We object to that as immaterial, if your honor please. The Court: What is the materiality of that? Mr. Monteleone: I intend to show, if the court please, that the money was acquired by this witness a short time before the property was acquired. The Court: Oh, I don't think that is material whether she had it one minute before it was acquired or not; I don't think the length of time she had it is material. Sustained. Q. By Mr. Monteleone: Did you acquire the $17,000 from inheritance? A. No. Mr. Adams: Object to that; already asked and answered. The Court: Overruled. Mr. Adams: No, that was stricken out. Pardon me. Withdraw the objection. Q. By Mr. Monteleone: What was your answer? A. No. Q. Did you acquire it from any of your relatives? A. Yes. Q. Did you acquire it from any of your relatives outside of your husband? A. No. Mr. Peck: Now, if your honor please, we move that the last two questions and answers be stricken out on the ground it is clearly a privileged communication. The Court: Yes, the answers will be stricken out. That is an adroit, but indirect way of adducing testimony from this witness of the fact that the transaction was between herself and her husband. I suppose you can get at that by elimination as well as any other way, but I think the purpose of the law is to keep such transactions out altogether on the ground that transactions between husband and wife are privileged and are not admissible under the section, that is, where the act is between husband and wife, so the motion to strike out will be granted."

The defendant Francis D. Adams was later called as a witness by plaintiff under said section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and testified in part:

"Q. Do you operate any automobiles? A. I do. Q. How many? A. Two. Q. In whose names do the automobiles stand? A. Gertrude B. Adams. Q. Do you know where Gertrude B. Adams got the money to buy the automobiles? A. I do. Q. Where, from whom? A. Why, she got it from me; that is, indirectly. One of them she got from me some time, I don't know, five years ago, and that car was eventually traded for a Cleveland car which she now has, and she purchased herself a Paige car, which she now has. Q. You are operating the two cars? A. I operate either one of them when I please. Q. And you furnished the money to buy both of the cars? A. In the first instance, yes. Q. Do you know anything about this property designated as lot 17 in tract 6388? A. I do. Q. Do you know when that property was acquired? A. I do. Q. When? A. That property was acquired on or about the 17th of December. That is, the transaction was arranged about the 17th of December and continued thru until sometime in January or February of 1926. Q. Do you know how much was paid for that property? A. $17,000 cash and an $8,000 mortgage assumed. Q. Do you know where the $17,000 came from? A. I do. Q. To pay for that property? A. I do. Q. From whom? A. Me. On or about— Q. Do you know anything about the property— A. I want to explain that answer, tho. The Court: You may do so. A. On or about the 17th day of December I borrowed $5,000 from the Bank of America, and I gave Mrs. Adams a present then, it being just before Christmas, of $1,000 of that $5,000 which I had borrowed. A few days later I received a fee of some $35,000 or $38,000, which was paid to me in gold bonds, payable to bearer, and I gave Mrs. Adams, of that $35,000 then received, $16,000, and a further sum of $4,000 which I gave her in cash as a Christmas present. I had then left—together with my other moneys, I had then left in my possession and in the bank and under my control and in my name approximately $25,000 to $30,000. Q. By Mr. Monteleone: When did you give the $16,000 to your wife? A. I gave the $16,000 to Mrs. Adams between the 20th, or about the 20th, 22d, it might be, I forget just the day, of December, and the first of February of 1926. That is, the 22d of December, 1925, to the first of February, 1926. The first $1,000 as I stated, I gave to her from a loan made to me by the Bank of America, of which I gave her $1,000 on the 17th of December, and then I gave her an additional $7,000 a few days later, and then I gave her $9,000 a few days later, and then I gave her $3,000 or $4,000 in cash a few days—along in there; I don't know just how I gave her that last $4,000. Q. How was the first money evidenced that you gave to her? Was that given by check or otherwise? A. I gave that to her— Mr. Peck: Now, wait a minute. I think, if your honor please, this comes clearly within the privileged communications, and I move that the answer be stricken out—all that testimony as to what he gave her and what he did about it. The Court: The motion will be granted. It calls absolutely for transactions with Mrs. Adams. Mr. Monteleone: May it please the court, the witness had volunteered the statement himself. The Court: He has not had his wife's consent yet to testify against her, and the section reads, as I remember, that neither party can testify against the other without the other's consent, and she has not consented, so the motion will be granted. All that testimony as to the gifts of money, transfers of money from Mr. to Mrs. Adams, will be stricken out. He cannot volunteer that testimony without his wife's consent."

[7] It is manifest that the testimony here excluded was pertinent to the issue tendered by the defendants in their answer setting up said written agreement of September 17, 1926, which was Exhibit A thereto. Every question and answer related specifically to such matter covered by said agreement. It must be held that defendants as husband and wife, by filing for record a written agreement between themselves, and by pleading it in defense to plaintiff's action, and by introducing it in evidence, put the bona fides of such paper in issue, and thereby waived expressly any privilege thrown around them by the law. It would be monstrous if husband and wife might between themselves conspire to defraud the creditors of the one or the other, and to conceal their act produce a written instrument which is immune from all inquiries, and which must be accepted by the defrauded party as final. The freedom of contract between husband and wife and the power to transmute community property into separate property or vice versa by agreement between themselves renders it imperative that, when such an agreement is relied upon by their joint answer, thereby the whole subject-matter of said agreement is open to inquiry which may include communications from one to the other. This we understand upon examination of the transcript to be the effect of the holding in Johnston v. St. Sure, 50 Cal. App. 735, 195 P. 947, rehearing denied by this court.

[8] There as here a defendant husband alleged that the property in question was the separate property of his wife. Nothing, therefore, that she could say when under examination as a witness could in any wise affect or injure her husband, if the allegations of their joint answer were true. Moreover, the witness refused to answer questions practically the same as those stricken out in the case before us. The court held that the witness should answer the questions, and that by the allegations of the answer husband and wife had waived all privilege in connection with the said transaction. Besides, the communications stricken out in this case were not such communications as are privileged anyway. Poulson v. Stanley, 122 Cal. 655, 658, 55 P. 605, 68 Am. St. Rep. 73; Savings

Union Bank, etc., Co. v. Crowley, 176 Cal. 543, 547, 169 P. 67.

[9, 10] The court also was in error in excluding the answer to the question as to whether the defendant Francis D. Adams was then insolvent. This was December 20, 1926. The contract between husband and wife was dated September 17, 1926, a date only about three months prior thereto. If he was insolvent on September 17, 1926, the transaction was a fraud as a matter of law. Sec. 3442 of the Civil Code; Atkinson v. Western, etc., Syndicate, supra. Plaintiff should have been allowed to start with said defendant's condition on the trial, and, if insolvent then, to trace it back at least to September 17th, which was not a remote date.

This record presents a clear case of an attorney at law evading his just obligations by trying to take advantage of his knowledge of the infirmities of the law, and then trying to have this court peremptorily sustain him in his conduct. The lawyer, above all others, should redeem his personal obligations, if for no other reason than to prevent reflection upon the profession.

The appeal, instead of being frivolous and taken in bad faith, appears on the contrary to have been taken in good faith, and to be meritorious.

NAIL et al. v. JACKS.

McELROY v. SAME.

(Sac. 3858.)

Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1927.

1. Waters and water courses ☞213—Fact that first diversion of water was for private purpose is not inconsistent with subsequent dedication to public.

The fact that the first diversion of water was for a private purpose is not inconsistent with a theory of a subsequent dedication to a public use.

2. Waters and water courses ☞247(1)—Defendant's evidence held insufficient to meet plaintiffs' claim that defendant and predecessors had dedicated water of creek to public use.

In action to determine water rights, where plaintiffs claimed that defendant and his predecessors had dedicated water of a creek to public use by selling it to landowners for many years for irrigation purposes, defendant's evidence held insufficient to meet the claim or to substantiate his claim that the water was distributed to other landowners only after his own requirements were satisfied.

Appeals from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Actions by James E. Nail and another and by Phillip McElroy against A. R. Jacks. Judgments for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

L. H. Hughes, of Quincy, for appellants.
H. B. Wolfe, of Quincy, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Separate actions were brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant for judgments fixing and determining their rights in the use of certain water, restricting and enjoining defendant from interfering with such use, and for actual and exemplary damages for defendant's failure to furnish plaintiffs water for irrigation purposes during the season of 1924. The plaintiffs alleged that for more than 40 years the premises described in their respective complaints had been supplied with water for irrigation from Meadow Valley creek appropriated, diverted, and distributed by defendant and his predecessors, under a dedication to a public use. The defendant in his answers admitted that for many years the lands of plaintiffs have been irrigated with the waters from the creek, furnished by defendant and his predecessors for an agreed compensation, but alleged that any such distribution was at all times surplus water available only after the requirements of the defendant were supplied. He denied dedication of the water to a public use, or that he had refused to furnish plaintiffs with water during 1924, alleging a shortage of water during that year, by reason of which there was not a sufficient supply with which to meet his own demands and supply the requirements of plaintiffs.

Judgments were rendered in favor of the defendant and against plaintiffs for costs. Plaintiffs have appealed, the two appeals being consolidated pursuant to stipulation. The transcript was filed in this court October 9, 1925, and the appellants' brief on November 27 of the same year. The time within which respondent might file his brief expired on December 26, 1925. Nothing further appearing of record, the cause (with others) was placed on a special calendar, and the respondent ordered to show cause why the judgments therein should not be reversed or some other appropriate order be made. Counsel appearing as of record for the respective parties were duly notified by the clerk of this action of the court, but when the case was called no appearance was made on either side and the same was ordered submitted.

The trial court found that the approprition and use of the water in Meadow Valley creek by defendant and his predecessors was for a private purpose, to wit, for furnishing power for the operation of a sawmill and for mining purposes, and not for the purpose of sale and distribution, and that, upon cessation of the operation of such sawmill and mining operations, the water was used by the predecessors of the defendant for irrigation purposes and the surplus thereof sold by defendant and his predecessors to adjoining landowners, among whom were plaintiffs and their predecessors, but that neither the defendant nor his predecessors dedicated the waters of the creek to a public use. It further found, however, that the lands in Meadow Valley are agricultural in character and in order to produce crops irrigation is necessary, and that for a period of 40 years before the commencement of the action, defendant and his predecessors had appropriated the waters of the creek and diverted the same by means of a ditch through the lands of the plaintiffs and through lands adjoining the same, and that during that time the plaintiffs and their predecessors have been supplied with water for irrigation purposes from Meadow Valley creek as appropriated, diverted, owned, and used by defendant and his predecessors, for an agreed compensation, renewed from year to year, at a rate agreed upon by the parties.

The contention of the appellants is that the trial court assumed an erroneous view of the evidence tending to establish the dedication of the water in Meadow Valley creek to public use, and that the testimony bearing upon the issue of dedication of the water in the creek to a public use is without conflict. From our examination of the record we are of the view that the contention of the appellants is correct. The record is silent as to any positive or competent evidence showing when and how, or by whom, or for what purpose the ditch was constructed and the waters first diverted. The record does show, however, that as far back as 1871 the waters were being used for power, mining, and irrigation purposes, the ditch having been constructed and used prior to that time. For many years prior to the closing down of a sawmill operated on the ditch the water was generally used for the irrigation of farm lands in Meadow Valley, for which use a rental was regularly paid. Defendant himself testified that since his earliest recollection the water had "been confined to irrigation by the bulk of the Meadow Valley people." From the testimony of the defendant it also appears that as the ranchers in Meadow Valley increased their clearings they were required to pay him an increased rate for water. The evidence introduced on behalf of the plaintiffs is indubitably to the effect that since 1871, if not before, there was on the part of the owners of the ditch a "holding out" to sell water to any applicant within the area adjacent to the system and within the limits of the supply, and that the defendant and his predecessors have actually sold water to the landowners who applied for the same.

[1] The fact, assuming it to be a fact, that the first diversion of the water was for a private purpose is not inconsistent with the theory of a subsequent dedication to a public use. Traber v. Railroad Comm., 183 Cal. 304, 312, 191 P. 366.

[2] There is nothing in the record to substantiate the claim of the defendant that he distributed water to the other landowners in Meadow Valley only from a surplus after his own requirements were satisfied. The history of the distribution and use of water in the valley does not support such a contention. During the dry season of 1924 there was not sufficient water flowing in the ditch to fully supply the demands of all the users, and a controversy arose between these plaintiffs and defendant over the amount of water the plaintiffs might use. The defendant endeavored to arrange for an equitable division of the water among the landowners supplied from the ditch. He offered to supply plaintiffs, whom he accused of wasting the water, with water to the extent of the whole supply which was available, and in proportion to the needs of himself and others to whom he had contracted to sell water. Being unable to arrive at a satisfactory understanding with the plaintiffs, the defendant shut off their supply and returned to them the amount of the annual rental theretofore paid by them.

The real controversy between the parties seems to be over the amount of damages alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiffs by reason of the shutting off of the water. Much of the evidence, in fact, practically all of the testimony in behalf of the defense, is addressed to soil, water, and crop conditions in Meadow Valley during the season of 1924, and is responsive only to the issue of damages and to the question whether or not the plaintiffs were entitled to any preference over the other consumers in a time of water shortage. It does not meet the claim of the appellants that the water diverted from Meadow Valley creek by defendant and his predecessors has been and is dedicated to a public use.

The judgments are reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by Charles L. Porter against Charles R. Miller and wife and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. Wiley, Hewitt, Ford & Crump, Hewitt, Ford, McCormick & Crump, and Charles L. Porter, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Haas & Dunnigan and H. E. Forster, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Plaintiff seeks by this action to rescind an agreement made by him with defendants for the purchase and sale of an apartment house located in Los Angeles, Cal., the amended complaint alleging that he was induced to enter into said contract by false and untrue representations about material matters made to him both by defendants and their agents, Kells & Grant, the real estate firm through whom the deal was consummated, said alleged material misrepresentations mainly relating to the income, gross and net, derived from said apartment house, the number of vacancies therein during 1924, the year preceding the purchase, and failure to accord plaintiff an opportunity to inspect the books of said apartment house as to income and expenditures prior to consummation of the transaction.

The trial court found in substance that the books and records of said apartment house, particularly the monthly record sheets and expense sheets for the year 1924, were voluntarily exhibited to plaintiff in the presence of C. L. Edwards, a representative of Kells & Grant, and that plaintiff did, on that occasion and on a number of occasions thereafter prior to consummation of the deal, inspect same and make such memoranda therefrom as he desired; that there were only the usual vacancies in said apartment house during the year 1924, such vacancies not exceeding 12.75 per cent. of the entire available time; that plaintiff in entering into said contract did not rely upon representations alleged to have been made by defendants and their agents that the annual gross rentals received from said property were $26,000, or any other representations relative to income therefrom, but that prior to consummating the transaction on a number of occasions while the matter was in escrow, plaintiff had access to and saw certain documents showing the gross income from said premises for 1924 to be $25,377.52, which documents upon careful rechecking showed gross receipts for the year to be $25,716.55, and the gross income from rentals to be $21,847.70; that the representations made by defendants were not untrue and were not made with the intent to induce plaintiff to enter into said contract, escrow, or transaction. The court accordingly gave judgment for defendants, from which plaintiff has prosecuted this appeal.

[1] Conceding the correctness of the principle that: "A judgment cannot be reversed because the evidence is conflicting. On the contrary, the rule is established by a host of decisions that an appellate court will not disturb a verdict of a jury or findings of a court when there is a substantial conflict of evidence on material points and when there is some evidence to support the verdict or findings" (2 Cal. Jur. § 543, p. 921)—appellant nevertheless asserts that this rule has no application in this case, as the evidence here is without real conflict in that all testimony for defendants may be paraphrased into the four short words, "He saw the books," whereas appellant's testimony is supported by documentary evidence, such as the following proviso, which was written in the printed form of contract executed February 7, 1925: "This contract is subject to verification of rentals and expenses as furnished purchaser, all books and records of owner to be open for inspection for that purpose"—said proviso tending to prove that plaintiff had not seen any books or records prior to that date; likewise telegram of March 10, 1925, from appellant to defendants' agents, requesting that verified statement of annual rents be filed with escrow and demanding revision of contract if less than $26,000 annually; otherwise rescission and return of deposit. Appellant also calls attention to apparent variances in affidavits made by defendant Charles R. Miller relative to income upon filing his license tax and income tax returns.

[2] It is true that the conflict in the evidence must be real and substantial upon material points, but such true conflict is clearly shown here. There is abundant evidence to support the findings and judgment. The showing made by appellant is directly contradicted by the testimony, not only of defendants, but of members of the real estate firm, and particularly C. L. Edwards. The existence of documentary evidence does not prevent application of the rule above set forth. As said in 2 Cal. Jur. §§ 547, 548, pp. 931, 932:

"It has been contended that the rule of 'conflict' does not apply where the evidence is documentary, and that in such case the appellate court should weigh and measure it by the same standard that the trial court is required to apply. But in view of the fact that one of the reasons for the rule is the essential distinction between the trial and appellate courts as to their functions to decide questions of fact, such a contention is untenable, and it has been so held."

Criticizing at length the memorandum opinion of the trial court, appellant attacks the finding to the effect that his purported offer to restore fell short of the requirements of our Code with respect to rescission. Under the circumstances such finding can in no way prejudice or injure the rights of appellant, and it becomes unnecessary for us to pass upon its merits. The sole ground of rescission urged is fraud. We have hereinabove upheld the finding that appellant was not defrauded. Hence on this appeal it is immaterial whether or not the alleged offer to restore was made in proper form or due time, or whether or not a certain letter dated April 28th from appellant to defendants constituted sufficient notice of rescission. Lacking convincing proof of misrepresentation and fraud, the attempted rescission must in any event fail.

[3] Appellant also attacks finding III, relative to scope of authority of Kells & Grant and their employees as agents of defendants; finding V, which apparently contains an erroneous statement that plaintiff called to look at said apartment house in response to advertisement of February 1, 1925, whereas plaintiff first looked at said apartment house during the Christmas holidays of 1924; finding IX, with reference to purported offer of restoration; and other findings in general as being without support in the record. The matters urged here are so trivial that but a brief reference to them will suffice. We perceive no error in any finding which has resulted in a miscarriage of justice or which has prejudiced or injured the rights of appellant. As a whole the findings are consistent and amply supported by the evidence. "Errors and irregularities in a verdict or findings which are without prejudice will not justify reversal. * * * But if a judgment is amply supported by findings which are unob-jectionable, findings on other issues become immaterial, and it is not ground for reversal that such other findings are unsupported by evidence or are uncertain or otherwise defective." 2 Cal. Jur. § 612, pp. 1028, 1029.

Judgment affirmed.

201 Cal. 701

WILSON et ux. v. CROWN TRANSFER & STORAGE CO. (L. A. 8427.)

Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1927.

1. Warehousemen ⇨34(7)—Verdict against warehouseman of goods destroyed by fire held supported by evidence (Warehouse Receipts Act, § 8).

Burden being on defendant, in action for conversion of goods destroyed by fire while stored in its warehouse, to prove its freedom from negligence as to cause of fire, under Warehouse Receipts Act, § 8 (St. 1909, p. 438), verdict for plaintiffs on conflicting evidence amounted to implied finding that such burden was not maintained and was supported by evidence.

2. Warehousemen ⇨34(5)—Instruction that warehouseman must prove freedom from negligence and lawful excuse for not returning goods not destroyed by fire held proper (Warehouse Receipts Act, § 8).

In action for conversion of goods stored in defendant's warehouse, court properly instructed plaintiff that, if plaintiffs established demand for goods, offer to pay any amounts due defendant, and latter's refusal to redeliver them, burden was on defendant to prove its defense that part of goods was destroyed by fire, without fault or negligence on its part, and to establish lawful excuse for failure to return goods not so destroyed, in view of Warehouse Receipts Act, § 8 (St. 1909, p. 438).

3. Appeal and error ⇨1066—Instruction to view with distrust weaker evidence than was available is not prejudicial, in absence of evidence to which applicable (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061).

Giving of instruction, embodying provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, that evidence offered should be viewed with distrust, when stronger and more satisfactory evidence is within power of party offering it, is not prejudicial error, when there is nothing in evidence to which rule could apply.

4. Warehousemen ⇨34(10)—Evidence held to justify instructions that warehouseman's mingling of depositors' goods, if proximately contributing to fire, was negligence (Warehouse Receipts Act, § 22).

In action against warehouseman for conversion, evidence that defendant's officers told plaintiff that tin box, containing partly burned matches and wrapping paper, had been taken from room in which plaintiff's goods were stored, and intimated that its contents were cause of fire which destroyed goods, held to justify instructions reflecting provisions of Warehouse Receipts Act, § 22 (St. 1909, p. 441), that warehouseman must keep depositors' goods separate and that mingling of plaintiff's goods, if proximately contributing to fire, was negligence as matter of law.

5. Warehousemen ⇨34(10) Instruction that warehouseman, refusing to inform depositor of circumstances, is presumed to have willfully permitted loss of goods, held warranted (Civ. Code, § 1838).

In action for conversion of goods stored in defendant's warehouse, evidence that defendant's vice president, actively connected with affairs of warehouse, informed plaintiff's agent, on written demand for goods shortly after fire, that there was no use demanding them because they had burned up, held to justify instruction, based on Civ. Code, § 1838, that warehouseman refusing to inform depositor of circumstances under which loss or injury to goods occurred, so far as known to him, is presumed to have willfully, or by gross negligence, permitted loss or injury to occur.

6. Warehousemen ⇨34(10)—Instructions held properly modified and refused as eliminating question of warehouseman's negligence causing fire destroying goods.

In action for conversion of goods stored in defendant's warehouse, defendant's instruction as to circumstances under which it would be guilty of negligence held properly modified, so as to instruct jury that defendant would be guilty of conversion if goods were destroyed by fire, unless shown that fire was not result of defendant's negligence, and instruction that question of negligence was immaterial in determining whether there was conversion properly refused, as entirely eliminating question of negligence as necessary element of defense.

7. Warehousemen ⇨34(10)—Instructions that depositors are presumed to know contents of warehouse receipt and limited to recovery of amount stated therein held properly refused.

Where warehouseman, sued for conversion of goods stored, was fully advised by plaintiffs as to true value thereof, but made no demand for or suggestion of excess storage charge during 18 months, court properly refused instructions that plaintiffs were conclusively presumed to know contents of warehouse receipt, delivered to them two weeks before destruction of goods by fire, and could not recover more than amount to which defendant's liability was limited therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by C. Lewis Wilson and wife against the Crown Transfer & Storage Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ticknor, Carter & Webster, of Pasadena, for appellant.

Culver & Nourse, of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Action in conversion brought by plaintiffs as the owners of certain household goods against the defendant for damages upon its failure to return said goods to plaintiffs after the latter had stored them with defendant in its warehouse. The plaintiffs, on July 9, 1920, delivered said goods to the defendant for the purpose of having the same stored and kept by defendant in its said warehouse. On July 11, 1922, plaintiffs demanded of defendant a return of said goods, but defendant failed and refused to return the same, except a trunk containing certain clothing and wearing apparel in a greatly damaged condition. The complaint contained three causes of action. The first was for the conversion of the goods, which defendant failed to return, valued at $8,500; the second cause of action was for damages to the trunk and contents which were returned, the damage being alleged to be $450; and the third cause of action was based upon the contract for the storage of said goods. At the trial the court directed plaintiffs to elect whether they would stand on the first or third cause of action, and plaintiffs elected to stand upon the first cause of action. Their election, therefore, eliminated the third cause of action, and we will have no further occasion to refer to it. The defendant justified its refusal to return said goods upon the ground that a fire occurred in its warehouse on the 9th day of February, 1922, and destroyed the greater portion of said goods, without any fault or negligence on the part of defendant. The cause was tried by a jury, which returned a verdict in plaintiffs' favor in the sum of $3,500, and judgment upon said verdict was entered accordingly. From this verdict the defendant has appealed.

[1] The grounds upon which appellant has based its claim for a reversal of said judgment are the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and errors of law committed by the court in giving certain instructions and in refusing to give certain proposed instructions of the appellant. We will consider these grounds in the order and manner in which the appellant has presented them in its brief. The court instructed the jury that the burden was upon appellant to prove that the goods were destroyed without fault or negligence on its part. In this connection appellant states in its brief:

"In considering whether or not the evidence is sufficient to justify the verdict, the effect of this instruction is very important. We are convinced that under the authorities this instruction was erroneous, and for convenience and because of its being so closely related to the question whether or not the verdict is supported by the evidence, we will consider the two questions together."

[2] We understand appellant's position to be that if this instruction was erroneous, and consequently the burden of proving negligence as to the cause of the fire was upon the respondents, then the evidence fails to maintain this burden and the verdict in respondents' favor finds no support in the evidence. We do not understand appellant to concede the converse of this proposition to be true, that is, if the burden is upon appellant to show it was free from negligence as to the cause of the fire, then the verdict is supported by the evidence. As we view the case, however, we think this latter proposition is substantially correct. If the burden was upon the appellant to prove that it was free from negligence, then it must be held that the verdict of the jury in respondents' favor amounted to an implied finding that this burden had not been, in the opinion of the jury, overcome by appellant's evidence. This would be so without doubt if there was any conflict in the evidence, and we do not think that it can be held that such conflict does not exist. The importance of this instruction, therefore, becomes important. This instruction reads as follows:

"Plaintiffs' first cause of action is based upon an alleged conversion by defendant of the goods stored by them, that is, by the plaintiffs, with the exception of the contents of the trunk returned to plaintiffs, which unreturned goods plaintiffs allege were of the value of $8,500. In this form of action, proof of a demand by plaintiffs upon the defendant for the stored goods and of an offer by them to pay any prices due the defendant, and of a refusal by the defendant to redeliver the goods, is sufficient prima facie to sustain plaintiffs' action. If you believe from the preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiffs did establish such demand, offer and refusal, then you are instructed that the burden of proof devolved upon the defendant to prove its defense that part of plaintiffs' goods were destroyed by fire without fault or negligence on the part of defendant; also to establish a lawful excuse for its failure to return the goods which were not destroyed by fire."

This instruction is supplemented by a further instruction (No. 9) in part as follows:

"In this case the burden is upon the defendant to establish by a preponderance of the evidence in its affirmative defense that certain of plaintiffs' goods were destroyed by fire without negligence on its part. Unless the defendant has established by such preponderance its defense that certain goods were destroyed by fire and that such destruction was due to no negligence on its part, your verdict in so far as said goods is concerned should be for the plaintiffs."

The force of these instructions was further accentuated by other instructions given by the court, but all of such instructions related to the same subject—that is, the burden of proving that the fire was caused by the negligence of the appellant—and they will therefore be considered together as one instruction. Section 8 of the Warehouse Receipts Act (Stats. 1909, p. 437) is as follows:

"A warehouseman, in the absence of some lawful excuse provided by this act, is bound to deliver the goods upon a demand made either by the holder of a receipt for the goods or by the depositor, if such demand is accompanied with—

"(a) An offer to satisfy the warehouseman's lien.

"(b) An offer to surrender the receipt if negotiable, with such indorsements as would be necessary for the negotiation of the receipt, and

"(c) A readiness and willingness to sign, when the goods are delivered, an acknowledgment that they have been delivered, if such signature is requested by the warehouseman.

"In case the warehouseman refuses or fails to deliver the goods in compliance with a demand by the holder or depositor so accompanied, the burden shall be upon the warehouseman to establish the existence of a lawful excuse for such refusal."

It is conceded that this section of the statute applies to the present action and that respondents complied with all its requirements at the time of their demand upon appellant for the return of said goods. Appellant, however, contends that when it had shown that the goods stored with it were destroyed by fire, that it had established a prima facie defense, and that the burden then shifts to respondents to show that the fire was due to appellant's negligence. We think this question has been settled by the decisions of this court as well as those of other jurisdictions, so that there can be no doubt as to what is now the law upon this subject. In the cases of Wilson v. California C. R. R. Co., 94 Cal. 166, 29 P. 861, 17 L. R. A. 685, and Dieterle v. Bekin, 143 Cal. 683, 77 P. 664, the precise question was before this court and decided adversely to appellant's contention. In the case of Dieterle v. Bekin, supra, this court said:

"The case of Wilson v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 62 Cal. 164, is cited by respondent to the point that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff here to show that the loss was attributable to defendant's negligence. We have no quarrel with the decision of that case as applied to the facts involved therein, but the facts as well as the issues were different from the facts and issues here. There the plaintiff assumed the burden of showing the negligence of defendant in his complaint, and the question of whether defendant was negligent at all seems to have been in grave doubt. Here the defendant has assumed the burden of showing that the loss was not the result of his negligence in his answer, and that he did not use due care in storing the property we have already seen. As giving further scope to this distinction, see the comment on that case by this court in the case of Wilson v. California, etc., R. R. Co., 94 Cal. 172 [29 P. 861, 17 L. R. A. 685]."

There appears to be a marked line of distinction made by the decisions between two classes of cases wherein this question has arisen. Where the plaintiff alleges that the goods stored were lost by fire due to negligence of the defendant, then the burden of proving these allegations is upon the plaintiff, but when the plaintiff's pleadings contain no such allegation, but the defendant, seeking to justify its refusal to return the goods, sets up their destruction by fire and alleges that the fire was not due to its fault or negligence, then the burden is upon the defendant to prove the allegations of its affirmative defense and show that it was free from negligence as to the cause of the fire. In addition to the two cases just referred to, the following cases lay down the same rule: Metropolitan Electric Service Co. v. Walker, 102 Okl. 102, 226 P. 1042; Caldwell v. Skinner, 100 Kan. 567, 164 P. 1166; and Rudy v. Quincy Market, etc., Co., 249 Mass. 492, 144 N. E. 286. The two last-mentioned cases were decided under so-called uniform warehouse receipt acts similar in all essential respects to that in force in our own state. In the case from the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, the court held under a section of the act corresponding to section 8 of the act of our state that while the rule was different under the common law, it had been changed by the Uniform Warehouse Receipts Act of that state (G. L. c. 105, § 15). In that action the trial court instructed the jury that the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that the defendant was guilty of negligence. In reversing the case the court held that the instruction was in accordance with the rule of the common law, but the Warehouse Receipts Act had changed the rule and that "the design of the act was to remove the confusion or uncertainty arising from conflict of statutes or decisions among the several states and to make plain and general the controlling rules of law. * * * It would be difficult to give a reasonable construction to the statute without attributing to it the force of placing the burden of proof for failure to deliver on the warehouseman."

The appellant relies upon the cases of Wilson v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., supra; Runkle v. Southern Pacific Milling Co., 184 Cal. 714, 195 P. 398, 16 A. L. R. 275; and Atwood v. Southern California Ice Co., 63 Cal. App. 343, 218 P. 283. The case of Wilson v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., supra, was considered and discussed in the case of Dieterle v. Bekin, supra. Whatever was said in the Runkle and Atwood Cases upon this subject was not necessary to the decision of any question in either of those cases. They were both against warehouse companies, and in each case the judgment in favor of plaintiff was affirmed on appeal. We are satisfied that the great weight of authority in this and other states sustains the instruction given by the court. It follows, therefore, that it was not error for the court to so instruct the jury and also that the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict.

[3] The next instruction to which appellant objects embodied the provisions of section 2061, Code of Civil Procedure, to the effect "that if weaker and less satisfactory evidence is offered, when it appears that stronger and more satisfactory was within the power of the party, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust." There appears to be no evidence in the record justifying the giving of this instruction. However, it has been held that the giving of it was not prejudicial error when there was nothing in the evidence to which the rule could apply. Brown v. Sharp-Hauser Contracting Co., 159 Cal. 89, 112 P. 874; Lawyer v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 23 Cal. App. 543, 138 P. 920.

[4] The court gave two instructions reflecting the provisions of section 22 of the Warehouse Receipts Act to the effect that a warehouseman must keep the goods of a depositor separate from those of other depositors, and that if the jury should find that appellant failed in this respect as to respondents' goods, but mingled them with goods of other depositors and that this mingling of the goods proximately contributed to the fire, causing the loss of said goods, this was negligence as a matter of law on the part of appellant in the operation of said warehouse. Appellant insists that the record is absolutely destitute of any evidence as to the mingling of any of respondents' goods with those of other depositors with the possible exception of that referring to a tin box containing some partially burnt matches and a quantity of wrapping paper which was slightly charred around the edges. There was evidence that a box and contents answering the above description not belonging to the respondents was on one occasion when the respondent, Mrs. C. L. Wilson, visited the warehouse after the fire, sitting out near the entrance to the room in which respondents' goods were stored; that two officers of the appellant who were with said respondent on said occasion told her that this box had been taken out of the room in which respondents' goods were stored and at least intimated to her that its contents had been the cause of the fire which destroyed respondents' goods. Appellant claims that it was shown that neither of these officers had any actual knowledge as to where the box and its contents came from and that whatever conclusions they may have entertained upon the subject were founded merely upon hearsay. Admitting this claim of the appellant as to the source of knowledge of its two officers, yet in view of the evidence in the record as to their statement regarding this box and its contents and its probable connection with the origin of the fire, we are not prepared to say that there was absolutely no evidence in the record which would justify the giving of these instructions.

[5] Practically the same situation is shown as to the giving of instruction No. 16 to the effect that if the jury found that the warehouseman refused to inform the depositor of the circumstances under which the loss or injury to the goods occurred, so far as he had information concerning them, or willfully misrepresents the circumstances to the depositor, then the warehouseman was presumed to have willfully or by gross negligence permitted the loss or injury to occur. This instruction is based upon section 1838, Civil Code. It appears from the evidence while most of the goods of respondents deposited with appellant were destroyed by fire, yet, in addition to the trunk and its contents already referred to, there was another trunk and two boxes containing goods belonging to the respondents which were not destroyed, but were either lost or stolen immediately after the fire. Respondents' agent, a Mr. Walker Brown, called upon appellant and made a written demand for the goods shortly after the fire, and was informed by one of appellant's officers, its vice president, that "there was no use demanding the goods; they had been burned up." If this officer knew that a part of respondents' goods had been either lost or stolen, and from his active connection with the affairs of the warehouse it is only reasonable to presume that he had such knowledge, and failed to so inform respondents' agent of that fact, then in the language of said section of the Civil Code, it might be fairly said that he "refuses to inform the depositor of the circumstances under which the loss or injury occurred." This evidence, while very slight, would in our opinion afford some justification for the giving of the last-mentioned instruction, and with it in the record we are unable to say that the court in the giving of such instruction committed any prejudicial error.

[6] Instruction No. 14 as given by the court in its original form had been prepared by appellant. This instruction informed the jury as to the measure of damages to be applied by them in returning their verdict in the event they should find for the respondents. It then proceeded to inform the jury under what circumstances the appellant would be guilty of negligence. The court, however, before giving it in its final form, modified it by inserting therein in one place the words, "without negligence on its part," and in another the words, "or otherwise injured without the negligence of the defendant." In its modified form the court in effect instructed the jury that the appellant would be guilty of conversion of respondents' goods if the same were destroyed by fire without it was also shown that the fire was not the result of appellant's negligence. The court refused to give another instruction proposed by appellant telling the jury that in determining whether there was a conversion of said goods by appellant the question of negligence was immaterial and should be disregarded. The action of the court in modifying the first of these instructions and refusing the second was not error. In this case, as we have already seen, as to the goods lost by fire the appellant sought to justify its refusal to deliver said goods upon respondents' demand by showing that said goods were destroyed by fire, but as we have further seen proof of loss by fire is not a good defense to respondents' demand unless appellant further showed that the fire was not the result of negligence on appellant's part. In case of the injury to portions of said goods by fire the rule is the same.

These two instructions as prepared by appellant, the first by its silence and the second by its expressed direction, eliminated the question of appellant's negligence entirely as one of the necessary elements of appellant's defense. They were, therefore, not correct statements of the law governing appellant's defense, and the action of the court in modifying the one and in refusing the other was proper and legal.

[7] Two other instructions prepared by appellant were refused by the court. These two instructions also dwelt with the same subject, and the objections to them will therefore be considered together. These instructions are:

"You are instructed that the plaintiffs are conclusively presumed to know the contents of the warehouse receipt issued by the defendant, from the time that such warehouse receipt was delivered to the plaintiffs."

"You are instructed that, inasmuch as the warehouse receipt issued by the defendant for the goods in question contained a provision to the effect that the responsibility of the defendant for the contents of any piece or package is limited to the sum of $25, unless the value thereof is made known at the time of storing and receipted for in the schedule and an additional charge made for the higher valuation, the plaintiffs cannot in any event recover more than the sum of $25 for the contents of any piece or package of goods stored with the defendant, unless you further find by a preponderance of the evidence that the value of the contents of any such piece or package was made known to the defendant either at the time of the storing thereof, or within a reasonable time after the plaintiffs or either of them were informed of such provision, and was receipted for in the schedule and an additional charge for the higher valuation."

Within a short time after the deposit of said goods in defendant's warehouse they were attached by a creditor of respondents. The appellant thereupon issued its receipt for said goods to the sheriff who levied said attachment and did not deliver any receipt therefor to respondents or either of them at the time the goods were stored. The attachment was not discharged until about January 26, 1922, two weeks prior to the fire. At that time the respondents paid all back storage against said goods, and the sheriff indorsed said receipt to respondents and it was delivered to the respondent Mrs. C. L. Wilson. The receipt contained the following stipulation:

"The responsibility of the above company for the condition of any piece or package is limited to the sum of $25, unless the value thereof is made known at the time of storing, and receipted therefor in the schedule; and an additional charge made for the higher valuation."

The receipt itself is not before us; neither is there any facsimile thereof in the record, although a copy of the receipt is contained in the reporter's transcript. Respondents' counsel in their brief state that:

"The warehouse receipt had printed on it, at the top of the page, certain matter in very small type (which, by the way, fills two pages of the reporter's transcript). A part of this matter is a clause purporting to limit the defendant and appellant's liability to $25 for each package delivered."

This statement is not controverted by appellant, so we may assume that it is true. Respondent Mrs. C. L. Wilson, who appears to be the only respondent who ever saw this receipt, stated that she had never read it after its delivery to her. She further testified that prior to the storage of said goods and shortly thereafter she had conversations with Mr. Aldridge, one of the officers of the warehouse company, in which conversations she asked him if he wished an itemized list of the goods and Mr. Aldridge replied that it was not necessary; whereupon Mrs. Wilson asked that he give them his personal attention as she had her silverware in the dresser drawers and valuables in the trunks and that she had between $6,000 and $7,000 worth of goods and her husband had other "architectural things." She further testified that in the month of January, 1922, and before the fire, she again called upon Mr. Aldridge and stated that she would like to get a loan upon the goods and that they were worth $5,000 or $6,000. There is no evidence, that any of the officers of the appellant corporation ever suggested to respondents at the time the goods were stored or ever (except through said receipt, which was not given to respondents until the goods had been in storage over 18 months) notified respondents or either of them that its liability for the loss of said goods was limited to $25 for the contents of any piece or package unless the value thereof was made known at the time of the storage and receipted for in the schedule. It is the contention of appellant, however, that, having received said receipt at the time they did, about two weeks before the fire, respondents were conclusively presumed to have read the same, and that they are, therefore, conclusively bound by its terms and provisions. The principal authority relied upon by appellant in support of this claim is the case of Taussig v. Bode & Haslett, 134 Cal. 260, 66 P. 259, 54 L. R. A. 774, 86 Am. St. 250, where the court referred to the notice contained in a warehouse receipt as follows:

"We think it clear that the notice is a part of the contract. It was printed plainly on the face of the receipt. The whole paper is extremely brief. It was the duty of respondents to take note of its contents, if they had the opportunity, and their opportunity was ample. The presumption, therefore, is, that they did read it. Against this presumption there is no evidence, and none, we think, would have been admissible to show that the respondents had failed to do what their duty required them to do."

A facsimile of that receipt used by the warehouse owner in that case is set forth on page 265 of the opinion (66 P. 260). There is no question but that the notice limiting the liability of the warehouse owner, as the court said, "was printed plainly on the face of the receipt." The court could well have held in that case that it was conclusively presumed that the respondents read the notice and were bound thereby. In the present action a very different state of facts is presented. The appellant was notified of the true value of the goods at the time they were left for storage and at least on one occasion thereafter. No demand was ever made by appellant for any increased rate of storage. No receipt was given to the respondents until about 18 months after the goods were actually stored with appellant. The notice in said receipt where appellant sought to limit its liability was in small type and was merely a part of a large amount of printed matter of the same character appearing on the receipt. Was it error with all those facts before it for the trial court to refuse to instruct the jury that respondents were conclusively presumed to know the contents of the warehouse receipt and that respondents' right to recover for the loss of their goods was conclusively controlled by its provisions? As we have before said, neither the original receipt nor a facsimile thereof is before us. In this respect we have not an equal opportunity with the trial court to pass upon the sufficiency of the notice therein. Evidently the character of this notice had a material bearing upon the trial court in determining whether the respondents were conclusively presumed to know its contents. Then there is evidence to the effect that respondents declared the true value of their goods and offered appellant an itemized list thereof at the time they were delivered to the warehouse and were informed by appellant that such a list was not necessary. It is true respondents did not at that time formally offer to comply with the notice in the receipt limiting appellant's liability for the reason, apparently, that appellant had never brought this notice either directly or indirectly to their attention at the time of the storage of the goods, and did not even indirectly do so until 18 months after it accepted the goods. It was, of course, not appellant's fault that the goods were attached and the receipt given to the sheriff, who held them under attachment, but this did not relieve appellant of the duty, if it desired to limit its liability for the loss of the goods, of bringing home to the respondents notice that the goods were accepted and held under such limited liability. The receipt was delivered to the respondents two weeks before the goods were destroyed by fire in the warehouse. There is no evidence that either of the respondents read the finely printed matter thereon containing the limited liability clause. The respondent Mrs. E. L. Wilson, who apparently had charge of the matter for both respondents, testified that she did not read it. Respondents had already informed appellant of the true value of the goods; the goods had been in storage with appellant 18 months; no demand or suggestion had been made to respondents for an excess storage charge on account of such valuation. The right of warehouse owners to limit their liability by such a notice is given in order that they may protect themselves from unreasonable and excessive demands for loss of goods without any previous knowledge of their real value. No such reason for applying this rule applies in the present action. The appellant was fully advised by respondents as to the true value of their goods. Appellant was, therefore, in a position to protect itself by giving the respondents' property the care and supervision its rather large value required, and to make a charge therefor based upon such valuation. Under all the facts and circumstances as shown by the evidence in this case, we cannot say that the court committed any error in refusing to give either of the last two mentioned instructions.

The judgment is affirmed.

KRUGER v. CALIFORNIA HIGHWAY INDEMNITY EXCHANGE. (S. F. 11518.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 27, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 25, 1927.

I. Pleading ⇨121(2)—Defendant's denial that execution issued on certain judgment may be disregarded, where issuance was of record.

In action on policy of automobile indemnity insurance to recover from insurer amount of judgment obtained against insured, defendant's denial, for want of information or belief, that any execution had been issued on such judgment may be disregarded, where issuing of execution and return thereof was matter of record.

2. Insurance ⇨616½—Insurer under automobile indemnity policy, guaranteeing payment of judgment against insured, held bound by judgment obtained without its knowledge, in absence of fraud.

In action on policy of automobile indemnity insurance to recover from insurer amount of judgment against insured obtained without insurer's knowledge, defendant, in absence of claim of fraud or collusion, is bound by such judgment, where policy guaranteed payment of judgment against insured.

3. Insurance ⇨616½—Insurer in automobile indemnity policy must pay judgment against insured, notwithstanding latter's failure to comply with policy by forwarding papers served.

In action under policy of automobile indemnity insurance by one who had obtained judgment against insured, failure of insured to comply with policy by forwarding to insurer papers served on him cannot affect insurer's liability to plaintiff to pay judgment, which liability was expressly and unconditionally assumed by terms of policy.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨121—Attack on constitutionality of ordinance requiring indemnity insurance on busses held no defense to enforcement of insurer's liability under policy conforming to ordinance.

In action on policy of automobile indemnity insurance covering jitney bus, as required by city ordinance, attack on constitutionality of such ordinance presents no legal defense to enforcement of liability under policy which was voluntarily assumed.

5. Municipal corporations ⇨703(1)—Municipality can prescribe nature of security to be given by those operating vehicles for hire on streets.

Municipality has the right within reasonable limits to prescribe the nature of the securities to be given by those operating vehicles for hire on its public streets.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Marie Kruger against the California Highway Indemnity Exchange. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco, and B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. J. Tremont and J. Clark Benson, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Action brought to recover upon a policy of insurance. The policy was issued by the appellant, the California Highway Indemnity Exchange, as insurer, to one John E. Delaney, the insured, referred to therein as the "subscriber." It appears from the complaint that by an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco, known as the "jitney bus ordinance," it was provided that it should be unlawful for any person to drive a "jitney bus" in said municipality without first procuring from the board of police commissioners a permit to operate the same, and, as a prerequisite to obtaining such permit, it was necessary for the applicant therefor to file a bond or policy of insurance with said board, insuring the owner of said "jitney bus" against any loss by reason of damage that might result to any person from the operation of said automobile, said policy to be limited to $5,000 as damages for injury or death of one person injured or killed, "and said policy shall guarantee payment of any final judgment rendered against the said owner or lessee of said jitney bus (within the above-mentioned limits), irrespective of the financial responsibility or any act or omission of said jitney bus owner or lessee"; that in pursuance of said ordinance, and for the purpose of obtaining from said police board a permit to operate a "jitney bus" in said city and county, said John E. Delaney procured the said policy of insurance from appellant and filed the same with the said board of police commissioners; that thereafter, while said policy of insurance was in full force and effect, said Delaney negligently drove said automobile against said plaintiff, the respondent herein, causing injuries to her person; that thereafter said plaintiff brought suit against Delaney to recover damages for the injuries sustained and in said action recovered judgment against said Delaney in the sum of $7,750, together with interest and $15 costs; that execution was issued on said judgment and returned unsatisfied, and that nothing has been paid thereon, and the same is in full force and effect and wholly unsatisfied; that demand has been made upon defendant to pay said judgment, and defendant has refused to pay the same. The prayer of the complaint is for judgment against defendant in the sum of $5,015. A copy of said policy of insurance was annexed to the complaint and by proper reference made a part thereof. It purports upon its face to be issued in compliance with the provisions of said "jitney bus" ordinance. The provisions of the policy inserted therein for the purpose of having the same comply with said ordinance are in part as follows:

"It is hereby understood and agreed that, in the event a final judgment covering any loss or claim under this policy is rendered against the subscriber, the exchange guarantees the payment of said judgment direct to the plaintiff securing such judgment irrespective of any financial responsibility on the part of the subscriber: Provided that any action by the said plaintiff to recover under this clause is commenced within 12 months next after such final judgment shall have been rendered, or where such limitation of time is prohibited by the laws of the state wherein this policy is issued, then and in that event no suit or action shall be sustainable unless commenced within the shortest limitation permitted under the laws of such state. The exchange does not prejudice by this condition any defense against such loss or claim that it may be entitled to make under this policy in so far as it relates to any action brought against the exchange by the subscriber. In all other respects the terms, limits, and conditions of this policy remain unchanged."

[1] The answer of the defendant denied that Delaney negligently or otherwise, or at all, drove his automobile against plaintiff as a result of which plaintiff sustained any injury. It also denied, for want of information or belief, that any execution had been issued on said judgment; but, as the issuing of an execution and return thereof was a matter of record, this denial may be disregarded. As a second and separate defense to said action said defendant set forth in its answer that it did not know of the existence of the action of Marie Kruger against John E. Delaney, being the action in which said judgment was rendered, until more than six months after the rendition thereof, when demand was made upon it for the payment of the sum of $5,015 with interest thereon from July 27, 1923, the date of said judgment. It was further set forth by defendant in its second defense that the policy of insurance issued to Delaney provided that, if suit were brought against Delaney to enforce any claim for damages on account of any accident covered by said policy, Delaney would immediately forward to the office of defendant "every summons, notice, or other process" served upon him, and the defendant would defend such suit in the name and on behalf of Delaney or settle the same.

An inspection of the copy of the policy annexed to the complaint discloses that such a provision was contained in and was made a part of said policy. The defendant further set forth in said second defense that Delaney failed to comply with this provision of the policy, and furthermore, that neither Delaney nor the plaintiff herein nor any one notified the defendant or any of its officers or representatives of the institution or pendency of said action or of the default of defendant. It is then set forth that Delaney had a good and sufficient defense to plaintiff's cause of action in that he did not negligently drive said auto bus, as alleged in said complaint, against plaintiff, but that the injuries sustained by the plaintiff, if any were sustained, were proximately caused by the negligence of said plaintiff; that plaintiff refrained for more than six months after the rendition of said judgment from notifying the defendant, appellant herein, of the rendition of the same; that immediately on learning of the rendition of said judgment appellant applied, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have the default of Delaney for failure to answer said complaint set aside; that said motion was denied for the reason that it was not made within the period of six months after the rendition of said judgment, and that plaintiff well knew prior to the time she filed her said action against Delaney that the appellant herein was the legal representative of Delaney, and notwithstanding said knowledge she refrained from notifying defendant of the pendency of her action against Delaney for more than six months after the rendition of said judgment.

The answer also contained a third defense, in which, by proper reference thereto, it made the allegations of the second defense a part of the third defense, and further alleged that "It had a complete and meritorious defense against the said John E. Delaney, * * * for any loss that he may have sustained under said policy, by reason of his failure to notify this defendant of the pendency of said action No. 136106" (the action in which said judgment was rendered). It was then alleged:

"That in so far as said 'jitney ordinance' requires payment direct to the plaintiff procuring a final judgment against the subscriber (Delaney), irrespective of any financial responsibility on the part of the subscriber, or any act or omission on his part, said 'jitney ordinance' is unconstitutional and in violation of article 14 (section 1) of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of California, in that said ordinance attempts to take property without due process of law and denies to this defendant the equal protection of the laws."

Upon the filing of said answer the plaintiff filed a general and special demurrer thereto, and a motion to strike out certain parts of the second and third defense and a motion for judgment upon the pleadings. The general demurrer went to the answer as a whole. The special demurrer was directed to the second and third defense only and set forth a number of particulars in which it was claimed that each of said defenses was ambiguous, uncertain and unintelligible. These matters all came on for hearing before the court at the same time, and, as recited in the judgment, "having been duly argued and submitted by counsel for said parties, and this court having fully considered all of said matters," judgment was ordered for plaintiff as prayed for in her complaint. From this judgment the defendant has appealed.

[2] We will first consider the motion for judgment on the pleadings. If the action of the court in granting this motion is sustained, then whatever rulings it may have made regarding the demurrers and the motion to strike out portions of the answer are of no consequence. We will consider the combined defenses made by appellant in the first and second defenses of its answer. As we view this defense, it appears to us that the sole question presented thereby is whether the judgment procured by respondent herein in the action of Kruger v. Delaney is conclusive upon appellant in the present action, or has appellant, under all the facts and circumstances shown by the pleadings, the right to again litigate the question as to the negligence of Delaney and whether such negligence was the proximate cause of respondent's injuries. Respondent claims that, under the provisions of the policy quoted above, appellant guaranteed the payment to her of any judgment which she might secure against Delaney. Respondent relies in support of this contention upon the following language of the policy contained in the above quotation therefrom:

"It is understood and agreed that in the event a final judgment covering any loss or claim under this policy is rendered against the subscriber (Delaney), the exchange (appellant) guarantees the payment of said judgment direct to the plaintiff securing such judgment, irrespective of any financial responsibility on the part of the subscriber."

It would be difficult to frame language more simple or direct than this language. It can have but one meaning, and that is that appellant guaranteed the payment to the party securing the same of any judgment rendered against Delaney and covering any loss or claim under said policy. The undertaking is to pay the judgment to the party injured and not the damages sustained nor the loss incurred as a result of the injury. It is true plaintiff could have joined appellant as a defendant with Delaney in her action against the latter (Milliron v. Dittman, 180 Cal. 443, 181 P. 779), but independent of the policy she had a right of action against Delaney alone for any injury she may have sustained by the latter's negligence, and under the terms of the policy the appellant guaranteed the payment of any judgment she might so secure against Delaney.

Appellant's liability was to pay the judgment, and in a contract of that character the promisor is bound by the judgment whether he have notice of the action or not, even though he is not a party thereto. "The general rule appears to be that judgments are conclusive and binding on parties and their privies, but as to all others they are neither prima facie nor conclusively binding, for the reason that it would be unjust to bind a person by any proceeding in which he had no opportunity to make a defense, of offering evidence, of cross-examining witnesses, or of appealing if he were dissatisfied with the judgment. Indemnity contracts against loss or liability are sometimes said to constitute an exception to this rule, while again it is said that they do not in fact constitute an exception at all, but are based upon a fair and reasonable interpretation of the contract. It seems to be generally conceded, however, that wherever a surety has contracted with reference to one of the parties in some suit or proceeding in the courts, he is concluded by the judgment. * * * Furthermore, if a surety has undertaken to perform a judgment, or to pay any balance which shall be found to be due by the principal to the obligee, he is bound by the judgment rendered. In all such cases the judgment is binding upon the surety unless he can show that it was obtained by fraud or collusion." 13 Cal. Jur. pp. 996, 997; Easton v. Boston Investment Co., 51 Cal. App. 246, 251, 196 P. 796; Irwin v. Backus, 25 Cal. 214; Pico v. Webster, 14 Cal. 203, 205. In the last of these cases it is said:

"There can be no doubt, that where a surety undertakes for the principal, that the principal shall do a specific act, to be ascertained in a given way, as that he will pay a judgment, that the judgment is conclusive against the surety; for the obligation is express that the principal will do this thing, and the judgment is conclusive of the fact and extent of the obligation. As the surety in such cases stipulates without regard to notice to him of the proceedings to obtain the judgment, his liability is, of course, independent of any such fact."

In 14 Ruling Case Law, p. 63, the rule is stated as follows:

"It should also be noted that if a person enters into a contract of indemnity whereby he expressly agrees to become responsible for the result of a litigation, or if, by operation of law, such a responsibility is cast upon him without any agreement, he will, in the absence of fraud or collusion, be conclusively bound by the judgment rendered, whether he had notice of the action in which it was entered or not."

A clear and comprehensive statement of the rule is to be found in the case of Conner v. Reeves, 103 N. Y. 530, 9 N. E. 440, where the court said:

"The covenantor in an action on a covenant of general indemnity against judgments, is concluded by the judgment recovered against the covenantee, from questioning the existence or extent of the covenantee's liability in the action in which it was rendered. The recovery of a judgment is the event against which he covenanted, and it would contravene the manifest intention and purpose of the indemnity, to make the right of the covenantee to maintain an action on the covenant, to depend upon the result of the retrial of an issue which as against the covenantee had been conclusively determined in the former action, 'always, however, saving the right, as the law must in every case where the suit is between third persons, to contest the proceeding on the ground of fraudulent collusion, for the purpose of charging the surety.'"

We also find in the case of Pioneer Sav. & Loan Co. v. Bartsch, 51 Minn. 474, 53 N. W. 764, 38 Am. St. Rep. 511, a case cited by appellant, the same principle stated, as follows:

"Hence, if a surety stipulates for any particular method by which the liability of his principal or of himself shall be fixed, he is bound by it. If he has undertaken, either expressly or by implication from the position which he has assumed with reference to pending litigation, to be responsible for the result of a suit between others, to which he is not a party, and to which he has not been made privy by notice and an opportunity to defend, then, in the absence of fraud and collusion, the judgment against the principal alone would be conclusive evidence against him of every fact which it was necessary to find to recover such a judgment. This would be because he had so contracted."

We find nothing in any of the authorities cited by appellant which in any way conflicts with the rule enunciated above and we must therefore conclude that as appellant makes no claim that the judgment rendered in respondent's favor against Delaney was procured by either fraud or collusion it is binding and conclusive upon appellant, notwithstanding it was not a party to said action and had no notice of the pendency thereof until after the rendition of said judgment. It is liable for the payment of said judgment by reason of its expressed undertaking guaranteeing the payment of the same.

[3] Appellant seeks to avoid the force of the foregoing rule by a reference to the terms of the policy wherein it is provided that the insured or subscriber (Delaney) agreed to immediately forward to appellant every summons, notice or other process as soon as the same were served upon him and that Delaney failed to perform this provision of the policy. This failure on the part of Delaney to forward to appellant the papers served upon him would undoubtedly be a good defense to an action brought upon the judgment by Delaney against appellant, but it is without effect in the present action brought by respondent. Appellant's undertaking to pay the judgment to plaintiff is absolute and is not conditioned upon Delaney's agreement to forward to appellant said papers or any papers which may be served upon him. The latter's failure to perform his part of the agreement cannot in any way affect appellant's liability to third persons expressly and unconditionally assumed by the terms of the policy. In our opinion, therefore, the allegations of the first and second defense of appellant's answer were insufficient to constitute any defense to the cause of action set forth in the complaint herein.

[4] The third defense of the answer, as we have already seen, seeks to raise the constitutionality of the so-called "jitney bus ordinance" of the city and county of San Francisco. In the case of In re Cardinal, 170 Cal. 519, 524, 150 P. 348, 350 (L. R. A.) 1915F, 850) the validity of this ordinance was sustained by this court, and at that time the court said:

"We see no reason to doubt the power of the state, or any county or municipality, in the exercise of its police power or regulation, to require security in the shape of a bond or insurance policy from its licensees in all cases where the giving of such security may fairly be held to be a reasonable requirement for the protection of the public."

The particular objection which appellant now makes to such ordinance was not directly involved nor considered by the court in the case of In re Cardinal, supra. Appellant's claim that under its right to contract, as protected by constitutional enactments, it had the right to enter into a contract to indemnify licensees under said ordinance against loss through accident or otherwise in the operation of their "jitney busses" and to provide in such contracts that it shall have notice and an opportunity to defend as a condition precedent to its liability, and that if the ordinance deprives it of this right, it is unconstitutional in that respect.

Appellant's argument, we think, is predicated upon a false premise. Its right to enter into contracts given under the state and national constitutions does not extend to every kind and character of contract. It would have no right to contract to operate a railroad or conduct a banking business, as it is prohibited by statute from entering into such contracts. Even an individual whose right to enter into a contract is protected by the Constitution, at least to the same extent as that of appellant, cannot become a party to every kind and character of contracts. In fact, an individual is prohibited by this identical ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco from entering into a contract as a surety on a bond required thereunder and this provision of the ordinance has been sustained by this court. "It is suggested that the requirement that the bond be given by a responsible surety company or association authorized to do business under the laws of the state of California, to the exclusion of personal sureties, renders the provision invalid. We know of no constitutional right that one has to give any particular kind of security. A legislative body having the right to require the giving of security necessarily has the right to prescribe the kind that shall be given, with the limitation always, of course, that its provisions in this regard shall not be unreasonable. * * *" In re Cardinal, supra, p. 526 (150 P. 351). If, then, individuals can be excluded from entering into contracts of surety by the terms of said ordinance and by such exclusion there is no invasion of their constitutional rights to enter into contracts, it can hardly be successfully contended that the appellant, a creature of the law, has any constitutional right to enter into the contracts of indemnity, provided for by the ordinance, without limitation or restriction.

[5] The municipality undoubtedly has the right within reasonable limits to prescribe the nature of the security to be given by those operating vehicles for hire upon its public streets. There is nothing unreasonable in the provisions of the ordinance requiring the operator of such a vehicle to protect the public by the bond or policy of insurance required therein and in the manner as required. There was nothing obligatory upon the appellant requiring it to issue such a policy as it did. The policy was issued freely and voluntarily and without coercion on the part of any one. It can with perfect safety be assumed that appellant was familiar with the terms of said ordinance and expressly contracted in reference thereto and agreed to be bound by those provisions of the policy inserted therein in compliance with the requirements of the ordinance. It is not unreasonable to assume that the premium charged upon such a policy was fixed in reference to the extent of the liability incurred by appellant in issuing the same. To now hold that the ordinance is void and appellant released from its obligations under the policy of insurance would be to grant it immunity from its voluntary contracts entered into for an adequate and valuable consideration under the guise of protecting its constitutional rights. As already seen, the ordinance in no way invaded appellant's constitutional rights. On the other hand, the liability which respondent now seeks to enforce against appellant is one it voluntarily assumed. The allegations of appellant's third defense presents no legal defense to the enforcement of said liability.

From the foregoing it is apparent that the answer of appellant failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to said action. The judgment upon the pleadings, therefore, must be sustained. As already stated, it will not be necessary for us to consider the action of the trial court, either upon the demurrers or upon the motion to strike out portions of the answer, for whatever action the court may have taken in these matters could not affect the validity of the order granting the motion for judgment upon the pleadings nor the judgment rendered thereon.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MAHONEY. (Cr. 3027.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 22, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 18, 1927.

1. Criminal law §363—Declarations to be admissible as res gestæ must have been uttered contemporaneously with act and explain or qualify it so as to be connected with it so that declaration and act form single transaction.

Declarations, in order to be admissible as part of res gestæ, must have been uttered contemporaneously with, and grow out of, act on which they have bearing so as to be spontaneous and not narrative, must qualify, illustrate, explain or unfold its character or significance so as to be connected with it in such manner that declaration and act form single and indivisible transaction.

2. Criminal law §368(1)—Evidence regarding injuries and cries of others in collapse of grandstand when deceased was killed held improperly admitted as res gestæ.

In prosecution for manslaughter, evidence of injuries, and of cries, shrieks, and groans of others immediately after collapse of grandstand in which deceased was killed, held improperly admitted as part of res gestæ.

3. Criminal law §655(1)—Trial judge's conduct in espousing cause of prosecution in manslaughter prosecution held improper.

In manslaughter prosecution, trial judge's conduct in espousing cause of prosecution by commenting on evidence, and making disparaging remarks to defendant's counsel and witnesses, held improper.

4. Criminal law §633(1)—Every defendant in criminal case is entitled to fair trial on facts.

Every defendant in criminal case is entitled to fair trial on facts, and not trial on temper or whimsies of judge who sits in case.

5. Criminal law §1186(4)—Where trial court by conduct discredits cause of defense, new trial is necessary, though record may show defendant guilty of a crime (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where trial court persists in making discourteous and disparaging remarks to defendant's counsel and witnesses, and utters frequent comment, from which jury may plainly perceive that judge does not believe testimony of witnesses, and in other ways discredits cause of defense, it has transcended so far beyond pale of judicial fairness as to render new trial necessary, though record may show defendant guilty of a crime, notwithstanding Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Seawell and Curtis, JJ., dissenting in part.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Paul F. Mahoney was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Le Compte Davis and William B. Beirne, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The appellant, a contractor, and C. B. Bucknall, deputy building inspector of the city of Pasadena, were charged by indictment with manslaughter. The jurors were unable to agree upon a verdict respecting the charges against Bucknall, but returned a verdict of guilty against the appellant. He appeals from the judgment pronounced upon the verdict and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The charge against the defendant Bucknall was dismissed by the court upon motion of the district attorney.

It has become the custom on New Year's day of each year to hold a festival of flowers in the city of Pasadena, known as the Tournament of Roses. It is viewed by thousands, many of whom pay for seats from which to watch the parade. In December, 1925, the appellant secured from the building department of the city of Pasadena permits to erect four grandstands for the accommodation of these spectators. All of them were constructed along similar lines. The one erected at Colorado and Madison avenues collapsed. Many people were injured; some were killed, including one Mrs. Bessie Borich, for whose death the jury held the appellant responsible. The prosecution of the appellant was had under section 192 of the Penal Code, defining the crime of manslaughter, and upon the theory that in the erection and construction of the stands the appellant did not exercise due caution and circumspection. We deem it unnecessary to review the nearly 2,000 pages of testimony taken in the court below. It suffices to say that there is evidence from which the jury might well conclude that the grandstand which collapsed was so negligently constructed as to be unable to carry the tremendous load placed upon it.

In support of his appeal, which is presented by counsel who did not participate in the trial of the case in the court below, the appellant relies upon alleged error in the introduction of certain testimony offered by the prosecution, and misconduct of the trial judge during the trial. As to both of these matters we adopt the opinion of the District Court of Appeal of the Second District, Division 2, as the opinion of this court, to wit:

[1, 2] "The appellant first complains of the admission in evidence, over defendant's objection, of testimony showing injuries to persons other than the deceased, Mrs. Borich, and of the cries, shrieks, and groans of the people in the stand immediately after its collapse. This testimony was admitted by the trial court on the theory that it constituted a part of the res gestæ. The offense charged is what has generally been known as 'involuntary manslaughter—ter' or a case—'where death results unintentionally, so far as defendant is concerned, from an unlawful act on his part, not amounting to felony, or from a lawful act negligently performed.' 1 Whart. Crim. Law (8th Ed.) § 305. The principal questions in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant were, first: Was the stand negligently constructed or was it constructed unlawfully or in violation of the ordinance? Second: Did death result from the unlawful or negligent act? It is important to have these main questions, which may be denominated the main transaction, in mind in determining whether the testimony admitted was part of the res gestæ because we find that declarations which would otherwise be hearsay, or evidence of another offense which would not otherwise be admissible under any other exception, would be competent, if constituting a part of the res gestæ. In order, however, that they may come within the rule, it is necessary that they possess the following characteristics: 'First, they must have been uttered contemporaneously with and grow out of the act upon which they have a bearing so as to be spontaneous and not narrative; second, they must qualify, illustrate, explain, or unfold its character or significance, so as, third, to be connected with it in such a manner that the declaration and the act form a single and indivisible transaction.' Underhill's Crim. Evidence (2d Ed.) § 93. It will be observed, therefore, that the acts and declarations admissible as a part of the res gestæ depend largely upon the character of the crime, or, as said by the same author, section 95: 'The main question is: Are they relevant to, and do they explain and illustrate the facts of the transaction in issue? In other words, can we learn from them something of the motives or intention present in a relevant act.' Tested by these questions, it is apparent that injuries or the extent of injuries suffered by other parties who were present in the grandstand could throw no light either upon the character of the construction, or upon the question as to whether faulty construction was responsible for the death of Mrs. Borich. If the stand were negligently or unlawfully constructed, the defendant would have been guilty of the offense charged if such construction resulted in her death, regardless of injuries to other persons and regardless of their spontaneous utterances of pain. Undoubtedly, such testimony would have great effect upon the sentiments and would tend to arouse the indignation of the jury. We conclude therefore, that the testimony admitted was not to be considered a part of the res gestæ, and it was error to admit it as such.

"The remaining two points urged by appellant as reasons for the reversal of the judgment may properly be considered under one head. They consist of twenty-three utterances by the trial judge and numerous instances where he took to himself the task of examining witnesses, which, appellant says, conveyed to the mind of the jury the impression that the judge was convinced of the guilt of the defendant and that his sympathy was wholly with the prosecution. No assignments of error were made at the time of the occurrences by defendant's counsel, and no opportunity given to the court to right the wrong done, if such it was. We are not unmindful of the rule which requires some effort to be made in the trial court to prevent and to correct such errors when they occur. But there may be instances, and this is one of them, where such effort would be entirely fruitless; no retraction sufficient to undo the harm; and the effort made might result in further error. Further, it is evident from the attitude of the trial judge, as shown by the record, that any assignment of misconduct would have been disregarded. Counsel for the appellant, by making an assignment, would have brought upon himself further attack. People v. McDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 140 P. 256; People v. Derwae, 155 Cal. 593, 102 P. 266; People v. Frank, 71 Cal. App. 575, 236 P. 189. It would extend this opinion beyond any reasonable bounds to treat each assignment separately, many of which, while perhaps not strictly in keeping with judicial language and discretion, were not of that irremediable nature except when considered as a part of the whole, and therefore we shall consider only a few instances. D. Z. Gardner, a member of the bar, was permitted to testify on behalf of defendant as an expert on construction. During the examination of Mr. Gardner the following occurred: 'A. By the Court: Let's put it this way, Mr. Gardner: From your experience as a builder and contractor of about eight years, obtained thirty-four years ago, would you say that the stand in question was constructed in a safe and workmanlike manner? A. Absolutely so. Q. What happened to it, do you know? A. I know it fell down. But— Q. That is all. You have answered the question. A. Yes. I don't think it is hardly fair when the question has been— Q. Now, you are not here to say whether a question that is asked is fair or not, and— A. I understand, Your Honor. Q. * * * The fact that you are an attorney of the court and an officer of the court makes it all the more wrong for you to attempt to make such a statement as that, and, if it occurs again I shall hold it a contempt of court, just as I would do with anybody else who is insulting or doesn't show the proper respect for the court. Now, you are here as a witness to answer questions. A. I understand. I want— Q. Never mind what you want. You are here to answer questions, and when you have answered the questions close your face after you have answered the question, and don't let me hear any more remarks of that kind. If you do, you will be up here in a structure that will bear a whole lot more weight than any grandstand is intended to bear.' Shortly after this occurrence and immediately preceding an afternoon recess of the court, the following statement was made by the trial judge: 'Well, I guess we had better take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen; we don't want to tire our noted expert out.' After Mr. Gardner was permitted to testify as an expert, his testimony should have gone to the jury unimpaired by the comment of the court thereon. Realizing the eagerness with which juries grasp the suggestions of the trial judge, we can appreciate the fact that no weight would be attributed by them to his testimony after the remarks just quoted. On more than one occasion the trial judge asked the witness, in referring to the grandstand, 'What happened to it?' as though the fact that it had fallen satisfied his mind that it had fallen by reason of negligent construction, eliminating the possibility of a latent defect, which due care and circumspection may not always guard against. And to further accentuate his belief, when questioning one witness regarding the three stands which did not fall, asked the following question: 'You think the mercy of Providence might have had something to do with it?' Under our present system, judges are not permitted to comment upon the evidence or its effect. They cannot be too careful or cautious lest they by word, look, or inflection of the voice bring to bear upon the jury an influence not compatible with an unbiased verdict of the jury. People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 142; People v. Matthai, 135 Cal. 442, 67 P. 694 and People v. Frank, supra. In addition to the foregoing misconduct of the trial judge, we deem it proper to instance the following: The counsel for one of the defendants had objected to a question. The witness on the stand had commenced an answer, when counsel for the other defendant interposed an objection also. The record then proceeds: 'The Court: The witness had not finished her answer, so I could not very well rule on the objection, not knowing what the witness' answer is going to be until she finished. And I will instruct counsel not to interrupt the witness again when she is making an answer. Make your objection when the witness finishes the answer or move to strike it out when she has finished, but don't interrupt the witness. Show the witness the common courtesy of allowing her to finish her answer. Mr. —: Well, but, Your Honor— The Court: Now, that is all I want to hear from you. I expect a witness in my court to be treated with ordinary gentlemanly courtesy, and it is going to be done. Mr. —: I will be very glad to do that, Your Honor, of course. The Court: Very well; see that you do.' Upon a similar occasion, when another witness was on the stand, the judge said to defense counsel: 'The witness had not finished his answer. He will be allowed to finish his answer, and if there are any more interruptions some one is going to suffer for it.' The record also shows the following, the questioner being the counsel for one of the defendants: 'Q. * * * Mr. Kelly, as chief of police in Pasadena, are you an insurer against crime? The Court: Oh, you don't need to answer that question, Captain. That is too utterly silly to require an answer. Q. * * * As head of the department? The Court: Now, that question * * * you know is not a proper question. I am willing to allow a lot for ignorance, but some questions pass the bounds, and that is one of them.' The same witness was examined by the counsel of defendant Bucknall as to the latter's reputation. The record shows: 'Q. He is a man who bears a good reputation in Pasadena? A. Excellent. * * * Q. For his truthfulness? A. Yes, sir. Q. Honesty? A. Yes, sir. Q. Integrity? A. Yes, sir. Q. By the Court: And chastity? A. Yes, sir. The Court: We might as well get them all in.' While the same witness was on the stand, the prosecution inquired whether the lumber formerly in the wrecked stand had been changed in its condition after removal from the place where it fell. Upon objection being made by both counsel to certain questions, the judge said to one of them: 'You don't want the officer to testify he slept on it, do you?' During the direct examination of a witness for the prosecution, one of defense counsel started to say something. Then: 'The Court: Wait just a minute. I think Mr. — is laboring with an objection.' A little later the same situation presented itself, when this occurred: 'The Court: Just a moment. Mr. — is a little bit slow in getting started, so we will have to give him a little chance to make his objection. Go ahead, Mr. —, I can always tell from the motions you are making there is an objection about to come forth. Mr. —: Yes, Your Honor. The Court: Now you have passed through the preliminary pain, give birth to it.' On another occasion the judge said of one of the counsel for the defense: 'The Court: Well, Mr. — has made that objection so many times that I think he ought to have it sustained at least once. * * * I don't want him to be utterly without hope of having that objection sustained some time during the trial.' One of defense counsel objected to the introduction in evidence of certain photographs. After a colloquy over the question whether it was necessary to call as a witness the photographer who took them, the following occurred: 'The Court: Well, it seems to me it is an idiotic objection, to be frank about it. All right, bring the photographer here, since they seem to want to make you a little more trouble. Do you want them to bring the camera here? Mr. —: No. The Court: You want him to bring the same shoes he had on when he took the picture? How about the gum he was chewing? Do you want him to pick that up again? Just about as sensible. I haven't much patience with an objection which is made just for the purpose of making objection, when there doesn't seem to be a scintilla of sense in making them. A proper objection I have absolute respect for, of course. If a witness testifies a picture absolutely delineates that which he is testifying to, that certainly ought to be sufficient without insisting that the man who did the actual act of pressing the bulb be brought in to testify he pressed the bulb to the camera to take the picture.' While a witness for the defense was being cross-examined by the district attorney this took place: 'Q. * * * Are you a carpenter or a laborer? A. Why, I am a carpenter. Q. By the Court: Belong to the carpenter's union? A. No, sir. Q. (By a deputy district attorney.) Well, I thought you said in answer to his question that you had been working either as a laborer or carpenter, or was I mistaken? The Court: You are not one of those scabs, then, some of the witnesses have referred to as connected with this work? A. Carpenter. I used to work at labor sometimes when I was a boy.' The owner of the property upon which the collapsed stand was constructed was a witness for the prosecution. After he testified to the consideration paid him for the use of the property and had said that he was on the stand at the time of the collapse: 'Q. By the Court: You had two broken legs of your own in addition to that, didn't you? A. I had two broken legs. Q. That was a premium outside of the other consideration you got?' One of the counsel for the defense objected at one point: 'These questions are leading. The Court: Oh, I don't care if they are. That is an awful trivial objection, unless the question puts the answer directly in the mouth of the witness, but when you are questioning a man who is qualified as an expert I don't see any necessity of consuming about five times the time that is necessary by beating around the bush. You might as well go right at the point and ask about the fact we are interested in.'

[3, 4]. "We have presented sufficient to show a state of affairs which trial judges should not permit, and which may be pointed to as an example of what they should not do in the trial of lawsuits. If they will lend themselves to such methods, if they will so intemperately espouse the cause of the prosecution in criminal cases, no man charged with a penal offense is safe, whether he be guilty or innocent. Every defendant under such a charge is entitled to a fair trial on the facts, and not a trial on the temper or whimsies of the judge who sits in his case. Whatever the degree of guilt of appellant here, those who know the circumstances surrounding his conviction are likely to feel that the verdict resulted from the conduct of the judge and not from the evidence."

[5] The prosecution attempts to justify the remarks of the trial court upon the ground that, because there was sufficient evidence of the negligent and faulty construction of the grandstand to support the finding of the guilt of the defendant, they were "harmless," made in a "facetious light," and that the court was "indulging in a bit of humor." It also invokes the curative provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. Such an attitude on the part of a trial court as that here disclosed cannot be passed over so lightly. Jurors rely with great confidence on the fairness of judges, and upon the correctness of their views expressed during trials. For this reason, and too strong emphasis cannot be laid on the admonition, a judge should be careful not to throw the weight of his judicial position into a case, either for or against a defendant. It is unnecessary to cite the cases bearing on this subject. It is a fundamental principle underlying our jurisprudence. When, as in this case, the trial court persists in making discourteous and disparaging remarks to a defendant's counsel and witnesses, and utters frequent comment from which the jury may plainly perceive that the testimony of the witnesses is not believed by the judge, and in other ways discredits the cause of the defense, it has transcended so far beyond the pale of judicial fairness as to render a new trial necessary. Neither can a plea for the application of the section of the Constitution save this situation. The fact that a record shows a defendant to be guilty of a crime does not necessarily determine that there has been no miscarriage of justice. In this case the defendant did not have the fair trial guaranteed to him by law and the Constitution.

The judgment of conviction is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

SEAWELL, J. I concur in the judgment of reversal, but I do not concur in that portion of the opinion which holds that it was error (presumably prejudicial error) to admit in evidence the exclamations, declarations, and conditions which accompanied and immediately followed the collapsing of the grandstand, the faulty construction of which, it is claimed by the prosecution, amounted to criminal negligence on the part of the defendant. It has always been my understanding of the criminal law that those things that happen at the time of the commission of an act denounced as criminal, or that accompany it or immediately follow it, and which are the natural and immediate result of the act criminally set in motion, are admissible in evidence. If this is not the law, then we have almost innumerable decisions in our reports that are misstatements of the real meaning of res gestæ. A homicide is committed, and the person who receives the mortal wound immediately thereafter, in the presence of a score of people who witnessed the infliction of the wound, exclaims, in accusatory words, "You are a murderer." Can it be doubted that such an exclamation, although accusatory, is admissible? Had the exclamation been one of pain would it be any less admissible as a part of the res gestæ? The defendant was charged with the negligent construction of a grandstand that was to sustain the aggregate weight of thousands of persons, and the fact that a thousand persons were injured by the collapse of the grandstand and the things that immediately ensued were inseparably connected with the negligent act that caused the grandstand to collapse. That question is the crux of the crime charged.

If a person was to fire a rifle at an animal in the park, and with one shot kill or wound unto death three or more persons, could it be said that, in a trial charging the slayer with manslaughter of one of the victims of his criminal negligence, the admission of the exclamations of the others uttered immediately after being struck by the one bullet was error? Such is not my understanding of the rule. I have no doubt that, in a case involving the collapsing of a grandstand, a bridge, or other structure, or in case of a railway collision, in which many persons are injured, that the situation as it existed at the time of, and immediately following, and which is but the natural result of the negligent act constituting the crime, is admissible. The bloody clothes of a decedent, even in cases where they seem not to be illustrative of an act which is not already shown by other evidence, are quite universally received in evidence. I am not persuaded that a jury would be inflamed beyond the power of self-control by a description of the things that occurred upon the falling of a grandstand crowded with people to the degree that it would inflict upon its builder immedicable wrong. Neither am I able to convince myself that any body of reasonable men would under such circumstances substitute effect for cause. It is scarcely conceivable that the human imagination would not instantly from a recitation of the physical facts supply the things that must inevitably follow. In fact, the result would be but a deduction which the average mind of men would make. I am satisfied that the condition as it existed immediately upon the collapsing of the grandstand is inseparably connected with the charge sought to be established. Surely a jury ought not to permit the horror of a situation alone to supply substantial evidence, and I do not believe that the evidence sought to be excluded had such an effect. Nevertheless it is a part of the case.

SAN JOSE HOSPITAL v. ETHERTON et al.
(Civ. 5485.)

District Court of Appeal, First District Division 1, California. July 21, 1927.

1. Venue ⇐41—That venue was properly laid as against nonresident codefendant did not deprive defendant of right to have venue changed.

That venue was properly laid as against nonresident, codefendant in transitory action, did not deprive defendant of right to have case tried in county in which he resided at commencement of action.

2. Venue ⇐69—Unless answer has been filed, counter motion to refuse venue change on ground convenience of witnesses will be promoted will not lie (Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3).

Unless answer has been filed at time demand is made for change of venue, counter motion to retain cause on ground that convenience of witnesses will be promoted by refusing change will not lie, under Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

3. Venue ⇐69—Where issues were not settled, and plaintiff's affidavit supporting counter motion failed to state names of witnesses, motion for change should not have been denied for convenience of witnesses (Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3).

Where nonresident codefendant had filed answer, but defendant had filed demurrer with demand for change of venue and plaintiff's affidavit in support of counter motion to refuse change for convenience of witnesses, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3, did not state names of witnesses or matters to which they were expected to testify and issues in case remained to be settled, motion for change of venue should have been granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by the San Jose Hospital against E. E. Etherton, doing business as the E. E. Etherton Company, and another. From an order denying the motion for a change of venue, defendant named appeals. Reversed.

Chalmer Munday, of San Francisco, and Fry & Jenkins, of San Jose, for appellant.

Samuel G. Tompkins, of San Jose, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from an order denying a motion for a change of venue.

An action was brought by San Jose Hospital, a corporation, against defendant E. E. Etherton, a resident of Los Angeles county, to recover damages, for the failure of the latter to complete the construction of a building in accordance with a contract between the above parties and against defendant Hart-Wood Lumber Company, a foreign corporation, as surety on the bond executed by both defendants to indemnify plaintiff against loss in the event of a failure by Etherton to perform the contract mentioned.

An answer was filed by defendant corporation, and thereafter Etherton served and filed a demurrer to the complaint with a demand and notice of motion for a change of venue to Los Angeles county, the motion being supported by an affidavit of merits.

The motion was denied, and Etherton appeals from the order.

The allegation as to the residence of Etherton was not denied by respondent, but its counter affidavit filed in opposition to the motion alleged that the answer of defendant corporation raised several issues of fact requiring the testimony of at least 15 witnesses at the trial of the action, all of whom resided in Santa Clara county.

The names of these witnesses were not stated, nor did the affidavit show what testimony was expected from them.

[1] The defendant corporation being a nonresident, as against it the venue was properly laid, and the trial of the action might have been had in Santa Clara county (Thomas v. Placerville Mining Co., 65 Cal. 600, 4 P. 641; Rains v. Diamond Match Co., 171 Cal. 326, 153 P. 239; Ryan v. Inyo, etc., M. & P. Co., 41 Cal. App. 770, 183 P. 250), but the action being transitory, this did not deprive appellant of the right to have the case tried in the county in which he resided at the commencement of the action (Banta v. Wink, 119 Cal. 78, 51 P. 17; Pittman v. Carstenbrook, 11 Cal. App. 224, 104 P. 699).

[2] A motion for a change of venue on the ground that the action was not brought in the proper county may be opposed by showing that the convenience of witnesses will be promoted by refusing the change (section 397, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc.), but the rule is well settled that, unless the answer has been filed at the time the demand is made, a counter motion to retain the cause on the latter ground will not lie (McSherry v. Pennsylvania, etc., Mining Co., 97 Cal. 637, 32 P. 711; Pascoe v. Baker, 158 Cal. 232, 110 P. 815; Sheffield v.

Pickwick Stages, 191 Cal. 9, 214 P. 852), and it has been held that the affidavit supporting the counter motion should contain the names of the witnesses, together with the testimony expected from each, that the court may from the issues judge of the materiality of their testimony (Loehr v. Latham, 15 Cal. 418; Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 72-80; Grant v. Bannister, 145 Cal. 219-222, 78 P. 653; Ennis-Brown Co. v. Long, 7 Cal. App. 313, 94 P. 250).

[3] The right to a change of the place of trial on the grounds stated in appellant's motion was clear, and while a counter motion to retain the cause for the convenience of witnesses is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and its action thereon will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of an abuse of discretion, here the affidavit filed in support of the counter motion failed to state the names of the witnesses or the matters to which they were expected to testify, and it appears that the issues in the case remained to be settled.

In view of the state of the pleadings and the insufficiency of the affidavit within the rules stated in the above cases, the materiality of the testimony of the witnesses could not be determined, and appellant's motion should have been granted.

The order is reversed.

HAMMOND LUMBER CO. v. GORDON et al.
(Civ. 5044.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 3, 1927.

1. Fixtures ⇨7—Finding that balconies nailed and bolted to building were, in absence of express contract, fixtures, held proper in mechanic's lien foreclosure suit (Civ. Code, § 660).

In absence of express contract, finding of trial court that balconies, pillars of which were fastened to walls of building with bolts and nailed to floor, were fixtures, held proper in action to foreclose mechanic's lien, under Civ. Code, § 660, defining fixture as thing permanently attached to buildings by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws.

2. Mechanics' liens ⇨30—One furnishing lessee materials for balconies nailed and bolted to building, without actual or constructive knowledge of contract that balconies were removable, held entitled to foreclosure of mechanic's lien as against owner failing to give notice of nonresponsibility (Civ. Code, § 660; Code Civ. Proc. § 1192).

Person furnishing materials to lessee used in construction of balconies, which were bolted and nailed to building with owner's knowledge, held entitled to foreclosure of mechanic's lien on property, under Civ. Code, § 660, where stipulation in contract between owner and lessee that balconies were to be removable was unknown to materialman and contract was not filed, and where owner failed to give notice of nonresponsibility under Code of Civ. Proc. § 1192.

3. Mechanics' liens ⇨26—Materialman cannot be deprived of lien by concealed purpose of persons interested in constructing improvement (Civ. Code, § 660).

One furnishing material for addition to building which would ordinarily become part of realty under Civ. Code, § 660, cannot be deprived of statutory and constitutional right to lien by concealed purpose held by persons responsible for construction.

4. Fixtures ⇨4—Character of property claimed to be attached to realty, where rights of third party are involved, depends on apparent intent.

Though intent of parties is controlling criterion in ascertaining whether property is permanently attached to land as between immediate parties to transaction, where rights of persons unconnected with transaction and without actual or constructive knowledge of intent of parties are concerned, question must be determined from apparent intent reasonably appearing to such third person.

5. Fixtures ⇨35(5)—Finding that balconies were bolted and nailed to building held sufficient as finding of their attachment to realty (Civ. Code, § 660).

In action to foreclose mechanic's lien for materials furnished in constructing balconies on building, finding that balconies were attached by means of bolts and nails held sufficient as finding that balconies were permanently attached and became part of realty under Civ. Code, § 660, where court found as conclusion of law that balconies were improvements as contemplated by law determining materialmen's liens.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1071(2, 6)—Judgment will not be reversed for error resting solely in statement of conclusions of law, or for absence of finding not affecting judgment.

Judgment will not be reversed for error in statement of conclusions if findings and judgment are sound, or for absence of finding which if made would have sustained judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by the Hammond Lumber Company against J. Gordon, Edward Faust Squadrilli, and the Security Trust & Savings Bank, as executor of the estate of Gertrude E. Haweis, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

Lucien Gray, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This is an appeal by the executor of Gertrude E. Haweis from a judgment in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Mrs. Haweis was the owner of certain real property in Los Angeles county, Cal.; she leased the second floor of the building thereon for a five-year period beginning May 1, 1922, to defendant Squadrilli; after making the lease Squadrilli made a written contract with the defendant Gordon for the construction of balconies in the room leased. The contract provided that the balconies were to be so constructed as to be removable at any time. The plaintiff furnished certain materials to Gordon, which were used in the construction of the balconies. Defendant Haweis had no part in ordering the materials from the plaintiff, but had knowledge that the balconies were being built.

The court found, among other things, that the plaintiff at the time it furnished the materials did not know of the lease between Mrs. Haweis and Squadrilli, nor of the written contract between her and Gordon, and that the materials were furnished without actual knowledge as to who was the owner of the premises. Neither the lease nor the contract was placed on record.

Another finding states in detail the manner in which the balconies were constructed and attached to the building. It is found that certain heavy pillars of the balconies were fastened to the walls with 9-inch bolts, and were nailed to the floor; that 20 of these posts each had one 9-inch bolt screwed into the wall of the building; nails used to fasten the posts to the floor were 8 and 10 penny nails; also the stringers for the stairways were fastened to the wall by 5 and 6 No. 16 screws, one-quarter inch thick by 3 inches long, and the stairways were then nailed to the stringers with spikes; the balconies were each 7 to 8 feet wide, 7 feet high, and 75 feet long.

The answer of the defendant Haweis, among other allegations, contains the statement that:

"Any and all and every of the materials furnished to said Gordon by plaintiff were for the construction of said removable balconies as aforesaid, and not at the instance or request or by authority or on behalf of the defendant, and not for the construction of any alteration or addition or improvement or repair to said building or said premises of the defendant or any part thereof."

[1, 2] The question involved is whether the land of the defendant Haweis is subject to a mechanic's lien for the materials so furnished and used in the balconies. We are clear that this must be answered in the affirmative. Section 660 of the Civil Code defines a fixture as follows:

"A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws."

It cannot be doubted that in the absence of an express contract to the contrary the balconies in question were so attached to the defendant's building as to make them fixtures, or at least to require that this court sustain a decision of the trial court to that effect. It is true that the contract between Squadrilli and Gordon stipulated that the balconies were to be removable, and it appears as a matter of fact that they were removed from the building. However, since the plaintiff had neither actual nor constructive notice of the existence of this contract, it cannot be in any way affected thereby. Aside from consideration of the contract, the owner has no defense to the plaintiff's lien, since she failed to give the notice of nonresponsibility permitted by section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure as a means by which an owner may protect himself against such a liability. Leoni v. Quinn, 189 Cal. 622, 209 P. 551; Pacific Sash & Door Co. v. Bumiller, 162 Cal. 664, 124 P. 230, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 296.

Appellant argues upon the theory that since it was not intended by the parties to the contract for the building of the balconies that they should be a part of the building to which they were attached, but should be removable by Squadrilli, therefore these balconies never became alterations, additions, or improvements, and so cannot afford a right to a lien for those furnishing materials for their construction. In connection with this contention some authorities are cited, none of which are in point in the instant case. In none of them was a secret contract unknown to the materialman the basis for holding that the article built was not a fixture. In none of them was the structure in question at any time actually a part of the building to which they were claimed to be affixed.

[3, 4] In the case at bar the balconies when completed and when nailed and bolted to the building were a part of that building. As the structure then stood they were an addition to it and an improvement upon the premises. One about to furnish material for this work, acquainting himself with the plans to be used, would have known that when constructed this would be the result. Such a person cannot be deprived of his statutory and constitutional right to a lien by the concealed purpose held by those responsible for the construction. Of course it is true, as said in Gosliner v. Briones, 187 Cal. 557, 204 P. 19, that generally the intent of the parties is a controlling criterion in ascertaining whether property is permanently attached to the land or retains its identity as personalty. This applies between the immediate parties to a transaction, such as mortgagor and mortgagee, vendor, and vendee, etc., and their successors in interest. But where, as here, the rights of a person unconnected with that transaction are concerned, and who is without actual or constructive notice concerning the intent of the parties responsible for annexing the personality to the realty, the question is not so much the intent of such parties as the apparent intent as it would reasonably appear to such third person.

[5, 6] Complaint is made that the findings are defective. It is claimed that there is no finding as to whether or not the balconies were permanently attached to the building or were fixtures as defined by section 660 of the Civil Code. The findings contained one, No. 11, above mentioned, detailing the construction of the balconies and the exact manner in which they were attached to the building. The court found as a conclusion of law that "said balconies were alterations, additions, or improvements to said building as contemplated by the law determining materialmen's liens as a conclusion of law from the foregoing facts." We think this was sufficient. Finding 11 is more than a mere recital of the evidence. The manner in which the balconies were attached to the building is there established as a fact for the purposes of the decision to be by means of bolts and nails, etc. Such a means of annexation is declared by section 660 of the Civil Code to constitute a permanent attachment, which conclusion is a matter of law, and might have been stated unqualifiedly in the conclusions of law. However, it is well settled that a judgment will not be reversed for error in the statement of the conclusions of law if the findings and judgment are sound, nor, for that matter because of the absence of a finding where, as here, if such a finding had been made it would have sustained the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILLER v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 5856.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 27, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 28, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 22, 1927.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨171—Language of ambiguous assignment should be interpreted most strongly against party who caused uncertainty to exist.

Where assignment by its terms purported to transfer individual interests of Mary Miller and her daughter in cause of action, only ground for inference that more was intended being fact that beneath Mary Miller's signature appeared words, "Administratrix of Estate of William Miller," language of assignment held required to be interpreted most strongly against assignee, who prepared instrument and thus caused uncertainty to exist.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨171—Assignment imputed intention to transfer only individual interests of administratrix and daughter, and finding that sale from estate was intended held unsupported (Code Civ. Proc. § 1526).

Assignment purporting to transfer individual interests of assignor and her daughter in cause of action, though signed by assignor as administratrix and no notice of sale being given as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1526, held not to impute intention to transfer more than the individual interests of assignor and her daughter, and not to support trial court's implied finding that sale from the estate was intended so that court was without jurisdiction to confirm.

3. Certiorari ⇨64(2)—In certiorari proceeding, jurisdiction of court to make order of confirmation of sale regular on its face could be inquired into.

In certiorari proceeding, appellate court could review record of court below and also evidence to determine jurisdiction of court to make order of confirmation of sale by deceased's estate regular on its face.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨367—Validity of proceedings for sale of property of decedent depends upon substantial compliance with law.

Since proceedings for sale of property of estate of a decedent are statutory, their validity depends upon substantial compliance with law.

5. Executors and administrators ⇨375—Alleged sale of property of estate of decedent which is void cannot be confirmed.

An alleged sale of property of estate of a decedent which is shown to be void cannot be confirmed; there being no subject-matter upon which an order of confirmation can act.

6. Executors and administrators ⇨375, 386—Where alleged sale of property of decedent is but transfer of individual interest of representative in property of estate, court cannot confirm, and transfer does not divest rights of other heirs.

Where alleged sale of property of estate of a decedent is in effect but transfer of individual interest of representative in property of estate, court has no power to confirm, and transfer cannot operate to divest rights of other heirs.

Application by Mary F. Miller for certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Thomas F. Graham, Judge, confirming sale of property of a decedent's estate. Order annulled.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Daniel O'Connell, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

CASHIN, J. A proceeding to review an order of confirmation made by the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, in the matter of the estate of William Miller, deceased.

The deceased in his lifetime, pursuant to an agreement with Herman Murphy and others, paid the taxes, amounting to $996.37, which were a lien on certain real property in Alameda county. The title to the property was in litigation between the parties, and it was agreed that in the event of a judgment adverse to Miller's claim the amount should be repaid to him with interest and be secured by a lien on the land. The litigation having resulted in favor of Murphy and his codefendants, an action to foreclose the lien was commenced by Miller and was pending at the time of his death. Mary Miller, his wife, was subsequently appointed as administratrix of his estate, and the action was continued in her name.

After two trials of the action, the judgment first entered having been reversed, a judgment was entered on March 28, 1924, in favor of the estate for $1,370.21. The latter judgment was affirmed on appeal and was collected by the administratrix on November 3, 1926, the total amount received being the sum of $1,733.90.

A petition for a confirmation of sale was filed in the estate proceeding on October 27, 1926, this being followed on December 6, 1926, by a report of sale, both of which were signed and the latter verified by Daniel O'Connell.

It was alleged that petitioner loaned to the deceased in his lifetime the sum of $500 for the purpose of enabling the latter to make the payment under the contract with Murphy, that this sum had not been repaid, and that petitioner in addition paid the costs and rendered services as an attorney in the litigation leading to the recovery of the judgment by the administratrix, for which he had not been reimbursed or compensated; that after the reversal of the judgment first entered therein the administratrix refused to proceed further in the action, whereupon at his request an assignment of the cause of action was executed to petitioner by the administratrix and her daughter, Anna M. O'Connell.

It was further alleged that the consideration for its execution was the services rendered, the disbursements made by petitioner, and his agreement to save the estate and Mrs. Miller harmless from loss, expense, or liability in the prosecution of the action, and, further, that there was no other property of the estate with which to pay the expenses of maintaining the action or the expenses of administration; that the assignment was for the best interests of the estate, and the consideration therefor fair and reasonable, the petition concluding with a prayer that the transaction be confirmed as a sale from the estate to petitioner.

The petition contained no allegation of a compliance with the provisions of section 1526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it is admitted that no notice of sale was given.

Objections were filed by the administratrix, and after a hearing a decree of confirmation was entered, which required the administratrix to pay the proceeds of the judgment to O'Connell.

A motion to vacate the decree made by Mary F. Miller, who is the petitioner here and an heir of the deceased, was denied.

It is contended in the present proceeding that the finding that a sale was made by the estate is unsupported; and, it being admitted that no notice of sale was given, and no return having been made by the administratrix, the court in making its decree acted without and in excess of its jurisdiction.

The return to the writ shows all the proceedings had, including the evidence adduced before respondent court, and it appears that the assignment referred to in the petition for confirmation and upon which the petitioner therein relied in support of the allegation that a sale from the estate had been made was in words and figures as follows:

"In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Alameda.

"William Miller and Mary Miller, as Administratrix, v. Herman Murphy et al.

"No. 54744—Dept. 3.

"Assignment.

"I hereby assign and transfer to Daniel O'Connell all my right, title, and interest in and to the subject-matter of the above-entitled action and the cause of action sued thereon. Mary Miller, Administratrix of the Estate of the said William Miller, Anna M. O'Connell. June 15, 1923. Witness: Florence Miller."

The assignment by its terms purports to transfer the individual interests of Mary Miller and her daughter in the cause of action, the only ground for the inference that more was intended being the fact that beneath the signature of the former appears the words "Administratrix of the Estate of the said William Miller."

[1, 2] It is undisputed that Mrs. Miller was unable to read, and that her ability to write was limited to her signature, and it is admitted that the instrument was prepared by O'Connell. Under such circumstances the language of the instrument should be interpreted most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist. Payne v. Neuval, 155 Cal. 46, 99 P. 476; Lassing v. James, 107 Cal. 348, 355, 40 P. 534.

It is admitted that the instrument was executed at the request of the assignee, and, according to the testimony of Mrs. Miller, its execution was induced by the following statement made by him: " * * * He told me I ought to sign it or we won't get our money, * * * some taxes money. * * * "

It is alleged in the report of sale that the claim against Murphy constituted the whole of the estate, and, so far as appears, such was the fact.

At the time the assignment was made O'Connell, who was the attorney for the estate, claimed an interest in the cause of action, which in amount exceeded that of the estate, and as shown by the records of the superior court of Alameda county the costs paid by him previous to the assignment amounted to $18.75. In view of his claim, he was equally chargeable with the expense of conducting the litigation and the conclusion that it was the intention that he should acquire the whole estate in consideration of the above expenditure and the services previously rendered, the total value of which was much less than the value of the estate, would be unreasonable. Nor is such intention rendered probable by his promise to save the estate harmless in the further conduct of the litigation which, according to his contention, was to be conducted solely for his benefit.

From the foregoing and the fact that no notice of sale was given, we are satisfied that it cannot reasonably be inferred that it was the intention to transfer more than the individual interests of the administratrix and her daughter, that the portion of the assignment last quoted was merely descriptive of one of the assignors, and that the implied finding that a sale from the estate was intended was unsupported.

[3] An order of confirmation regular on its face cannot be collaterally attacked, but certiorari, in so far as the determination of the jurisdictional facts in concerned, is not a collateral but a direct attack; and while not a writ of error, it is nevertheless a means by which the power of the court in the premises can be inquired into, and for this purpose the review extends not only to the record of the court below, but to the evidence, when necessary to determine the existence of the jurisdictional facts. Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 P. 35; Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 43 P. 580.

[4, 5] Proceedings for the sale of property of the estate of a decedent being statutory (Estate of O'Sullivan, 84 Cal. 444, 24 P. 281), their validity depends upon a substantial compliance with the law (Hellman v. Merz, 112 Cal. 661, 44 P. 1079), and an alleged sale which is shown to be void cannot be confirmed (Schlicker v. Hemenway, 110 Cal. 579, 42 P. 1063, 52 Am. St. Rep. 116); there being no subject-matter upon which an order of confirmation can act (Townsend v. Tallant, 33 Cal. 45, 91 Am. Dec. 617).

[6] It is equally essential to the validity of the order that a sale from the estate be shown, and where the sale alleged is in effect but a transfer of the individual interest of the representative in the property of the estate, the court for the reasons stated in Townsend v. Tallant, supra, is without power to confirm, and the transfer cannot operate to divest the rights of other heirs. Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337; King v. Harford, 48 Cal. App. 405, 191 P. 998.

It is our conclusion that no sale by the estate was had, and that respondent court was without jurisdiction to confirm; and it will therefore be unnecessary to consider the further questions raised by petitioner.

The order is annulled.

MORRIS v. MORRIS et al. (Civ. 5513.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 27, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 22, 1927.

1. Negligence ⇐134(1)—Passenger suing automobile driver for injury must show by preponderance of evidence that negligence caused damage.

In passenger's action against driver to recover for personal injury sustained in automobile accident, plaintiff was under duty to show by preponderance of evidence that damage was caused by defendant's neglect.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)—Instruction denying jury right to draw inferences from evidence of cause of accident inconsistent with defendant's reasonable and unimpeached testimony, which jury must accept, held prejudicial error.

In action for injuries arising from automobile accident, instruction that jury could not draw any inferences from evidence as to cause of accident inconsistent with explanation offered by defendant which was reasonable, and not impeached or contradicted, and that they were bound to accept such testimony whether they believed it or not, was prejudicial error.

3. Negligence ⇐121(3)—Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held applicable, in action for injuries to passenger in automobile colliding with pole at intersection.

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff riding in automobile driven by defendant which collided with electric light pole in attempting turn at intersection, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable.

4. Negligence ⇐121(2)—Inference of negligence from doctrine of res ipsa loquitur cannot be disregarded by jury without evidence overcoming prima facie case.

Inference of negligence arising from circumstances bringing case within doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, though not changing burden of proof, which remains on plaintiff, cannot be disregarded by jury, in absence of evidence sufficient to meet prima facie case made out.

5. Trial ⇐140(2)—Weight and value of defendant's testimony, though for most part uncontradicted, is for jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, weight and value of defendant's testimony is for jury, though it was for most part uncontradicted.

6. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 139(1)—Whether evidence is sufficient to establish case for plaintiff is for jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, whether evidence as whole was sufficient to establish case for plaintiff is for jury.

7. Evidence $\hookrightarrow$ 598(1)—Jury need not decide in conformity with evidence of any number of witnesses not producing conviction against less number or against presumption or other evidence (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1847, 2061).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1847, 2061, jury is not bound to decide in conformity with declaration of any number of witnesses which does not produce conviction against less number or against presumption or other evidence satisfying their minds, though witness is presumed to speak truth, and uncontradicted testimony cannot generally be disregarded.

8. Negligence $\hookrightarrow$ 136(7)—Question whether testimony overcame inference of automobile driver's negligence as to passenger was for jury.

In passenger's suit for injuries sustained in automobile accident, question whether uncontradicted testimony of witness was sufficient to overcome inference of negligence arising from nature of accident was for jury.

9. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 194(16)—Instruction precluding jury from considering whether inference of negligence would not be equally reasonable with explanation by defendant held not justified.

That explanation given by defendant for automobile accident might appear to jury to be reasonable would not justify instruction precluding jury from considering whether inference of negligence drawn from all circumstances shown by evidence would not be equally reasonable and of so finding.

10. Negligence $\hookrightarrow$ 134(4)—Inference of negligence of driver of automobile injuring passenger held warranted.

In action to recover for injuries sustained when automobile in which plaintiff was riding collided with post at intersection, inference that driver was negligent, and that injury was proximately caused thereby, would have been fairly supported.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul Burks, Judge.

Action by Ida B. Morris against Hattie M. Morris and husband. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

R. C. Gortner, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

David R. Faries and John R. Berryman, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. The plaintiff was injured while riding in an automobile operated by defendant Hattie M. Morris, and Robinson A. Morris, who was the husband of the latter, was joined as a defendant in the action.

The complaint contained general allegations of negligence in the operation of the automobile with averments as to the character of the injuries suffered and the damage sustained; these allegations, with the exception of the fact that plaintiff was injured, being denied by the answer.

The action was tried by a jury, which returned a verdict for defendants, and from the judgment entered therein the plaintiff appealed. It is urged as grounds for reversal that certain of the instructions to the jury were prejudicially erroneous.

The plaintiff and Hattie M. Morris, who will hereinafter be referred to as the defendant, were, so far as appears, the only persons who witnessed the accident. The plaintiff was riding in the rear seat of the automobile, which was being driven in a westerly direction on San Marino street in the city of Los Angeles. It was the intention of the parties to turn at the intersection of San Marino street with western avenue, and proceed south along the avenue. The plaintiff, who was unable to explain the cause of the accident, testified that, when the automobile entered the intersection, its course was directly toward an electric light pole which was situated between the curb and the sidewalk at the southwest corner of the intersection; that, when the driver attempted to turn to the south, the speed of the car suddenly increased, and a collision with the pole occurred, causing the damage alleged. She further testified that, as the automobile approached the intersection, she looked to the south along the avenue, and saw no automobiles approaching from that direction.

It was testified by the defendant that the automobile entered the intersection at a speed of approximately 10 miles per hour; that three other automobiles were then approaching from the south, the nearest being distant about 65 feet; that, fearing a collision with the latter, she became excited, pressed her foot upon the accelerator, and that, as the result of the increase in speed, she was unable, after passing the center of the intersection, to turn the automobile sufficiently to the left to avoid striking the pole mentioned.

Contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff was not pleaded by the defendants, and it was stipulated as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries, and also that the width of Western avenue between the curbs was 56 feet, and of San Marino street 40 feet.

The first instruction of which appellant complains was as follows:

"If you find that the accident in this case is as consistent with the neglect of the duty on the part of the plaintiff, Ida B. Morris, as it is with the neglect of the duty on the part of the defendant, then the plaintiff cannot recover in this action in damages, and your verdict must be for the defendant."

[1] It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of evidence that the damage alleged was caused by the neglect of the defendant, and, as held in the following cases, the instruction was properly given. Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 480, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493; Straten v. Spencer, 52 Cal. App. 98, 110, 197 P. 540.

[2] The jury was further instructed as follows:

"Any presumption which the law may raise or permit you to draw from the grave character of the accident as indicating that the same was caused by negligence, or not caused by negligence of the operator of the automobile, is overcome by direct and competent evidence as to how or why the accident actually did happen, if such evidence is or stands uncontradicted. In other words, in the absence of any explanation as to how the accident happened, the law permits you to draw reasonable, but not imaginary, inferences in respect to the happening of such accident and the probable cause thereof; but, when competent witnesses have testified to the manner of the happening of the accident and to the cause thereof, then, if such testimony be reasonable, and not in any manner contradicted or impeached, you are not entitled to draw any inferences or to assume any of such facts respecting said accident or causes of the happening thereof, inconsistent with or contradictory to such testimony. In other words, you must accept as true the testimony of any witness who is competent to testify, provided such testimony is reasonable and not contradicted or impeached by any other evidence, and even though, in your own minds, you cannot believe such testimony to be true."

[3] The circumstances of the injury were such as to justify the application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine (Bauhofer v. Crawford, 16 Cal. App. 676, 117 P. 931; Mansfield v. Pickwick Stages, 68 Cal. App. 507, 229 P. 890; Leitert v. Pickwick Stages, 68 Cal. App. 504, 229 P. 889); and it is apparent from the complaint and the testimony of the plaintiff that she relied thereon.

[4] While negligence on the part of a defendant is not to be presumed from the mere happening of an accident, and the inference of negligence arising from the circumstances which bring the case within the doctrine does not change the burden of proof which remains upon the plaintiff (O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 146 P. 674), this inference, in the absence of evidence sufficient to meet the prima facie case thus made, could not be disregarded by the jury. Bush v. Barnett, 96 Cal. 202, 31 P. 2; Housel v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 167 Cal. 245, 139 P. 73, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1105, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 665.

[5, 6] In the present case the defendant testified as to the cause of the accident, and, although her testimony, with the exception of the statement that other cars were approaching close to the intersection, was uncontradicted, it was for the jury to determine the weight and value of her testimony (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061), and whether the evidence as a whole was sufficient to establish the case for the plaintiff. By the latter instruction the jury was told in effect that they were not at liberty to draw from the circumstances shown by the evidence as a whole any inference as to the cause of the accident inconsistent with, or contrary to, the explanation offered by the defendant, provided her testimony was reasonable, and not impeached or contradicted, and, further, that they were bound to accept such testimony whether they believed it or not.

[7, 8] Although a witness is presumed to speak the truth (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847), and it is the general rule that the uncontradicted testimony of a witness to a particular fact may not be disregarded, nevertheless the jury is not bound to decide in conformity with the declaration of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in their minds against a less number or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying their minds. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061. Moreover, as held in Lauder v. Currier, 3 Cal. App. 28, 84 P. 217, the question whether the uncontradicted testimony of a witness was sufficient to overcome the inference of negligence arising from the nature of the accident was one for their determination.

[9] That the explanation given by the defendant might appear to the jury to be reasonable would not justify an instruction which precluded them from considering whether an inference of negligence drawn from all the circumstances shown by the evidence would not be equally or more reasonable and of so finding, if such was their conclusion.

[10] Notwithstanding her explanation, the circumstances tended to show that the driver was inattentive in the operation of the car and to the conditions at the intersection, and the inference that she was negligent in this respect, and that the injury was proximately caused thereby, would have been fairly supported.

We find no instruction in the record which can reasonably be said to have removed the misleading effect of the instruction in question, and, after an examination of the entire record, including the evidence, we are of the opinion that this instruction was prejudicially erroneous, and that as a reasonable probability the result was a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is reversed.

KISTNER v. POMEROY et al. (Civ. 5499.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 25, 1927.

1. Schools and school districts ⚡85—Statute held not to require approval of school building plans by county superintendent before paying architect for preparing them (Pol. Code, § 1543, subd. 12, § 1608, subd. 4).

Pol. Code, § 1543, subd. 12, does not require that school building plans, contracted for by school board, as impliedly authorized by section 1608, subd. 4, be approved by county superintendent, before payment of architect for preparing them, but merely requires such approval before final adoption of plans by board.

2. Schools and school districts ⚡85—Approval of school building plans by county superintendent need not be made condition precedent to payment of architect for preparing them.

In absence of express statutory provision, law does not require that approval of plans for construction of school buildings by county superintendent of schools be made condition precedent to payment for architect's services in preparing them, and such clause is not essential to validity of contract therefor.

3. Pleading ⚡214(1)—Averments of complaint must be taken as true on demurrer.

The averments of the complaint must be taken as true on demurrer thereto.

4. Schools and school districts ⚡86(2)—On school board's repudiation of contract for preparation of building plans, architect could sue immediately for damages, even if approval by county superintendent was condition precedent to payment (Pol. Code, § 1543, subd. 12; Civ. Code, § 3532).

On school board's repudiation of contract with architect for preparation of school building plans, when they were ready for submission to county superintendent for approval under Pol. Code, § 1543, subd. 12, architect was not required to proceed further in performance of contract, in view of Civ. Code, § 3532, but could treat it as terminated, and sue immediately for damages, even if such approval of plans was condition precedent to payment for services in preparing them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Theodore C. Kistner against L. F. Pomeroy and others, as trustees of Anaheim School District. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

H. J. Bischoff, of San Diego, for appellant. Alex P. Nelson, former Dist. Atty., C. N. Mozley, D. G. Wettlin, Kenneth H. Burns, former Deputy Dist. Attys., and Z. B. West, Jr., Dist. Atty., all of Santa Ana, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Plaintiff, a licensed architect, brought this action to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract of employment. A general demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained with leave to amend, but, plaintiff having declined to amend, judgment of dismissal was entered, from which judgment plaintiff appealed.

The essential averments of the complaint are: That on April 15, 1919, defendants, constituting the board of trustees of Anaheim school district in Orange county, entered into an agreement with plaintiff whereby the latter was employed "as architect for said school district in the construction of two new school buildings," at an agreed compensation of 6 per cent. of the cost of the construction of said buildings, the estimated cost of which was $100,000; "that, pursuant to said contract of employment, said plaintiff entered upon the performance of his duties as architect, and prepared preliminary drawings for both of said school buildings, consisting of floor plans and elevations; that said plaintiff conferred with said members of said board of trustees from time to time regarding said plans and the buildings to be constructed; that, after said preliminary drawings for said buildings were completed, said plaintiff proceeded with the preparations of final drawings, consisting of floor plans and elevations and details of the school building to be constructed on the site known as Central school site; that the plans for said building provided for ten classrooms, kindergarten and teachers' room, and principal's office; that said plaintiff continued in the performance of his duties as architect until the 15th of August, 1919, and expended large sums of money in the preparation of said plans; that said plans had been practically completed and were ready for submission for approval by the county superintendent of schools of said Orange county; that on said August 15, 1919, plaintiff received notice from said board of trustees that he had been discharged as architect." The prayer of the complaint was that plaintiff be given judgment in the sum of $4,000.

[1] Section 1543 of the Political Code provides that "It is the duty of the superintendent of schools of each county: * * * Twelfth—Except in incorporated cities having boards of education, to pass upon and approve or reject all plans for school houses. To enable him to do so, all boards of trustees, before adopting any plans for school buildings, must submit the same to the county superintendent [of schools] for his approval"; and, in view of said provision, defendants contend "that, before plaintiff can recover in this action, he must prove that his plans for the school buildings in question had been submitted to the county superintendent of schools of Orange county, in which county the school district involved herein is located and that the said county superintendent of schools has approved the same. And further that, if such facts are indispensable evidence before recovery can be had, it would follow that the complaint should allege that plaintiff's plans had been submitted to, and approved by, the said county superintendent of schools before any liability would attach to the board of trustees of said school district. The said amended complaint contains no such allegation, and therefore does not state a cause of action against said board of trustees."

We are of the opinion that the provision of the Political Code hereinabove quoted, and upon which defendants rely to sustain their position, does not have the effect of limiting the power of school boards to contract for the preparation of plans for the construction of school buildings, but that the limitation mentioned therein affects only, as its terms clearly imply, the right of said boards to finally adopt plans without the approval of the same by the county superintendent. Subdivision 4 of section 1608 of the Political Code expressly confers upon said boards the power "to build school houses"; and in defining the authority which they may exercise under said section it has been held that the power "to erect school houses implies as a necessary incident to that power the right to procure plans and specifications." Harris v. Cooley, 171 Cal. 144, 152 P. 300; Miller v. Boyle, 43 Cal. App. 39, 184 P. 421. That being so, the right to procure plans must necessarily include the right to incur a legal obligation to pay for the service of preparing the same in order that they may be submitted for approval to the county superintendent of schools, as provided in said section 1543. If, on the other hand, defendants' construction of said subdivision 12 of section 1543 be adopted, and it be held that the authority to pay for such services is dependent upon the subsequent approval of the plans by the county school superintendent, then said subdivision 4 of section 1608 conferring power upon school trustees to build school buildings would become practically inoperative, because in many cases, under those conditions, boards of trustees would be unable to procure the plans to submit for approval to the county school superintendent.

[2] We therefore conclude that, in the absence of express statutory provision to that effect, the law does not require that the approval of plans for the construction of school buildings be made a condition precedent to the payment for the services of preparing the same, and consequently a clause to that effect was not essential to the validity of the contract under consideration.

[3, 4] Even though under any possible construction it could be held that the approval of such plans by the school superintendent did constitute a condition precedent to the payment for the services of preparing the same, the averments of the complaint in the present case, which on demurrer must be taken as true, are to the effect that defendants breach the contract of employment just at the time the plans were ready to be submitted to the school superintendent for approval. Therefore, upon such breach, plaintiff was not required to proceed further in the performance of the contract, but was entitled to treat the same as at an end, and to sue immediately for such damages as may have resulted from such breach. 6 Cal Jur. 464, 465. "The law neither does nor requires idle acts" (6 Civ. Code, § 3532), and manifestly it would have been idle for plaintiff to have submitted the plans to the school superintendent for approval after defendants had terminated his contract of employment. In other words, if, as defendants claim, the obtaining of the school superintendent's approval was a condition precedent to the payment of plaintiff's demand, the point that plaintiff failed to perform such condition is not available to defendants in this proceeding on demurrer, because it is averred in the complaint that the alleged repudiation of the contract by defendants prevented such performance. Antonelle v. Kennedy & Shaw Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 309, 73 P. 966.

No other points being made as to the power of said board to enter into the contract of employment in question or against the sufficiency of the complaint, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

PAYNE v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 5863.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 29, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 26, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 26, 1927.

1. Master and servant §417(7)—Industrial Accident Commission's award on evidence is conclusive.

Appellate court, in reviewing awards of Industrial Accident Commission, is not acting as court of appeal, and is without power to determine weight to be given evidence, or which of two opposing inferences should be drawn therefrom.

2. Master and servant §417(7)—Findings of Industrial Accident Commission award on reasonably sufficient evidence must be affirmed.

It is not necessary that findings of Industrial Accident Commission shall accord with preponderance of evidence, and unless it can be said that there was no evidence reasonably sufficient to support findings, award must be affirmed.

3. Master and servant § 375(1)—Voluntary acts incidental to regular duties, if beneficial to employer and not personal to employee, are within "scope of employment."

Although injury suffered by employee while voluntarily doing something entirely outside of his employment, even though of benefit to employer, is not an injury in course of employment, acts incidental to his regular duties, if of benefit to employer and not personal to employee are within "scope of his employment."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Scope of Employment.]

4. Master and servant § 375(1)—Injury to barber shop porter assisting employer, without express request, to remove linoleum from floor, held compensable (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act 1917, § 8[b]).

Evidence held sufficient to support findings that injury to porter in barber shop, whose duty was to sweep shop and on Sundays to clean mirrors and other articles in addition, sustained while assisting employer who did not expressly request him to assist in removing linoleum from floor on Sunday, occurred in course and arose out of employment under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), § 8(b).

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by J. A. McCullough, claimant, for injuries, opposed by Robert Payne, employer. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation for the injuries, and the employer brings certiorari. Award affirmed.

A. P. Hayne and Nutter, Hancock & Ruth-erford, all of Stockton, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner and Gordon S. Keith, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. A proceeding in certiorari to review an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission to respondent J. A. McCullough.

The petitioner was the proprietor of a barber shop in the city of Stockton, and respondent, McCullough, at the time of the injury for which he sought compensation, was conducting a bootblack stand on the premises occupied by petitioner. Respondent paid no rental for the privilege of conducting the stand, but in lieu thereof rendered services to petitioner as a porter in the latter's shop. It appears from the testimony that it was respondent's duty to sweep the shop in the morning and evening, and on Sundays in addition to the sweeping to clean the mirrors and other articles therein. Respondent on Sunday, June 13, 1926, while engaged in removing certain linoleum from the floor of the shop, received an injury which resulted in a partial loss of his sight.

The commission found that respondent was in the employ of petitioner, that the injury occurred in the course and arose out of the employment, and awarded compensation. Petitioner contends that the evidence does not support the findings and that consequently the action of the commission was without and in excess of its jurisdiction.

The testimony shows that on the morning of the accident both petitioner and respondent were present at the shop and that the latter was told by petitioner that it was his intention to remove the linoleum. During the temporary absence of petitioner the work was commenced by respondent and was conducted by both when petitioner returned, the injury occurring during the absence of the latter. Respondent testified that he was not expressly requested to do or to assist in the doing of the work, and that the service was rendered as an accommodation to petitioner.

[1, 2] The court, in reviewing awards of the commission, is not acting as a court of appeal (Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 177 Cal. 378, 170 P. 822), and is without power to determine the weight to be given the evidence (Dearborn v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 187 Cal. 591-594, 203 P. 112), or which of two opposing inferences should be drawn therefrom (Western Pacific R. R. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 193 Cal. 413, 224 P. 754). Moreover, it is not necessary that the findings in its judgment shall accord with the preponderance of the evidence (San Francisco v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 183 Cal. 273-282, 191 P. 26), and unless it can be said that there was no evidence reasonably sufficient to support the findings, the award must be affirmed (Engels Copper, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 183 Cal. 714, 192 P. 845, 11 A. L. R. 785).

As provided by section 8 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 831):

"Any person rendering service for another, other than as an independent contractor, or as expressly excluded herein, is presumed to be an employee within the meaning of this act."

[3] While an injury suffered by an employee while voluntarily doing something entirely outside of his employment, even though of benefit to the employer is not an injury in the course of the employment (Engels Copper, etc., Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra), acts incidental to his regular duties, if of benefit to the employer and not personal to the employee, are within the scope of his employment (Myers v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 191 Cal. 673, 218 P. 11); and, as held by the Commission in Crawford v. Jones Investment Co., 4 Cal. I. A. C. 180, even though an employee is acting at his own suggestion, the duty may be in the course of his employment where it is connected therewith and is performed with the knowledge and acquiescence of his employer.

[4] In the present case the testimony sufficiently shows that the service was incidental to the regular duties of the employee, also of benefit to the employer, and as in the case of Martin v. Guiberson, 9 Cal. I. A. C. 82, where in a writ of review was denied by our Supreme Court, a request that the service be performed might reasonably be implied from the conduct of the employer. This evidence was sufficient to support the findings, and the award is therefore affirmed.

MOOR et al. v. VAWTER. (Civ. 5062.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 1, 1927.

1. Wills §427—Decree fixing rights of beneficiaries under trust, though inconsistent with will, supersedes will and binds beneficiaries.

Rights of beneficiaries under trust created by will are conclusively governed by terms of decree with reference to terms of trust, even though decree is incorrect from standpoint of following terms of will, as decree supersedes and prevails under will's provisions.

2. Wills §427—Provision of will relative to distribution of trust estate in event of death of beneficiaries could be disregarded in action to terminate trust where provision was omitted from decree.

In action by beneficiaries to terminate trust created by will, provision in will for distribution of beneficiaries' share to issue in case of death could be disregarded, where decree which superseded will omitted such provision.

3. Trusts §61(1)—Adult beneficiaries, on death of testator's widow, given life interest in trust estate, held entitled to have accumulation of income distributed (Civ. Code, §§ 723, 724, 733).

In action by adult beneficiaries to terminate trust created by will for 10-year period, after death of testator's widow given life interest therein, beneficiaries held entitled to have accumulation of trust estate distributed to them before expiration of ten-year period under Civ. Code §§ 723, 724, 733.

4. Trusts §61(1)—Court has power to terminate trust, where interests have vested and beneficiaries desire its termination.

Court has power to decree termination of trust, where all its objects and purposes have been accomplished, where interests under it have vested, and where all parties beneficially interested desire its termination.

5. Trusts §61(1)—Competent adult beneficiaries on death of testator's widow given life interest in trust estate held entitled to termination of trust before expiration of term where only duty of trustee was to pay beneficiaries specified monthly income.

Adult beneficiaries of trust, who were competent and not spendthrifts, on death of testator's widow given life interest therein, held entitled to have trust terminated before expiration of ten-year period created by will, where only duty of trustee was to pay beneficiaries stated monthly sums until expiration of such period.

6. Trusts §61(1)—Court may not, in exercise of discretion, arbitrarily deny termination of trust.

Discretion vested in trial court to terminate trust will not justify arbitrary action on its part denying relief to which beneficiaries ordinarily would be entitled.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Orlando M. Moor and others against Jesse P. Vawter, trustee of the estate of Orlando Moor, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Denis Evarts Bowman, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Warren L. Williams and Seymour S. Silvertown, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. The facts appear to be that by the terms of a will the testator left all his property in trust to defendant herein as trustee for the benefit of the widow of the testator during her natural life, and at her decease (provided that she should live ten years after the decease of the testator), to be distributed equally among the three sons of the testator. Furthermore, if the widow were to die at any time before such ten-year period expired, each of the sons was to be paid $10 per month from the date of the death of the widow until the expiration of the said period of ten years. The will further provided that:

"If either of my sons, before such division, have died, leaving lawful issue, such issue to receive the parent's share; but if there be no issue, then such share to become a part of the balance of the estate and divided among the survivors in the manner before directed."

In the proceedings on the probate of the will, a decree was rendered by the court distributing the property of the testator "according to law and the provisions of the said will," excepting that the provision therein and hereinbefore set forth was omitted from such decree.

Before the expiration of the ten-year period following the decease of the testator, the widow died, and thereafter the sons brought this action against the trustee for the purpose of terminating the trust. On the hearing of the action it was stipulated that the plaintiffs were the only children and heirs at law of the testator and his widow; that each of them was competent, not a spendthrift, nor under any disability regarding the continuation of the trust; that each of them was able to care for his own property; and that they joined in the request that the trust be terminated and the estate of the testator be distributed to them. It also appeared that the difference between the income derived from the trust estate and the expenses of distribution thereof amounted to approximately the sum of $340 per year, which sum was invested and reinvested by the trustee and thus permitted to accumulate to the betterment of the trust estate.

The appeal herein is from a judgment rendered in the action in favor of the trustee, in effect denying any relief to the plaintiffs.

[1] Generally speaking, as established by many authorities, the decree of the court with reference to the terms of the trust, and not the will, is the measure of the rights of the beneficiaries. Even though incorrect, from the standpoint of following the terms of the will, nevertheless, in the absence of reversal on appeal, the decree is conclusive as to the rights of the interested parties. Miller v. Pitman, 180 Cal. 540, 544, 182 P. 50; 12 Cal. Jur. 206; McKenzie v. Budd, 125 Cal. 600, 602, 58 P. 199; Luscomb v. Fintzelberg, 162 Cal. 433, 438, 123 P. 247; Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 557, 51 P. 681, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145; Matter of Trust of Trescony, 119 Cal. 568, 570, 51 P. 951; Toland v. Earl, 129 Cal. 148, 152, 61 P. 914, 79 Am. St. Rep. 100; Estate of Learned, 156 Cal. 309, 104 P. 315; Drexler v. Washington Development Co., 172 Cal. 758, 760, 159 P. 166; Estate of Scrimger, 188 Cal. 158, 164, 206 P. 65.

[2] As hereinbefore noted, by the terms of the decree the trust estate was distributed "according to law and the provisions of the said will, as follows. * * *" While from such reference alone ordinarily it might be argued that the intention was to include within the decree all "the provisions of the said will," nevertheless the point appears to have been settled by judicial authority to the contrary. In the case of Keating v. Smith, 154 Cal. 186, 97 P. 300, the language of the decree was identical with that here under consideration, in that it provided for the disposition of the estate "according to law and the provisions of said will," notwithstanding which, it was held that the terms of the decree superseded those of the will and prevailed over any provision in the will which was inconsistent with the decree. In the case of Wills v. Wills, 166 Cal. 529, 137 P. 249, it is held in effect that the decree is conclusive in itself, excepting where by apt language the will is incorporated into the decree. It therefore may be assumed that, so far as may concern the provision of the will relating to the disposition of the trust in the event of the death of either of the sons of the testator prior to the expiration of the ten-year period following the death of the testator, in the face of the fact that such provision is omitted from the decreed—the legal effect is as though no such provision had ever existed.

[3] Considering the position of the trustee with reference to the accumulation of income of a trust, it will be noted that by the provision of section 724 of the Civil Code, such an accumulation is valid as affecting trust estates for the benefit of minors only; and, so far as the facts pertaining to this action are concerned, the effect of section 723 of the Civil Code is to declare void the accumulation of the income of the trust estate here under consideration. By section 733 of the Civil Code it is provided that:

"When in consequence of a valid limitation of a future interest, there is a suspension of the power of alienation or of the ownership during the continuation of which the income is undisposed of, and no valid direction for its accumulation is given, such income belongs to the persons presumptively entitled to the next eventual interest."

In addition to the statutory provisions to which reference has been had, it is held in Estate of Yates, 170 Cal. 254, 149 P. 555, that while the direction in a trust for the accumulation of income beyond the age of minority of the beneficiary under the trust is unquestionably void, the trust itself may be valid, with the result that upon reaching majority the beneficiary may be entitled to receive the entire net income derived from the trust.

The case entitled Estate of Whitney, 176 Cal. 12, 167 P. 399, among other things, involved a question similar to that now being here considered, and it was there held that a direction in a will which provided for the accumulation of income from the estate during the lives of three adult children of the testator was void. An identical conclusion was reached by the court in Estate of Duffill, 180 Cal. 748, 183 P. 337.

With such an array of authority it must be concluded that with reference solely to the question of the accumulation of income from the trust property herein, the plaintiffs were entitled to have such accumulation distributed to them.

Considering the facts and the law as indicated by the authorities hereinbefore cited, it follows that the trust stands as though originally it had been intended that, after the expiration of ten years, the trust estate should be distributed to the beneficiaries therein named—the plaintiffs in this action—and the question then arises regarding the right of the plaintiffs to have the trust terminated before the expiration of such ten-year period.

In the case of Huber v. Donoghue, 49 N. J. Eq. 125, 23 A. 495, the testator left a will which in its provisions closely resembled those herein, in that in the cited case, after providing for the sale of certain property, the will provided:

"At the expiration of ten years from my death, I direct my said executors to sell at public sale all the residue of my real estate to the highest bidder." * * * "I do direct that my said executors shall, out of the proceeds of the sales above mentioned, and the rents, issues and profits of such properties and investments shall be applied, so far as necessary, to the maintenance of my wife and unmarried children during the period of ten years next succeeding my death; and at the expiration of said ten years (after the sale last above mentioned) all the moneys or investments then remaining in the hands of my said executors shall be divided equally, share and share alike, between my wife and my children, who survive me."

It was held that the estate vested immediately in the widow and the children of the testator, and, being sui generis, they might successfully ask the aid of the court to declare the trust terminated. The court said, in part:

"With the aid of the court, can an absolute title be transferred prior to the expiration of 10 years? First, is the interest given to the parties who ask for the sale a vested interest? In other words, do their rights include the entire estate, subject only to the power given to the executors to sell? If there were any doubts whatever upon this point prior to the determination of the court of errors and appeals in the case of Post v. Herbert, 27 N. J. Eq. 541, all such doubts were then removed in favor of the vesting of the absolute fee. In this case, as in that, the estate was given to the trustees for the period of 10 years, not only for the benefit of the widow, but for the children also during that period. The vesting, therefore, waits upon no contingency. If the interest be a present, vested interest, which by the direction of the will is to be enjoyed in possession at and after the expiration of 10 years, can the children who will then be entitled to such possession, with the consent of the widow, enjoy such possession now, or, what is equivalent thereto, effectuate a sale and pass a valid title? This would seem to follow both from reason and the law, notwithstanding the express devise of the lands to the executors, with power to sell the same after the expiration of 10 years, and then to divide the proceeds. This rule rests upon the fact that in every such case the executors in reality are only clothed with a power of sale, and that the title is vested in them for no other purpose than that of conveying it. Consequently the executors have no interest."

The case of Hill v. Hill, 90 Neb. 43, 132 N. W. 738, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 198, is also in point, as the will of the testator therein contained the following provision:

"I will and bequeath to my nephew, * * * in trust for my lawful heirs, all my estate, both real and personal, of every kind and nature, to be held by said trustee for the term of five years, and to be distributed among my lawful heirs at the end of such period."

It was held that the estate vested immediately in the beneficiaries of the trust, and that they, being in all respects competent, were entitled to have the estate conveyed to them.

As is stated in 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 198, in a footnote to the case just cited:

"That the beneficiary of a dry, simple, or passive trust may compel the trustee to convey the trust property before the time fixed for the termination of the trust is a proposition from which there appears to be no dissent. * * *" (Citing many cases.)

And as appears in Sears v. Choate, 146 Mass. 395, 15 N. E. 786, 4 Am. St. Rep. 320:

[4, 5] "There is no doubt of the power and duty of the court to decree the termination of a trust, where all its objects and purposes have been accomplished, where the interests under it have all vested, and where all parties beneficially interested desire its termination."

Some of the California authorities recognizing the principle, or supporting the rule, are Eakle v. Ingram, 142 Cal. 15, 75 P. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 99; Ringrose v. Gleadall, 17 Cal. App. 664, 121 P. 407; Gray v. Union Trust Co., 171 Cal. 637, 154 P. 306; Estate of Blake, 157 Cal. 448, 108 P. 287; Fletcher v. Los Angeles Trust & Sav. Bank, 182 Cal. 177, 187 P. 425; Woestman v. Union Trust, etc., Bank, 50 Cal. App. 604, 195 P. 944.

[6] Notwithstanding the weight of authority, which, on the whole, would indicate a reversal of the judgment herein, it is suggested by respondent that the question of the termination of a trust rests within the discretion of the trial court.

It may not be denied that, generally speaking, the rule obtains as announced in the case of Gray v. Union Trust Co., 171 Cal. 637, 641, 154 P. 306, to the effect that the termination of a trust is discretionary with the trial court. See, also, Fletcher v. Los Angeles Trust & Sav. Bank, 182 Cal. 177, 180, 187 P. 425. But such a pronouncement goes no further than does the ordinary principle regarding the general subject of judicial discretion; that is to say, where the facts are undisputed and the right flowing therefrom demands a certain definite action on the part of the trial court, in the absence of equitable considerations in opposing interests, or at least of some sound reason, no authority by virtue of a vested discretion in the trial court would justify an arbitrary action on its part denying the relief to which the parties ordinarily would be entitled. In the instant case it was stipulated that the beneficiaries were in all respects competent, not spendthrifts, and that all of them joined in the request that the trust be terminated. No reason of any sort based upon facts or equitable considerations was interposed by the trustees which might in any manner militate against the right of the beneficiaries of the trust in the premises. In such circumstances, we are of the opinion that it became the duty of the trial court to grant to the plaintiffs in the action the relief for which they prayed.

It is ordered that the judgment be and it is reversed.

FIRST METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF SANTA MONICA v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 5381.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 3, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 29, 1927.

1. Statutes ⇨185—Intention to legislate by implication will not be presumed.

Court will not presume that Legislature, omitting express declaration from statute, intended to legislate by implication.

2. Constitutional law ⇨29—Legislature may in furtherance of self-executing constitutional provision enact legislation to facilitate its operation and provide convenient remedies.

Even though constitutional provision is self-executing, Legislature may enact legislation to facilitate its operation and to provide convenient remedies for rights established thereunder.

3. Taxation ⇨249—Failure of church to file affidavit as to use of church property held not waiver of constitutional exemption from taxation (Pol. Code, § 3611; Const. art. 13, § 1½).

Failure of church owning real property containing building used solely for religious worship to make affidavit to assessor as to use of property, required by Pol. Code, § 3611, held not waiver of exemption provided for such property by Const. art. 13, § 1½, in view of absence of express provision in section 3611 for waiver or penalty, and in view of sections 3612 and 3613.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry A. Hollzer, Judge.

Action by the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Santa Monica against the County of Los Angeles. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and J. A. Tucker, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This appeal is from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a second amended complaint, which alleged that the appellant is a religious corporation, owning two lots in the city of Santa Monica, Los Angeles county, upon which is situated a church building used solely and exclusively for religious worship, and that all of its real property here involved is required for the convenient use and occupation of said building. In the year 1924, the properly constituted authorities of Los Angeles county assessed and levied upon said property a tax amounting to $849.51, without the knowledge, acquiescence or consent of appellant, of which tax appellant learned on December 1, 1924, and upon said date paid it to the tax collector under protest. The amended complaint also alleges that the assessor and his deputy at all times mentioned had actual personal knowledge of the ownership and use of the property in question as therein stated, and that the same was exempt from taxation; further, that the assessor did not at any time during the year 1924 demand, exact, or notify the plaintiff to make, verify, or file a statement setting forth property owned by it or under its possession or control. It appears that after paying the tax appellant duly claimed the return thereof, which was refused, whereupon this action was begun to recover the amount paid, upon the claim that the property is exempt from taxation under section 1½ of article 13 of the Constitution, and section 3611 of the Political Code. In resisting the suit, respondent's sole contention is that the failure to file the affidavit required by section 3611 of the Political Code amounts to a waiver of such exemption, and that the amended complaint is fatally defective in that it contains no allegation that such affidavit was filed.

Appellant's contention is that this section is intended only to provide a method of supplying evidence of the fact that the property is exempt, and that it does not provide for a waiver of the exemption in case no affidavit be filed; further, that if it were construed as requiring the filing of an affidavit in order that exemption may be secured, such provision would be unconstitutional, because, it is said, it would conflict with section 1½ of article 13 of the Constitution of this state. Section 1½ reads as follows:

"All buildings, and so much of the real property on which they are situated as may be required for the convenient use and occupation of said buildings, when the same are used solely and exclusively for religious worship shall be free from taxation; provided, that no building so used which may be rented for religious purposes and rent received by the owner therefor, shall be exempt from taxation."

The Political Code, section 3611, quoting and providing the method of procedure for acquiring exemption under the foregoing section of the Constitution, was enacted by the Legislature in the following language:

"That any person claiming property to be exempt from taxation under this section shall make a return thereof to the assessor annually, the same as property is listed for taxation, and shall accompany the same by an affidavit showing that the building is used solely and exclusively for religious worship, and that the described portion of the real property claimed as exempt is required for the convenient use and occupation of such building, and that the same is not rented for religious purposes and rent received by the owner therefor."

[1-3] Respondent is correct in stating the issues to be, first, does the failure to comply with the provisions of section 3611 of the Political Code constitute a waiver of the exemption; and, second, so construed, is section 3611 constitutional? However, we find it unnecessary to decide the second question. We search the section in vain for any provision therein requiring that a failure to file an affidavit shall result in a waiver of the right to exemption. It contains no such express declaration. Nevertheless, respondent contends that it does not contain such provision. If so it must arise by implication. But an intention to legislate by implication is not to be presumed. Crowell v. Gilmore, 18 Cal. 370. No very definite reasons are assigned for believing that the Legislature meant to provide by implication that a failure to file the affidavit should result in a waiver of the right provided by the Constitution to tax exemptions. An analysis of section 3611 of the Political Code shows that the first provision of it is merely a quotation of section 1½ of article 13 of the Constitution. The appellant asserts, and the respondent concedes, that this section is self-executing. Since we think it unnecessary to a decision upon this appeal to pass upon that question, no opinion is expressed. It may be assumed, as argued by respondent, that even though a constitutional provision is self-executing, the Legislature may, and in many instances must, enact legislation to facilitate its operation, and to provide convenient remedies for the protection of the right established, and for the determination thereof and the regulation of claims thereto. Such legislation must be in furtherance of the purposes of the constitutional provisions, but, if so, it is valid and enforceable. The last provision of section 3611 is, we think, such a law. It is regulatory and places no unreasonable burden upon those entitled under section 1½ of article 13 of the Constitution to tax exemption. It creates no hardship to require of a property owner that he file an affidavit showing that the property claimed to be exempt is used solely for religious worship, that it is required for the convenient use and occupation of the building upon the premises, and that the same is not rented for such purposes and rent received by the owner therefor. If the person claiming exemption fails to make a return to the assessor by filing the affidavit contemplated, the latter acts entirely within the scope of his authority in assessing the property just as he would any other property. This is clearly intended by section 3611 of the Political Code. But respondent agrees further that the language employed is mandatory, that any one claiming exemption must comply with the section, and that unless such a construction is placed upon it the provision amounts to nothing more than a request to the taxpayer that he file an affidavit in order that the assessor may be aided in his work.

It may be that the statute would be more effective if the legislators had provided it with teeth, and annexed a penalty merely to make the law more effective and to reduce the work of the assessor, or to avoid time wasting on the part of other public officials. Even though the construction placed upon the law by respondent is not adopted, it cannot be said that the claimant has no incentive to comply with the requirement that he file an affidavit. The result of his failure to make a return to the assessor is bound to be, as in the instant case, that his property is taxed and he is put to the trouble and expense of a proceeding before the board of supervisors for a cancellation of the assessment, after being required to secure from the district attorney the latter's consent, or else he must pay his taxes under protest and apply to the board of supervisors for their refund, or, upon the refusal of the supervisors to direct such refund, he is compelled to institute an action in the superior court. In either of such proceedings the taxpayer would be required to show that the property in question was used exclusively for religious purposes and that it was not rented for such purposes. It may reasonably have been the idea of the legislators in enacting this law that such inconvenience and the loss of money and time incidentally involved would provide sufficient incentive to inspire compliance with the sections of the Constitution and Political Code in question without adding the further penalty of a loss of the exemption itself. At any rate they omitted provision for such a penalty.

Aside from consideration of the language of a statute where any substantial doubt exists as to its meaning, it is of course proper to regard extrinsic aids. One which may reasonably be given weight in this case, and which must throw great light upon the legislative intent, is a comparison of other provisions of the same chapter of the Political Code, having to do with other related exemptions. Sections 3612 and 3613 of the Political Code respectively provide for the exemption from taxation of war veterans and of educational institutions. It will be noted that each of these sections, after providing for a showing to be made by one claiming exemption similarly to that called for by section 3611, expressly add that a failure to make a return shall be deemed to constitute a waiver of the right given by the Constitution. In People v. Buster, 11 Cal. 221, which is not distinguishable in principle, the Supreme Court said, at page 221: "The omission of this provision in the sections which touch cases like this is significant to show that a different intention existed." Surely, the fact that these parallel provisions for tax exemption, one immediately following the other, are distinctly dissimilar in this one provision, is indicative of the fact that the Legislature in making the difference did so intentionally and deliberately. We are satisfied that the provision of section 3611 of the Political Code requiring any person claiming property to be exempt from taxation under that section to make a return thereof to the assessor was intended to assist the assessor in determining what property should be omitted from assessment, but that it was not the purpose of the Legislature in enacting it to make a failure to comply therewith a waiver of the exemption provided in section 1½ of article 13 of the Constitution. Consequently, one entitled to such an exemption may still avail himself of it in a proper proceeding, and for that purpose the complaint filed in the instant cases states a cause of action.

The judgment is reversed.

BURKE v. DILLINGHAM et al. (Civ. 4879.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 5, 1927.

1. Carriers $\S$ 321(21)—Where complaint for injuries to passenger charged negligence of bus owner in collision in general terms, instruction on doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held proper.

In action by passenger of automobile bus for injury sustained in collision of bus with truck, where complaint charged negligence of bus company in general terms only, instruction incorporating doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held proper, though plaintiff introduced testimony to prove surrounding circumstances tending to establish negligence of codefendant truck owner, and refusing instruction that doctrine had no application to case was not error.

2. Carriers $\S$ 321(12)—Instruction that bus owners as common carriers were liable for injuries by driver whether done willfully or negligently held not erroneous (Civ. Code, $\S$ 2100).

In action by bus passenger for damages for personal injuries sustained in collision of bus with truck, instruction stating law relative to common carriers for hire, as codified in Civ. Code, $\S$ 2100, and concluding that bus owners as common carriers were liable for injuries to passengers by driver, whether done willfully or negligently, held not erroneous on ground that jury must have understood that defendants were insurers of safety of its passengers.

3. Trial $\S$ 74—Codefendant could not object to cross-examination of plaintiff because it was beyond legitimate confines of cross-examination.

Where plaintiff did not testify on direct examination concerning headlights of bus which struck codefendant's truck, codefendant could not object to cross-examination, wherein plaintiff testified relative to condition of headlights, on ground that it extended beyond legitimate confines of cross-examination.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 206(2)—Proper ground for objection to cross-examination must be urged before error will result.

Before error will result from permitting cross-examination of witness, proper ground for objection to cross-examination must be urged.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 345(1)—Where defendant served notice of intention to move for new trial on plaintiff, but not on codefendants, motion for new trial was pending, and appeal after 60 days from judgment was in time (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 939).

Where judgment was entered November 7, 1923, and defendant served notice of intention to move for new trial on plaintiff's counsel November 11, 1923, but did not serve it on codefendants, motion for new trial was pending, and appeal of defendant more than 60 days after entry of judgment was in time, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 939.

6. Carriers $\S$ 320(21)—Concurring negligence of owner of truck struck by bus while stopped on highway without rear light held for jury.

In action by bus passenger for personal injuries sustained in collision of bus with truck, concurring negligence of owner of truck stopped on highway without rear light with owners of bus which struck truck from rear held for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by L. L. Burke against E. B. Dillingham and another, copartners doing business as the Dillingham Transportation Company, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants separately appeal. Affirmed.

Sarau & Thompson, of Riverside, and W. I. Gilbert and B. P. Gibbs, both of Los Angeles, for appellants E. B. Dillingham and H. L. Dillingham.

Joe Crider, Jr., and J. S. Garnett, both of Los Angeles, for appellant Cauldwell.

R. W. Richardson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. On the evening of October 4, 1922, at about the hour of 7 p. m., the plaintiff was being conveyed as a passenger on one of the automobile busses owned and operated by the Dillingham Transportation Company, a common carrier of passengers between Long Beach and Whittier, when the stage collided with a truck belonging to and operated by the defendant H. G. Cauldwell. Both vehicles had been traveling in the same direction. At the time of the accident the truck was standing upon the right-hand portion of the paved highway without a lighted tail light. Either by reason of the fact that the driver of the stage was blinded by approaching headlights (as he testified) or by reason of insufficient headlights on the stage or non-observance, the stage was driven into the rear end of the truck. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and against all defendants in the sum of $15,000, upon which judgment was entered. Two appeals are prosecuted from the judgment, one by the defendants E. B. Dillingham and H. L. Dillingham, copartners doing business under the name of Dillingham Transportation Company, and one by the defendant H. G. Cauldwell.

The Appeal of Dillinghams.

We shall dispose first of the appeal of E. B. Dillingham and H. L. Dillingham, copartners doing business under the name of Dillingham Transportation Company, who urge a reversal of the judgment because the court erred in giving an instruction incorporating the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and refusing to instruct the jury that the doctrine had no application to the case. Appellants ground their argument in this regard upon the premise that the plaintiff introduced testimony "to prove the surrounding circumstances tending to establish negligence on the part of the defendants," and they say "in so doing he waived the application of the rule." The plaintiff introduced testimony to show that the truck was standing still on the paved portion of the highway, without a tail light and that the stage was running at a speed between 30 and 35 miles per hour. On cross-examination by counsel for the defendant Cauldwell, the owner of the truck, it was developed that the lights on the stage were rather weak, which on redirect examination was amplified by the witness with the statement that in his judgment the headlights of the stage reflected ahead from 50 to 70 feet. On cross-examination it was also testified that the driver of the bus stated in the presence of one of the defendants Dillingham that he was blinded by a stream of approaching headlights.

[1] The rule concerning the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, as announced by our courts, is that where the specific acts of negligence are pleaded the doctrine has no application for the reason that, in part, it is founded upon the theory that the means of proving the specific cause of the accident are peculiarly within the power of the defendant under whose exclusive control the thing which caused the accident is shown to have been. Connor v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 189 Cal. 1, 207 P. 378, 26 A. L. R. 1462; Marovich v. Central California T. Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 595. This rule is subject to the limitation that, where negligence is alleged generally and specific acts of negligence are also alleged, the plaintiff is entitled to have the instruction given, even where the allegations appear in the same count. Roberts v. Sierra Ry. Co., 14 Cal. App. 180, 111 P. 519, 527; Bourguignon v. Peninsular Ry. Co., 40 Cal. App. 689, 181 P. 669. The appellants have called our attention to two cases from other jurisdictions, the one being Dentz v. Penn. R. Co., 75 N. J. Law, 893, 70 A. 164, the other being Pistorio v. Washington R. & E. Co., 46 App. D. C. 479, wherein it was held that, where the plaintiff goes further than the rule requires and shows by proof the cause of the accident, the presumption does not arise and he is not entitled to the instruction. This announcement is at variance with the two authorities from our own jurisdiction last cited, for the reason that in those cases plaintiff introduced evidence in support of the allegations of specific acts of negligence and explanatory of the cause of the accident. In the present case the complaint charged negligence in general terms only.

Aside from that fact, however, it should be noted that plaintiff was entitled in this case to introduce testimony to support his theory of the concurring negligence of the defendant Cauldwell, and the testimony brought out by him on direct examination was pointed at the negligence of this codefendant. The instruction given was proper; the instruction refused was rightly refused.

[2] These appellants next assert that the court erred in giving an instruction as follows:

"You are instructed that E. B. Dillingham and H. L. Dillingham, copartners doing business under the name of 'Dillingham Transportation Company,' are the owners and operators of an automobile stage line, operating between the cities of Long Beach and Whittier, in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, being common carriers of passengers for hire, and as such common carriers are held to and must use the utmost care and diligence for the safe carriage of their passengers, and, as owners and operators of their stage or vehicle traveling upon any road for the convenience of passengers, are liable for injuries to any person or persons as passengers on said stage done by any person in the course of his employment as a driver while driving such stage, whether done willfully or negligently."

These appellants maintain that the jury must have understood from this that the defendants were insurers of the safety of its passengers. We do not so read the instruction. The first half of the instruction clearly and succinctly stated the law relative to common carriers for hire as codified in section 2100, Civil Code. The remaining half of the instruction was designed to inform the jury that the owners of the stage line were answerable for the negligence of their employers acting in the course of their employment. While the language employed for this purpose might have been selected so as to more clearly express this rule of law, we cannot believe that the jury put the interpretation upon it which is suggested by counsel. The addition of the words "whether done willfully or negligently" aids rather than destroys the proper construction, for while an employer is not responsible for a willful tort committed by his employee in which the employee steps outside the scope of his employment, nevertheless, no such question was involved in the present action and the only application which the jury could possibly make of the modifying words was to understand that the employers were liable for injuries done by their employees acting in the course of their employment, if done negligently. As thus stated, there was no erroneous thought conveyed to the mind of the jury.

[3, 4] As has been indicated in the recital of facts, the plaintiff did not testify on direct examination concerning the headlights of the stage, but he was permitted on cross-examination by counsel for the defendant Cauldwell and over the objection of the defendants Dillinghams to testify relative to their condition. The appellants now urge this as their last reason for the reversal of the judgment, maintaining that, inasmuch as a party has no right to cross-examine a witness upon any matter not connected with his direct examination, the reception of the testimony amounts to reversible error. It is the plaintiff who has the right to stand upon this rule of law and insist that his witness shall not be subjected to such cross-examination. He made no objection. We know of no rule of law which gives to a codefendant the right to object to the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witness. Undoubtedly these appellants would have had a right to object to the order of proof, if in fact through the pretext of cross-examination the codefendant made the witness his own witness; but no such objection was made, nor is any other reason urged on this appeal why the reception of the testimony was improper, other than to say it extended beyond the legitimate confines of cross-examination. The books abound with authorities to the effect that the proper ground for the objection must be urged before error will result.

Appeal of Defendant Cauldwell.

[5] While the defendant Cauldwell has endeavored to perfect an appeal from the judgment, it is urged by the appellants Dillinghams and assented to by plaintiff's counsel that such right was lost to him by lapse of time prior to the date he gave notice thereof. This contention is based upon the following facts: The verdict of the jury was rendered on November 6, 1923, and the judgment thereon was entered on November 7, 1923. The notice of this appeal was filed on January 12, 1924, or more than 60 days after the entry of judgment, and the limit of time fixed by section 939, Code of Civil Procedure, provided no proceedings on motion for a new trial were pending. The defendants Dillinghams argue that, although the defendant Cauldwell served a notice of intention to move for a new trial on November 11, 1923, upon counsel for the plaintiff, it was not served on them, hence did not confer upon the trial court jurisdiction to pass upon the defendant Cauldwell's motion. In support of this contention counsel cites Herriman v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 16, 44 P. 660, 46 P. 730, 35 L. R. A. 318, 56 Am. St. Rep. 81, and United States v. Crooks, 116 Cal. 43, 47 P. 870, together with additional authorities. Both of the cases named hold that, where the notice of intention is not served upon a party whose interests would be affected by the granting of a new trial, the court is without jurisdiction to grant the motion. In both cases the appeal was from an order denying a motion for a new trial. And the court in each instance did not dismiss the appeal because the court was without jurisdiction to make an order denying the motion, but did in each instance affirm the order. This would seem to argue against the contention of the appellants Dillinghams, because, unless a motion for a new trial were pending, no valid order denying it could be made and no affirmance would be proper. The same may be said of the other cases relied upon by the appellants Dillinghams. Especial attention should be directed, however, to the case of Johnson v. Phenix Ins. Co., 152 Cal. 196, 92 P. 182, wherein it was distinctly stated that the appeal would not be dismissed for failure to serve all of the adverse parties, although it did furnish a good ground for the affirmance of the order denying the motion for a new trial. Our conclusion from these authorities is that a motion for a new trial was pending and the appeal of the defendant Cauldwell is in time.

[6] Using his own language, it is the position of this appellant "that according to the bus driver's own version of the accident the accident would have happened if the truck had been moving instead of standing still, and that it would have happened regardless of whether or not there was a tail light on the bus." In other words, he argues that the sole proximate cause of the accident was the negligence of the stage driver. Assuming that the lights of the stage were such that it would have overtaken and run into the truck had it been moving, it does not follow that such would have resulted, had the truck been equipped with that signal of danger, a red tail light. Nor do we think that an appellate tribunal is justified in saying that the accident would have happened had the truck been moving. These facts were submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions and they concluded from the facts that the defendants were concurrently negligent. Under the circumstances we are not justified by the record in saying that there was no concurring negligence on the part of the defendant Cauldwell.

Judgment affirmed.

SUN-MAID RAISIN GROWERS OF CALIFORNIA et al. v. MOSESIAN et al.
(Civ. 5829.)

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California. July 19, 1927.

1. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡43—Terms descriptive of manner or process by which, or ingredients with which, article is made are not subject to registration.

Use of terms, which are merely descriptive of the manner or process by which, or the ingredients with which, an article is made, is not subject to registration, and will not be protected against infringement, particularly where the process is open to the use of the general public.

2. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡43—Arbitrary or fanciful words have special significance in trade-mark law and are subject to registration.

Arbitrary or fanciful words have a special significance in the language of the law of trade-marks, and are subject to registration and appropriate protection.

3. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡3(4)—Language descriptive only of manufacturing process is not susceptible of exclusive appropriation.

Language which is merely descriptive of the process of manufacturing is not susceptible of exclusive appropriation.

4. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡7—Generic or descriptive words cannot be made valid trade-marks by misspelling or printing in letters of foreign alphabet.

Generic or descriptive words cannot be made valid trade-marks by misspelling, or by printing in letters from the alphabet of a foreign language.

5. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡16—Size and shape of carton for marketing product, or use of particular color or combination of colors, is not susceptible of exclusive appropriation and registration.

The mere size and shape of a carton for the marketing of a product is not subject to exclusive appropriation, nor is the use of a particular color or combination of colors susceptible of registration.

6. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡4—Use of the sun as trade-mark may not ordinarily be monopolized by picture or word.

One may not ordinarily monopolize by picture or word the use of the sun as a trade-mark.

7. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡3(4½)—Language descriptive of method of curing grapes, as sun-cured, sun-dried, or sun-made, cannot be exclusively appropriated.

Language used to describe the method of curing grapes or other products, such as sun-cured, sun-dried, or sun-made, are descriptive terms, the exclusive use of which as trade-marks the law will not protect.

8. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡3(4)—Rule against exclusive appropriation of language descriptive of method of manufacture cannot be avoided by mere employment of subterfuge or play on words.

The mere employment of a subterfuge or play on words will not suffice to escape application of rule that language descriptive of method of manufacture is not susceptible of exclusive appropriation.

9. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡3(4½)—“Sun-maid,” used in connection with picture of girl and sun as trade-mark for raisins, held not to mean sun-made, which use would not be susceptible of exclusive appropriation (Civ. Code, § 991).

“Sun-maid,” used in connection with a smiling, curly-haired, sunbonnet girl over the face of a radiant sun, as a trade-mark for raisins, held not used to mean sun-made, which use would be merely descriptive of process of manufacture and not susceptible of exclusive appropriation, under Civ. Code, § 991.

10. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡93(3)—Reasonable doubt as to idea intended to be conveyed by picture trade-mark should be resolved in favor of party first appropriating, exclusively using, registering, and advertising such mark.

Reasonable doubt as to the idea intended to be conveyed by a picture trade-mark should be resolved in favor of the party who has first appropriated the idea and exclusively used it, and who has succeeded in registering the mark in the United States Patent Office and expended large sums of money in advertising it.

11. Appeal and error ⚡954(1)—Injunction ⚡135—Grant of preliminary injunction is within trial court's discretion and will not be disturbed except for abuse of discretion.

The granting of a preliminary injunction rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and will not be disturbed on appeal, unless that discretion has been abused.

12. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡45—Registration of trade-mark is merely prima facie evidence of a valid ownership.

The registration of a trade-mark, like the recording of any other instrument, is merely prima facie evidence of its validity and ownership.

13. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡—Injunction will issue to restrain infringement on use of label or picture to express idea.

An injunction will issue to restrain infringement on expression of an idea by means of a label or picture, as well as by the use of ordinary language.

14. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡70(1)—Infringement of trade-mark is not dependent on exact similarity, but on general appearance such as to deceive casual purchaser exercising ordinary care.

The test as to infringement against a trade-mark does not depend on an exact similarity in every detail, but on general appearance likely to deceive a casual purchaser who exercises ordinary care in the selection of the article which he wishes to buy.

15. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡95(1)—Preliminary injunction in suit to enjoin infringement of "sun-maid" trade-mark for raisins held properly allowed, though actual fraud or deceit was not shown (Pol. Code, §§ 3196, 3197, 3199).

Preliminary injunction in suit to restrain infringement of "sun-maid" trade-mark for raisins held properly allowed, in view of striking similarity of trade-marks and Pol. Code, §§ 3196, 3197, and 3199, notwithstanding plaintiff failed to show any actual fraud or that any purchaser was deceived by the simulation or induced to buy a brand of raisins which he did not desire.

16. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⚡70(1)—Imitation of trade-mark or label to degree likely to deceive casual purchasers may constitute fraud independently of actual sales.

The imitation of a trade-mark or trade label to a degree which would be likely to deceive casual purchasers exercising ordinary care in the selection of a commodity may constitute fraud in itself, independent of evidence of actual sales.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Suit by the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California and others against Moses P. Mosesian and others. From an order granting a preliminary injunction restraining the infringement of certain trade-marks, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Francis J. Heney, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John H. Miller, A. W. Boyken, and F. G. Athearn, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a preliminary injunction restraining the appellants from infringing upon certain trade-marks.

For the past 15 years respondents have been engaged in the business of producing, packing, and marketing raisins, with their principal place of business at Fresno. The Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California is a co-operative association composed of some 16,000 members. During the 10 years prior to the alleged infringement this association handled a raisin business aggregating $155,000,000 in value, which included 75 per cent. of the entire raisin grape industry of California, and in this period of time it expended some $10,000,000 for advertising purposes. Its raisin products were largely marketed in 1-pound cartons displaying the trade-marks, the infringement of which is here involved.

These trade-marks consist of a label for raisin containers, on each side of which there appears, over a bright red background, a brilliant golden orb representing the sun, which occupies the upper portion of the carton. Across the face of the sun appears the features and bust of a laughing, curly-haired girl, wearing a red sunbonnet. In her hands the maiden holds a tray laden with grapes. Below this picture, in conspicuous white letters, is printed the following language: "California Sun-Maid Seedless Raisins."

These trade-marks were exclusively appropriated and used by respondents for many years. About 1918 the picture and the compound word "sun-maid" were separately and jointly registered in the United States patent office. In 1924 the appellants, who were also engaged in the raisin business in California, produced a label for their 1-pound raisin cartons very closely resembling in color, picture, and lettering the trade-marks of respondents. With this label the appellants proceeded to market their raisin products, until they were enjoined by respondents. Appellants also filed their label with the United States Patent Office, but its adoption was contested, and it has not been recorded.

The dominant features of the respective cartons are a picture of radiant youth over the face of a glowing golden sun, together with white lettering emphasizing the words "sunrayed raisins," which appear upon the appellants' package in lieu of "sun-maid raisins" on respondents' containers; both pictures occupy approximately the same space and relative position on each side of the respective cartons. All these features appear over a bright red background of the same shade. The similarity in the general appearance of both labels is persuasive evidence that the original trade-marks of respondents inspired the production of the appellants' designs, which were evidently created with the hope of profiting by the favorable reputation and extensive advertising of respondents' products.

Notwithstanding the similarity in colors, picture, and language, appellants seek to distinguish their label from that of respondents by the use of the features of a smiling bareheaded boy over the face of the sun, instead of the laughing red-sunbonnet girl, and in the use of the term "sunrayed" to describe the process of curing the grapes instead of "sun-maid" which is employed by respondents. On the face of respondents' carton there is printed in conspicuous white letters "California Sun-Maid Seedless Raisins," while the firm name is printed on the end of the container. On the face of appellants' carton there is printed in prominent white letters "Sunrayed Raisins, Grown Without Seeds," in addition to which there also appears in inconspicuous yellow letters the following language: "Thompson Seedless" and "Recleaned and packed by California Seedless Raisin Company, Fresno, Cal., U. S. A."

This suit was brought by respondents for infringement of their trade-marks above described and for unfair competition. The complaint contains four counts. The first alleges an infringement against the registered trade-mark consisting of the picture upon a red background of the laughing, red-sunbonnet girl and the radiant sun; the second count sets up an infringement against the separately registered trade-mark of the compound word "sun-maid"; the third count charges infringement against the entire combination of colors, picture, and language; the last count accuses appellants of unfair competition. Upon a hearing based on affidavits the trial court granted a preliminary injunction against the appellants, and their representatives, successors, and assigns, restraining them from "preparing, packing, marketing, advertising, selling, or offering for sale packages or cartons containing raisins, or raisin products in packages or cartons identical with or substantially similar to that shown in Exhibit E attached to the complaint herein, the same being generally packages or cartons having thereon the name 'sunrayed' or with the figure of a boy with the sun at his back.

Appellants seek to vacate or modify this restraining order, asserting that their trade-marks do not constitute an infringement, and that respondents have failed to specifically allege or prove actual fraud, deceit, or sales to any individual who was misled or induced to purchase cartons of raisins which he did not intend or wish to buy. Analyzing and distinguishing their picture and the language printed upon their containers, the appellants claim that respondents have no prior or exclusive right to the use of a red background with white letters printed thereon, nor to the combination of colors employed, nor to the picture of the sun. And, finally, appellants maintain that the word "sun-maid" as it is used by respondents is deceiving and misleading, and when correctly spelled sun-made, according to the evident intent expressed by the picture, it is merely a term common to the trade, describing the natural process of drying and curing the raisins.

Section 991 of the Civil Code provides:

"One who produces or deals in a particular thing, or conducts a particular business, may appropriate to his exclusive use, as a trade-mark, any form, symbol, or name which has not been so appropriated by another, to designate the origin or ownership thereof; but he cannot exclusively appropriate any designation, or part of a designation, which relates only to the name, quality, or the description of the thing or business, or the place where the thing is produced, or the business is carried on."

[1, 2] It is true that the use of terms, which are merely descriptive of the manner or process by which, or the ingredients with which, an article is made, is not subject to registration and will not be protected against infringement, particularly where the process is open to the use of the general public. L. R. A. 1916E, 633. Arbitrary or fanciful words have a special significance in the language of the law of trade-marks, and such terms are subject to registration and appropriate protection. But in the case of Indurated Fibre Co. v. Amoskeag Indurated Fibre Co. (C. C.) 37 F. 695, it is said, Where such words "do not sufficiently point either by themselves or by association, to the origin, manufacture or ownership of the article produced, but that they rather indicate the quality, class, grade, or style of such article," they are not subject to exclusive use. Goodyear Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co., 128 U. S. 598, 9 S. Ct. 166, 32 L. Ed. 535; Falkinburg v. Lucy, 35 Cal. 52, 95 Am. Dec. 76; Schmidt v. Brieg, 100 Cal. 672, 35 P. 623, 22 L. R. A. 790; Spieker v. Lash, 102 Cal. 38, 36 P. 362.

[3] It is also true that language which is merely descriptive of the process of manufacturing is not susceptible of exclusive appropriation. L. R. A. 1916E, 633. This rule has been applied to the following language: Hot forged hammer point nails; shredded whole wheat; Oriental Rug Renovating Company; lamb-knit; compressed yeast; flaked oatmeal; prime leaf lard.

[4] It has been held that "a generic or descriptive word cannot be made a valid trade-mark by misspelling it (as for example 'Kid Knee Kure' as applied to medicine), or by printing it in letters from the alphabet of a foreign language." Hopkins on Trade-Marks (4th Ed.) 95. Mr. Justice McKenna said in Standard Paint Co. v. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co., 220 U. S. 446, 31 S. Ct. 456, 55 L. Ed. 536:

"The word [rubberoid], therefore, is descriptive, not indicative of the origin or the ownership of the goods; and, being of that quality, we cannot admit that it loses such quality and becomes arbitrary by being misspelled. Bad orthography has not yet become so rare or so easily detected as to make a word the arbitrary sign of something else than its conventional meaning."

[5, 6] The mere size and shape of a carton for the marketing of a product is not subject to exclusive appropriation, nor is the use of a particular color or combination of colors susceptible of registration. So. Cal. F. Co. v. White Star C. Co., 45 Cal. App. 426, 187 P. 981; American Tobacco Co. v. Globe Tobacco Co. (C. C.) 193 F. 1015. Nor may one ordinarily monopolize, by picture or word, the use of the sun. Patton Paint Co. v. Sun-set Paint Co., 53 App. D. C. 348, 290 F. 323.

[7, 8] Following the foregoing well-established rule, it must be conceded that language used to describe the mere method of curing grapes, or other products, such as sun-cured, sun-dried, or sun-made, are descriptive terms common to the trade, the exclusive use of which as trade-marks the law will not protect. It naturally follows that the mere employment of a subterfuge or a play upon words will not suffice to escape the application of the foregoing rule. Appellants insist that the purpose of respondents' picture, taken as a whole, with the glowing sun shining upon the tray of grapes held in the hands of the smiling girl, together with the use of the words "sun-maid raisins," is a pure subterfuge intended to avoid the rule of law, and at the same time convey the impression that the raisins were in fact made or cured in the sun. On the contrary, respondents contend that both their picture and the accompanying term "sun-maid" are "purely arbitrary and fanciful creations" and that the design of the young girl holding the grapes with a "radiant golden sun" beaming down upon them "was not intended to illustrate the method of preparing raisins, but is merely pleasantly suggestive of the sunshine, beauty, and abundance of our golden state of California," and that the "sun-maid" discloses an original, arbitrary, artistic, and appropriate design not commonly associated with the description of raisins, and as such should be given trade-mark protection.

[9] It will be noted, however, that the copyrighted term employed by respondents was not in fact spelled sun-made. And, while it may be argued with much force that as the term was associated with the picture of the sun and the tray of grapes, it was intended to mislead a careless purchaser to assume that it implied that "sun-maid" raisins really meant sun-made raisins. However, since the most prominent feature of respondents' picture is the smiling, curly-haired, sunbonnet girl, over the face of a radiant sun, immediately beneath which is the term "sun-maid," it does not seem unreasonable to conclude that the compound word "sun-maid" refers to the idea of the combination of the sun and the girl; and not to an incongruous and unnatural distorting of the word, in order to construe it to mean a description of the process of curing the raisins.

[10] Assuming that the word is susceptible of appellants' construction, and that there is a reasonable doubt as to the true interpretation of the idea intended to be conveyed by the picture, we are of the opinion that that doubt should be resolved in favor of the party who first appropriated the idea and exclusively used it for a number of years, and who has also succeeded in registering the term in the United States Patent Office, and has expended large sums of money advertising it as a trade-mark. N. K. Fairbanks Co. v. Ogden Packing & Provision Co. (D. C.) 220 F. 1002.

Although the term "sun-maid," standing alone, might be subject to appellants' attack and claim that it is merely a misspelled word indicating a process of curing grapes, still as an inseparable part of a combination picture and ad, a court of equity will not draw fine distinctions to upset the discretion of a trial court in awarding a preliminary injunction where the equities are so clearly in favor of the owner of a trade-mark over which he has exercised exclusive control and use for a period of 10 years or more.

The appellants rely upon the case of So. Cal. F. Co. v. White Star Canning Co., supra, wherein it is said:

"All of the resemblances arise from features that are common to the trade, or from the use of a design—the figure of a fish—to which no one has an exclusive right. * * * Plaintiff must show deception arising from some feature of its own, not common to the public."

This was an action to enjoin the sale of tuna fish, canned in tins of like size and shape common to the trade, containing a label with similar blue background, over which the only other similar feature was the picture of a fish. The conspicuous designating trade-mark of plaintiff consisted of the words "Blue Sea Tuna," while defendant's cans were labeled "White Star Tuna Fish." The court there said:

"Except that both labels have substantially the same blue-colored background, the figure of a fish, designated to represent the 'tuna,' and truthful, printed descriptions of the contents of the packages, the labels of the two competitors differ in almost every respect."

The following excerpt was also quoted with approval:

"A resemblance which would deceive an expert or a very cautious purchaser may still give a right of action, but a resemblance which would deceive only an indifferent or careless purchaser gives no right of action."

The foregoing language readily distinguishes that case from the one at bar.

[11] The benefits of an exclusive trade-mark are to create and preserve a favorable reputation, to stimulate the sale of a product, and to distinguish it from similar competing products.

The granting of a preliminary injunction rests in the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be disturbed on appeal unless that discretion has been abused. 14 Cal. Jur. 180; Lutz v. Western Iron & Metal Co., 190 Cal. 554, 213 P. 962; Wilson & Co. v. The Best Foods, Inc. (C. C. A.) 300 F. 484.

[12] A trade-mark may consist in the exclusive use of any "description of word, letter, device, emblem, stamp, imprint, brand, printed ticket, label, or wrapper," etc. Section 3196, Pol. Code. The exclusive use of a trade-mark may be secured to the owner thereof by registering it with the secretary of state. Section 3197, Pol. Code. An owner of a trade-mark may be protected in its use by means of injunctive relief, even though it may not be registered pursuant to law. Section 3199, Pol. Code. The registration of a trade-mark, like the recording of any other instrument, is merely prima facie evidence of its validity and ownership.

[13] An injunction will issue to restrain infringement upon the expression of an idea by means of a label or picture as well as by the use of ordinary language. 24 Cal. Jur. 620; Burke v. Cassin, 45 Cal. 467, 13 Am. Rep. 204; Rogers on Good Will, Trade-Marks, etc., p. 69; Aunt Jemima Mills Co. v. Blair Milling Co., 50 App. D. C. 281, 270 F. 1021; Enoch Morgan's Sons Co. v. Ward (C. C. A.) 152 F. 690, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729. The value of pictures as a means of conveying an idea has been recognized since ancient times. The caveman carved his message on the walls of his cave; the Indian boasted of his conquest in pursuit of game, or in the waging of war, by means of crude pictures cut upon the bark of a tree; the modern picture play vividly portrays the story of life in its varied forms with all its joys and sorrows, its strife and tragic failures, as well as its wonderful achievements.

[14] The test as to infringement against a trade-mark does not depend upon an exact similarity in every detail, but if the general appearance is such as to deceive a casual purchaser who exercises ordinary care in the selection of the article which he wishes to buy, its use may be enjoined. Nims on Trade-Marks (2d Ed.) pp. 235, 585; Canterbury Candy Makers v. Brecht Candy Co., 54 App. D. C. 82, 294 F. 1013; Gehl v. Hebe Co. (C. C. A.) 276 F. 271; O. & W. Thum Co. v. Dickinson, 46 App. D. C. 306; National Biscuit Co. v. J. B. Carr Biscuit Co., 55 App. D. C. 146, 3 F. (2d) 87; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. Ed. 828. In the last case cited it is said:

"What degree of resemblance is necessary to constitute an infringement is incapable of exact definition, as applicable to all cases. All that courts of justice can do, in that regard, is to say that no trader can adopt a trade-mark, so resembling that of another trader, as that ordinary purchasers, buying with ordinary caution, are likely to be misled. * * * Much must depend, in every case, upon the appearance and special characteristics of the entire device; but it is safe to declare, as a general rule, that exact similitude is not required to constitute an infringement or to entitle the complaining party to protection. If the form, marks, contents, words, or the special arrangement of the same, or the general appearance of the alleged infringer's device, is such as would be likely to mislead one in the ordinary course of purchasing the goods, and induce him to suppose that he was purchasing the genuine article, then the similitude is such as entitles the injured party to equitable protection. * * *

In Spieker v. Lash, 102 Cal. 38, 45, 36 P. 362, 363, in which a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed, it is said:

"The evidence shows that the defendants' labels, while differing in some respects from those of the plaintiff, are a colorable imitation of them, the resemblance being such as to justify the conclusion that they were intended and adapted to lead the public generally to the belief that the manufacture of the original 'Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters,' had been superseded. * * *

Numerous authorities show a like effort to use similar words conveying the same idea, sound, or appearance, by altering the spelling or disarranging the sequence of letters. Among these cases the following similar words have been held to constitute an infringement: Coco-Cola—Extract of Coca & Kola; Coca-Cola—Take Kola; Holeproof—No-Hole; Lily White—White Lily; Unedda—Iwanta (National Biscuit Co. v. Baker [C. C.] 95 F. 135); Sapolio—Sapono; Hostetter's Bitters—Host style Bitters; Cascarets—Castorets; Gold Bar—Gold Band; Silver Bar—Silver Band; Stove lustre—Stove lacquer; Listerine—Lis ter septine; Celluloid—Cellonite; Cottolene—Cottoleo; Cottolene—Chefolene (N. K. Fairbanks Co. v. Ogden Packing & Provision Co., supra); Gold Dust—Gold Drop (N. K. Fairbank Co. v. Luckel, King & Cake Soap Co. (C. C. A.) 102 F. 327); Beats-All—Knoxall (American Lead Pencil Co. v. L. Gottlieb & Sons [C. C.] 181 F. 178); Keepclean—Sta-Klean; Crisco—Esco (Proctor & Gamble Co. v. Eney Shortening Co., 50 App. D. C. 42, 267 F. 344).

[15] Appellants contend that the injunction should be vacated for the reason that respondents failed to show any actual fraud, or that any purchaser was deceived by the simulation or induced to buy a brand of raisins which he did not desire.

Appellants rely upon the case of Dunston v. Los Angeles Van, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 89, 131 P. 115, in which the Supreme Court reversed a final injunction which was issued by the trial court restraining the use of an exact duplication of a firm name by a competing company. The question of infringement upon a label or simulation of a trade-mark which had been conceived and exclusively appropriated was not involved. It was there said with respect to the name "Los Angeles Van & Storage Co.":

"It is too apparent to need discussion that the name here employed by plaintiff has reference in its first words to the place of business; in the remaining words to a description of the business. Such names, titles or designations are not the subject of exclusive copyright or trade-mark. * * * Since the plaintiff cannot acquire an exclusive property right in the associated words, * * * any relief based upon an asserted invasion of this exclusive trade-mark is without warrant."

[16] It was then held that the judgment could not be supported on the ground of "unfair trade dealing" for the reason that deceit or fraud had been neither pleaded nor proved; that the mere similarity of the firm name was insufficient to establish fraud. In the instant case respondents do not rely exclusively upon the doctrine of unfair trade dealing, but charge infringement upon the entire idea expressed in an original label, together with an euphonic simulation of the trade-mark term "sun-maid." The imitation of a trade-label or trade-mark to a degree which would be likely to deceive casual purchasers exercising ordinary care in the selection of a commodity may constitute fraud in itself independent of evidence of actual sales.

The authorities are fairly uniform to the effect that it is not necessary to prove actual fraud or deception, but this may be assumed where the facts indicate that a purchaser, exercising ordinary care, would be likely to be deceived by the imitation of a trade-mark. Nims on Trade-Marks (2d. Ed.) pp. 601, 640; Gehl v. Hebe Co., supra; Bissell Chilled Plow Works v. T. M. Bissell Plow Co. (C. C.) 121 F. 357; Wirtz v. Eagle Bottling Co., 50 N. J. Eq. 164, 24 A. 658; Von Mumm v. Frash (C. C.) 56 F. 830, 837; Florence Mfg. Co. v. J. C. Dowd & Co. (C. C. A.) 178 F. 73.

In N. K. Fairbank Co. v. Luckel, King & Cake Soap Co., supra, it is said:

"It is not essential to the right of complainant to an injunction to show absolute fraud or willful intent on the part of the respondent. Upon familiar principles, it will be presumed that the respondent contemplated the natural consequences of its own acts. If the acts of respondent in the adoption of the name of 'Gold Drop' constituted an infringement of the trade-mark or trade-name of the complainant, and it was put on the market in such a manner as to interfere with the legal rights of complainant, to its loss and injury, it would be entitled to an injunction, irrespective of the question of any testimony as to actual fraud or willful intent. The court must determine the intent from respondent's acts and the results produced thereby."

And in the case of T. A. Vulcan v. Myers, 139 N. Y. 364, 34 N. E. 904, it is said:

"No evidence was given or offered [in this case] to show that any person had actually been deceived by the imitation of the plaintiff's trade-mark, and we think that none was necessary for the maintenance of the action. It is the liability to deception which the remedy may be invoked to prevent. It is sufficient if injury to the plaintiff's business is threatened or imminent to authorize the court to intervene to prevent its occurrence. The owner is not required to wait until the wrongful use of his trade-mark has been continued for such a length of time as to cause some substantial pecuniary loss."

Placing the cartons of the respective parties side by side, one is impressed with the striking similarity of appearance in size, color, design, form, and idea. The genius of a resourceful mind could scarcely have devised a combination of color, picture, and euphonic language more deceptively similar to respondents' label than that conceived by appellants. Without a critical examination or independent knowledge of the different brands, considering the labels as a whole, an innocent purchaser, exercising ordinary care, would be quite likely to be misled by the similarity of appearance.

We think the trial court was warranted in issuing the preliminary injunction. For the foregoing reasons the order for the preliminary injunction is affirmed.

POWELL et al. v. OAK RIDGE ORCHARDS CO. (Civ. 5208.)

District Court of Appeal, First District Division 1, California. Aug. 4, 1927.

- 1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨44—Evidence supported findings that purchasers were induced to enter into land contract by fraudulent representations by vendor regarding value and nature of land.

In action to rescind contract for sale of land, evidence held to support findings that purchasers were induced to enter into contract as result of fraudulent representations by vendor to effect that property was of reasonable value of $4,500, and that same was free from hardpan and was particularly adapted to raising fruit, and that said representations were false and made for purpose of deceiving purchasers and inducing them to enter into contract, and that purchaser relied on representations.

- 2. Principal and agent ⇨115(2)—Vendor was bound by representations of agent in charge of properties as ranch superintendent empowered to make sales regarding value and nature of land sold.

Vendor was bound by representations to purchaser by vendor's agent in charge of its properties as its ranch superintendent and empowered to make sales of said properties, regarding value of land sold, and that it was free from hardpan and particularly adapted to raising of fruit, since party dealing with agent acting within scope and authority of his appointment is considered as dealing with principal himself.

- 3. Cancellation of instruments ⇨34(1)—Bill to cancel land contract for fraud within reasonable time after negotiations for settlement failed, purchaser having protested promptly, was not barred by laches.

Where purchaser in September, 1922, which was month following discovery of soil conditions, entered into negotiations for rescission of land contract on ground of fraudulent representations, and, after waiting vainly for reply until February 15, 1923, served formal notice of rescission, and on April 21, 1923, commenced action for cancellation of contract, such action was not barred by laches.

- 4. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Where conclusions whether party defrauded has rescinded promptly finds reasonable support in evidence, reviewing court will not interfere therewith.

Question of whether or not party defrauded has rescinded promptly depends on all circumstances of particular case, and is primarily one for trial court, and, if its conclusions find reasonable support in evidence, reviewing court will not interfere therewith.

- 5. Appeal and error ⇨193(8)—Objection that complaint claimed erroneous amount due plaintiffs on rescission, made for first time on appeal, was without merit.

Objection that complaint in action to rescind contract for sale of land stated through inadvertence erroneous amount due on rescission, made for first time on appeal, was void of merit, where findings and judgment set forth correct amount due.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by A. L. Powell and another against the Oak Ridge Orchards Company to rescind a contract for the sale of land, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Kaufman & Martel, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Webster & Lyon, of Paso Robles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. The defendant appeals from an adverse judgment in an action for the rescission of a contract for the sale of land, and for the recovery of certain payments made thereunder, one of the grounds of appeal being insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings.

On January 3, 1921, plaintiffs entered into the contract in question for the purchase of 10 acres of land in San Luis Obispo county belonging to defendant, for the sum of $4,500. An initial payment of $1,125 was made at the time the contract was executed, and it was agreed that the balance should be paid on or before January 3, 1926. The property was set out to young orchard, plaintiffs taking immediate possession and thereafter expending the sum of $215 in caring for and cultivating the same. On February 15, 1923, plaintiffs rescinded the contract upon the ground of fraud, and on April 21, 1923, commenced the within action. Subsequently and on May 15, 1923, defendant served plaintiffs with notice to pay the taxes and the interest on deferred payments as required by the terms of said contract, or that in default thereof defendant would elect to declare immediately due the unpaid portion of the principal sum, together with interest, taxes, and other charges, and thereupon would institute suit for the recovery of the same. Answering the complaint defendant, besides denying the allegations of fraud, filed a cross-complaint to recover the balance due under said contract.

Upon the issue of fraud the court found, in conformity with the averments of the complaint, that plaintiffs were induced to enter into said contract as a result of fraudulent representations made by defendant to the effect that said property "was of the reasonable value of $4,500, and that the same was free from hardpan and that there was no hardpan under or near the surface of said land, nor any hardpan in the district in which said land was situated, and that said land was particularly productive and was the best of orchard and farm land, and that the soil thereof was particularly adapted to the raising of fruit." It further found that said representations were false, and that the same were fraudulently made for the purpose of deceiving plaintiffs and of inducing them to enter into said contract; that said property was in fact "entirely underlaid with hardpan from 8 to 14 inches below the surface of the land, which hardpan was of varying thickness and impervious to water; that said land was situated in a district where hardpan generally existed; that the top soil of said land was mixed with boulders and rock, and that very little, if any, of said land was, or is, suitable at all for raising fruit; that said land was not worth more than $1,500 at the time defendant represented it to be worth $4,500." Furthermore, the court found that plaintiffs had no previous experience as orchardists or farmers, nor did they have any knowledge as to the value or character of land, nor any experience in buying such property, and that in entering into said contract they relied wholly upon the representations made to them by defendant.

[1] In our opinion the evidence supports the foregoing findings, some of the essential facts established thereby being as follows: At the time this transaction occurred and for several years prior thereto Powell was employed as agent for the Santa Fé Railroad Company at Hanford, Cal. He had been engaged in the railroad business practically all his life, and knew nothing of fruit raising or the productivity or fertility of soil. Anticipating retirement from the railroad service he concluded to buy and operate a small fruit ranch, and with that purpose in view, and accompanied by his wife and son, he visited the property in question, where he met Fred Schutte, the superintendent of defendant's properties, who lived upon or near the properties and was authorized by defendant to make sales thereof on a commission basis. All of the business connected with the sale of the property in question to Powell was transacted with Schutte, who went over the property with Powell, and, during the tour of inspection, made the representations set forth in the findings, upon which, Powell claims, he wholly relied in buying the property. In July, 1922, which was approximately a year and a half after plaintiffs had taken possession, they observed that the fruit trees were dying, whereupon Powell, assisted by his son and certain soil experts, made an examination of the soil with an auger, with the result that, after the auger had passed through about 12 or 15 inches of top soil, they struck hardpan of solid clay formation. Before the end of the next month, August, 1922, there were 250 dead prune trees in that section of the orchard. In addition to the evidence mentioned testimony of a number of witnesses was offered, tending to prove that the property was of little, if any, value as orchard land; that it was not adapted to the raising of fruit. Circumstances were also established from which it may be reasonably concluded that the value of the property was no more than the amount stated by the court in its findings.

With reference to the representations that the land was productive, free from hardpan, and adapted to fruit raising, the circumstances of the present case are substantially the same as those of the case of Dickey v. Dunn (Cal. App.) 252 P. 770, recently decided by this court, the land involved being a part of the identical tract, the sale thereof being negotiated by the same agent, and, regarding the issues of fraud, similar legal contentions were made. In ruling adversely upon these contentions the court said:

"The evidence shows that the plaintiff, who was by trade a watch maker, had no knowledge of soil conditions and was without sufficient experience to determine the truth of the representations. Where a purchaser is justified in relying, and in fact does rely, upon false representations, his right of action is not destroyed because means of knowledge were open to him (Teague v. Hall, 171 Cal. 668, 154 P. 851), and while it appears that the plaintiff visited the property before the transfer was made, the evidence sufficiently supports the finding that he relied upon the representations both as to its value and character. The statements as to the character of the soil and as to the water supply were clearly misrepresentations of fact. French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 217 P. 515; Stone v. McCarty, 64 Cal. App. 158, 220 P. 690. A statement as to value is not always made as a mere expression of opinion. It may be a positive affirmation of a fact, intended as such by the party making it, and reasonably regarded as such by the party to whom it is made; and when it is such it is like any other representation of fact, and may be a fraudulent representation warranting rescission. Crandall v. Parks, 152 Cal. 772, 93 P. 1018. Where there is a doubt as to whether or not such representation was intended and understood as the expression of an opinion or a statement of fact, the question is one for determination by the trial court. French v. Freeman, supra; Stockton v. Hind, 51 Cal. App. 131, 196 P. 122."

In further support of the conclusions reached by the trial court herein that the representations set forth in the findings as to soil conditions were representations of fact upon which plaintiffs had the right to and did rely in entering into said contract may be added the cases of Groppengiesser v. Lake, 103 Cal. 37, 36 P. 1036, and Scott v. Delta Land & Water Co., 57 Cal. App. 320, 207 P. 389.

That the property in question was properly cared for after plaintiffs took possession was established by evidence showing that during the year 1921 plaintiffs plowed the orchard; that during the first six months of the following year, 1922, Schutte cared for the property, and thereafter the work was performed by Powell's son until July or August, 1922, when the real condition of the soil was ascertained, after which no work was done for the reason that Powell was advised by soil and tree experts to put no more money into the place; that the land was not worth it; and the following month Powell sought a rescission of the contract.

[2] We are unable to sustain defendant's contention that it is not bound by the representations made by Schutte to Powell, and that it was error for the court to admit the same in evidence, for it is a well-recognized principle of law that a party dealing with an agent, who is acting within the scope and authority of his employment, is to be considered as dealing with the principal himself; and in case of a contract, if the agent at the time of making the contract makes any representation, declaration, or admission, whether true or false, touching the matter of the contract, it is treated as the representation, declaration, or admission of the principal himself. Brandt v. Krogh, 14 Cal. App. 39, 111 P. 275. As already pointed out Schutte was in charge of defendant's properties as its ranch superintendent, and was empowered to make sales of said properties, which was sufficient evidence, in our opinion, upon which to base the conclusion that, in making the sale to Powell, Schutte was acting as defendant's agent and not as a middleman.

[3] The claim of laches in rescinding the contract is also without merit. In September, 1922, which was the month following the discovery of the soil conditions, Powell went to Orange county, the residence of the defendant corporation, seeking a rescission of the contract. There, in conversation with the officers of said corporation, he offered to return everything he had received by virtue of the contract and demanded repayment to him of the money he had expended thereunder. His offer of rescission was not acted upon at that time, however, said officers informing him that his proposition would be brought before the directors of the company at its next meeting, and that as soon as a decision was reached he would be notified. After waiting vainly for a reply until February 15, 1923, he served formal notice of rescission, and, as already stated, on April 21, 1923, commenced this action. "Where a party protests promptly on discovering that he has been defrauded in making a contract, and then enters into negotiations for a peaceable settlement, which fail, a bill for cancellation of the contract, filed within a reasonable time after such failure, is not barred by laches." 2 Black on Rescission and Cancellation, § 544.

[4] Moreover, "there is no artificial rule as to the lapse of time or circumstances which will justify the application of the doctrine" of laches (Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 81 P. 516), the question of whether or not a party defrauded has rescinded promptly depending upon all the circumstances of the particular case and being primarily one for the trial court to determine (French v. Freeman, supra); and if its conclusions thereon find reasonable support in the evidence the reviewing court will not interfere therewith. (Suhr v. Lauterbach, 164 Cal. 591, 130 P. 2). Interference here, under the circumstances stated, would, in our opinion, be clearly unwarranted, it appearing that plaintiffs acted with reasonable diligence.

[5] The complaint states a cause of action. The absence of allegations explaining the delay in rescinding is accounted for by the fact that the delay was not unreasonable; and the statement in the complaint, through inadvertence, of an erroneous amount plaintiffs claimed was due them upon rescission, cannot be considered a serious matter for the reason that the formal notice of rescission served upon defendant conformed to all legal requirements by stating that plaintiffs demanded "the return to them of all moneys paid to said Oak Ridge Orchards Company or otherwise by A. L. Powell and Daphne Powell by reason of the terms and conditions of the said contract," the complaint contained an allegation to the same effect, and admittedly the findings and judgment set forth the correct amount due, providing plaintiffs are entitled to rescind. Therefore the mistake mentioned has not operated to defendant's prejudice, and since objection thereto has been made for the first time on this appeal we think it is void of merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SCOTT. (Cr. 1367.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 28, 1927.

1. Robbery ☞24(1)—Conviction of robbery held sustained by evidence.

In prosecution for robbery, evidence held legally sufficient to sustain conviction of defendant, though in conflict.

2. Criminal law ☞1159(3)—Appellate court is bound by conviction for robbery based on conflicting evidence and supported by substantial proof.

Conviction for robbery, based on conflicting evidence and supported by substantial proof, is controlling on appellate court.

3. Criminal law ☞741(1), 742(1)—Credibility of witnesses and weight of testimony is exclusively for jury.

Jury is sole and exclusive judge of evidence, credibility of witnesses, and weight of their testimony.

4. Criminal law §407(2), 736(2)—Admitting witness' identification of defendant held not erroneous for want of showing defendant understood statements, which was for jury.

In prosecution for robbery, admission of prosecuting witness' testimony regarding his identification of defendant on night of robbery in presence of officers was not error for want of affirmative testimony showing defendant heard or understood statements made by prosecuting witness and was therefore not afforded opportunity to make reply, such question being for jury.

5. Criminal law §409—Admission of prosecuting witness' statements in defendant's presence and finding that statements were understood by defendant held justified by evidence.

In prosecution for robbery, circumstances under which prosecuting witness identified defendant, location of parties, and fact that defendant understood other portions of conversation justified admission of prosecuting witness' statements identifying defendant, and warranted jury in finding that statements were heard and understood by defendant.

6. Witnesses §379(2)—Accomplice's statements regarding defendant's connection with crime, made to police officer, held properly admitted to rebut accomplice's denial of knowing defendant.

In prosecution for robbery, testimony by police officer as to statements made by accomplice after he was captured and before going to defendant's room regarding defendant's connection with crime held properly admitted in rebuttal to accomplice's testimony that he had never met defendant prior to meeting after robbery.

7. Criminal law §1169(7)—Admission of accomplice's accusations, made after crime, though inadmissible as coconspirator's declaration after consummation of conspiracy, was not prejudicial, in view of proper admission of prior accusations.

In prosecution for robbery, testimony by police officer day after crime that accomplice reiterated charge that defendant assisted in commission of robbery, though inadmissible as declaration of coconspirator made after consummation of conspiracy and not in furtherance thereof, was not prejudicial error, where accomplice's previous accusations were otherwise properly admitted.

8. Criminal law §407(1)—Accusatory statements by accomplice, though inferentially denied by defendant, was properly admitted, where circumstances tended to prove defendant's denial was false.

In prosecution for robbery, admission of accusatory statements by accomplice day after robbery, which defendant inferentially denied by statement that he had never previously met accomplice, was not error, where circumstances were established tending to prove that defendant's statement was false.

9. Criminal law §407(1)—Accusatory statement is admissible, though denied, if defendant makes false statement.

Accusatory statements made in defendant's presence are admissible notwithstanding defendant's prompt and full denial of guilt if defendant in attempting to avoid effect of accusation makes statement calculated to deceive or subsequently shown to be false.

10. Robbery §23(3)—Proof that stolen property was found on another held properly admitted, where defendant was shown to be his accomplice.

In prosecution for robbery, evidence proving that stolen property was found on another's person after his arrest was properly admitted, where defendant's connection therewith was established by proof showing that defendant was accomplice in commission of crime.

11. Criminal law §768(2), 1173(2)—Refusal of instruction that juror should not be influenced by majority of jury favoring conviction held not reversible error, though it should have been given.

Instruction that juror entertaining reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt should not be influenced to convict by mere fact that majority of jury was in favor of such verdict should have been given, but refusal to give same does not in itself constitute reversible error.

12. Criminal law §778(4)—Instruction relating to presumption of innocence held not misleading by including statement, "independent of evidence" (Pen. Code, § 1096).

Under Pen. Code, § 1096, instruction relating to presumption of innocence stating that every person is presumed innocent until proved guilty held not to have misled jury by including statement, "independent of evidence."

13. Criminal law §706—Asking defendant, not conversant with English language, successive questions before single answer was given, not assigned as error, held not misconduct.

In prosecution for robbery, asking of defendant while witness of series of successive questions before answers given, made necessary by fact that defendant was not thoroughly conversant with English language, not assigned as error, held not misconduct.

14. Criminal law §868—Court's direction without request that exhibits be delivered to jury before it retired, unobjected to, held not irregular.

Direction by court without request from jury that exhibits in prosecution for robbery be delivered to jury before it retired so as to avoid returning jury into court if jury afterwards called for exhibits, not objected to, was not irregular.

15. Robbery §27(2)—Instruction amplifying Code section defining robbery held not error.

In prosecution for robbery, instruction amplifying Code section defining robbery in first degree held not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Peter Scott was convicted of robbery in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Walter McGovern and A. M. Dresow, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KNIGHT, J. The defendant was convicted of robbery in the first degree and has appealed from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial, one of the grounds of appeal being the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict.

The essential facts disclosed by the evidence are as follows: About the hour of 10:30 o'clock on the night of July 15, 1926, one Max Pietsch, while walking along Tehama street, between Fifth and Sixth streets, in San Francisco, was assaulted by three men, knocked down and robbed of a diamond stick pin and a wallet containing $150 in currency, one of the robbers using an automatic pistol in perpetrating the crime. After tearing from Pietsch's neck the tie to which the diamond pin was fastened and taking his wallet containing the currency, the robbers warned him under penalty of death to lie still until they made their escape. One of them then fled in one direction and the other two in another. Pietsch arose from the ground immediately and took up the pursuit of the single robber, following him down the street a short distance, when he was captured by a police officer named LeBaron, whose attention had been attracted to the scene by the alarm given by Pietsch as he chased the robber down the street. While awaiting the arrival of the police patrol wagon the captured robber, who proved to be a man named Lane, dropped Pietsch's wallet, which was empty, and later, when searched at the prison, Pietsch's mutilated necktie and the stick pin were found in his possession. Shortly after his capture, Lane implicated a man referred to by him as "Scotty" in the commission of the crime; and thereupon several police officers, accompanied by Lane and guided by his directions, drove to the hotel where defendant resided. In response to a knock at the door of the defendant's room he inquired from within: "Who is there?" to which Lane replied, "Me;" whereupon defendant opened the door and the officers and Lane entered the room. After some preliminary conversation Lane declared in the presence and hearing of the defendant: "This is one of the men that was with me on the holdup;" to which statement defendant made no reply. The officers then told defendant, who was in his night clothes, to dress, and while doing so they searched his room, finding a loaded automatic pistol and a box of cartridges alongside of it, in the top drawer of the bureau; also a wallet containing $80 in currency. Defendant admitted the ownership of the pistol, and when asked his purpose in possessing it merely shrugged his shoulders. At the trial he stated that the $80 in currency had been given to him by friends to help defray the expense of an accident which had recently befallen him. During the conversation in the room Lane was asked in defendant's presence and hearing "who used the gun" in perpetrating the robbery, and he said that the defendant had, and that the gun found by the police was the one defendant had so used, to which statements the defendant made no reply.

Shortly afterwards Pietsch was summoned to defendant's room for the purpose of ascertaining whether he could identify Scott as one of the robbers. When he arrived there a number of police officers were present, three of them being dressed in civilian clothes and standing near the defendant. As Pietsch entered the room he was told in substance by one of the officers to point out the other man who had robbed him, if he saw him in the room. Pointing directly at Scott, Pietsch said: "That is the man here." The defendant remained silent. Pietsch again identified the defendant at the trial, declaring that he was the robber who had used the pistol, and that the pistol found in defendant's room resembled the one used in the robbery. Other circumstances were established by the prosecution tending to prove that Lane and Scott some time previously had worked together on a construction job in Alameda county, and, consequently, knew each other prior to the robbery.

[1] We are of the opinion that the foregoing evidence is legally sufficient to sustain the verdict against the defendant. True, it is not without conflict, the record showing in this respect that at times other than those above mentioned and also during trial the defendant denied any participation in the crime or of ever having any previous acquaintanceship with Lane. As a witness in his own behalf he testified in substance that he had denied all accusatory statements when made, or, if he did not, that he did not understand the import of the statements, being a foreigner with only a limited knowledge of the English language. As a further defense defendant produced witnesses by whom he sought to establish an alibi; and, regarding the case proved against him by the prosecution, he contends that Pietsch's advanced age, defective eyesight, and the circumstances under which he observed the features and appearances of the man who wielded the pistol, being only semiconscious at the time, were such as to make it impossible for him to afterwards identify the defendant as being that man. Lane, who was separately tried, was also a witness for the defendant, and, besides denying having made many of the accusatory statements attributed to him by the police, testified in effect that when he informed the police that he had been aided in the perpetration of the crime by a man named "Scotty," he did not refer to the defendant, but to another man; and, although admitting that he and defendant had been employed at the same time on said job in Alameda county, claimed that he had never seen the defendant to know him until they met in the latter's room, in the presence of the police officers, after the robbery. He further testified in substance that by coincidence the "Scotty" he had referred to had been living at the hotel where the defendant was rooming, which accounted for the fact that he directed the police to that particular hotel.

[2, 3] It is apparent that the above facts which defendant sought to establish in defense of the charge only raised a conflict in the evidence; and, since there is substantial proof in the record to support the verdict of the jury, its decision as to the defendant's guilt must be accepted as controlling, the members thereof being the sole and exclusive judges of the evidence, the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight that shall be given to their testimony. In this latter connection it may be stated that Lane admitted while testifying that he had previously served two terms in the penitentiary; and, besides, the character of his testimony was such as to affect his credibility as a witness.

[4] Defendant assigns as error the admission of Pietsch's testimony regarding his identification of defendant at the latter's room on the night of the robbery, claiming that there is no affirmative testimony showing that defendant heard or understood the statements made by Pietsch at that time; and that, therefore, he was not afforded an opportunity to make a reply thereto. We find no merit in the point. In People v. Yeager, 194 Cal. 452, 229 P. 40, it is said:

"It is for the court in the first instance to determine whether the import of the statements is such that it would furnish a foundation for proof of conduct, and it is then for the jury to decide whether the accused was aware the statements were made, whether, under all the circumstances shown, they called for a disclaimer, whether the accused did reply to them, and whether if he did not do so, such failure showed criminal intent or a consciousness of guilt. If these propositions of fact are resolved in favor of the prosecution the item of conduct should be given the effect to which upon the entire case it is entitled." (Italics ours.)

[5] The circumstances under which the statements here were made, including the location of the parties in the room, and the fact that defendant heard and understood other portions of the conversation which was being carried on in the room at that time, were sufficient, we think, to justify the admission of said evidence, and to warrant the jury in concluding therefrom that the statements complained of were heard and understood by the defendant.

[6] Nor do we find any error in admitting the rebuttal testimony of Police Officer Dorman as to the statements made by Lane after he had been captured and before going to defendant's room, regarding the defendant's connection with the crime, for the reason that Dorman's testimony was in direct rebuttal of that given by Lane as a witness for the defendant to the effect that prior to meeting defendant in the latter's room after the robbery he had never known of or seen the defendant.

[7-9] The prosecution was allowed to prove by the testimony of a police officer, subject to defendant's objection, that on the morning following the robbery Lane and defendant were interrogated by members of the department in the assembly room of the detective bureau in the presence and hearing of each other, at which time Lane reiterated the charge that defendant had assisted in the commission of the robbery, and that defendant, upon being asked whether Lane's statement was true, replied that he had never seen Lane prior to the latter's visit to his room the night before in company with the police officers. Defendant contends that the evidence mentioned should have been excluded. With reference to Lane's statement, it is apparent that the same was inadmissible as a declaration of a coconspirator because it was made after the consummation of the conspiracy and not in furtherance thereof (People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 325, 57 P. 1067); and it would seem that it was also incompetent to prove guilty conduct on the part of the defendant because inferentially at least it was denied by defendant's declaration that up to the time Lane came to his room with the police he had never seen him (People v. Ayhens, 16 Cal. App. 618, 117 P. 789; People v. Teshara, 134 Cal. 542, 66 P. 798). However, the rule as to accusatory statements is subject to the qualification that such testimony is admissible, notwithstanding a defendant's prompt and full denial of guilt, if, in addition and in an attempt to avoid the effect of the accusation, he makes a statement which is calculated to deceive or is subsequently shown to be false. People v. Cole, 141 Cal. 88, 74 P. 547; People v. Ayhens, supra. Circumstances were established here tending to prove that the reply made by defendant to the effect that he had never seen Lane until after the robbery was not true, and that in fact he had known Lane while working on the construction job in Alameda county. Moreover, the record shows, as already pointed out, that on two other occasions during the trial Lane's accusatory statements to the same effect were rightfully placed before the jury, once by witnesses in describing the occurrences in the defendant's room on the night of the robbery and again by the witness Dorman in rebuttal when he related what Lane had said after he was captured and before going to the defendant's room. That being so, it cannot be successfully maintained, we think, that the evidence complained of operated as a controlling influence with the jury in determining the defendant's guilt, or that its admission, if error, was prejudicial.

[10] The evidence proving that the stolen property was found upon Lane's person after his arrest was properly admitted, defendant's connection therewith being established by proof showing that he was an accomplice in the commission of the crime. People v. Ward, 77 Cal. 113, 19 P. 373.

[11, 12] The trial court refused to give an instruction proposed by defendant to the effect that a juror in entertaining a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt should not be influenced in voting to convict by the mere fact that a majority of the jury was in favor of such a verdict. The instruction should have been given (People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 P. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50); but, as held in a number of cases, the refusal to give such an instruction does not in itself constitute reversible error (see People v. Grahle, 67 Cal. App. 183, 227 P. 227, and cases cited therein). The instruction given by the court relating to the presumption of innocence, which defendant challenges, although departing somewhat from the usual form by the inclusion therein of the phrase "independent of evidence," cannot be said to have misled the jury, we think, for the reason that the objectionable phrase was followed immediately by a correct and clear statement of the law that "every person is presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty," which is almost identical with the language used in the Code section. Pen. Code, § 1096. The presence of this latter statement of the law differentiates the instruction in the present case from the one held to be erroneous in the case of People v. Maughs, 149 Cal. 253, 86 P. 187, upon which defendant relies.

[13, 14] We are unable to sustain defendant's assignments of misconduct on the part of the trial court. The asking of the defendant while a witness of a series of successive questions before a single answer was given is easily explained by the fact that defendant was not thoroughly conversant with the English language. Defendant did not deem the matter of sufficient importance at the time it occurred to base an assignment of error thereon. Nor was it irregular for the court, in the absence of a request from the jury, to direct that the exhibits in the case be delivered to the jury before it retired. If the jury had made such request it would have been entitled to the possession of them (People v. Balestieri, 23 Cal. App. 708, 139 P. 821; People v. Hower, 151 Cal. 638, 91 P. 607); and, moreover, in directing the delivery of the same to the jury the court said that if there was no objection the exhibits would at that time be turned over to the jury so as to avoid returning the jury into court in case it afterwards called for them; and no objection was made to this being done.

[15] In amplifying the Code section defining robbery in the first degree in its charge to the jury, the court did not commit error. It is not claimed that the instruction as given did not correctly state the law, and surely, it is not error to clarify a Code section relating to the degrees of crime so that the jury may more readily understand the section and apply it, in the event the defendant be found guilty.

After having fully considered the legal points presented and carefully reviewed the entire record including the evidence, we cannot say that the defendant has been unfairly or unjustly convicted. The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

AMERICAN FRUIT GROWERS, Inc., OF CALIFORNIA v. JACKSON et al.★
(Civ. 4529.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 15, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 12, 1927.

1. Appeal and error. $\S$ 1010(1)—Appellate court will not interfere with trial court's judgment if supported by any substantial evidence.

If there is any substantial testimony which supports the judgment of the trial court, it will not be disturbed.

2. Evidence $\S$ 222(3)—Statements charging option holder in possession of farm equipment with price held admissible against claimant in attachment as admissions that option to purchase was exercised.

Where a lessee of farm equipment attached as his property also held an option to purchase the equipment, statements charging him with the price held admissions that the option had been exercised and title to the farm equipment had passed.

3. Evidence $\S$ 222(3)—Where lessee held option to purchase farm equipment, acts and declarations of parties indicative of ownership are competent in attachment proceedings to prove option was exercised and lessee became owner.

Where lessee of farm equipment was alleged to have exercised his option to purchase the equipment, acts and declarations of the parties which would indicate ownership by the option holder are competent in attachment proceedings to prove that he had exercised his option and purchased the equipment.

4. Evidence ⇐220(2)—Acquiescence of alleged buyer who held option to statements charging him with price of farm equipment held evidence in attachment proceedings of purchase (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3).

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3, providing that an act or declaration of another in the presence and within the observation of a party and his conduct in relation thereto may be proved on the trial, the acquiescence of an alleged buyer, who held an option to purchase farm equipment, to statements charging him with the price held evidence of purchase in attachment proceedings by his creditor.

5. Evidence ⇐265(5)—Evidence that option holder in possession of farm equipment attached as his property acquiesced in statements charging him with price held to sustain finding of purchase (Civ. Code, § 1140; Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3).

Evidence that the lessee of farm equipment, who held an option to purchase, acquiesced in statements charging him with the price of the equipment held sufficient in proceeding wherein property was attached as his, in view of Civ. Code, § 1140, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3, to sustain a finding that he had exercised his option and that the title had passed.

Johnson, Justice pro tem., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Suit by American Fruit Growers, Inc., of California, against Calvin E. Jackson and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Wadsworth, J. N. Owen, and Bordwell & Mathews, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Scarborough, Forgy & Reinhaus, of Santa Ana, and Fred Forgy, of Berkeley, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This action was brought against the sheriff of Orange county and his surety to recover the value of certain farm equipment claimed by the plaintiff as its property, and which was seized by the sheriff on February 25, 1922, as the property of H. J. Osborne under a writ of attachment in an action brought by the Irvine Company, as plaintiff, against Osborne, as defendant. Subsequent to the attachment and on March 2, 1922, the plaintiff served on the sheriff a third party claim, asserting its ownership of the property and demanding its release. Surrender was refused and the plaintiff brought this action for conversion. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants and the plaintiff appeals.

The court found that plaintiff was not the owner of the property in dispute, but that, with certain exceptions not necessary to be noted here, the property seized belonged to

Osborne. While appellant has assigned four different reasons why the judgment should be reversed, they are in fact but one attack upon the judgment for the reason that the evidence does not support the finding. It is assumed by appellant that the court based its judgment upon the theory that certain statements of account, which were rendered by plaintiff to Osborne and retained by him without objection, created an account stated. The respondents insist that:

"The findings and judgment of the court are based on the theory that title to the property which is the subject of this action had passed to Osborne, and that statements sent Osborne to which he did not object were evidence of this fact and of the exercise of the option embodied in the farming contract."

As indicated by this quotation, there existed a written contract between the plaintiff and Osborne for the production of vegetables by the latter as a lessee of lands of the Irvine Company, under which the plaintiff agreed to furnish Osborne with the necessary stock and implements and to advance to Osborne such money as might be necessary for the production of his crop of vegetables, and Osborne in turn agreed to deliver all his vegetables to the plaintiff for sale on commission. This agreement gave Osborne an option continuing until July 1, 1921, to purchase the farm equipment at invoiced price as shown by a designated inventory. On March 17, 1921, the plaintiff rendered a statement to Osborne which showed an item under the date of February 18, reading "Trapp Estate equip. $10,000." On April 30, 1921, another statement was sent, including the charge for the equipment item, again on July 15, 1921, and December 8, 1921, and lastly on February 14, 1922. These statements also show that Osborne was not successful in repaying the advances made to him, but was continuously in plaintiff's debt on account thereof. The plaintiff's testimony explanatory of the mailing of these statements to Osborne is in effect that plaintiff's vice president, who had charge of the finances of the plaintiff in California, wanted the information in a concrete form so that he might be guided in making his advances to the corporation. A portion of Osborne's testimony is as follows:

"Q. Did you at any time or in any way take up the matter of the option with the American Fruit Growers that is set out in that agreement?

"The Witness: Do you mean did I go to them or tell them at any time?

"Q. Yes. A. No; I didn't.

"Q. Did you ever pay the American Fruit Growers the invoice price as set forth in that agreement, or any other price for the equipment? A. No.

"Q. Which I show you as listed under paragraph 5 of the plaintiff's complaint? A. No; I never paid them any money at any time."

On cross-examination, Osborne testified that he received the statements referred to and noticed the equipment item in the March statement, and that the debit items carried forward in subsequent statements included the amount of that equipment debit, and that he made no protest. On redirect examination, the following took place:

"Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Fogg, treasurer and vice president of the American Fruit Growers, regarding your account? A. In what way do you mean?"

"Q. Well, in regard to any matters? A. No; except that once in a while he would bring down a paper, and he would say, 'Do you think you will ever pull out of this?' and he would show me figures this long."

"The Court: Looked dubious to you, did it? A. It did. * * *

"Q. I will ask you, did you ever own it [the equipment] at that time? * * * A. Well, I didn't feel like I could go out and sell it."

"Q. What do you mean by that? The question is, Did you ever own the property? * * * A. Well, I never felt really clear about it myself; seemed it was charged to me, and yet I knew I hadn't paid any money on it, I had never exercised my option."

"The Court: Did you realize that the cost of celery, whatever it was, ran up so many thousand dollars, that would be taken out of it if you let the account stand that way? A. It was my choice."

"Q. Well, if you let the accounts come to you and not make any objection to the statement of your account? A. Yes; I had always figured if the cauliflower or the cabbage ever brought enough money I would buy it, but as it was, my cabbage and cauliflower never brought enough money to pay out."

"Q. Bought it at that price, even if it deteriorated down to nothing? A. To nothing; yes, sir."

"Mr. Wadsworth: If the court please, the option only ran to the 7th day of July, 1921, which was only nine months after he went into possession of it. If I may say, it would not have deteriorated to nothing, wouldn't have time in that time."

"The Court: I was just asking how—"

"Mr. Wadsworth: I want to bring out he had to exercise his option by a certain time or he lost that right."

Osborne was asked, on cross-examination, whether on the day of the attachment he had not stated at the office of the Irvine Company, in the presence of J. H. Breckenridge, its secretary and treasurer, and of C. J. Cogan, assistant to the superintendent, that he was the owner of the equipment. Osborne denied that he had said that he was the owner, but stated that what he did say was that it was charged to him, and he showed the gentlemen named his contract. Mr. Breckenridge and Mr. Cogan do not precisely agree in their versions of what was said to Osborne. Breckenridge testified that Osborne said he owned the property and showed them plaintiff's statements upon which he had been charged with it. Cogan, however, testified:

"Osborne stated he considered himself the owner of that property as it had been charged to him on a statement which he produced."

[1] We do not agree that if the statements sent to Osborne and acquiesced in by him constitute an account stated the question in this case is concluded, but rather that the vital question is whether the statements mailed by the plaintiff and the acts and declarations of Osborne with respect thereto constitute evidence of an exercise of the option and the transfer of title. If they do, in fact, constitute evidence by way of admissions, then the explanatory testimony given by the plaintiff's witnesses merely raises a conflict in the evidence and the judgment of the trial court upon that question must be taken as final, for, as has been so many times stated, it is not the province of this court to interfere with the judgment of the trial court when there is any substantial testimony to support it. It has been decided by the Supreme Court in Wilson v. Hotchkiss, 171 Cal. 617, 154 P. 1, L. R. A. 1916F, 389, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 570, that where a vendee is in possession of personal property as was the case here, in one capacity, that it is sufficient to establish that possession is held in the new capacity of owner by oral declarations or by acts of dominion over the property inconsistent with his former holding. In other words, in this case so long as the option remained unexercised there was no obligation on the part of Osborne to pay any amount on account thereof, and so there was no occasion prior to the expiration of the option by limitation of time for the plaintiff to have mailed statements charging him with the purchase price, and also if the option had expired by limitation of time without exercise there was no occasion for the plaintiff to charge Osborne with the purchase price.

[2, 3] These statements constituted admissions inconsistent with the former holding by Osborne of possession of the property as a lessee. While the case of Wilson v. Hotchkiss, supra, is upon a somewhat different question, nevertheless its principle and declaration as to what constitutes evidence are clearly applicable here when it says:

"Where a sale is made to a vendee in possession, whatever may have been the nature of his prior possession, the law does not require a quitting of it and a retaking of possession as the new owner. Snider v. Thrall, 56 Wis. 674, 14 N. W. 814. All that is required is evidence showing that the possession is retained by the vendee in his new capacity of owner. And what evidence will establish this? Manifestly it may be established by proof of acts of dominion over the property inconsistent with his former holding as bailee or pledgee, but equally may it be established by his declarations that he so holds the property as owner. On principle this must be so, for it would indeed be strange if a pledgee, formally reciting the oral contract by which he had purchased the property and declaring that he held possession of it no longer as pledgee but as absolute owner, could have the evidence of these declarations excluded from the consideration of the jury upon the ground that they were mere declarations and not a part of his acts or conduct in dealing with the property. They are essentially a part of his acts and conduct, and so we find it declared as 'well settled that any acts of the parties indicative of ownership by the vendee may be given in evidence to show the receipt and acceptance of the goods to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Conduct, acts and declarations of the purchaser may be given in evidence for that purpose.' Garfield v. Paris, 96 U. S. 557, 24 L. Ed. 821. And without multiplying citations, reference may be made to Browne on Statute of Frauds, § 321e, where he states: 'The conduct of the buyer showing an acceptance * * * may be drawn * * * from what he says.' And again quoting from the same author, page 433, footnote, 'An examination of the cases will show that evidence has uniformly been received even in New York of the conduct of the parties, i. e., what they did and said, without in any way discriminating between acts of doing and acts of saying.' See, also, Mechem on Sales, § 382; Williston on Sales, § 87."

[4] While statements made by Osborne could not be binding on the plaintiff if not made in the presence of one who could bind it, yet we feel constrained to hold that the acquiescence of Osborne to the statements is some evidence to contradict his statement that he had not purchased because in an analogous situation the Legislature has provided in section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure, subdivision 3, that, "An act or declaration of another, in the presence and within the observation of a party, and his conduct in relation thereto" may be proved on the trial. While these statements were not made literally within the presence of Osborne, nevertheless they were received by him and were such as to naturally call for a correction if they were not true. His acts and declarations with respect thereto constitute some evidence at variance with his denial of purchase. Estate of Snowball, 157 Cal. 301, 107 P. 598.

[5] By section 1140 of the Civil Code it is provided that:

"The title to personal property, sold or exchanged, passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not."

It has been uniformly held that whether title passes or not is a matter of intention. Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 455; Palmer v. Howard, 72 Cal. 293, 13 P. 858, 1 Am. St. Rep. 60. Two important items in determining the intention of the parties are delivery of possession and unconditional promise of the vendee to pay. In fact, it is stated in Benjamin on Sales (7th Ed.) p. 373, American note, that;

It is "uniformly agreed as stated in the last note, that a delivery to the carrier of goods duly directed to the buyer, either with or without a bill of lading in his favor, ordinarily passes the title instantly, but that the seller may avoid this conclusion by appropriate acts or words. * * *"

In this case Osborne had been vested with the possession of the property and the statements sent to him and to which he acquiesced indicated an unconditional promise on his part to pay the purchase price. Hence the trial court was justified in finding from this evidence that the option had been exercised and the title transferred.

Judgment affirmed.

I concur: CRAIG, J., Acting P. J.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. I find myself unable to concur in the affirmance of the judgment, which, to my mind, makes a forced gift of plaintiff's property to the Irvine Company, the attaching creditor of its tenant, Osborne.

It is stated in plaintiff's opening brief that the trial court's decision was based on the theory that the accounts, submitted by plaintiff to Osborne and retained by him without objection, created an account stated, whereby title was shown to have been transferred from plaintiff to Osborne, and the defendants acquiesce in this statement. I think, therefore, that the accounts and the testimony explanatory of the equipment item should receive more attention than has been given them in the majority opinion.

Osborne leased from the Irvine Company certain farm lands which had previously been under lease to Roy D. Trapp, who had died. Part of the assets of Trapp's estate consisted of the equipment in question, which plaintiff purchased in September, 1920, for $10,000. Under date of September 1, 1920, plaintiff and Osborne entered into their agreement whereby, among other things, plaintiff agreed to let Osborne have the use of this equipment in his farming operations, and to advance him also such money as he might need for his crops, and Osborne in turn agreed to deliver his vegetables to plaintiff for sale on commission. The agreement further gave Osborne an option until July 1, 1921, to purchase the equipment at the cost price to plaintiff.

Osborne continued his farming operations until the time of the Irvine Company's attachment in February, 1922, but did not at any time expressly or affirmatively exercise his option to purchase the equipment from plaintiff, nor did he ever receive a bill of sale or its equivalent. No transfer of title to the equipment took place by any overt act of the parties, nor was there any outward circumstance evidencing such transfer. The contention of the defendants is, however, that a change of ownership was brought about by reason of the fact that plaintiff sent Osborne certain transcripts from plaintiff's books of account and on receipt of those transcripts Osborne remained silent.

From these facts it is concluded not only that there was an exercise of the option by Osborne, but that, without payment of a single dollar, the title to $10,000 worth of plaintiff's property was forthwith bestowed on Osborne and placed at the disposal of his creditors.

Up to February 18, 1921, whatever records were kept by plaintiff in reference to the equipment were kept in an account separate from the vegetable account of Osborne. At the date mentioned plaintiff's vice president and treasurer, Mr. Fogg, who had come from the east at the instance of what he calls plaintiff's parent company at Pittsburg, to watch the finances of the subsidiary California corporation, caused the equipment account to be combined on plaintiff's books with Osborne's vegetable account. This was done without conference with Osborne and on Fogg's own initiative; and the memorandum giving this instruction to the bookkeeper contained the following explanatory notation:

"To combine accts. This is purely a suspense item but transferred to Osborne's acct. for the purpose of showing at all times amount of money invested by A-F-G in this project."

And Fogg in his testimony said:

"I wanted this information in a concrete form to guide me in making my advances for this corporation."

It is quite apparent that there was no intention at this time on plaintiff's part to treat the equipment as having been sold to Osborne.

According to the vegetable account, as it stood at the beginning of February, 1921, Osborne had a debit balance against him of $9,702.91 for plaintiff's advances for his farming operations. No further statement was rendered to Osborne until March 17th. The statement then rendered began on the debit side with the previous balance of $9,702.91, and showed, besides certain money advances, the item under the date of February 18, reading, "Trapp estate equip. $10,000." With this item added, the debit balance was made by this account to appear as $21,340.41. The next statement dated April 30, 1921, started with the debit of $21,340.41, and, after adding debits for further advancements and giving credits arising from sales, showed a net debit at the close of April of $16,888.28. This included, of course, the amount of the item which had appeared in the March statement regarding the equipment. On July 15, 1921, another statement was sent to Osborne, beginning with the debit balance of $16,888.28 shown by the previous statement, and by reason of the excess in proceeds of sales over intermediate advances, the debit balance was shown at that time to have been reduced to $15,112.42, including still the March item in relation to equipment. Then on December 8, 1921, there was submitted a statement beginning with the previous debit balance of $15,112.442, and showing an increase, through additional advances, to $21,752.41. The remaining statement introduced in evidence is dated February 14, 1922, which, taking the debit balance of the December statement and continuing the account, showed a reduction of the debit balance, through sales of vegetables, to $18,871.52. Two copies of this statement were put in evidence, one bearing the pencil notation "Bookkeeping purposes only," the other not. If from each of the debit balances shown in the foregoing statements, beginning with that of March 17th, the sum of $10,000, representing the cost price of the equipment, is deducted, it will be seen that on his vegetable account Osborne was continuously in plaintiff's debt, and was at no time in position to buy the equipment.

From the record I am satisfied that it appears without contradiction that on plaintiff's part there was no intention of doing anything more than to consolidate in one account, for plaintiff's own information and guidance, the records of all its outlays and all receipts from sales in connection with the Osborne contract, so as to ascertain by reference to that one account how plaintiff's expenditures compared with its receipts.

The way in which the matter was regarded by Osborne is shown by the excerpts from his testimony set forth in the majority opinion. He there says that he knew that he had never paid anything on the equipment; that he did not feel that he "could go out and sell it"; and that he had never exercised his option.

Reference is made in the majority opinion to a conversation between Osborne and representatives of the Irvine Company on the day of the attachment, at which time, according to the testimony of Breckenridge secretary and treasurer of the Irvine Company, Osborne stated that he owned the property and also exhibited plaintiff's statement of account. This conversation was not in the presence of any representative of plaintiff, and Osborne denied that he had said that he was the owner. Assuming, however, that the trial judge accepted Breckenridge's version of the conversation, I do not follow the reasoning of the learned Justices with whom I am associated in this case, that such ex parte declaration of Osborne, because inconsistent with his position as a licensee, was evidence against plaintiff of a completed sale. The cases cited in support of that view are cases wherein a controversy arose between the immediate parties to the transaction, involving the question whether possession originally held as a bailee or pledgee had subsequently been transformed into possession held as a vendee in the capacity of owner. In such cases declarations of the defendant admitting his ownership were, of course, admissible against him in disproof of a contention on his part that his original possession remained unchanged in character. Osborne is, however, not a party to this action; and there being no similar situation here, I am unable to perceive the applicability of the cases cited. The declarations said to have been made by Osborne to these strangers to his transaction with plaintiff were but extrajudicial expressions of opinion, and could not speak into being an ownership which did not in fact exist. McClenahan v. Keyes, 65 Cal. App. 467, 473, 224 P. 241.

There could have been no ownership in Osborne unless there has been an acceptance of his option accompanied by acts sufficient in law to work a transfer of title. Whether there had been such an acceptance of the option and a change of title must depend on the inferences reasonably to be drawn from the evidence as a whole; and in dealing with the evidence, we are to consider not only the nature and state of the accounts themselves in connection with the retention of them by Osborne without protest, but also the relations of the parties and the bearing of their acts and conduct upon the ownership of the equipment.

The affirmance of the judgment implies that the evidence is sufficient to justify the inference that Osborne exercised his option, and then to impose upon that inference the further inference, piled like Pelion upon Ossa, that without performing any condition of payment, Osborne became vested with absolute ownership. The basis relied upon for that ultimate conclusion is the receipt and retention of the accounts.

In so far as the statements of account are concerned, it does not follow that because they were received without objection, they were, as defendants contend, converted into accounts stated. The plaintiff and Osborne had their written agreement; and when there is a previous written agreement defining the rights of the parties, a departure from that agreement, whereby certain unwarranted charges are made in an account rendered, will not necessarily conclude the debtor, even though he keeps silent and lets the account stand as rendered. For where one rendering an account knows that he has included items against the other that he had no right under their contract to include, retention of the account does not make it an account stated or create an estoppel. Blanck v. Pioneer Mining Co., 93 Wash. 26, 159 P. 1077.

In determining whether we have a stated account, or merely a bookkeeper's current account exhibiting the excess of plaintiff's expenditures over receipts, in the account of March 17, 1921, in which the item of equipment first appeared, and which showed, with that item, included, a debit balance of $21,340.41, we must look at the situation of the parties at that time and their relation to each other. Osborne had begun his farming operations in the preceding September. For use in cultivation under his contract, he had been supplied by plaintiff with $10,000 worth of equipment, and plaintiff had advanced all the money for making his crops. Yet the sale of the crops had never produced enough to place a dollar to Osborne's credit on the books; and under his contract he had merely an option until July 1, 1921, to purchase the equipment at cost price to plaintiff. Apparently his only hope of being able to exercise the option and become owner of the equipment was out of the profits that might come from sales of his produce, and Osborne's ability to buy, as the trial judge remarked, "looked dubious."

The reasons for consolidating the equipment and the vegetable accounts were explained by plaintiff's vice president and treasurer, and show beyond peradventure that there was no intent on plaintiff's part to effect a transfer of title; and without mutual intent minds cannot possibly meet. Osborne's testimony shows that he and plaintiff were continuing their operations after the time limited for exercise of the option and until the time of the attachment in the hope that the situation might better itself, and while their relations continued, statements were submitted at irregular intervals. But never at any time did the parties come together and definitely agree on any balance due plaintiff, nor was anything ever done in the way of payment for any of the equipment. There was at all times an entire absence of that finality in the adjustment of the financial relations which is essential to the creation of an account stated.

Respecting the accounts the case is something like that of Newburger-Morris Co. v. Talcott, 219 N. Y. 505, 114 N. E. 846, 3 A. L. R. 287, where there were transactions between a shipper of goods and a factor, who made advances against the merchandise and the net value of outstanding accounts. Monthly accounts current were submitted by the factor to the shipper and passed without objection. The question in the case was whether these statements were to be treated as accounts stated. It was held that they lacked the finality essential to the statement of an agreed account between the parties. In the course of its opinion, the court said:

"Here the relation was that of principal and factor under an agreement that was to last at least a year, and indefinitely thereafter unless terminated by notice of 30 days. Not till the contract was at an end did the duty to make advances cease. * * * The debit balances shown by these monthly statements did not, therefore, constitute a present debt. They did not speak the language of present demand for payment or adjustment. * * * They were provisional advices. They were not definitive demands. * * *

The case cited is followed in Watson v. Gillespie, 205 App. Div. 613, 200 N. Y. S. 191, which involved accounts between the defendants, who were a London firm engaged in import and export business, and the plaintiff, who was their New York manager, receiving as part of his compensation a share of the profits. The parties followed a system of annual accounting, which the defendants contended stated each year a final account, but which the court held to be merely accounts current, saying:

"The fundamental principles of contract law apply to accounts stated. The minds of the parties must meet. The offeror cannot render a 'current' unsettled account as a basis for subsequent liquidation and be bound on an account stated by the offeree accepting the current account as a closed, settled account between the parties. The minds of the contracting parties, in such a case, do not meet. There can be no contract. This principle of law is clearly expounded by the Court of Appeals in the case of Lockwood v. Thorne, 18 N. Y. 285. The court said, at pages 288, 289: 'The minds of the parties must meet upon the allowance of each item or claim allowed, and upon the disallowance of each item or claim rejected. They must mutually concur upon the final adjustment, and nothing short of this in substance will fix and adjust their respective demands as an account stated. * * * And, as the minds of both parties are supposed to meet and concur, it must necessarily be competent to show how the party rendering the account understood the transaction. If the evidence should show clearly that he did not understand that there had been any final adjustment of their respective demands between them, it would be strange, if the courts should disregard the understanding of the parties themselves, and decree an adjustment between them contrary to their own understanding in the matter.'"

The mere submission of statements while transactions are in progress, and with no intention to strike a final balance, is not sufficient to make such statements accounts stated. The element of finality is one of the attributes of a stated account, and without that element no binding effect attaches. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Doe, 26 Cal. App. 246, 253, 255, 146 P. 692; Richmond D. Co. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 31 Cal. App. 399, 409, 410, 160 P. 862; Suffern v. Mandell, 212 App. Div. 1, 208 N. Y. S. 275.

The testimony as a whole, to my view, shows clearly that there was no meeting of minds between plaintiff and Osborne in relation to purchase of the equipment, and that neither understood that there had been any exercise of the option. That being so, the account, whatever its character, cannot be made an instrument to create a liability where none existed before. Bennett v. Potter, 180 Cal. 736, 746, 183 P. 156; Stimson Mill Co. v. Hughes, 8 Cal. App. 559, 561, 97 P. 322; Dawson T. Co. v. Rosenberg I. & M. Co., 63 Cal. App. 489, 491, 218 P. 782. There had certainly been nothing evidencing in any wise an acceptance of the option when the equipment item was first entered in the account of March 17, 1921, and, in my judgment, the retention of that and subsequent statements by Osborne, without anything further, fell far short of the requirements for a transfer of title. Even if Osborne had given written notice of election to purchase, such election, standing alone, would not have operated ipso facto to change the ownership. Transfer of personal property is effected upon a sale only through a contract that has been executed. There must, in the first place, be the requisite meeting of minds in an agreement, but until the agreement is supplemented by acts of a character sufficient to vest title in the vendee, the title remains in the vendor.

I am unable to find sufficient in the evidence to justify the inference that Osborne ever became obligated for the equipment. But if, notwithstanding the circumstances surrounding the accounts, the retention of them were to be deemed tantamount to an express exercise of the option, I lack, nevertheless, the magic to distill from the evidence the elements necessary to transmogrify Osborne's original possession as a licensee into the possession of an absolute owner. The exercise of the option could do no more than create an executory contract of sale. It could not operate ipso facto to clothe Osborne with plaintiff's ownership. To have an executed sale, there must, in the first place, be the meeting of minds in an agreement, and in the second place, the agreement, when made, must be followed by performance—which is an entirely distinct phase of the transaction. The mere election could not both ripen Osborne's option into a binding agreement of sale, and then, stopping there, arrogate all the benefits of a full performance. In the law of sales, it is an elementary rule that unless the contract otherwise provides, the covenant of the buyer to pay the price and that of the seller to transfer the title are mutual and dependent covenants to be contemporaneously performed. Dealing with an option to buy land embodied in the provisions of a lease, the Supreme Court, in Cates v. McNeil, 169 Cal. 697, 706, 147 P. 944, 948, said:

"What the respondents acquired under the option clause was an irrevocable right of option to purchase the property at a specified price if they should at the end of 10 years elect to do so and all that was necessary on their part to do as far as the terms of the option are concerned in order to constitute a binding contract for the sale and purchase of the premises was to give notice of their acceptance of the right. This they did. Payment of the purchase price at that time was not a condition required by the option and it is not for the court to incorporate terms in it which the parties to it did not incorporate or even mention. Of course, payment would be essential before respondents would be entitled to a conveyance of the land but that is a matter pertaining to the performance of the contract of purchase and sale which had been created by the acceptance. In the absence of anything in the contract itself the obligation of the parties in the performance of the contract is governed by the law applying generally to bilateral contracts for the purchase and sale of property under which the agreement or covenant of the vendor to convey and the vendee to pay the purchase price are considered mutual and dependent covenants and are to be performed contemporaneously by the respective parties."

In the present case the agreement between plaintiff and Osborne did not undertake to fix any time for transfer of title, in case the option should be exercised. The rule governing parties under such circumstances is expressed in Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 473, 14 S. E. 249, 252, as follows:

"Having thus a contract it simply remained for the parties or the law to execute it according to its terms, and so far as it does not prescribe, as prescribed by law; and the matter of payment is in this case as in ordinary cases of executory contract. The covenant or obligation to pay and that to pass title are mutual and dependent; the one cannot be required before the other is ready to be performed."

In like manner, it is said in Joyce v. Tomasini, 168 Cal. 234, 240, 241, 142 P. 67, 69:

"The agreement does not fix the time for the making of the deed in case the option should be exercised, nor does it expressly declare that the defendant will execute a deed. But the contract, in that event, would become an agreement to sell the land for the stated price, and by section 1731 of the Civil Code, such an agreement binds the seller to convey the title. In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, covenants to pay the price on the one hand and to transfer the property on the other, are deemed to be dependent, and a conveyance would be due, in this instance, upon payment of the price. 1 Sugden on Vendors, bottom page 239."

It is not contended by defendants that Osborne either expressly exercised his option or that he ever made any payment on the equipment.

The fact that for farming purposes Osborne had possession of the equipment as a licensee would, of course, dispense with formal delivery in furtherance of any transfer of title, but it would not relieve him of the conditions necessary to be performed by him in order to complete the purchase and acquire title. Mere possession is not such an indicium of ownership as will bind the true owner, and Osborne was never held out to the Irvine Company as owner of the equipment. His possession rested on the crop agreement, whereby he had the privilege of using the equipment in his farming operations, and before his creditors could have legal recourse against the equipment, there would have to be an actual change of title.

It is quite a significant circumstance, indicating that plaintiff did not regard the title as being in Osborne, that plaintiff, in June, 1921, insured the equipment in plaintiff's own name as owner. If the ownership had passed to Osborne, an insurance policy in plaintiff's name as owner would have been valueless, and the very fact that plaintiff did take insurance in its own name shows that plaintiff was not recognizing any ownership in Osborne.

The findings against ownership in the plaintiff depend entirely on the inference that, because Osborne did not object to the accounts transmitted, the plaintiff forthwith lost its title, regardless of payment, and Osborne without so much as a gesture, became invested with sole, exclusive, and unconditional ownership, giving the attaching creditor a right to have the property sold at execution sale in satisfaction of Osborne's debt.

To my thinking, the evidence is wholly insufficient to support the findings; and the judgment in favor of defendants, since it has the effect of expropriating plaintiff's property to pay Osborne's debt to the Irvine Company, should not be allowed to stand.

CASTLETON v. PETERSON et al.★
(Civ. 5475.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 12, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 10, 1927.

1. Fraudulent conveyances §80—Where debtor conveys all property in consideration of future support, conveyance is presumed fraudulent.

As against creditors no one can transfer all of his property in consideration of future support, for the law presumes such an act to be done with intent to delay creditors.

2. Fraudulent conveyances §57(3)—Where debtor conveyed all her property for inadequate consideration and future support, thereby becoming insolvent, conveyance held fraudulent as to creditor.

In action to quiet title, where it was shown that debtor conveyed all her property, reasonably worth $8,000, to the plaintiff in consideration of $100, the assumption of a $2,000 mortgage, and the support of debtor by plaintiff for the rest of her life, thereby becoming insolvent and incapable of paying her debts, held that the conveyance was fraudulent as to creditor.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Norman MacDonald Castleton against P. O. Peterson, wherein the defendant filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiff and Louisa N. Ostwald. Judgment for plaintiff and cross-defendant, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Marion Vecki and Gilbert D. Ferrell, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

James P. Sweeney and Frank J. Fontes, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Action to quiet title. The complaint is in the usual form. It alleges that defendant P. O. Peterson claims some interest in the property in question adverse to plaintiff, and a judgment is sought declaring plaintiff to be the owner in fee absolute of the same. Defendant answering admitted a claim of interest based upon an attachment against the property which was issued in an action which had been prosecuted to judgment. At the same time he filed a cross-complaint against plaintiff and joined therein one Louisa N. Ostwald as a cross-defendant. This complaint alleges in substance that on the 17th day of October, 1921, a judgment was duly given and made in the superior court in and for the county of San Mateo, where the land is situated, in favor of the defendant and cross-complainant and against cross-defendant Louisa N. Ostwald, for the sum of $410.17 principal, $147.66 interest, and $24.30 costs of suit, and that the same was duly entered and docketed on October 17, 1921; that thereafter an execution issued to enforce the judgment, which execution was returned by the sheriff of the county aforesaid wholly unsatisfied, and that such return was made prior to the commencement of the present action; that on or about the 29th day of January, 1916, and prior to the entry of said judgment, but after the indebtedness upon which said judgment was rendered had been incurred, the cross-defendant Ostwald, for the express purpose of defrauding the defendant and cross-plaintiff's assignors, and to prevent him or his assignors from collecting the indebtedness upon which the judgment was founded, conveyed to plaintiff and cross-defendant Castleton all of the real estate owned by her in the county of San Mateo, being the real property described in plaintiff's complaint; that plaintiff and cross-defendant Castleton knew of said indebtedness to the assignors of defendant and cross-complainant Peterson, and received said conveyance so made with the intent and express purpose of defrauding cross-complainant and his assignors, and with the further intent and purpose of preventing the collection of the indebtedness and judgment, or any judgment that might be rendered thereon. Further allegations recite that there was no consideration for the conveyance of the said real property by cross-defendant Ostwald to Castleton, excepting a pretended agreement on the part of Castleton to support cross-defendant Ostwald during the term of her natural life; that said Ostwald after she had made the conveyance had no other property out of which the judgment could be satisfied in whole or in part. Judgment was prayed that cross-defendants deliver up said conveyance and that the same be canceled and declared void. Cross-defendants filed an answer denying that the conveyance was made in fraud of creditors or that it was without consideration.

At the trial plaintiff identified a document which purported to be an agreement between him and Louisa N. Ostwald, cross-defendant, dated June 15, 1915, whereby she promised to convey to plaintiff all the real property described in the complaint in consideration of the payment to her by plaintiff of the sum of $100 and the assumption of a mortgage of $2,000 on the premises in question, and the support of her by plaintiff during the rest of her natural life. Plaintiff testified that he had paid to Mrs. Ostwald the $100 and assumed the mortgage. He thereupon rested. Marion Vecki, defendant's assignor, testified on behalf of defendant that plaintiff called on him on January 29, 1916, and presented a document dated the day previous and signed by Mrs. Ostwald, demanding the surrender of a certain promissory note executed by her, and upon his refusal to surrender the same was informed by plaintiff that he and Mrs. Ostwald would so arrange it that he would not be paid. This promissory note was the obligation assigned to Peterson and upon which he had recovered the judgment hereinabove referred to. Plaintiff Castleton admitted that he had made such demand, but denied the statement attributed to him. Vecki further testified that the property conveyed to plaintiff by cross-defendant Ostwald was reasonably worth the sum of $8,000. It is admitted by the pleadings that this is all the property that Mrs. Ostwald possessed.

It further appeared that the promissory note executed by Mrs. Ostwald on October 16, 1915, in favor of Vecki, was a renewal note and that part of the original obligation upon which it was based had been owing for about a year prior to the execution of the note. It also appeared that Vecki knew at the time Mrs. Ostwald executed the note that she was the owner of the property in question, and he claims that the credit extended to her was in reliance of such ownership. Upon the evidence the trial court found that the conveyance was not fraudulent, but that the same had been made in good faith, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff quieting his title. Defendant and cross-complainant Peterson appeal from such decree. We are of the opinion that there is no evidence in the record to contradict the presumption that the conveyance was made with fraudulent intent.

[1, 2] As against creditors no one can transfer all of his property in consideration of future support so as to defeat any such creditor in enforcing his claim, for under such circumstances the law presumes the act to be done with fraudulent intent to hinder and delay the creditor in the collection of his debt. Baxter v. Baxter, 19 Cal. App. 239, 125 P. 359; Ceinar v. Hawes, 59 Cal. App. 687, 211 P. 849; Potts v. Mehrmann, 50 Cal. App. 627, 195 P. 941. Here the evidence shows without conflict that Mrs. Ostwald at the time she made the conveyance to plaintiff was indebted to defendant's assignor on a promissory note, and the pleadings admit that by her conveyance she disposed of herself of all of her property. By such transfer she became insolvent and rendered herself incapable of paying her debts. Such an act is a fraud upon a creditor and should not be countenanced in a court of justice. Franck v. Moran, 36 Cal. App. 37, 171 P. 841.

The judgment is reversed.

SHAHER v. FISHER et al. (Civ. 4433.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 10, 1927.

1. Corporations ☞306—Common count for money had and received held not to support action against corporation officer depositing in personal account plaintiff's checks as loan to corporation.

Common count for money had and received held not to support an action against a corporation officer, who indorsed checks given by plaintiff to the corporation as a loan and deposited the checks in his personal account, there being no allegation that the defendant corporation was insolvent, or that the defendant officer has secured any preference, or that plaintiff had exhausted her remedy against the corporation.

2. Creditors' suit ☞39(4)—Creditor's bill must allege that legal remedies have been exhausted or are unavailing.

It is a necessary prerequisite to the maintenance of a creditor's bill that plaintiff allege that his legal remedies have been exhausted or are unavailing.

3. Bills and notes ☞448—Common count for money had and received held not to support action against defendant corporation officer as indorser of check to corporation.

Common count for money had and received held not to support an action against the treasurer of a corporation by plaintiff, who had loaned money to the corporation against the treasurer as indorser of check to corporation, there being nothing in the complaint by which defendant could know that any negotiable instrument was involved, or that he was sought to be charged as an indorser.

4. Pleading ☞387—Plaintiff cannot prove and recover on different cause than that pleaded without giving defendant opportunity to defend.

While the tendency of courts is toward liberality of pleading, a plaintiff cannot plead one cause of action and prove and recover on another without giving notice to the defendant and opportunity to defend.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action for money had and received by Grace Shafer against J. T. Fisher and another. Judgment for defendant named, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Benjamin Lewis, of Los Angeles, J. Gordon Mills, of Inglewood, and Charles P. Huey, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lloyd W. Moultrie, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. The complaint in this action is in the form of a common count for money had and received by the defendants J. T. Fisher and the General Packing Corporation from the plaintiff. The judgment was that plaintiff have and recover from the defendant the sum of $1,672.27, together with interest and costs, and that the defendant Fisher have and recover of plaintiff his costs. The appeal is from the judgment entered in favor of the defendant J. T. Fisher.

The facts as developed by the testimony are: That at the time the money was loaned by Karl F. Ross, acting as agent for the plaintiff, the defendant Fisher was assistant treasurer of the defendant corporation. A few days before the loan of $1,000 by plaintiff, the defendant Fisher advanced to the corporation $1,000 upon the understanding with one Scott, the president of the corporation, that when the $1,000 was received from Ross, defendant should reimburse himself with the moneys. Accordingly, when the two checks amounting to $1,000 were received by the defendant Fisher, they were indorsed by him and deposited in his account. Altogether the plaintiff loaned to the corporation through her agent, Dr. Ross, the sum of $2,000, part of which had been repaid, leaving a balance evidenced by three promissory notes received and held by plaintiff, for the face of which the judgment was entered against the corporation. Two of the notes, aggregating $1,060, bore indorsements, the first of which read, "General Packing Corp., J. T. Fisher, Asst. Treas.," and the other, "General Packing Corp., by J. T. Fisher, Asst. Treas."

The plaintiff claims that the defendant Fisher had no authority to deposit the two checks in his own account, and that, therefore, this particular transaction is void, or at least voidable, and that, the corporation having failed to have it so declared, plaintiff as a creditor of the corporation has that right. She also contends that the defendant Fisher is personally liable by reason of the indorsements heretofore noticed, and, further, that the defendant Fisher, being a creditor of the defendant corporation, could not obtain a preference over other creditors.

[1, 2] Regardless of the merits of these assertions on the part of appellant, she cannot successfully assert them under the issues framed by the pleadings. There is no suggestion in the complaint that plaintiff has exhausted her legal remedy as against the corporation, nor any allegation that the defendant corporation was insolvent, nor that the defendant Fisher had secured any preference. A necessary prerequisite to the maintenance of a creditor's bill are allegations showing that the legal remedies have been exhausted or are unavailing. Herrlich v. Kaufmann, 99 Cal. 271-277, 33 P. 857; Matteson, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Conley, 144 Cal. 483-485, 77 P. 1042.

[3, 4] Nor is the plaintiff in a position to assert respondent's liability upon the indorsements, or either of them, upon the notes. Action was not brought upon the notes nor against this respondent upon the indorsements. There are no allegations of any character by which the defendant Fisher could be apprised that plaintiff sought to charge him as an indorser, or that any negotiable instrument was involved or had been presented or dishonored. While the modern tendency of the courts is toward liberality of pleading, it has never been suggested that a plaintiff should be permitted, upon pleading one cause of action, to prove and recover upon an entirely different cause, without giving notice to his adversary or opportunity to defend.

Judgment affirmed.

SWEET v. HAMILOTHORIS. (Civ. 5465.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 8, 1927.

1. Pleading ⚡236(1)—Permitting amendments to pleadings is within sound discretion of trial court.

It is within the sound discretion of the trial court to permit or refuse amendments to pleadings.

2. Pleading ⚡229—Amendments to pleading should be allowed liberally.

The court should be liberal in allowing pleadings to be amended.

3. Appeal and error ⚡959(1)—Trial court's permission to amend pleadings will be revised only for gross abuse of discretion.

The discretion of the trial court in permitting amendments will rarely be revised, and then only when a gross abuse of discretion clearly appears.

4. Pleading ⚡229—Amendments to pleadings should be allowed where they will facilitate production of facts in determination of action without causing delay or prejudice to opponent (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Amendments to pleadings should be permitted where it can be done without working delay or prejudice to the opposing party and will facilitate the production of facts so that the cause may be determined on its merits, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

5. Bastards ⚡49—Allowing amendment to complaint in bastardy proceedings, alleging residence of mother and child and that mother was unmarried, held proper (Civ. Code, § 196a).

Allowing amendment to complaint in bastardy proceedings under Civ. Code, § 196a, alleging the residence of the mother and child and that the mother was unmarried, where defendant filed an amended answer which set up no new denials or defenses, held not abuse of discretion.

6. Pleading ⚡420(2)—Where defendant filed answer to amended complaint and asked for no further time, he consented to submission of issues presented.

Where the defendant filed his answer to an amended complaint and asked no further time to meet the new issues thus presented, it would be deemed that he had no objection to submit those issues.

7. Appeal and error ⚡195—Where defendant is surprised by amended complaint and desires further time, he must make objection to trial court.

Where defendant is surprised by new issues raised in an amended complaint in any way entitling him to terms or delay, he must make his objection to the trial court.

8. Bastards ⚡49—Amendment to complaint in bastardy proceedings alleging residence of mother and child and that mother was unmarried held not to state new cause of action (Civ. Code, § 196a).

Amendment to complaint in action to compel support of illegitimate minor child under Civ. Code, § 196a, which merely alleged the residence of the mother and child and that the mother was not a married woman, held not to state a new cause of action.

9. Bastards ⚡49—Complaint alleging defendant was father of minor child and was never married to mother bringing action for child held sufficient under statute, notwithstanding word "illegitimate" was omitted; "illegitimate child" (Civ. Code, § 196a).

Complaint, in action for the support of illegitimate minor child under Civ. Code, § 196a, brought by the mother alleging that the defendant was the child's father and that he was never married to the plaintiff, held sufficient notwithstanding the word "illegitimate" was not used therein, since a child born out of wedlock is an "illegitimate child."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Illegitimate Child.]

10. Pleading ⚡48—Complaint need only set forth facts sufficient to acquaint defendant with nature, source, and extent of action.

Plaintiff's pleading even against a special demurrer need only set forth the essential facts of the case with reasonable precision and with sufficient particularity to inform the defendant of the nature, source, and extent of the cause of action.

11. Bastards ⚡49—Where complaint stated facts warranting relief prayed for, it was not necessary to incorporate statute giving cause of action (Civ. Code, § 196a).

Where the complaint stated facts which under the law warranted the relief prayed for, there was no need of putting Civ. Code, § 196a, which authorized the cause of action, into the pleading.

12. Appeal and error ⚡1033(7)—Appellant cannot complain of error in finding favoring him.

Where an alleged error in a finding, if corrected, would have been adverse to appellant, the error will not authorize a reversal.

13. Appeal and error ⚡219(2)—Objection to findings as uncertain cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

Where appellant made no objection to the findings for uncertainty when served, or prior to the signing of same by the court, and proposed no amendments, held that he could not raise the question of uncertainty for the first time on appeal.

14. Bastards ⚡92—Judgment requiring father of illegitimate child to pay "at present" $25 per month during child's minority, if error, held harmless under statute (Civ. Code, § 196a).

Judgment requiring father of illegitimate child to pay "at present" $25 per month "during the minority of said minor child for his support," if error, held harmless, since Civ. Code, § 196a, gives the court the same powers as in a divorce suit where any decree is an order "at present," and since the age of the child was in evidence before the court, and the father had the legal duty of supporting the child during his minority.

15. Bastards ⚡16—Father has duty of supporting illegitimate child during minority.

It is the legal duty of the father of an illegitimate child to support it during its minority.

16. Appeal and error ⚡1010(1)—Trial court's judgment will not be disturbed where supported by substantial evidence.

Where there is substantial evidence to support a judgment, it will not be disturbed on appeal.

17. Appeal and error ⚡931(1)—Where evidence conflicts, testimony of prevailing party is assumed to be true.

Where there is substantial conflict in the evidence, the appellate court must assume the testimony of the prevailing party to be true, even where the law requires clear and convincing proof.

18. Bastards ⚡70—Credibility of witnesses and weight of testimony held within trial court's province in bastardy proceeding.

In bastardy proceeding, it was within province of trial court to pass on the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action to compel support of a minor child by Lillian Sweet, mother of David Louis Sweet, a minor, in behalf of said minor, against Louis N. Hamilothoris, otherwise known as Louis N. Hamil. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. D. Jerrett, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Mercer H. Farrar, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This action is brought under section 196a of the Civil Code by Lillian Sweet, the mother of David Louis Sweet, a minor, against appellant, the alleged father of such minor, praying judgment that it be ordered and adjudged that appellant is the father and Lillian Sweet is the mother of David Louis Sweet, a minor, and that appellant pay for the support, maintenance, and education of such minor, such sum as the court shall adjudge reasonable and suitable to his circumstances, etc. Judgment was entered that appellant was and is the father and Lillian Sweet was and is the mother of said David Louis Sweet, a minor, and that defendant pay to plaintiff for and on behalf of said minor at present the sum of $25 a month hereafter and during the minority of said minor for his support, maintenance, and education. Appellant urges four points on appeal:

(1) "The court erred in granting plaintiff leave to amend her complaint, and had no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the cause." (2) "The amended complaint is fatally defective, in that it fails in jurisdictional facts and does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." (3) "The material findings are against law." (4) "The judgment is not supported by pleadings or evidence."

The original complaint alleged that David Louis Sweet is a minor of about 8 months and this action is brought for and in behalf of said minor, David Louis Sweet, by his said mother. That on or about December 29, 1921, the defendant and Lillian Sweet had sexual relations and intercourse; that at said time defendant and Lillian Sweet were not husband and wife, nor did they intermarry, nor have they intermarried at any time, or at all; that on October 8, 1922, in San Francisco, Lillian Sweet gave birth to a son, the said minor, David Louis Sweet; that the defendant was, and is, the father of said minor, David Louis Sweet. The amended complaint contained these same allegations with the additional allegations that the plaintiff David Louis Sweet is a minor of about 16 months and is, and at all times mentioned was, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., and that the mother, Lillian Sweet, is, and at all times mentioned was, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., and that at any of the times herein mentioned the said Lillian Sweet was not a married woman, not being married to the defendant nor to any other male person.

The action is brought under section 196a of the Civil Code providing:

"The father as well as the mother, of an illegitimate child must give him support and education suitable to his circumstances. A civil suit to enforce such obligations may be maintained in behalf of a minor illegitimate child, by its mother or guardian, and in such action the court shall have power to order and enforce performance thereof, the same as under sections 138, 139 and 140 of the Civil Code, in a suit for divorce by a wife."

[1-4] As to appellant's first point that the trial court erred in granting plaintiff leave to amend her complaint, it may be said that the permitting or refusing of amendments to pleadings is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court. Cheney v. O'Brien, 69 Cal. 199, 10 P. 479; Walsh v. McKeen, 75 Cal. 519, 17 P. 673; Fitzgerald v. Neustadt, 91 Cal. 600, 27 P. 936; Heilbron v. Canal Co., 76 Cal. 15, 17 P. 933; McPherson v. Weston, 85 Cal. 93, 24 P. 733; Philbrook v. Randall, 195 Cal. 95, 231 P. 739. Amendments should be allowed liberally, and the discretion of the trial court in permitting amendments will rarely be revised (Pierson v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 127; San Joaquin, etc., v. Dodge, 125 Cal. 77, 57 P. 687), and then only for a gross abuse of discretion, and such abuse of discretion must be made to clearly appear before the trial court's discretion will be interfered with on appeal (Allen v. Los Molinos Land Co., 25 Cal. App. 206, 143 P. 253; Kaiser v. Hancock, 25 Cal. App. 323, 143 P. 614). Nowhere in the record have we found, nor has appellant pointed out in his brief, that the trial court, in granting plaintiff leave to amend the complaint, abused its discretion. Amendments should be permitted to pleadings where it can be done without working great delay or prejudice to the opposing party, and where such amendments will facilitate the production of all the facts bearing upon the questions involved in the action, that the cause may be determined on its merits. Burns v. Scooffy, 98 Cal. 271, 33 P. 86; Rose v. Doe, 4 Cal. App. 680, 89 P. 135; Green v. Gavin, 11 Cal. App. 506, 105 P. 761; San Francisco, etc., v. Leonard, 17 Cal. App. 254, 119 P. 405; Mackroth v. Sladky, 27 Cal. App. 112, 148 P. 978; Born v. Castle, 22 Cal. App. 282, 134 P. 347; section 473, Code Civ. Proc.

[5-8] By the amendment to the complaint here no new cause of action was set up, no new relief asked, nor was the defendant taken by surprise in any way, nor did it prejudice him. The defendant filed his amended answer setting up no new denials or defenses, and as the amended complaint contained only such other allegations as stating the residence of the minor child and the mother as being in San Francisco, and that the mother of the minor child was not married at any time to any person, the allowance of the amendment was in no manner an abuse of the trial court's discretion and in no way injured or surprised the defendant. The amended complaint was but an enlargement of the original complaint. As the defendant filed his answer to the amended complaint and asked no further time to meet these issues, it is to be deemed that he was content to submit the issues thus presented. If defendant was surprised in any way that entitled him to terms or delay, it was his duty to make it known to the trial court. Dieckmann v. Merkh, 20 Cal. App. 655, 130 P. 27. By a comparison of the original complaint with the amended complaint it is apparent that the cause of action set up in the amended complaint is not foreign to the original cause of action. The relief sought arises on the same general state of facts, although more fully stated in the amended complaint, and the granting permission to file such amendment was proper. Ford v. Ford, 44 Cal. App. 420, 186 P. 164; Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 64 P. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 P. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Doolittle v. McConnell, 178 Cal. 697, 174 P. 305; Porter v. Fillebrown, 119 Cal. 235, 51 P. 322.

[9] As to appellant's second point, that the complaint fails in jurisdictional facts and does not state a cause of action, there is no merit. In our opinion the amended complaint states all necessary jurisdictional facts, and facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action under section 196a of the Civil Code. Gambetta v. Gambetta, 30 Cal. App. 264, 157 P. 1141.

[10, 11] Appellant contends that because respondent omitted from the original and amended complaints the word "illegitimate," that the terms of the statute have not been complied with. The amended complaint alleges that appellant is the father of the minor child; that appellant and the mother of the minor child were not married; that they were not at any time, either prior or after the birth of such child, married; that the mother-was not, at the time of the alleged intercourse with appellant nor prior thereto nor at the time of the birth of the child, married to any other man. These allegations with the other allegations of the financial ability of appellant and financial inability of respondent to support the minor child, and the residence of the mother and minor, and that the action is brought by the mother in behalf of the minor, sufficiently states a cause of action. The omission of the word "illegitimate" in no way affects the pleading, nor did it in any way conceal what was charged. A child born out of wedlock is an illegitimate child. Here it is alleged that appellant is the father of the child and that the mother was not married to him nor to any other man. All that is required of a plaintiff, as a matter of pleading, even against a special demurrer, is that the complaint set forth the essential facts of the case with reasonable precision and with sufficient particularity to acquaint the defendant with the nature, source, and extent of the cause of action. Goldstein v. Healy, 187 Cal. 206, 201 P. 462; Dunn v. Dufficy, 194 Cal. 383, 228 P. 1029. When the complaint states facts which under the law warrant the relief prayed for; there is no need of putting the statute into the pleading. People v. Common Council, 85 Cal. 371, 24 P. 727.

[12, 13] We do not agree with appellant in his third assignment that "the material findings are against law," as the findings follow the allegations of the amended complaint and specially find each allegation to be true. If there had been a finding that the minor child was "illegitimate" included in the finding that the appellant and Lillian Sweet, not being married, were and are the father and mother, respectively, of such minor child, such finding would have been adverse to appellant, and therefore the omission of the word "illegitimate" would not constitute error authorizing a reversal of the judgment. Rossiter v. Thompson, 66 Cal. App. 498, 226 P. 806. As to appellant's objection that the findings are not direct, but inferential and uncertain; it may be said that so far as the record discloses, appellant proposed no amendments to the findings and raised no objection as to their uncertainty when served, or prior to the signing of the same by the court; hence he cannot raise on this appeal for the first time the question of uncertainty, or that they are not sufficiently explicit. Warren v. Hopkins, 110 Cal. 506, 42 P. 986; Parke v. Hinds, 14 Cal. 416; Estate of Perry, 64 Cal. App. 21, 220 P. 321.

[14, 15] Appellant also claims that the decision is against law because it provides that defendant pay "at present, the sum of $25 a month, hereafter and during the minority of said minor child for his support," etc., and cited us to People v. Wing, 115 Mich. 698, 74 N. W. 179, in which the court uses this language:

"An order requiring the father of a bastard child to make certain weekly payments for its support until the further order of the court is erroneous, because it does not fix a limit to the liability."

In passing upon the question (citing decisions for and against) "we are of the opinion that the better doctrine is that the order should be definite, and fix a limit to the liability, and that it should not be left open for subsequent applications to the court."

Section 196a of the Civil Code expressly provides that "in such action the court shall have power to order and enforce performance thereof, the same as under sections 138, 139, and 140 of the Civil Code; in a suit for divorce by a wife," and in a divorce decree any order made for the support and maintenance of a minor child is an order "at present," as the court does not lose jurisdiction over the welfare and support of a minor child and has power at any time before the minor becomes of age to change or modify the decree. Here, however, the order and judgment is that payments of a sum certain per month be made "during the minority of said minor child for his support." The appellant by the wording of the judgment is not injured nor prejudiced, as it is his legal duty to support his child until the end of its minority, and the age of the child was in evidence before the court. The wording, if erroneous, is harmless and does not affect the merits of the case. Carrington v. Smithers, 26 Cal. App. 460, 147 P. 225.

As to appellant's fourth assignment, that "the judgment is not supported by the pleadings or the evidence," it is sufficient to say that while the evidence is conflicting and contradictory there is substantial and direct evidence to support the findings and judgment, and that the judgment is supported by the pleadings.

[16-18] Taking the testimony of the mother as a whole, nowhere does it appear that her story is inherently improbable, and when the testimony of the other witnesses for respondent is considered in conjunction with that of the mother of the minor, it cannot be said that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment, and in such case the judgment will not be disturbed. Lanning v. Talmage, 66 Cal. App. 48, 225 P. 25. Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence the appellate court must assume the testimony of the prevailing party to be true; and this is the rule even in those cases where the law requires clear and convincing proof. Palladine v. Imperial Valley, etc., 65 Cal. App. 727, 225 P. 291; Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 P. 357. It was entirely within the province of the trial court to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony, and to reject the testimony of any witness called at the trial. The result arrived at here must be interpreted to mean the rejection by the court of the testimony of appellant and his witnesses as to his claim that he was not the father of the minor child, and as accepting the testimony of the mother and other witnesses for respondent respecting the truth of that issue.

In our opinion there is no reversible error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SCOFIELD. (Cr. 1494.) *

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 2, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 29, 1927.

1. Criminal law ⚡173—Jeopardy attaches when jury has been impaneled and sworn.

The jeopardy of a defendant attaches when the members of a jury have been impaneled and sworn, and the jury thus stands charged with his deliverance.

2. Criminal law ⚡178—Dismissal of count of information after jury has been sworn is equivalent to acquittal as to that charge.

Dismissal of one count of an information after the defendant has been in jeopardy under it by the impaneling and swearing of the jury is equivalent to a verdict of acquittal as to the charge contained in that count.

3. Criminal law ⚡178—Charge that defendant must be found guilty of manslaughter, if he drove car while intoxicated, placed defendant twice in jeopardy, where count as to intoxication was dismissed after jury was sworn.

Charge that defendant must be found guilty of manslaughter, if he drove car while intoxicated, is erroneous, as placing defendant twice in jeopardy, where a count of the information charging him with driving while intoxicated had been dismissed after the jury was sworn.

4. Criminal law ⚡1172(6)—Error in requiring conviction of manslaughter, if driving while intoxicated, where intoxication charge had been dismissed, held not prejudicial, since it did not affect charge for failure to render aid following automobile accident.

Error in requiring conviction of manslaughter, if driving while intoxicated, where charge of driving while intoxicated had been dismissed after defendant was in jeopardy thereon, held not prejudicial since it did not affect third count of information, charging refusal to render aid following automobile accident where jury must have understood evidence of intoxication did not apply thereto.

5. Criminal law ⚡798½—Instruction as to form of verdict in disjunctive form, not requiring agreement on one of alternative charges, held error (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

Giving instruction as to form of verdict for failure to render aid following automobile accident, as required by Motor Vehicle Act (St.

1923, p. 562), § 141, in disjunctive form, if defendant failed to stop or to give name or address or registration number, or render assistance, held error, where no requirement was made that jury agree on at least one of alternatives.

6. Criminal law ⚡824(1)—Court must require jury to agree on one of alternative charges stated conjunctively in count of information, though defendant does not request instruction (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

Court must require jury to agree on at least one of alternative charges stated conjunctively in a count of an information, under Motor Vehicles Act (St. 1923, p. 562), § 141, for failing to render aid following automobile accident, even though defendant does not request any instruction to that effect.

7. Criminal law ⚡824(1)—Court's duty in criminal cases to give instructions sua sponte applies to matters involved in given, as well as omitted instructions.

Court's duty in criminal cases to give sua sponte, where they are not presented by the parties, instructions on pertinent general principles of law applies to matters involved in instructions which the court gives, as well as to those which it fails to give.

8. Highways ⚡186—Requirement that driver of vehicle in collision shall communicate information to occupant of other vehicle is inapplicable, where occupant is unconscious (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141; Civ. Code, §§ 3531, 3532).

Requirement of Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562), § 141, that driver of vehicle colliding with another vehicle shall stop, communicate his name, address, and car number, and render aid to the occupants of other vehicle, does not apply as to communication, where occupant is alone and unconscious, since, under Civ. Code, §§ 3531, 3532, the law does not require impossible or idle acts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Urban A. Scofield was convicted of failing to render aid following an automobile accident, and he appeals. Reversed.

Wm. H. Campbell and W. T. Kendrick, Jr., both of Los Angeles (Wm. T. Kendrick, of Los Angeles, of counsel); for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Defendant was informed against in three counts. In the first he was charged with manslaughter. The second charged him with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. The third count charged that defendant, while operating a motor vehicle, which vehicle collided with one being operated by the person named as defendant's victim in the first count, caused personal injury to that person, and that defendant did "then and there fail to immediately stop and give his name and address and the registration number of his said vehicle to the said" alleged victim, "and did then and there fail to render to" the injured man "any assistance; such person being then and there in need of assistance by reason of injuries and damage caused by said collision." All three of the charges grew, of course, out of the same transaction. After a jury was impaneled and after the prosecution had rested, the charge made in the second count, upon motion of the district attorney, was dismissed. The jury disagreed upon the charge made in the first count. Defendant was convicted under the third count and appeals from the judgment of conviction and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

The order dismissing the charge alleged in the second count was made in the absence of the jury from the courtroom. When the trial body returned to the box the following occurred:

"[Counsel for defendant]: Could we ask that the jury be advised what the court has done, so they will know the effect of the evidence?"

"The Court: No; that is a matter to be covered by instruction."

During the argument before the jury the record shows the following:

"[The district attorney]: And, among other things, it may be that you will receive instructions to the effect that, if the defendant was driving his vehicle in an unlawful manner * * * and one of those might have been * * * while violating the law in regard to the use of intoxicating liquor while driving an automobile, now, then, * * * regardless of whether the speed was fast or slow, there is also the question involved in this manslaughter charge that he was under the influence of liquor."

"[Counsel for defendant]: * * * I want to assign that as prejudicial error, the statement that intoxication is in issue here. * * * I assign that as error and ask that the jury be instructed to disregard any such statement. * * * That is not before the jury; driving while intoxicated is not before the jury. * * *

"The Court: That is correct; that charge is not before the jury. * * * But at the same time the question of intoxication is germane to the manslaughter charge. For that reason * * * the court will not so instruct the jury, but will give the jury the proper instruction when the time comes as to intoxication, and the definition of intoxication."

"[The district attorney]: * * * That was exactly what I had reference to, and did not mention the other matter. So * * * that, if the defendant was driving an automobile while intoxicated, or while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and that in so driving he caused the death, the causal connection between his operation of that vehicle and the death of that human being was the reason of his use of intoxicating liquor, then he would be guilty, under the evidence, of manslaughter."

Appellant requested the trial judge to instruct the jury as follows, but the request was refused:

"The crime charged in * * * count 2 has been * * * dismissed, and you are not called upon to further consider the charge in that count. And you are further instructed that you must disregard any evidence which has been introduced, if any, showing or tending to show, that the defendant willfully or unlawfully, or feloniously drove or operated a certain motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, to wit: * * * [Describing the place.] And also you are instructed to disregard any evidence proving or tending to prove that [defendant] while operating the said motor vehicle was under the influence of intoxicating liquor."

The judge instructed the jury:

"The original information contains three counts. One of those counts has been dismissed. * * * The function of the jury is merely to determine on the facts: Is the defendant guilty or not guilty as charged in count 1, on which he has been tried before you? Is he guilty or not guilty as charged in count 3, on which he has been tried before you?"

But the following instruction was also given:

"If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the deceased * * * came to his death, at the time and place charged in the information, as a result of an automobile driven by the defendant * * * colliding with an automobile in which the deceased was then seated, and that, at the time and place, the defendant * * * was driving said automobile in an unlawful manner, to wit, while the defendant * * * was under the influence of intoxicating liquor, or while the automobile was being operated by the defendant * * * at an unlawful rate of speed, or while the said automobile was being driven by the defendant * * * upon a public highway at such rate of speed as to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person, you should find the defendant * * * guilty of manslaughter."

The judge also defined to the jury the meaning of the term "under the influence of intoxicating liquor." The jury was not told, specifically, that, in determining the guilt or innocence of appellant under the third count, its members must not consider any evidence upon the question whether he was intoxicated at the time of the collision out of which the charges against him arose.

[1, 2] It is contended that the trial court erred in thus keeping the question of appellant's alleged intoxication before the jury. Of course, appellant was put in jeopardy upon the charge of driving while under the influence of liquor, for the jeopardy of a defendant attaches upon any charge "when a jury has been 'charged with his deliverance,' and the jury stands thus charged when its members have been impaneled and sworn" People v. Hawkins, 127 Cal. 372, 59 P. 697.

Appellant, in effect, was acquitted upon the charge pleaded in the second count of the information, that of driving while intoxicated, for a dismissal of that charge, after appellant had been jeopardized under it, was equivalent to a verdict of acquittal. People v. Webb, 38 Cal. 467. See, also, In re Harron, 191 Cal. 457, 217 P. 728; People v. Follette, 74 Cal. App. 178, 240 P. 502.

It was the theory of the trial court, although appellant was acquitted of the charge pleaded in the second count, that the evidence in the record which tended to support that charge could nevertheless be considered by the jury as an element aiding to a determination whether he was guilty of manslaughter. Was that theory a correct one? And, further, the jury having failed to agree upon the charge of manslaughter, and if the theory was incorrect, was the error of the court in that regard prejudicial to appellant under the charge upon which he was convicted, that or those alleged in the third count of the information?

[3] It will be observed that the trial judge instructed the jury, in the disjunctive, that appellant must be found guilty of manslaughter if—the other requisites of the law being satisfied—the jury determined that he drove his car while intoxicated, or at an unlawful rate of speed, or at such a rate of speed as to endanger life, etc. As far, then, as the question here involved is concerned, the point may be considered as if the jury had been instructed, alone, that if it found that appellant drove the automobile while under the influence of liquor he must be convicted of manslaughter. But appellant had just been acquitted of a charge of driving while intoxicated upon the same occasion. The instruction practically told the jury that he might be tried again on the charge, and it would seem for that reason to have been erroneous.

In reaching this conclusion, if finally it is to be reached, it becomes necessary to consider People v. Wilson, 193 Cal. 512, 226 P. 5. In that case the defendant had been charged with a misdemeanor in operating an automobile in such manner as to run down and injure a pedestrian. After jeopardy had attached upon this charge the pedestrian died because of the injuries which had been received, and the operator of the car was then charged with manslaughter. He pleaded former jeopardy under the misdemeanor charge. In disposing of the plea the Supreme Court said:

"The law upon this subject is well settled in its application to cases where the defendant has committed an act of violence, which in its immediate result amounts to a misdemeanor, but which in its after consequences upon the victim of the violent act becomes, through the death of that victim, murder or manslaughter. In such an event the second prosecution is not for the same offense as the first; and the reason for this is, as is well stated in Wharton on Criminal Pleading and Practice (9th Ed.) § 476, 'that as at the time of conviction of assault there could have been no conviction of the homicide the prosecution of the homicide is not barred by the conviction of the assault.' See, also, 1 Bishop on New Criminal Law, § 1059, and cases cited. In the case of People v. De-foor, 100 Cal. 150 [34 P. 642], this court, while upholding the plea of once in jeopardy under the facts of that case, which did not involve the death of the injured person, nevertheless recognized the foregoing rule as applicable to cases of homicide, notwithstanding a previous trial and conviction of the defendant for the assault which subsequently resulted in the death of the injured person. In none of the cases cited by the appellant in support of his contention as to his plea of 'once in jeopardy, does the element of death, which is the essential basis of the charge of manslaughter, appear to be present; nor upon principle do we think a case can be conceived wherein a charge of murder or manslaughter could be defeated by a plea of once in jeopardy based upon a mere misdemeanor charge, trial, or conviction of the assault or offense which had later resulted in the death of the injured victim. It was therefore not error in the trial court to strike out the defendant's offered evidence in that regard or to direct the jury to find against the defendant upon his aforesaid plea." People v. Wilson, 193 Cal. 512, 226 P. 5.

It will be observed that the present case discloses circumstances very different from those covered by this language. Here the death of the alleged victim of appellant occurred before any charge was made against him. Here the three charges were made in the same pleading and they were all tried at the same time. Here the charge of driving while under the influence of liquor, if we consider it alone under the instruction which was given to the jury, was a necessary element in the charge of manslaughter. The latter charge was nothing without the former.

Another case deals with the question now present for consideration. In it we said:

"It, of course, is true that, if two or more offenses arise as one result from a single act, and one of them includes within itself all the others, as murder includes manslaughter, then, if the defendant has been in jeopardy for the offense which includes the others, he has been in jeopardy as to all of the offenses; and this is often true where he has been put in jeopardy for even the lowest of the offenses. In such cases more than one offense cannot be carved out of the same unlawful act." People v. Brannon, 70 Cal. App. 235, 233 P. 92.

We think the present case comes within this language and that it is not comparable with People v. Wilson, supra. The trial court, therefore, erred in refusing to give the instruction requested by appellant, and in giving its instruction to the effect that the evidence bearing upon the issue as to intoxication might be considered by the jury upon the manslaughter charge.

[4] The question yet remains whether this error prejudiced the rights of appellant under the charge upon which he was convicted, that pleaded in the third count of the information. In considering this point, and forgetting entirely the manslaughter charge, we cannot forbear to remark that it would have been better if the trial judge had given the instruction requested by appellant. Nevertheless, we think appellant's rights under the third count of the information were not jeopardized by the two instructions which are set forth above as having been given. We think the jury must have seen that the evidence as to intoxication bore no natural relation to the charge pleaded in the third count, and in this they were aided by the instruction to the effect that they were to consider the evidence in determining the manslaughter charge. We think this instruction operated as a limitation of their right to consider the evidence and that they must so have viewed it. It is also to be observed that in the colloquy which occurred before the jury during the final argument, the judge and the district attorney used language from which the jury must have understood that its members were to consider the evidence as to intoxication as bearing upon the manslaughter charge alone.

[5] The charge contained in the third count of the information was based on section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act, so-called (Stats. 1923, p. 562; Deering Gen. Laws, Act 5128, part 1, p. 1895). It will be observed that it was the duty of the jury to convict under the charge as pleaded, if it were proven beyond a reasonable doubt that appellant failed to stop immediately after the collision in which his car was engaged, and then and there failed either to give to the man who was injured in the collision his name or his address, or the registration number of his automobile, or then and there failed to give assistance to the man who was injured; he being then and there in need of assistance. Section 141, supra; People v. Kaufman, 49 Cal. App. 570, 193 P. 953. Notwithstanding this state of the law, the trial judge instructed the jury:

"There have been prepared two forms of verdict for you as to each of the two counts. * * * As to the third count, the body of one form, reads: 'We, the jury * * * find the defendant guilty of violation of section 141 of the California Vehicle Act, a felony, as charged in count 3 of the information. * * *' If your verdict be a verdict of guilty as to count 3, that is the form you will use. * * * If your verdict be 'not guilty,' use this form: 'We, the jury * * * find the defendant not guilty,' etc.

[6, 7] There was no instruction that, in order to find appellant guilty, the members of the jury must agree upon at least one of the alternative charges pleaded in the third count; that is, that he either failed to stop, or to give his name, or to give his address, or to give the registration number of his car, or to render necessary assistance. Appellant contends that the trial judge erred in giving the instruction which was given as to the form of verdict and in failing to instruct that the members of the jury must agree upon at least one of the alternatives pleaded in the third count before a conviction could result. We cannot avoid the conclusion that this claim of error is well founded. It is true that appellant requested the giving of no instruction as to the form of verdict, or as to the necessity for an agreement by the members of the jury upon some single element of the general crime charged in the information, but we think he need not have done so. "It is the duty of a court in criminal cases to give, sua sponte, where they are not proposed or presented in writing by the parties themselves, instructions on the general principles of law pertinent to such cases." People v. Peck, 43 Cal. App. 638, 185 P. 881. We think this rule applies to such matters of law as that covered by the instruction which the judge gave, as well as to those contemplated by such an instruction as that which he failed to give. Certainly, as it seems to us, when the judge gave the instruction as to the form of verdict to be used in the event that the jury found appellant guilty, it became incumbent upon him to instruct that the form could not be employed unless the members of the jury agreed upon at least one of the alternatives charged in the information. Under the provisions of section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act it seems to make no difference that the alternatives were charged in the conjunctive. The harm which might well have resulted from the errors of the court is apparent. In a case presenting a somewhat similar question the Supreme Court said:

"A verdict of guilty could have been rendered * * * although no two jurors were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, or at all, of the truth of the charge, as to any one of these separate offenses." People v. Williams, 133 Cal. 165, 65 P. 323.

[8] The evidence shows without dispute that appellant stopped his automobile, but that the man whose car was struck by that of appellant was so seriously injured that he was incapable of receiving the information which it is made the duty of a driver of an automobile, by section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act, to give. The injured man was unconscious from the moment of the collision and his death occurred a few hours thereafter. He was driving alone and it was therefore impossible for appellant to comply with the language of section 141 to the effect that the information must be given "to * * * the occupants of the vehicle collided with." "The law never requires impossibilities. * * * The law neither does nor requires idle acts." Civ. Code, §§ 3531, 3532. The trial judge instructed the jury:

"The duty imposed upon a driver of an automobile which collided with another vehicle to stop, render assistance, and furnish the information required by the law is a duty which he must perform in all cases, and it is immaterial whether such accident was caused by the carelessness of such driver, the carelessness of the driver of the vehicle collided with, or both, or was an unavoidable accident, such duty arises whenever such a collision occurs."

To the contention that this instruction was erroneous in that it told the jury that the information required by the law to be imparted must be given "in all cases," the Attorney General responds that the instruction "could not have been understood by the jury to mean that the defendant was required under any circumstances to do that which was either physically impossible or which would have been absurd." Notwithstanding this suggestion, we think the instruction was erroneous. Considering, however, the nature of some of the errors already pointed out, we find it unnecessary to determine to what extent the instruction last mentioned was prejudicial to the interests of appellant.

Appellant makes several other points, but we think it unnecessary to decide them.

Judgment and order reversed.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 29, 1927.

1. Criminal law § 1167(1)—Omission in information charging forgery of stock certificate for failure to state certificate was indorsed, if error, held harmless (Pen. Code, § 470).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 470, information charging forgery of a stock certificate, without specifically stating that the certificate was indorsed, if defective, was not prejudicially so, notwithstanding that it appeared that the certificate was transferable only when properly indorsed.

2. Criminal law § 37—Where accused is lured into commission of offense charged in order to prosecute him, no conviction may be had.

Where one person attempts to entrap another into the commission of an offense in order to prosecute him therefor, and the criminal intent originates in the mind of the entrapping person, no conviction may be had if the trap is successful.

3. Criminal law § 564(1)—In prosecution for forging stock certificate, evidence held to support venue (Pen. Code, § 470).

In prosecution for forging a stock certificate in violation of Pen. Code, § 470, evidence held to show offense was committed where venue of prosecution was laid.

4. Criminal law § 834(1)—Striking out statement in instruction defining "utter" and "publish" in forgery law, held no error, part stricken being misleading.

In an instruction given in a forgery case defining the words "utter" and "publish" as to declare or assert, directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that the forged instrument is genuine, striking out a statement in the instruction that the mere act of delivering a forged instrument to a coconspirator, with intent that the coconspirator should pass it, is insufficient (to constitute the offense) held no error, since omitted phrase made instruction misleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Publish; Utter.]

5. Criminal law § 545—Deposition taken at preliminary examination on complaint charging forgery with intent to defraud bank held admissible, notwithstanding forgery was with intent to defraud bank and corporation.

Deposition of a witness, taken at preliminary examination upon a complaint charging forgery of a stock certificate with intent to defraud bank, held admissible, notwithstanding that the forgery was committed with intent to defraud not only the bank, but also the corporation which was purported to have issued the certificate; no variance being shown between complaint and information.

6. Criminal law § 543(2)—Whether prosecution showed due diligence in finding absent witness held for determination of trial judge permitting use of deposition.

Whether the prosecution in a forgery case had used due diligence in order to find an absent witness before offering his deposition held for the determination of the trial judge permitting the deposition to be used.

7. Criminal law § 944—Motion for new trial, based on affidavit of codefendant unworthy of belief and contrary to uncontradicted evidence at trial, held properly refused.

Motion for new trial in forgery prosecution, based on the affidavit of a codefendant, who was shown at the trial to be unworthy of credence, and which alleged facts contrary to evidence at trial which neither defendant nor affiant had contradicted, held properly refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

One Ammerman and Robert Bradford were convicted of violating Pen. Code, § 470, concerning altering, forging, or counterfeiting stock certificates and other instruments. Robert Bradford appeals. Affirmed.

Melvin, McClure & Sullivan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendants Bradford and Ammerman were jointly tried on an information charging them with a violation of the provisions of section 470, Penal Code. The jury returned a verdict finding both defendants guilty as charged, and the defendant Bradford alone has appealed upon a type-written record from the judgment following the verdict and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information charged that on November 27, 1925, the defendants, with the intent to prejudice, damage, and defraud the Anglo & London Paris National Bank and the Owl Drug Company, feloniously made, altered, forged, and counterfeited a certificate calling for 500 shares of the capital stock of the said Owl Drug Company. This certificate was then pleaded in hæc verba, and the information charged that the defendants, knowing the certificate to be false and forged, willfully, feloniously, falsely and with the intent to damage and defraud the two corporations named, published and passed the said certificate as true and genuine to the said Anglo & London Paris National Bank.

On October 3, 1925, the defendant Bradford visited the office of the Owl Drug Company in the city and county of San Francisco and asked to see a canceled stock certificate, stating that he was interested in the purchase of preferred stock of that corporation in the open market and desired to examine the terms and conditions under which such stock was issued. The young lady in charge of the office handed him a book of unissued certificates, which he retained in his possession for approximately fifteen minutes and then returned it to her. Sometime thereafter two of these blank certificates were found to be missing from the book. On November 12, 1925, the defendant Bradford suggested to one Bergman that they could make about $25,000 through the use of some railroad stock held by a friend of his and which the defendant stated had been properly indorsed, but had not been issued by the company. The proposition made by the defendant Bradford to Bergman at that time was that, though these certificates were not legitimate, they could be sold or used as collateral for a loan from some bank or broker's office and that if this were done the money would be divided among Bradford, Bergman and the holder of the certificates. Bergman communicated this information to one Roberts who advised him to go ahead with the transaction with a Mr. Klinker of the Anglo & London Paris National Bank, and soon thereafter Bergman again called on defendant Bradford, who informed him that the stock he had in mind was stock of the Owl Drug Company and not of a railroad corporation as previously stated. Bergman having expressed a willingness to go through with the deal with the defendant Bradford, the latter proposed that in order to provide an easy method for the negotiation of the stock he would cause an advertisement to be inserted in the San Francisco Examiner seeking a hotel manager, and that when this advertisement appeared Bergman was to call at a designated hotel brokerage office where he would meet George E. Melton, who would express a desire to buy a hotel with money to be raised on the stock. Melton, it appeared, was no other than the defendant Ammerman, and the purpose of this entire plan relating to the purchase and management of a hotel was to create an atmosphere in order to facilitate Bergman's efforts to secure a loan upon the stock. This meeting was carried out as scheduled and Ammerman there told Bergman that he had some Owl Drug Company stock in his possession which he wished to negotiate in order to enable him to purchase a hotel and that if Bergman could arrange this loan he would be assured the position of manager. A few days later the two defendants and Bergman met again in Bradford's apartment. Bergman informed Bradford that he had been to the bank and felt sure that he would be able to secure a loan of $25,000 on the stock. Bradford then informed him that the certificate was in Ammerman's possession and that it had not been indorsed by Melton whose name appeared upon the face of the certificate as the owner. Bradford refused to allow the certificate to be indorsed in his apartment and instructed defendant Ammerman to take it to the Bank of Italy and indorse it there. When this certificate had been thus indorsed by Ammerman in the name of Melton it was delivered by him to Bergman, who took it to the bank, where he delivered it to Mr. Klinker, telling him that it was the stock which he had previously talked to him about. Mr. Klinker examined the certificate and told Bergman that they would have a note made out for a $25,000 loan on the stock and that he should bring Mr. Melton in to sign the note. Such a note was prepared and handed to Bergman, who took it across the street to where Ammerman was waiting for him and told him it was necessary in order to secure the loan that he, Ammerman, should sign the note. At that time defendant Bradford approached Bergman and Ammerman and asked if everything was proceeding smoothly. While these three were engaged in conversation police officers approached and arrested them.

[1] On this appeal it is argued that the information fails to charge a public offense, because it does not appear therefrom that the certificate of stock pleaded in the information was indorsed upon the reverse side. The argument is that if this certificate was not indorsed then the act of defendants in forging the names of the officers of the corporation and in attempting to dispose of the certificate was an idle act, because it appears from the face of the certificate that it was transferable only when surrendered properly indorsed. In support of the point the appellant cites People v. Thornburgh, 4 Cal. App. 38, 87 P. 234, where it was held that an indictment charging the forging and utterance of a check payable to the maker without charging the forgery of the indorsement thereof is insufficient. Other cases of the same purport are cited, but they are all far wide of the mark. Here the information charged Bradford and Ammerman with forging and uttering a certificate of stock issued in the name of one Melton, but it does not appear on the face of the pleading that Melton was a fictitious person. There was no demurrer to the information and no objection to the introduction of the evidence which disclosed that Melton was in fact Ammerman, the man who actually forged the signatures of the officers of the corporation, and there was no objection to the receipt in evidence of the original stock certificate which disclosed the indorsement on the reverse side in the name of Melton. Thus, if there was any defect in the pleading in this respect which could have been reached by special demurrer, that course should have been followed, but the defect, if any, is one which could not under any possible view have prejudiced the appellant in the conduct of the trial.

[2] It is argued that no public offense was committed by the appellant because the feigned accomplice Bergman and his confederates, Roberts, Klinker and Mullins, originated the intent to commit the offense and consented to all the acts proved. The complete and effective answer to the point is that the whole plan of securing the stock certificate, forging the signatures of the officers of the corporation thereto and using it for purposes of sale or security for a loan was conceived by the appellant and his confederate Ammerman and that what was done by Bergman, Roberts, Klinker and Mullins was done for the purpose of apprehending Bradford and his confederate so that this forged certificate could be secured and the means of perpetrating a fraud upon some innocent person could be taken from those charged with the forgery. The evidence of appellant's activities in the conception and prosecution of the conspiracy is uncontradicted, neither he nor his confederate having taken the stand in their behalf, while the theory upon which appellant's counsel tendered this defense was fully protected by the trial judge in his instructions to the jury. This instruction really states the rule of law involved in a case of this kind, and it is unnecessary to discuss the cases cited by the appellant where the intent to commit the crime originated in the minds of the party who was endeavoring to trap the one charged with the offense. In this connection the trial court instructed the jury as follows: "You are instructed that where the criminal intent originates in the mind of the entrapping person and the accused is lured into the commission of the offense charged in order to prosecute him therefor no conviction may be had."

[3] It is argued that the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence because it does not appear that the certificate of stock was forged in the city and county of San Francisco, or that the appellant aided or abetted in the forgery of it. Appellant's codefendant, Ammerman, admitted in his confession that the signatures of the officers of the Owl Drug Company were appended to the certificate in his room in San Francisco, and that in filling in the blanks on the face of the certificates he used a typewriter which was in this same room. There is no direct testimony as to which one of the parties actually signed the names of these officials, but all the inferences go unmistakably to show that this was done by Ammerman at the special instance and direction of this appellant. This evidence of the acts done in San Francisco fully covers the question of venue.

[4] It is argued that the trial judge erred in striking the words appearing in parenthesis in the following instruction:

"You are hereby further instructed that the words 'utter' and 'publish,' in the law of forgery, are synonymous, for the meaning of both is 'to declare or assert, directly or indirectly, by words or actions,' that the forged instrument is genuine. To constitute the offense of uttering, it is necessary that some overt act be committed toward uttering. (The mere act of delivering a forged instrument to an agent or coconspirator, with the design that the agent or coconspirator should utter or pass it, is insufficient.)"

The omitted words would have served no other purpose than to have confused the jury and would have nullified the correct statement of the law covering the law of uttering and publishing a forged instrument.

[5, 6] It is argued that the trial court erred in admitting the deposition of the witness Bergman because the deposition was taken at his preliminary examination upon a complaint charging forgery of the certificate with intent to defraud the Anglo & London Paris Bank, whereas in fact it was an attempt to defraud the Owl Drug Company as well as the Anglo Bank. From this it is argued that Bergman's deposition was not taken in a preliminary examination upon a charge which was heard before the committing magistrate. The argument is based upon the theory that there is a variance between the complaint and the information. But there is no variance. The information merely pleaded additional facts supplementing the main charge of forgery. It is also suggested that the trial court erred in admitting this deposition because the prosecution failed to show due diligence to find the witness Bergman in this state. The determination of whether due diligence was shown in this regard was imposed upon the trial judge, and from our examination of the record we cannot say that any error was committed in this respect.

[7] The motion for a new trial was based upon the affidavit of Ammerman in which he stated that the certificate was forged by him in the state of Nevada, that he alone procured the two blank certificates from the office of the Owl Drug Company, and that the appellant had no knowledge of the forgery or of the plan to pass the certificate. Prior to the trial this affiant had made two separate confessions or statements to the police which were contradictory, and which were in conflict with the statements in his affidavit. Though he did not take the stand as a witness, he was shown at the trial to be unworthy of credence. It is now argued that this testimony outlined in the affidavit, having been discovered by appellant after the close of the trial, was sufficient to require a new trial in his behalf. Evidence was offered at the trial to show that the signatures were attached to the certificate under appellant's direction in the county of San Francisco, that he alone had called at the office of the Owl Drug Company and had secured the blank certificates, and that he had planned the entire transaction. He made no effort to controvert any of this testimony which he must have anticipated would be brought out by the state. The appellant has not shown the diligence necessary to justify an order granting a new trial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

DUNHAM, CARRIGAN & HAYDEN CO. v. THERMOID RUBBER CO. (Civ. 5805.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 1, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 31, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 29, 1927.

1. Principal and agent ⇨41—Evidence of letters and conduct held to support finding that tire manufacturer and distributor extended distribution agreement.

Evidence of letters and conduct held to support finding that tire manufacturer and distributor agreed that a one-year written contract for handling of tires by the distributor should be extended for year.

2. Contracts ⇨4—Making of agreement may be proved by conduct, as well as by words.

Making of an agreement may be inferred by proof of conduct, as well as by proof of the use of words.

3. Frauds, statute of ⇨118(4)—Letters between tire manufacturer and distributor held sufficient memorandum, within statute of frauds, to extend written distribution contract.

References in letters between tire manufacturer and distributor to unexecuted renewal of written contract for prior year held sufficient memorandum, within statute of frauds, for continuation of contract for an additional year.

4. Principal and agent ⇨29—Provision in distribution contract with tire manufacturer, requiring distributor to sell given volume, held condition, not limitation, on power of renewal.

Clause in contract between tire manufacturer and distributor, providing for renewal on the distributor's selling certain volume of tires, held to be a condition on distributor's right to renewal, but not a limitation on the parties' power of renewal.

5. Principal and agent ⇨41—Evidence held sufficient to support finding that volume requirement was not contained in renewal of contract between tire manufacturer and distributor.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding by the court that clause in contract between tire manufacturer and distributor, requiring certain volume to be sold by distributor, was not contained in the renewal agreement.

6. Principal and agent ⇨41—Evidence held to support finding that volume clause, in contract between tire manufacturer and distributor, was waived.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding by the court that clause in a contract between tire manufacturer and distributor, requiring certain volume to be sold, was waived by the manufacturer.

7. Principal and agent ⇨29½—Tire distributor's letter to manufacturer held sufficient notice of termination of contract and tender of stock on hand.

Tire distributor's letter to manufacturer, notifying it of desire to terminate contract for purchase and sale of tires, and of insistence that manufacturer take back tires on hand pursuant to contract, held sufficient notice and tender.

8. Appeal and error ⇨843(2)—Appellate court would not determine question of tire distributor's lien on tires, where question became moot by sale of tires by stipulation.

Whether tire dealer's claim of a lien, on tires in its possession, arising out of alleged obligation of manufacturer to repurchase unsold tires, was valid, became a moot question, and would not be decided, where, by sale had pursuant to agreement of the parties, the tires were sold during the pendency of the suit and the money paid to plaintiff.

9. Principal and agent ⇨26½, 29—Distributor's handling of tires held sufficient consideration for extension, renewal, or modification of contract with manufacturer.

Handling and distribution of manufacturer's tires held sufficient consideration for extension, renewal, or modification of contract with distributor.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of contract by the Dunham, Carrigan & Hayden Company against the Thermoid Rubber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Morris, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. R. Pringle and Clarence A. Shuey, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Appellant is a manufacturer of automobile tires. Towards the end of the year 1919 it solicited respondent as jobber and distributor to carry as its leader, and push the sale of, Thermoid tires and tubes manufactured by appellant. A written contract was signed by the parties in December, 1919, which by its terms covered the period ending December 31, 1920. The contract contained numerous provisions regulating the course of conduct of the parties in their business relationship, such as discounts, terms, of settlement, extent of territory, exchange of goods, adjustments, and the like, together with other clauses which will be hereinafter more specifically referred to.

The parties carried on the business contemplated by the contract during the year 1920 in substantial fulfillment of its terms. Towards the end of the year respondent returned to appellant a considerable quantity of tires, which it had held for almost five months. These tires were said to be growing obsolete, and were returned in conformity with a clause of the contract permitting respondent to exchange, for new stock, tires which had not been in respondent's possession for more than five months. Appellant's representative declared that the return of these tires for exchange at that time would be a great embarrassment to appellant. He persuaded respondent to take them back again, by giving assurance that, regardless of the five months' limitation of the exchange privilege contained in the contract, respondent would be extended this privilege at any time and the five months' limitation would be waived. Respondent agreed to this, and took back the tires it had offered in exchange, and attempted to sell them from time to time during the year 1921 as requested by appellant, and many of them were exchanged with appellant for new ones from time to time during the year 1921.

There was no formal renewal of the written contract for the year 1921, but during the course of 1921 and the close of 1920 the parties acted towards each other in all respects as though the contract were a continuing one. They continued doing business in all substantial particulars as in 1920, and as required by the contract for that year. During the close of 1920 representatives of the two parties conversed together concerning the contemplated business of 1921. They discussed a new advertising campaign for 1921. Preparations were made by respondent in 1920, for this campaign, and it was carried out in 1921. During the year 1921 respondent continued to carry on hand a large stock of tires, and towards the latter part of 1921 still had on hand a large stock, including some of the old tires, which it had previously sought to exchange in 1920 as above stated. Toward the end of 1921 respondent gave notice of cancellation of the contract, and, according to its provisions, demanded that appellant take back at cost all tires in the hands of respondent at the date of expiration of the contract. Appellant refused to do so, and this action followed. The trial court awarded respondent damages against appellant for failure to take back and pay for the said tires.

The expiration clause of the contract read as follows:

"This agreement shall commence on December 22, 1919, and continue in force until December 31st, 1920, inclusive, unless sooner terminated; it being expressly understood that it may in any event be canceled by either party at any time by 30 days' notice in writing, and upon the event of cancellation you [appellant] agree to take back, and we agree to return to you, all tires and tubes in our stock at the date of expiration, at our cost, we to pay the return charges, in the event that we canceled same."

[1, 2] The complaint alleged, and the court found to be true, the following allegation:

"That subsequent to January 10, 1920, and prior to November 29, 1921, respondent and appellant did agree that the life of said agreement of purchase and sale should be for the year 1921, as well as for the year 1920."

Our examination of the record convinces us that this finding is supported by the evidence. A representative of respondent testified that in January, 1921, he asked a representative of appellant where the new contracts were, and the latter replied:

"That it was not necessary; that we were going along on this; that is the one we were going along under at that time."

Aside from this, there seems to have been used by the parties no direct and express words of agreement to this effect, but the agreement is well established by their course of conduct and the letters which they exchanged during the period of time they did business together. The dealings between the parties during the year 1921 and the nature of the letters they exchanged are very convincing that both sides fully believed that the 1921 contract was in force for 1921. The making of an agreement may be inferred by proof of conduct as well as by proof of the use of words. Williston on Contracts, vol. 1, § 3.

Appellant's obligation to take back and pay for tires and tubes in respondent's hands at the expiration of the contract (1921) is attacked by appellant as void under the statute of frauds. It claims that the 1920 agreement could not be extended for 1921 by parol agreement, unless fully executed, and that such an agreement by its very nature could not be fully executed until the very end of 1921. Respondent claims that appellant is estopped to raise the statute of frauds by its conduct in permitting and encouraging respondent, both in 1920 and 1921, to continue to hold on hand a large stock of merchandise, and otherwise to fulfill the covenants of the contract in the belief that a valid return privilege existed. There is good authority supporting this argument. Carpy v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 677, 687, 47 P. 695; Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 P. 88, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154; Rockhill v. Parker, 22 Cal. App. 367, 372, 134 P. 720; Reed v. McDonald, 22 Cal. App. 701, 705, 136 P. 506; Flint v. Giguere, 50 Cal. App. 314, 195 P. 85; Price v. Smith Manufacturing Co., 53 Cal. App. 303, 200 P. 53; 12 Cal. Jur. (Statute of Frauds), § 102, 103.

[3] But it is not necessary to invoke the doctrine of estoppel in this case, because, as contended by respondent, there is a sufficient note or memorandum subscribed by the party to be charged acknowledging the contract and satisfying the statute of frauds. Respondent's letters to appellant in 1921 contain numerous references to "our contract with you." These, of course, are not subscribed by appellant; but in one of appellant's letters to respondent, written October 31, 1921, referring to a proposed renewal contract for 1922 it is stated:

"In view of the fact that our contract with you in a measure expires December 1, and in further view of the fact that the factory is desirous of having new contracts issued each year, we will send you * * * our regular contract form. * * * There will not be very many changes in it, with a possible exception of some very minor changes in territory."

This reference to the contract is very brief, but is also very comprehensive, and satisfies the statute of frauds. A similar reference to an unexecuted written contract has been directly held to be a sufficient acknowledgment under the statute of frauds in Walsh v. Standart, 174 Cal. 807, 810, 164 P. 795. In view of this holding, it is not necessary to consider other arguments made by appellant and respondent respecting the statute of frauds.

[4] Appellant contends that respondent cannot recover under the contract because it has not fulfilled the volume and renewal clauses reading as follows:

"Volume.—It is understood that we are to give you under this agreement minimum purchases of $250,000.

"Renewals.—And the renewal to be based upon our fulfilling this agreement to your entire satisfaction, with an increase of 20 per cent."

It is appellant's contention that, if the contract was by any means extended through 1921, these clauses had the effect of obligating respondent to buy from appellant in 1921 20 per cent. more than $250,000 worth of tires, and that this is a condition which must be fulfilled before a recovery upon the contract can be had. We think the renewal clause is not self-operative, but is a covenant which bound the appellant to renew the contract if respondent satisfactorily fulfilled the agreement for 1920 and agreed to increase the sales in 1921 as specified. It is a condition upon respondent's right to a renewal, but is by no means a limitation upon the parties' power of renewal. If the parties both wished to renew the contract without the volume clause, this renewal clause furnished no obstacle. So far as the volume clause is concerned, the court found against the contention of appellant.

[5, 6] Appellant sought damages by a cross-complaint herein for its violation in the year 1920, but the court found that appellant was unable to furnish sufficient tires in that year to enable respondent to fulfill the clause, and that the clause was by the mutual consent of the parties canceled and abrogated. With respect to the contract as applying to the year 1921, and upon which the court awarded respondent damages, the court's finding is that respondent performed all terms and conditions of the contract on its part to be performed. This finding may mean either that the clause did not exist as a part of the contract or that it was waived and abrogated, as in 1920. The evidence sustains the finding either way. Throughout the year 1921 nothing was stated between the parties concerning the volume of sales requirement. The large volume now claimed essential by appellant appears from the evidence to have been so far beyond all reasonable expectation at that time that it was never mentioned. On July 5, 1921, appellant wrote to respondent to the effect that its previous suggestion that respondent order tires was not made from any selfish reason, but because a tire shortage existed, that the factory was about a month behind with its orders, that the appellant had no "kick coming," and generally to the effect that the only reason for respondent to place orders at that time was to protect itself from running short. The evidence also shows that the general trend of the tire business was at that time quite poor, and that the mutual efforts of all were directed to biding time in some fashion until conditions improved.

Appellant contends that the complaint fails to make sufficient allegations of notice of cancellation of the contract and tender of the tires on hand. We see no merit in the contention. The complaint sufficiently alleges notice of cancellation, demand that defendant take back the tires, and the refusal of the defendant to comply with the demand.

[7] The sufficiency of the evidence, as well as the sufficiency of the complaint, is by appellant challenged upon the same grounds. The plain meaning and purpose of the expiration or take back provision was obviously to justify the distributor's keeping on hand an adequate stock of tires (which under the circumstances here meant a large one), so that, in the event of the expiration of the contract, either by cancellation or failure to renew, the distributor would not be left with a large stock on its hands without the protection of the manufacturer, furnished and provided by the several covenants in the contract, and by the comities of the trade existing by virtue of the relationship between manufacturer and distributor. The letters of respondent fairly and timely informed appellant of its decision to terminate the contract and to insist on the "take back" provision. It was a written offer, and was itself a sufficient tender, if any tender were necessary, under the contract and conditions then existing. We have examined the letters of respondent, notifying appellant of its decision to terminate the contract, and we do not see that their polite phraseology, nor respondent's expressed willingness to talk it over at appellant's request, had the effect of making the notice and demand equivocal and uncertain.

[8] Appellant insists that its demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, instead of overruled, and particularly urges that the complaint was insufficient to show that respondent had a lien upon the stock on hand for the damages claimed on account of the failure of appellant to take or buy back the same. The original complaint was drawn in part upon the theory that respondent had a vendor's lien, dependent upon possession and prayed for a foreclosure of this lien. It alleged that plaintiff had suffered detriment by reason of defendant's breach of obligation to repurchase the stock on hand in the sum of $65,540.26, and prayed for damages in that sum, or so much thereof as remained as a deficiency after foreclosure sale. The complaint was at least sufficient as a statement of a cause of action for damages for breach of contract. After defendant's demurrer was overruled, plaintiff applied to the court for an order to sell the stock on hand, described in the complaint, upon the ground that the same was depreciating by time and light. The parties signed a written stipulation that such order and sale might be made. After the sale, plaintiff filed a supplemental complaint, alleging the sale under the order of court made by consent, alleging that the net proceeds thereof had been paid to plaintiff by the sale commissioner, alleging that by reason thereof plaintiff's claim for detriment had been reduced by $24,683.91, and praying for the balance of the detriment. In view of this state of the record, we must hold that the lien questions raised by the original pleadings are now moot, even though respondent does not raise the point.

It is true that the stipulation for the order of sale contained very full provisions to the effect that it should not in any way prejudice the rights of the parties, whether of substance or of pleading; but we are unable to give this part of the stipulation effect. The plain fact is that the sale has been made, the money paid to plaintiff, a supplemental complaint filed, and a trial had thereon. There is no longer any question of lien in the case, either of pleading or substance. If we should decide with appellant that there was no lien, there would nevertheless be nothing for the trial court to do, but deduct, as it did, the net amount of the sale from plaintiff's damages. This is exactly the same operation that would have to be followed, if a lien did exist. In other words, whether the tires were sold under a lien or without a lien, the plaintiff would have to give credit for the amount derived from the sale. Appellant nowhere contends that the amount realized from the sale is inadequate.

[9] We see no force in appellant's contention that there was no consideration moving to appellant, either for the extension or renewal of the contract or the waiver of the volume clause. It seems obvious, from the nature of the contract and relations between the parties, that the handling and distribution of appellant's tires by the respondent was a sufficient consideration for the extension or renewal of the contract. Appellant's inability to supply all the tires ordered, or respondent's continuing to act as distributor, was a sufficient consideration for the waiver of the volume clause, if it existed at all in the 1921 contract. There are so many reciprocal rights, duties, and privileges arising from the contractual relation between the parties hereto that it seems idle to designate one covenant as a consideration for another. The mutual covenants are the consideration for the contract, and also for any voluntary modification of the same.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 27, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 8, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 22, 1927.

1. Corporations ~~§~~617(5) — Notwithstanding corporation's rights were suspended for failure to pay license tax while its appeal was pending, court will hear appeal after rights are restored (Deering's Gen. Laws, pt. 1, p. 554, § 11).

Notwithstanding that while its appeal was pending plaintiff corporation's rights were suspended under Deering's Gen. Laws, pt. 1, p. 554, § 11, providing that all rights of a corporation should be suspended for failure to pay license tax, held that the court would hear the appeal after the corporation's rights were restored.

2. Corporations ⚡319(5)—Corporation is proper party to complain for misappropriation of its treasury stock.

In an action by a corporation against its directors and another corporation for an alleged sale of its stock in return for the assets of the other corporation at an excessive value, held that the corporation was the proper party plaintiff.

3. Corporations ⚡312(3)—Constitutional provision making corporation directors liable for money misappropriated by officers held inapplicable to purchase at excessive price of assets of another corporation (Const. art. 12, § 3).

Constitutional provision making corporation directors liable for money misappropriated or embezzled by the officers of a corporation held inapplicable to the purchase at an excessive price of assets of another corporation in which the directors of the purchasing corporation owned all the stock.

4. Corporations ⚡577—Where company's stockholders promote new corporation to take over assets of old company, old company held promoter in fiduciary relation with new.

Where all the stockholders of a company agreed to promote a new corporation to take over the assets of the old company and reorganize it, the old company was held to be a promoter of the new and to assume a fiduciary relation to it.

5. Corporations ⚡580—Where corporation's stockholders organize new corporation to which old corporation sells assets, burden of disproving presumption of inadequate consideration is on old corporation (Civ. Code, § 2235).

Under Civ. Code, § 2235, where it is shown that the stockholders of a company organized a new corporation to which the old company sold its assets, in an action against the old company by the new claiming the assets were sold at an excessive price, the burden of disproving the presumption of inadequate consideration and undue influence is on the old company.

6. Corporations ⚡580—Where company's stockholders organize new corporation to which old company sells assets at grossly exorbitant price, undue influence and insufficient consideration are presumed (Civ. Code, § 2235).

Under Civ. Code, § 2235, where all the stockholders of a company organize a new corporation to which the old company sells its assets at grossly excessive price, in an action by the new corporation undue influence and insufficient consideration are presumed.

7. Corporations ⚡580—Complaint alleging that company sold its assets at excessive price to new corporation organized by company's stockholders held not subject to demurrer by company (Civ. Code, § 2235).

Complaint alleging that defendant company sold its assets at an excessive price to a new corporation organized and controlled by the company's stockholders held to state a cause of action and not to be subject to demurrer, in view of Civ. Code, § 2235.

8. Corporations ⚡310(1)—Corporate directors must act carefully, honestly, and within scope of their powers.

The directors of a corporation must exercise that degree of care which men ordinarily take of their own concerns, must not act fraudulently, and are bound to confine their activities within the scope of their lawful powers.

9. Corporations ⚡319(6)—Complaint alleging that corporation directors defrauded corporation by purchasing assets of another corporation which they controlled at an excessive price held not subject to demurrer.

Complaint alleging that corporation directors conspired to defraud the corporation and purchased at an excessive price the assets of another corporation of which they were the sole stockholders held to state a cause of action and not to be subject to demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by San Leandro Canning Company, Inc., against L. Perillo and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Edwin H. Williams, of San Leandro, for appellant.

Roscoe D. Jones, of Oakland, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to recover a judgment for money. The defendants appeared jointly and filed a joint demurrer, the joint demurrer was sustained, and a judgment based thereon was entered. From that judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

[1] The defendants interposed a preliminary objection to the hearing of this appeal. The objection rested on the fact that the plaintiff had failed to pay its corporate license tax and that its rights as a corporation were suspended February 27, 1926. The point is without merit. The record before us shows that the action had been tried in the lower court, an appeal had been taken, the transcript filed, and all briefs filed, prior to the 1st day of May, 1925. True it is that the rights of the plaintiff were suspended February 27, 1926. However, it is equally true that on May 16, 1927, its rights were wholly restored. It thus appears that during the period of time during which its rights were suspended, the plaintiff was inactive, and neither of the parties, nor the court, was called upon to take any action. Under these circumstances the statute has not been violated. Deering's General Laws, pt. I, p. 554, § 11; Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Court, 188 Cal. 393, 205 P. 446.

The San Leandro Canning Company, hereinafter called the old company, was incorporated on December 11, 1919. It had a capital stock of $100,000, divided into 1,000 shares of a par value of $100 each. J. C. Toffelmier, L. J. Toffelmier, and L. Perillo were its directors. It transacted a canning business for a short time and then it transpired that it needed additional capital.

On November 18, 1920, L. J. Toffelmier, J. C. Toffelmier, L. Perillo, J. E. Faustina, Allen E. Pelton, A. Felizianetti, Sr., and F. Stenzil owned all of the stock of the old company. On that date they entered into an agreement to reorganize the old company by incorporating a new company, the plaintiff herein, and did incorporate it, with a capital stock of $1,000,000, and transferred the properties of the old company to the new company under an arrangement by which the new company took over all of the assets of the old company and assumed its debts in exchange for a block of stock in the new company of the par value of $135,000. The stock taken in exchange was delivered to the old company and it divided the stock among the individuals above named. The directors of the new company were the individuals above mentioned. It is alleged that it was a part of the agreement that $150,000 of the stock of the new company would be sold to the public and that $69,000 was so sold at par to certain individuals mentioned.

The old company was, by decree of court, dissolved May 15, 1922, and the first three individuals above mentioned were appointed trustees for the purpose of liquidating the old company. The new company became insolvent in April, 1922, and at that time its books were experted, and from the report of the experts the plaintiff learned the above facts.

It is alleged that at the time the new company took over the assets of the old company the said assets exceeded the liabilities to the amount of $20,000. The plaintiff deducts that $20,000 from $135,000, the value of the stock delivered to the old company, and claims damages in the sum of $115,000.

It is alleged that F. Stenzil is dead, and it will be noted that he is not a defendant.

In connection with the foregoing facts the plaintiff alleges that the defendants were promoters; that they conspired and that they concealed the facts from the plaintiff as to the true valuation of the properties received from the old company. It is not alleged that any false representations were made. It is not alleged that the defendants committed any overt acts of concealment by making any false entries in the records of either the old company or the new company, nor that they omitted to make full and complete entries in said records. The case rests, therefore, on whether the defendants in any instance failed to speak and disclose fully and completely all facts concerning the value of the assets of the old company when it was their legal duty to do so.

It is not claimed, and, indeed, it may not be claimed, that ordinarily one who purchases stock in a corporation occupies the position of cestui que trust and as such ipso facto stands in a fiduciary relation to the seller of the stock. However, certain combinations of facts may arise which will indicate that status. Promotion schemes sometimes present an example. The plaintiff cites and relies on Ex-Mission L. & W. Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 610, 32 P. 600; Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, 35 P. 444; Lomita Land & Water Co. v. Robinson, 154 Cal. 36, 97 P. 10, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1106; California-Calaveras Min. Co. v. Walls, 170 Cal. 285, 149 P. 595; and Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, 184 Cal. 226, 193 P. 243. The defendants contend that those cases are not in point. An examination of each case will disclose that the alleged promoters were attempting to develop a scheme in which it was the intention to purchase property for the purpose of a company thereafter to be formed and to sell to that company the properties so purchased at an advance without a full disclosure of the facts. In the instant case it will be noted that the old company was, and had been for some years, the owner of the property involved. When such fact exists there is authority for the contention that no duty rests on the owner of property to disclose the profit, if any, he is making in the transaction. Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43; Tompkins v. Sperry, Jones & Co., 96 Md. 560, 54 A. 254; Blum v. Whitney, 185 N. Y. 232, 77 N. E. 1159; Old Dominion Copper Co. v. Lewisohn, 210 U. S. 206, 28 S. Ct. 634, 52 L. Ed. 1025; Vasey v. New Export Coal Co., 89 W. Va. 491, 109 S. E. 619; Berry v. Simpson, 194 Ky. 545, 239 S. W. 1049; 1 Thomp. Corp. (2 Ed.) §§ 108 and 123. The distinction which we have just indicated is clearly pointed out by the Supreme Court in Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, at page 98, 35 P. 444.

[2] The third point made by the plaintiff is that the plaintiff is the proper party to complain for the misappropriation of its treasury stock. Ex-Mission L. & W. Co. v. Flash, supra, supports it in this contention.

[3] The plaintiff makes some contention at least that its cause of action rests on section 3 of article 12 of the Constitution. That contention may not be sustained. Since this action was commenced the Supreme Court, in Dean v. Shingle, 198 Cal. 652, 246 P. 1049, 46 A. L. R. 1156, has carefully analyzed and defined the meaning of that section. An examination of that case will disclose that the facts of this case do not bring it within the purview of the provision of the Constitution just cited.

[4-6] What we have just said, however, does not dispose of the case. The plaintiff's pleading presents other facts which must be considered. The old company, through J. C. Toffelmier, L. J. Toffelmier, and L. Perillo, its board of directors, organized the new company and installed as its board of directors J. C. Toffelmier, L. J. Toffelmier, L.

Perillo, Allen E. Pelton, J. E. Faustina, A. Felizianetti and F. Stenzil. The persons so installed constituted and were all of the stockholders of the old company. After the new company was formed the old company transferred to the new company its assets and took over from the new company a block of stock at par value amounting to $135,000. It is not alleged that the new company had any independent advice. It is patent that in the transfer or exchange the new company did not have an independent board of directors to determine, in the interest of the new company, whether the terms of the exchange were fair or otherwise. The transaction between the trustee, the old company, and its beneficiary, the new company, during the existence of the trust, by which the trustee obtained an advantage from the beneficiary, it is presumed was entered into by the latter without sufficient consideration and under undue influence. The complaint contains no allegations to the contrary. As the record stands, the burden rests on the old company to come forward and plead and prove such facts as will show that the new company was not overreached. Failing to come forward and make the showing above mentioned, the old company is liable to the plaintiff. The views which we have just stated find full support in Thomp. Corp. (3d Ed.) § 118, and specially in Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Lagunas Syndicate (1899) 2 Ch. 392. That case is very long, but the facts in all material respects are parallel to the facts presented in the record before us. The syndicate had become the owner of a large plant located in Chile. It was known as Lagunas Nitrate Works. After operating it for a time the syndicate proceeded to separate the mining department from the factory department and to organize the Nitrate Company to take over and operate the factory. To do this it formed the plaintiff company. The new company had a capital of £900,000. Out of that capital £300,000 were to be delivered to the syndicate in fully paid-up shares; and stock in the sum of £550,000 was to be sold to the public for cash and that cash was to be delivered to the syndicate. The company was organized with a board of directors, including the seven directors of the syndicate and two other persons selected by them. The latter two were agents of the syndicate selected by it to fill out the board of directors. After the organization of the company the syndicate transferred to it for £400,000 property which had cost the syndicate £110,000. These transactions occurred in June, 1894. The venture was not successful. When it transpired that the enterprise was about to fail, the stockholders elected a new board of directors, and then commenced an action against the syndicate and the original board of directors to obtain relief. This action was heard and determined by Romer, judge. From his judgment an appeal was taken to the Court of Appeal. All of the judges concurred in deciding that the syndicate was the promoter of the company and as such that it had assumed a fiduciary relation toward the company, and as to this part of the case the court cited and followed Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co., 5 Ch. D. 73, 3 App. Cas. 1218. It further held that the relation of trustee and beneficiary continued until the transfer had been fully consummated.

[7] It is patent, therefore, that the facts of this case, which we have recited above, show that as to the plaintiff company the old company was a promoter and assumed a fiduciary relation to the plaintiff. Such being the facts, it is settled by the provisions of section 2235 of the Civil Code that the plaintiff has its remedy against the old company. The demurrer of the trustees of the old company should have been overruled.

[8] This brings us to a consideration of the liability of the six individuals who are also made defendants in this case. They were the directors of the new company. As such they were bound to exercise that degree of care which men of common prudence take of their own concerns; they were bound to act honestly and not fraudulently; and they were bound to confine their activities within the scope of their lawful powers. 2 Thomp. Corp. (3d Ed.) § 1429; 4 Fletch. Cyc. Corp. §§ 2504, 2505, 2941, and 3024; Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Lagunas Syndicate, supra; Scott v. Depeyster, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 513, 543; Savings Bank's Assignee v. Caperton, 87 Ky. 306, 8 S. W. 885, 12 Am. St. Rep. 488, 497; San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, 81-82, 53 P. 410.

[9] Having ascertained the duties and liabilities of the said individuals to the new company, it becomes necessary to turn to the complaint and ascertain the allegations it contains with reference to the individuals. The complaint contains much irrelevant matter. As a ruling on a motion to strike is not before us, we will not pause to pick out each irrelevant statement and show wherein it is irrelevant. However, the complaint contains some allegations which, in the face of a demurrer, are not irrelevant. It alleges that the assets of the old company were of a net value of $20,000 and that they were transferred to and accepted by the new company at a value of $135,000. In this same connection it is alleged that the directors entered into a conspiracy to transfer the properties of the old company to the new company, "with the intent and for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff corporation," and that the new company was caused to issue the block of stock to the old company at an exorbitant price "for the purpose of cheating and defrauding" the new company. Bearing in mind that the individual defendants, as directors of the new company, stood in a fiduciary relation to the new company, the allegations just quoted sufficiently pleaded fraud. Woodruff v. Howes, 88 Cal. 184, 187-190, 26 P. 111; Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., 163 Cal. 561, 573, 126 P. 351, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 125. For the reasons last stated, the demurrer of the directors of the new company should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and allow the defendants to answer.

We concur: CASHIN, J., Acting P. J.; NOURSE, J.

SAN LEANDRO CANNING CO., Inc., v. PERILLO et al. (Civ. 5794; S. F. 11475.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 27, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 26, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 23, 1927.

1. Corporations ⇨319(6)—Allegations showing that stock sales were made unlawfully held not to show salesmen were unlawfully paid, making directors liable for unlawful expenditures (Const. art. 12, § 3).

In an action against corporation directors by the corporation to recover for the payment of commissions to certain salesmen, including the defendant directors, allegations showing that stock sales were made in an unlawful manner held not to show that the salesmen were unlawfully paid, so that the directors were liable under Const. art. 12, § 3, for making unlawful expenditures.

2. Licenses ⇨39—Violation of Corporate Securities Act in making sales will not give corporation right to recover commissions paid stock salesmen (Corporate Securities Act).

Violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), as to the manner of making sales, will not constitute a cause of action in favor of the corporation to recover commissions paid to its salesmen.

3. Licenses ⇨39—Violation of Corporate Securities Act in making sales will not constitute cause of action against directors for paying salesmen (Corporate Securities Act; Const. art. 12, § 3).

A violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), as to the manner of making sales, will not give the corporation whose salesmen have violated the act a cause of action, under Const. art. 12, § 3, against its directors, for alleged unlawful expenditures in paying commissions to the salesmen.

4. Licenses ⇨39—For wrongful acts of salesmen in making sales, Corporate Securities Act gives no cause of action to corporation (Corporate Securities Act).

The Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), gives no cause of action to corporation for wrongful acts of its salesmen in making sales in violation of its provisions.

5. Corporations ⇨308(10)—Payment to directors for selling stock held not unlawful, notwithstanding no prior agreement to pay was shown.

In an action by a corporation to recover commissions paid to certain of its directors for selling stock, in the absence of allegations of fraud, held that the payment was not void or voidable notwithstanding no prior agreement to pay was shown.

6. Corporations ⇨79—That corporation salesman falsely represented they sold without receiving commissions will not give corporation right to recover commissions paid, where no detriment to corporation is shown.

The fact that salesmen of a corporation in making sales falsely represented that they were not receiving any commissions for their services will not give the corporation a right to recover back all compensation paid for making the sales, where no facts showing detriment to the corporation are shown.

7. Corporations ⇨79—Where corporation is damaged by misrepresentations of its stock salesmen, injuries pleaded fix amount of recovery.

Where a corporation is damaged by misrepresentations made by its salesmen, the amount of its recovery is fixed by injuries set forth in the pleadings, and unless injuries are so pleaded there can be no recovery.

8. Corporations ⇨79—Corporation having seven directors cannot recover commissions paid to two stock salesmen merely because they were directors.

Commissions paid to two salesmen cannot be recovered by the corporation merely because the salesmen were also directors, where there were five other directors and it was not shown that the claims for commissions were not passed upon and approved by the disinterested directors.

9. Corporations ⇨319(6)—Corporation's allegations that permit to sell stock allowed only 15 per cent. commissions and more was paid held to state cause of action against directors for unlawful expenditures (Const. art. 12, § 3).

In an action by a corporation against its directors to recover for commissions alleged to have been unlawfully paid, allegations that the permit from the corporation department provided that commissions for the sale of stock should not exceed 15 per cent. and that the amount paid for selling $69,249.61 worth of stock was $19,551.76 held to state cause of action against the directors for unlawful expenditures, under Const. art. 12, § 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by San Leandro Canning Company, Inc., against L. Perillo and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Edwin H. Williams, of San Leandro, for appellant.

James M. Koford, of Oakland, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to recover moneys from the defendants. The defendants interposed a demurrer which pleaded that the plaintiff's second amended complaint did not state facts sufficient; that plaintiff's alleged cause of action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 338, section 359, and subdivision 1 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and certain other matters not necessary to be stated. The demurrer was sustained, the plaintiff declined to amend, and thereupon judgment was entered in favor of the defendants. From that judgment the plaintiff has appealed and has brought up the judgment roll.

The defendants interposed a preliminary objection to the hearing of this appeal. That objection was based on the same facts and involved the same provisions of law as the preliminary objection made in San Leandro, etc., Co. v. Perilo et al. (No. 5793, Cal. App.) 258 P. 666, this day filed.

From an inspection of the judgment roll it appears that the action was commenced on the 21st day of March, 1924. The action was not barred on said date by any statute of limitations.

On November 8, 1920, the plaintiff was a corporation having an unissued capital stock of $1,000,000, divided into 100,000 shares of the par value of $100 each. It had a board of directors of seven members, the six defendants and another, F. Stenzil, who was deceased at the time this action was commenced. The directors entered into a plan to purchase the plant of another corporation for $135,000 to be paid for in the corporate stock of the plaintiff and to sell $150,000 of the treasury stock. It applied to the corporation department and obtained a permit. The permit, among other things, provided that the compensation to be paid for the sale of said shares should not exceed 15 per cent.; nor should any commission or compensation be paid in connection with any sale made within this state except to an agent or broker holding a certificate from the commissioner of corporations, then in effect, authorizing him to act as plaintiff's agent; that a true copy of the permit be exhibited and delivered to each prospective subscriber before his subscription should be taken. The permit authorized the sale of the stock for 25 per cent. cash, and the balance of the purchase price to be evidenced by promissory notes payable on or before 7½ months. Thereafter stock in the sum of $69,249.61 was sold by Allen E. Pelton, J. E. Faustina, L. B. Mills, P. K. Braly, G. A. Prosser, F. B. Cross, and W. J. Justin. The first two were directors and are made defendants. The other persons were not directors and are not made defendants. It is alleged that commissions amounting to $16,193.66 were paid the director-defendants as commissions for the sale of said stock, but it is not alleged how many shares were sold by each of the director-defendants, nor how many shares were sold by any one of the other salesmen, although it is alleged that the other salesmen were paid $3,358.10. It is not alleged how many shares were sold.

[1-3] It is alleged: (1) That no one of the salesmen "was an agent or broker holding a certificate then in effect from the commissioner of corporations authorizing him to act as plaintiff's agent"; (2) that no one of the salesmen "exhibited or delivered to any prospective purchaser of, or subscriber to, said stock" a copy of the commissioner's permit; (3) that the defendants prepared and printed a prospectus, but in this connection it is alleged that said prospectus "was not filed in the office of the corporation commissioner and that its contents was concealed from said commissioner." Relying on these allegations, the plaintiff contends that the payment of all commissions was unlawful and that for making unlawful expenditures these defendants are liable. Const. art. 12, § 3. The contention is too broad. The alleged facts do not show that the expenditures for commissions were unlawful. They show, at most, that the sales were made in an unlawful manner. Those allegations show a violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), as to the manner of making sales and might justify, against the salesmen, the criminal proceedings mentioned in that act, but they did not constitute nor tend to constitute a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff to recover the commissions back, nor to make these defendants responsible therefor.

[4] For the alleged wrongful acts of the salesmen the Corporate Securities Act gives no cause of action in favor of the plaintiff. The facts alleged show how the new purchasers of stock may have been wronged and how such purchasers may have had a cause of action against the salesmen, but not against the directors who did not act as salesmen. But no facts are pleaded showing a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff corporation.

[5] As to the two director-defendants, it is alleged that neither of them had a prior contract or agreement with said corporation whereby they or either of them, was to be paid a commission for making sales of the corporate stock. As we understand the argument of the appellant, it is to the effect that the claims for compensation of the two director-defendants were, therefore, ultra vires the corporation and could not legally be paid. If this were an action by said directors to recover compensation for the value of their services so rendered, it will be conceded at once that a prior authorization would be of importance. But that rule is not without limitation. In Bassett v. Fairchild, 132 Cal. 637, 643, 64 P. 1082, 1084 (52 L. R. A. 611), the court said:

"Now, it has been held that directors of corporations cannot, without previous express contract, receive compensation for such ordinary services as are usually rendered by directors without pay, for the common understanding, as declared by judicial decisions, is, that such services are presumed to be rendered gratuitously. But that presumption does not apply to those onerous services performed by officers and agents of a corporation, though they be also directors, for which compensation is usually demanded and allowed, and which could not reasonably be expected to be performed for nothing."

See, also, Hughes v. Pacific Wharf, etc., Co., 188 Cal. 210, 216, 205 P. 105. But we are running afield. This is not an action by a director to recover compensation. The complaint alleges that the directors have already been paid. This is an action to recover back those payments. Counsel do not cite any authorities, and we know of none, to the effect that, in the absence of allegations of fraud, the mere averment that without a prior authorization the payment to a director for services admittedly rendered would be either a void or a voidable transaction.

[6, 7] It is alleged the defendants caused to be printed and circulated a prospectus which stated in effect that the new company was itself selling its shares of stock and in this manner was saving to the company the cost and expenses of hiring solicitors to make the sales. As stated above, the corporation was, in truth and in fact, paying commissions authorized in the sum of 15 per cent. Assuming, although it is doubtful (Blewitt v. McRae, 88 Wis. 280, 60 N. W. 253), that the representation so made was a material false representation, the alleged facts might be of importance in an action by one of the new purchasers of the stock; but one of the new purchasers is not maintaining this action. This action is brought by the new company against its former directors. It is not pleaded that by reason of the false representations the plaintiff failed to make sales. It is not pleaded that by reason of the false representations litigation was commenced against the plaintiff. In short, no fact or facts are pleaded showing that the plaintiff was injured in any respect whatsoever by reason of the false representations. The case, therefore, stands as follows: The company authorized agents to sell its stock; the agents did so and in making the sales falsely represented that they were acting gratuitously; purchasers bought and paid for the stock and are not complaining of their bargain. The company accepted the payments and retained the same, and does not make any contention that it did not get value received; but in this action it seeks to recover back all of the compensation paid to its agents for making the sales. In making this attempt it has pleaded no facts showing wherein it has suffered detriment. In Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., 163 Cal. 561, at page 571, 126 P. 351, 355 (42 L. R. A. [N. S.] 404), the court said: "It is fundamental, of course, that no matter what the nature of the fraud or deceit, unless detriment has been occasioned thereby, plaintiff has no cause of action." Those injuries must be pleaded as they fix the amount, if anything, which the plaintiff may recover. 7 Labatt's Master and Servant, § 2595; 2 C. J. 734, § 400.

[8] In this connection we have not overlooked the argument that the director-defendants employed and paid themselves. But estimating the pleading with that argument in mind, the complaint is seriously defective in failing to allege other material facts. It appears that the plaintiff had a board of seven directors. It is alleged that two of the directors were interested. That would leave five directors who were not interested. There is not a trace of averment that the claims for compensation presented by the two director-defendants were passed on by those two interested defendants, nor that said claims were not passed and approved by a full quorum of disinterested qualified directors of the plaintiff corporation. Under those circumstances the plaintiff would have no reason to complain. Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 32, 28 P. 788; Wickersham v. Crittenden, 106 Cal. 327, 39 P. 602.

The plaintiff cites and relies on Western States Life Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 185, 135 P. 496. In that case the plaintiff was seeking to recover secret profits from the defendant executor of Arthur R. Briggs, deceased. Briggs, in his lifetime, was president of the Western States Life Insurance Company. As such, in a stock deal, he had secretly obtained large profits. Not until after his death did the corporation or any of its other officers learn any of the facts. In the instant case no kindred facts are alleged but, on the contrary, it appears that all of the facts were fully disclosed and were entered on the books of the plaintiff corporation and that the present officers of the plaintiff obtained from those books all of the facts which they pleaded in this complaint. Under these circumstances there was no secrecy or concealment in the sense that those facts are material in alleging a cause of action as for fraud. Thomp. on Corp. (3d Ed.) § 119; Fletcher Cyc. Corp. § 136; Blood v. La Serena Land & Water Co., 134 Cal. 361, 370, 66 P. 317. The case is not in point.

It thus appears that, considered in the light of each of the foregoing theories contended for by the plaintiff, its complaint fails to state a cause of action against all of the defendants or any of them. But the facts pleaded present another theory, which we will now take up.

[9] The ordinary meaning of the language used in the complaint is that the defendants sold treasury stock at par for $69,249.61 and collected that amount in cash. If so, they sold 692.49 shares. If so, the total of the lawful costs of those sales measured by the terms of the permit, would be 15 times

$629.49 or $10,387.35. But it is alleged the defendants have paid $19,551.76 as the costs of those sales. It follows they paid out unlawfully $9,164.41. For those unlawful expenditures the directors are liable to the plaintiff. Dean v. Shingle, 198 Cal. 652, 246 P. 1049, 46 A. L. R. 1156. All that we have said on this point is based on the language used by the plaintiff in framing its complaint. It may transpire that the costs on the sale of no single share were in excess of the amount authorized by the permit, and, in that event, there would be no unlawful expenditure. However, such facts are not presented by the record in its present form. The demurrer should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a hearing by this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal in and for the First Appellate District, Division Two, reversing judgment herein, is denied. In denying the same, however, we withhold our approval as to that portion of said decision which indicates that upon the trial of said action the limit of the plaintiff's recovery would be the sum of $9,164.41. Upon the question as to what amount the plaintiff would be entitled to recover upon proof of the facts averred in his complaint we express no opinion.

84 Cal. App. 750

GRASS v. RINDGE CO. (Civ. 5060.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 6, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 31, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct 3, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨973—Trial court's action on motion to dismiss action for want of prosecution will not be disturbed, unless discretion has been grossly abused (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Action of trial court on motion to dismiss an action for want of prosecution, under Code Civ. Proc. § 583, will not be disturbed on appeal, unless court's discretion has been grossly abused.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇨60(6)—Refusal to dismiss action for want of prosecution for more than four years, where defendant consented to some continuances, held not abuse of discretion (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Refusal to dismiss action where plaintiff had failed to prosecute same for period of more than four years and three months after filing of answer because plaintiff hoped to settle case out of court, where defendant consented to some continuances, held not abuse of discretion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1002—Finding of jury on value of attorneys' services on conflicting evidence closed issue.

Where attorneys, competent and experienced in character of litigation, testified the reasonable value of services to be as low as $7,500 and as high as $55,000, issue as to value of attorneys' services was closed by finding of jury.

4. Attorney and client ⇨167(2)—Whether client and attorney agreed that payment for services was full, unless attorney by future proceedings saved client something, held for jury.

In action for attorney's fees, question whether or not, in view of situation of parties and their relation to entire transaction, it was likely or probable that they contracted that sum paid should constitute full payment for all services theretofore performed or thereafter to be performed by attorney in every proceeding for or connected with opening of street through lots of defendant, unless attorney should by future proceedings save defendant something that it would otherwise lose, held for jury.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Where evidence is conflicting, if there is substantial evidence to support conclusion reached by trial court, conclusion cannot be reviewed on appeal.

Where evidence is conflicting, if there be substantial evidence to support conclusion reached by trial court, conclusion is not open to review on appeal.

6. Attorney and client ⇨166(1)—In action for attorney's fees, in which defendant claimed sum paid was full payment, evidence held to support verdict for plaintiff.

In action for attorney's fees, in which defendant claimed that sum paid was full settlement for services, unless attorney in future proceedings saved defendant something, evidence held sufficient to support verdict for plaintiff.

7. Attorney and client ⇨167(3)—In action for attorney's fees, instruction that burden was on client to prove that arrangements theretofore existing between parties had later been changed as defendant claimed held not error (Code Civ. Proc. § 1869).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1869, providing that each party must prove his own affirmative allegations, instruction in action for attorney's fees, in which defendant set up new contract as affirmative defense, that burden was on defendant to prove by preponderance of evidence that arrangements which had theretofore existed between defendant and attorney, namely, that he was to work for what his services were reasonably worth, had been later changed in respects claimed by defendant, held not error, especially in view of other instructions.

8. Interest ⇨19(1)—Instruction permitting allowance of interest, in suit on quantum meruit for attorney's fees, prior to decision, held erroneous.

In action on quantum meruit for attorney's fees, instruction allowing jury, if they found for plaintiff, to allow interest prior to decision of case, held erroneous.

9. Appeal and error ⇨1068(4)—Instruction erroneously allowing interest prior to decision, held cured by remittitur.

In action for attorney's fees on quantum meruit, where erroneous instruction permitted jury to allow interest prior to decision of case, error was cured by remittitur of interest.

10. Trial $\Leftrightarrow$ 243—Instruction permitting allowance of interest prior to decision held not in conflict with instructions restricting damages to amount stated in complaint.

Instruction permitting allowance of interest on quantum meruit prior to decision of case held not in conflict with instructions restricting damages to be allowed to amount prayed for in complaint, since jury was told to add interest to whatever amount they found.

11. Attorney and client $\Leftrightarrow$ 167(3)—Instruction that evidence of conversations subsequent to payment of sum, which defendants claimed was in full settlement of attorney's services, unless attorney saved them something, could not make contract pleaded, held correct.

In action for attorney's fees, instruction that evidence of conversations with attorney subsequent to payment of certain sum, which clients claimed attorney had agreed to accept in full settlement, unless he thereafter saved clients something, could not make contract such as was pleaded, but could be considered only as bearing on question whether statement of defendants' manager as to conversations testified to by him as having occurred with attorney were true, held correct.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action for attorney's fees by E. E. Grass against the Rindge Company, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wheaton A. Gray and Grant Jackson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chandler, Wright & Ward and Meserve & Meserve, all of Los Angeles (Timon E. Owens, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff as assignee of Meserve & Meserve, attorneys at law, for a balance due of attorney's fees for services rendered by Edwin A. Meserve to defendant corporation. The complaint alleged that defendant employed Edwin A. Meserve and Shirley E. Meserve as its attorneys to represent said defendant in all proceedings connected with and growing out of the Broadway opening proceedings in the city of Los Angeles, soon after said proceedings were initiated in the spring of 1913; that the said Edwin A. Meserve and Shirley E. Meserve, and particularly the said Edwin A. Meserve, under said employment rendered services for said defendant in various proceedings before the city council of Los Angeles and in various actions commenced in the superior court of Los Angeles county, some of which were appealed to the District Court of Appeal and to the Supreme Court of the state of California; that the said services so rendered were and are of the reasonable value of $32,500, which said sum the defendant agreed to pay therefor; that no part of said sum has been paid other than the sum of $6,250, which was paid by said defendant on account, the balance of $26,250 remaining unpaid; that on or about the 19th day of January, 1917, at the special instance and request of said defendant, said Edwin A. and Shirley E. Meserve ceased to be attorneys for the said defendant in the matter of the said opening of Broadway. The answer alleges that defendant employed Edwin A. Meserve alone to perform the services set forth in the complaint; denies that said services were or are of the reasonable value of $32,500, or any sum in excess of the sum of $6,250 actually paid to said Edwin A. Meserve; denies that defendant agreed to pay said sum of $32,500, or any other sum in excess of $6,250; and denies that the said sum of $6,250, or any other sum, remains unpaid. For a separate defense, the defendant alleged that at the time of the employment of the said Edwin A. Meserve no agreement was made as to what he should receive for his services; but that some time thereafter, on or about May 6, 1914, a retainer fee of $1,250 was paid to said Edwin A. Meserve, at his special instance and request, by the defendant; that thereafter, on or about July 28, 1914, the said Edwin A. Meserve requested the defendant to pay him the further sum of $6,250 for the services performed and to be performed by him in said litigation referred to in the complaint; that the said Edwin A. Meserve stated that he would charge defendant nothing more whatever, unless by virtue of the future proceedings he should save defendant something; that said Edwin A. Meserve did not succeed in saving any sum for the defendant; that thereafter and before the proceedings in the matter were concluded he insisted upon retiring from the case and refused to proceed further with the case unless he should be paid at once the sum of $5,000, and thereby compelled the substitution of another attorney and thereby failed and refused to proceed to a conclusion of said proceedings, or to a point where it could be determined that he (the said Meserve) had saved anything for the defendant, and that he has in fact saved no sum or thing for the defendant; that thereafter and subsequent to the payment of the said sum of $6,250 defendant heard nothing from said Edwin A. Meserve touching the matter of fees in said case for nearly two years, or until the month of March, 1916, when the defendant received two letters from the said Edwin A. Meserve, notifying the defendant that it would be necessary for the said Meserve to go to San Francisco and appear before the Supreme Court on a petition for a rehearing in said case, presenting a bill for $200 to cover a fee and expenses for the trip to San Francisco, as being separate from the regular work of the case; that defendant, relying upon said representation that said trip was separate from the regular work of the case, paid to said Meserve the said sum of $200. Defendant further alleged that all of defendant's agreements have been fully performed, and all of plaintiff's demands sued for have been fully paid, and that no interest is due or payable on any claim sued upon. By way of cross-complaint, the defendant sues upon an account stated for a balance of $296.23. The case was tried before a jury and a verdict for plaintiff was returned in the sum of $25,795.22. Judgment was entered accordingly on March 14, 1924, and reduced to $17,200 by order of court on April 10, 1924.

On June 28, 1921, defendant moved the court to dismiss the action upon the ground that plaintiff without reasonable excuse had failed to prosecute the same for a period of more than four years and three months after the filing of the answer on March 8, 1917. In support of the motion for dismissal, defendant filed the affidavits of Wheaton A. Gray, attorney for defendant, and F. B. Scotton, manager for defendant corporation. It appears from the affidavit of Wheaton A. Gray that on July 19, 1917, said cause was duly set for trial on January 2, 1918, and thereafter continued 13 times by agreement of the parties; that said continuances were as a rule made at the suggestion of plaintiff's attorney; that on October 4, 1920, said case, on motion of plaintiff, went off calendar; that on June 15, 1921, defendant was served by plaintiff with a notice of motion to set the case for trial; that these various apparent efforts to bring the case to trial, followed by the numerous continuances had, were generally accompanied by positive declarations that the case would be immediately pressed to trial, unless some settlement of it should be had in the meantime. According to the affidavit of Scotton, no officer or representative of defendant corporation ever had any purpose or intention to settle said case, but that they at all times had stated to all persons that they would not settle the case. Plaintiff filed counter affidavits of J. P. Chandler and Edwin A. Meserve, attorneys for plaintiff, and also the affidavit of Howard W. Wright, employed in J. P. Chandler's office. It is stated in the affidavit of J. P. Chandler that Edwin A. Meserve had been trying to settle the case because he was reluctant to try an action against a former client for legal services; that the different continuances were not all made at the request of plaintiff; that several of said continuances were at the request of the defendant; one at the request of a mutual friend of Edwin A. Meserve and the stockholders of the defendant corporation, in order that the case might be settled if possible; "that each time that the case was set for trial and the time for trial approached, Judge Wheaton A. Gray rang up affiant and asked of affiant if Edwin A. Meserve desired to try the above-entitled case at the time for which the same was set; that each time afflant stated that he would see Mr. Meserve and after seeing said Edwin A. Meserve, affiant stated to Judge Gray exactly what Mr. Meserve had stated, namely, that he would rather not try the case if it could be avoided, in the hopes that the same might be settled, and if the defendant was willing and did not itself care to try the case, he (Meserve) would like to have the same continued for trial, each time in the hopes that a settlement might be arrived at; that upon affiant thus stating the matter to Judge Gray, each time Judge Gray stated in reply, in effect, that the case could be continued and reset for trial; that the said case was last continued on the 17th day of May, 1920, at which time his honor, Judge Paul McCormick, in his department of the superior court, stated that, if counsel did not try the case at the time to which it would be continued, the court would be obliged to strike the case from the calendar, to be reset on motion, that he could not again consent to carry the case along in that way; that defendant was advised of this position of Judge McCormick and the case, with that understanding between the parties, was continued to the 4th day of October, 1920; that shortly prior to said 4th day of October, 1920, affiant and said Wheaton A. Gray again had a conversation over the telephone in regard to the trial of the case, at which time Judge Gray again asked of affiant as to whether plaintiff desired to try the case at this time; that affiant told Judge Gray that he would consult with Edwin A. Meserve, which he did, and thereupon advised Judge Gray of what said Edwin A. Meserve had stated, namely, that he (said Edwin A. Meserve) still had hopes that the case would be settled without being tried, and that, if Judge Gray was willing, he would again prefer to have the case continued even if it had to go off the calendar to be reset; that thereupon Judge Gray stated, in effect, that he was willing that such should be the course, he being then advised that the case would not be continued by Judge McCormick to a definite date, but would be ordered off the calendar to be reset; that never at any time was there the slightest suggestion of any kind or character that plaintiff did not intend to try said case in the event the same could not be settled, on the contrary, each and every time that affiant talked with Judge Wheaton A. Gray, the attorney for the defendant, about a continuance or about the case not being tried at the time for which the same was set, or about its being off the calendar, affiant stated in effect to said Wheaton A. Gray that said Edwin A. Meserve still hoped that the case might be settled without the necessity of trial, and Judge Gray each time was informed, in effect, that, if the same could not be settled, the case would have to be tried." Edwin A. Meserve in his affidavit states:

"That at one time affiant was approached by Mr. George I. Cochran, president of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, a friend of affiant's and a friend and business associate of the four stockholders of the defendant corporation; that said stockholders are all members of one family, namely, the Rindge family; that Mr. Cochran stated to affiant that, if said action could not be continued, he would have Mr. Fred Rindge come to Los Angeles and confer with affiant to see if said action could not be settled; that affiant conferred with Mr. Rindge and told him the minimum amount at which he would settle; that Mr. Rindge was not willing to pay said amount; that the conference between affiant and Mr. Rindge was very agreeable and pleasant, and, so far as the same was personal, did not even take on the form of a dispute; that affiant stated to Mr. Rindge that he could not settle said dispute or claim for any less than the amount which affiant then stated to Mr. Rindge; that from time to time thereafter it was suggested to affiant, by friends of both parties, that the same could still be settled without litigation, and among those who stated said fact to affiant was Mr. Henry W. O'Melveny, through whom affiant was employed in the actions resulting in the claim for attorney's fees presented in this action; that whenever the case was set for trial and before the time when the case was to be called for trial, affiant was consulted by Mr. J. P. Chandler, who stated that he had talked with Judge Wheaton A. Gray, and that Judge Wheaton A. Gray wanted to know whether or not affiant would want said case tried on the day for which the same was set; that affiant each time told Mr. Chandler to state to Judge Gray that he was still in hopes said case could be settled, that he did not desire to try that kind of a case if it could be avoided, and that, therefore, it would please him if the case could be continued to some later date in the hopes of such a settlement."

Howard W. Wright, an attorney associated with J. P. Chandler, made affidavit that affiant was present in court on May 17, 1920, after being informed by J. P. Chandler that it was the desire of the parties that the trial be continued to October, 1920, "and informed the court that the parties to the above-entitled action had agreed that the trial of the same might be continued until some date in October, 1920; whereupon the court announced that, if the said case was not tried upon the 4th day of October, 1920, the court would order the said cause off the calendar to be restored upon motion of either party. That on or about the 3d day of October, 1920, affiant was informed by Jefferson P. Chandler, Esq., that negotiations for a settlement of the above-entitled action were pending, and that it was understood between the parties thereto that the matter might go off calendar, and that, therefore, it was unnecessary for any one to be present in court on the 4th day of October, 1920. That affiant further states that on or about the 22d day of June, 1921, he examined the minute orders of the clerk in department 15 of the above-entitled court; and that said minutes show that on the 4th day of October, 1920, the above-entitled cause went off calendar, to be restored upon motion of either counsel, and the following order was thereupon made: 'E. E. Grass v. Rindge Co., etc., et al., No. B 47645. No one appearing, cause off calendar, to be restored upon motion of either counsel.'" Wheaton A. Gray made affidavit in rebuttal:

"That as attorney for the defendant in the above-entitled action he received no instructions from his client, or from any other source at any time to the effect that the said Rindge Company desired a continuance of said cause, nor did he receive any instructions to continue the case, nor did he ever request or desire a continuance on his client's account, or at his client's desire. He was, however, at all times ready and willing to grant a continuance and did consent to all the continuances that were had, except the last, which were each and all made at the request of the plaintiff and her attorney. That while the plaintiff or her attorney frequently requested a settlement of the case this affiant always replied to the offer of settlement to the effect that his client would not under any circumstances consent to any settlement, and would not pay to the plaintiff a single dollar in the way of settlement. That this affiant carefully avoided holding out any hope to the plaintiff or her attorneys that any settlement of the case whatever could be had short of an absolute dismissal of it on the part of the plaintiff without the payment of any money whatever. That this affiant knows that the officers, attorneys, and agents of the defendant each and all were of the firm purpose at all times to refuse to and abstain from paying any sum whatever to the plaintiff or to her assignor on account of the matter set up in the complaint. That affiant stated the same as emphatically as it could be stated to the attorney for the plaintiff every time said attorney said anything to him about settlement. That since said suit was begun there never has been any negotiation for a settlement or a compromise of this case entered into in which defendant or any of its officers, agents, or attorneys took any part whatever. That each and all of the same have at all times declared that no settlement or compromise of the case could be had and they have each and all taken particular pains to impart to the plaintiff, her assignor, agents, and attorneys a knowledge of their purposes and intentions in this regard. That no attorney for the defendant was present on the 17th day of May, 1920, at which time his honor, Judge Paul McCormick, stated that, if counsel did not try the case at the time to which it would be continued, the court would be obliged to strike the case from the calendar. That this affiant is the only attorney of the defendant, and that neither this affiant, nor any other representative of the defendant, was present at the time said case was dropped from the calendar. That he received notice over the telephone from Mr. Chandler that it was so dropped. That affiant was not advised in connection with said case going off the calendar that it would be ordered off the calendar to be reset, but, on the contrary, he was advised by Mr. Chandler after it had been ordered off the calendar that it had been so ordered off the calendar and nothing was said by Mr. Chandler at that or any other time about its ever being thereafter reset or about its being thereafter to be set, nor did affiant ever agree or stipulate orally or in writing that the case should again be reset for trial after it was ordered off the calendar by Judge McCormick for failure to prosecute as aforesaid, and that while as a fact, and as alleged in Mr. Chandler's affidavit, he, as attorney for plaintiff, did frequently inform this affiant that said case would have to be tried unless it was settled, this affiant met all such statements with the reply that there was no possibility of ever settling the case; that he had talked with Mrs. Rindge, the president of the corporation defendant; that he knew she would never consent to any settlement; and that Mr. Meserve was acquainted with Mrs. Rindge and ought to know her well enough to know that when she said there would be no settlement no settlement could be had."

The motion for dismissal was denied. On July 19, 1917, on plaintiff's motion, the case was set down for trial on January 2, 1918, and was thereafter continued by consent of the parties eight times until, on January 27, 1922, the trial of said action, by consent, went off calendar, and on said day the parties entered into a stipulation in writing that said case was set for trial on February 3, 1922; that the five years within which the action must be brought to trial under section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, will expire on the 7th day of March, 1922; and that the attorney for the defendant had requested the plaintiff to continue said trial. It was stipulated as follows:

"Now, therefore, in consideration of consenting to such continuance by plaintiff, it is hereby stipulated that the period of time which shall expire between the date of this stipulation and the trial of said action shall not be considered, should any question arise in said cause concerning the prosecution thereof, and that said plaintiff shall not be held to have failed to prosecute said action during said period covered by this stipulation. It is further stipulated that the time provided by section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, for the bringing of an action on for trial after the filing of an answer is hereby extended and enlarged so as to include the time when said action shall hereafter be brought on for trial, and so as not to in any way be a bar to the plaintiff hereafter bringing said action on for trial whether the same be now reset for a later date or go off the calendar to hereafter be set on further motion. It is the understanding of the parties hereto and the intent of this stipulation that when said cause is finally tried it shall then be deemed to have been tried within the statutory time as provided in section 583, Code of Civil Procedure."

Said stipulation was approved by the court and the court ordered the time extended for the bringing of said action on for trial as in said stipulation provided. On May 20, 1922, said action was set down for trial on the 10th day of July, 1922. On May 26th the case was continued, at the request of defendant, to December 18, 1922, subject to the stipulation of January 27, 1922. Thereafter said case was continued seven different times, subject to said stipulation of January 27, 1922; two of said continuances being on request of defendant. On March 4, 1924, the case went to trial, and the trial proceeded without any objection from defendant.

Appellant assigns as error the denial of the motion for dismissal, basing its argument upon the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads:

"The court may in its discretion dismiss any action for want of prosecution on motion of the defendant and after due notice to the plaintiff, whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer filed to bring such action to trial. Any action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced or to which it may be transferred on motion of the defendant, after due notice to plaintiff or by the court on its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended."

Appellant asserts that while this section of the Code gives the court discretion in the matter, yet this discretion is not an arbitrary discretion to be exercised just as the judge may desire, whether or not any excuse for the delay is offered; that the true rule is:

"That where a delay is had for a period exceeding two years, and no reasonable excuse is offered for it, the case must be dismissed whether the judge wants to dismiss it or not, and the burden is on the plaintiff to show and satisfy the mind of the court not only that he had an excuse for this long delay, but that such excuse was what is known in law, and is considered in the decisions of the court heretofore rendered a reasonable excuse."

In Andersen v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 95, 200 P. 963, it was held that, in the absence of a written stipulation that the time be extended, the provisions of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, requiring dismissal of the action unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, are mandatory and that the trial court was without discretion to refuse an order of dismissal in such case. But the court further said:

"The distinction between a mandatory and discretionary act is illustrated by the two provisions of section 583. The first clause provides a discretionary ground of dismissal for want of diligent prosecution of an action after two years, and the action of the court in granting or refusing to dismiss could not be controlled by mandamus or certiorari, at least in the absence of clear abuse of discretion; while the second clause makes a fixed and arbitrary rule that requires the performance of 'an act which the law specially enjoins' and which gives jurisdiction for the exercise of the writ of mandate under section 1085 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

[1] Upon examination of the foregoing affidavits, we are unable to say that there was any abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in denying the motion for dismissal. The affidavits are conflicting in many particulars, especially in regard to compromising the litigation; but it does appear without question that the case was continued many times with the consent of the defendant before the denial of the motion to dismiss on June 27, 1921. Under the authorities and the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, dismissal would have been mandatory upon motion of the defendant and notice to the plaintiff, or by the court on its own motion, unless the action had been brought to trial within five years after the defendant had filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended, as was done in the case at bar. But here the motion for dismissal was made before such five years had expired, and dismissal of the action was not mandatory on the court, but discretionary under the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In our opinion, under the showing made at the hearing on the motion, it cannot be held as a matter of law by this court that the trial court failed to exercise a sound discretion in the denial of such motion for dismissal. Appellant's claim that section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure was adopted to strengthen the rule requiring the plaintiff to bring the case on for trial "within two years" unless the plaintiff "has some excuse for (not) bringing it on which appeals to the court's sense of justice" is untenable. In Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 P. 1002, it was held, under the provisions of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, that in an action where an answer has been filed the court should not dismiss the action for want of prosecution, unless the plaintiff has delayed for two years thereafter to bring the action to trial; that after two years of such inaction a dismissal is discretionary, but that when it is continued for five years the action "shall be dismissed." See, also, to similar effect: Johnston v. Baker, 167 Cal. 260, 139 P. 86. In Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 423, 424, the term "discretion" is defined as follows:

"The discretion intended, however, is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion, guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles. It is not a mental discretion, to be exercised ex gratia, but a legal discretion, to be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law, and in a manner to subserve and not to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice. In a plain case, this discretion has no office to perform, and its exercise is limited to doubtful cases, where an impartial mind hesitates. If it be doubted whether the excuse offered is sufficient or not, or whether the defense set up is with or without merit in foro legis, when examined under those rules of law by which judges are guided to a conclusion, the judgment of the court below will not be disturbed. If, on the contrary, we are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the court below has come to an erroneous conclusion, the party complaining of the error is as much entitled to a reversal in a case like the present as in any other."

The foregoing definition was quoted with approval in Ferris v. Wood, 144 Cal. 426, 428, 77 P. 1037, 1038, and in Raggio v. Southern Pacific Co., 181 Cal. 472, 475, 185 P. 171, 172. The general rule is that the disposition of a motion to dismiss an action for want of prosecution rests in the discretion of the trial court, and that its action on such motion will not be disturbed here unless such discretion has been grossly abused. Marks v. Keenan, 148 Cal. 161, 82 P. 772; Martin v. City and County of San Francisco, 131 Cal. 575, 63 P. 913; First National Bank v. Nason, 115 Cal. 626, 47 P. 595; Seymour v. Wood, 63 Cal. 81; Grigsby v. Napa County, 36 Cal. 585, 588, 95 Am. Dec. 213. In Rickey Land, etc., Co. v. Glader, 153 Cal. 179, 180, 94 P. 768, 769, the court said:

"In every case where a dismissal of the action has been denied, the discretionary ruling of the trial court has been upheld. Neihaus v. Morgan [5 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 391] 45 P. 255; Rosenthal v. McMann, 93 Cal. 505, 29 P. 121; In re McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 30 P. 101; Marshall v. Taylor, 97 Cal. 422, 32 P. 515; San Jose R. Co. v. San Jose L. & W. Co., 126 Cal. 322, 58 P. 824."

In Witter v. Phelps, 163 Cal. 655, 126 P. 593, the court holds that in reversing an order dismissing an action for undue delay in serving summons, in so far as affidavits presented by the respective parties were conflicting, it must be assumed that the court below found the facts to be as asserted by the prevailing party. In First National Bank v. Nason, 115 Cal. 626, 628, 47 P. 595, it was held that, when the delay had been at the instance and request of the defendant, the court would properly refuse to dismiss. Wheaton A. Gray in his affidavit stated that the continuances as a rule were made at the suggestion of plaintiff's attorney. J. P. Chandler in his affidavit states that the different continuances were not all made at the request of plaintiff, but that to the best of his recollection several of such continuances were at the instance and at the request of the defendant. In his affidavit in rebuttal Wheaton A. Gray declares that all of the continuances were at the request of plaintiff and her attorney, but that defendant consented to all of the continuances that were had, except the last. Thus a direct conflict appears in the affidavits as to which party requested the continuances. There is likewise some conflict as to the efforts to compromise the litigation. The affidavits of J. P. Chandler, Edwin A. Meserve, and Howard W. Wright tend to show that some effort was being made to compromise the case and that, each time a continuance was discussed between the attorneys for the parties and consented to by defendant's attorney, the desire and hope of plaintiff that the case could be settled without trial was communicated to Wheaton A. Gray, attorney for defendant, and that, upon each continuance so consented to by defendant, Wheaton A. Gray was informed that if the case could not be settled it would have to be tried. Wheaton A. Gray in his affidavit in rebuttal states that plaintiff and her attorney frequently requested a settlement of the case, but that he always replied to the offer of settlement to the effect that his client would not under any circumstances consent to any settlement. In Ferris v. Wood, 144 Cal. 426, 429, 77 P. 1037, the Supreme Court held that the discretion of the trial court in dismissing the action was improperly exercised. In that case an offer of settlement had been made by the defendant, while here no offer of settlement was made by the defendant. In that case the summons was not served until two years and one month after the complaint was filed. The court said, page 429 (77 P. 1038):

"The judgment upon which the action is brought is unpaid. An effort to compromise that judgment was in progress by the parties after the summons issued, and for this reason plaintiff caused the delay in the service. To have served the summons pending these negotiations might, as plaintiff feared, embarrass the settlement. It seems to us that the delay was reasonably accounted for and excused, and that the order of the court did not tend to subserve, but rather to impede or defeat, the ends of substantial justice."

[2] While in the case at bar there was no offer of settlement by either party, yet the desire of the plaintiff to settle the case was communicated to the defendant as a ground for the continuances, and the defendant thereupon consented to the continuances. Paraphrasing the language quoted above, to have pressed the case to trial pending these negotiations might embarrass a possible settlement. To so find, under all the circumstances in this case, would not, in our opinion, be an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court, when the defendant consented to the many continuances under these circumstances. We have examined the cases cited by defendant, holding the defendant not to be under any duty to bring the case to trial and affirming judgments of dismissal in those cases, but do not believe them to be controlling in the case at bar, since the action of the trial court in this and in similar cases is to be determined by an exercise of sound discretion. It was held under the facts in those cases that there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in granting a dismissal. In this case we hold there was no abuse of discretion under the facts in the case on the part of the trial court in refusing a dismissal.

In this case, after the motion to dismiss was denied on January 27, 1922, the parties entered into a stipulation which recited, among other things, that the defendant did not desire to try said action February 3, 1922, and requested plaintiff's attorneys to continue said trial. In consideration of consenting to such continuance by the plaintiff, it was stipulated:

"That when said cause is finally tried it shall then be deemed to have been tried within the statutory time as provided in section 583, Code of Civil Procedure."

After further continuances, subject to said stipulation, the case was called for trial on March 5, 1924, and no objection whatever to the trial of said action proceeding was made by the defendant, and defendant did not at said trial, nor at any time since June 28, 1921, in any manner object to said case going to trial, or to any of the proceedings being taken to continue said action for trial, or continuing the same on the calendar; nor did defendant at any time during the trial of said action in any manner object to the trial of said action proceeding, or make any suggestion that the trial of said action had been so long delayed that the same should not proceed. Respondent urges that, in view of the stipulation made by defendant and of the trial itself without any objection, defendant is now estopped to claim error on the part of the trial court in denying the motion to dismiss. However, for the purposes of the decision of this case, we do not deem it necessary to hold that defendant is thus estopped.

[3] It is the contention of appellant that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. The complaint, as we have seen, is for the value of attorneys' services, alleged to be of the reasonable value of $32,500, on which the sum of $6,250 had been paid, leaving a balance of $26,250. The verdict of the jury was for $25,795.22. An examination of the evidence as to the value of the services discloses that there was a sharp conflict between the witnesses for appellant and those for respondent as to such value. Attorneys competent and experienced in this character of litigation testified the reasonable value of said services to be as low as $7,500 and as high as $55,000. Under such circumstances, the issue as to the value of the services was closed by the finding of the jury. In Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 228 P. 25, where a judgment for attorney's fees in the sum of $300,000 was affirmed, the court said (page 251 [228 P. 29]):

"The question as to the reasonable value of the services rendered by the plaintiff was submitted to a number of able and competent attorneys, who testified in the case. Some of them advanced a lower figure than that claimed by him, but others fixed their value at amounts far in excess of that established by the verdict. Consequently the issue as to the value of the services may be considered as having been closed by the finding of the jury."

In Estate of Duffill, 188 Cal. 536, 206 P. 42, the court held that a fee of $75,000 was not unreasonable. It is contended in the case at bar that the services rendered by Mr. Meserve after the payment of the sum of $6,250 were of no value to appellant. In this connection the Supreme Court said in Estate of Duffill, supra, at page 553 (206 P. 49):

"The fact that in certain branches of the litigation the trustees were unsuccessful does not necessarily exclude the services performed by its attorneys in connection therewith from the consideration of the court when fixing the attorney's fee."

It appeared from the record that Mr. Meserve had been engaged in the practice of law since 1886, and had tried a large number of condemnation cases, appearing for the owners of the property sought to be condemned. In this case the value of the property involved was large. The litigation was difficult and skill was required. The sum allowed for the property taken was $426,000, and the sum assessed for benefits to the property not taken was $150,000. The work done included preliminary appearances before the city council; services in the preparation and trial of the condemnation suit; appearances before the city council in the matter of a protest; a certiorari case and an injunction case; subsequent protests and appearances before the city council; a second certiorari case, and the filing of a petition before the Supreme Court; and services in a second injunction proceeding. In 3 California Jurisprudence, p. 698, the following rule is declared:

"In determining what constitutes a reasonable fee, the court will take into consideration the following factors: The nature of the litigation, its difficulty, the amount involved, the skill required, the skill employed, the attention given, the success or failure of the attorney's efforts, and the attorney's skill and learning, including his age and experience in the particular type of work demanded."

The important question in the case is whether as alleged in the answer, on July 28, 1914, subsequent to the original employment "it was agreed and understood between said Edwin A. Meserve and this defendant that the said sum of $6,250 then and there paid by this defendant to said Edwin A. Meserve should be and constitute full payment and satisfaction of and for all the services theretofore performed, or thereafter to be performed, by said Meserve in any and every proceeding for or connected with opening of said Broadway through the lots and land of defendant, unless said Edwin A. Meserve should by the proceedings to be brought in the future save the defendant something that it would otherwise lose." It will serve no good purpose to attempt a minute review on the evidence submitted in the case in the court below. The evidence is sharply conflicting. The case of the plaintiff on this branch of the case rests largely upon the testimony of E. A. Meserve, who was an interested witness; likewise the witnesses for the defense were interested. E. A. Meserve testified as a witness for the plaintiff:

That he was employed by H. W. O'Melveny, who was acting as attorney for the defendant in other matters; that there was no agreement made as to compensation; that he received a retainer of $1,250 on May 6, 1914; that on July 31, 1914, he received a check on account of fees in the sum of $6,250; that he had no recollection of any conversation with his clients relating to this payment, either immediately prior or immediately subsequent to its receipt, but that on July 24, 1916, he had written a letter to defendant requesting a further payment of the sum of $5,000 on account; that Mr. Scotton, manager for defendant company, called at his office on July 28, 1916, and "stated to me that Mrs. Rindge was surprised that I should request a further payment on account of fees, stating that she and Fred understood that when the $6,250 payment was made I would not expect any more pay, or ask for any more pay until all the cases were over and the whole thing was at an end, and then only in the event I had won more money for them."

The witness further testified:

"Mr. Scotton then stated that Mrs. Rindge and Fred recollected very distinctly that I had stated that there would be no further payment on account of fees until all the work was done, and then only in the event I succeeded in getting something for them in addition to the award. I said, 'Well, Mr. Scotton, I don't see how that could be so, or what it was I could have said that Mrs. Rindge heard, or how any conversation of that kind occurred, or what could have been said in it, for at the time that check was paid there was no proceeding of any kind or character contemplated except the proceeding in the condemnation suit and the carrying of that case on, with all the work that would have to be done in perfecting the appeal in that case and getting up the transcript.'"

F. B. Scotton testified:

That he was assistant manager of defendant corporation and secretary to Mrs. Rindge; that "upon July 28th, shortly after the noon hour, Mr. Meserve telephoned to the Rindge Company office and I answered the phone. He asked me to get a check for him from the Rindge Company for $6,250 on account of fees in the Tenth and Broadway Case, and I told him that I would do so. After having hung up the phone, I went and explained the matter to Mrs. Rindge, who was in the front office. * * * I told Mr. Meserve that Mrs. Rindge had refused to sign the check for $6,250, the call that he had made, and the reason was that it was too large a check for the services that he had rendered. Mr. Meserve stated, or told me to tell Mrs. Rindge, that he thought that was the right size of check, or the right amount to pay at that time, and that he wished very much to have payment made to him, especially at that time, and if the payment was made that that would be all that there would be that the Rindge Company would have to pay, unless he saved them something or made them something. * * * After having seen Mrs. Rindge I had another conversation with Mr. Meserve when I handed him the check for $6,250 that had been signed by the Rindge Company. I told him that Mrs. Rindge had signed the check after I had explained to her his statement to me as to what the check would cover."

The witness further testified:

"Q. by Mr. Gray: Now, after that, did you have any conversation with Mr. Meserve about his compensation? A. Yes, sir; about two months afterwards. Mr. Meserve, Mrs. Rindge, Mr. Fred Rindge, and myself were present in Mr. Meserve's office. Mr. Meserve told Mrs. Rindge, Mr. Fred Rindge, and myself that in connection with that check for $6,250, that the Rindge Company had paid him before he went away on his vacation, that that check was to cover all of his services in the Tenth and Broadway Case unless he saved the Rindge Company something or made them something."

The witness further testified:

"I had a talk with Mr. Meserve in July, 1916, when he called for the $5,000 installment. Mr. Meserve and myself were the only ones present at that conversation. After the call had been made by Mr. Meserve for $5,000, which was on or about the 20th or the 24th of July, 1916, upon the request of Mrs. Rindge I went to Mr. Meserve's office, and told him that Mrs. Rindge objected to the payment of the $5,000 call fee that he had made, because she did not consider that there was any payment due him, because he had not saved the Rindge Company anything or made them anything in the litigation that had taken place since July, 1914, and there was no reason why the Rindge Company should make any further payment until he had saved or made them something. Mr. Meserve stated at that time that he could not understand or remember what he could have said to us that would have led us to have any such idea as that in our minds. I told him that he did make such a statement and that I had repeated it to Mrs. Rindge, and that the Rindge Company had acted upon that basis ever since."

Frederick H. Rindge testified that he was vice president and a stockholder in defendant corporation; that after the payment of the $6,250 check, and after Mr. Meserve had returned from his vacation about a month or six weeks later, "Mr. Meserve stated that he would not charge us any more for this bunch of cases unless he saved us something or made us something." Mrs. May K. Rindge testified that she was president and manager of the Rindge Company; that after Mr. Meserve had returned from his vacation she was in his office with her son, Fred Rindge, and Mr. Scotton, and had a conversation with Mr. Meserve about the $6,250 check. The witness further testified:

"I think Mr. Meserve said it was a big check, but that there would be nothing more to pay unless he won something for us, or unless he saved something for us. * * *

Edwin A. Meserve testified in rebuttal:

"Q. by Mr. Chandler: You heard the testimony of Mr. Scotton as to a conversation at the time of the delivery of the check to you? A. I did. That conversation did not occur. No conversation of any kind occurred at that time on that subject with Mr. Scotton.

"Q. Did you have any talk with Mr. Scotton, Mrs. Rindge, or Fred Rindge, in the presence of Mr. Scotton, or Mr. Scotton and Mr. Fred Rindge or Mr. Scotton and Mr. Fred Rindge and Mrs. Rindge before December 14, 1914, regarding any possible or probable action to be brought by the Rindge Company, or on its behalf, attacking or affecting any question of assessments? A. I did not. * * *

"Q. Did Mr. Scotton, either before or at the time he brought the check for $6,250 to you, tell you what Mrs. Rindge had said regarding the same, or that Mrs. Rindge had said anything regarding it? A. He did not.

"Q. Did you tell Mr. Scotton, Mr. Fred Rindge, and Mrs. Rindge as testified to by Mr. Fred Rindge, that that fee would take care of the whole batch of those cases, or the batch of cases? A. I did not. * * *

"Q. by Mr. Chandler: Was there ever any discussion at any time between you and Mr. Scotton and Mrs. Rindge and Mr. Fred Rindge about all of these cases, considered as a whole, until the controversy arose in the summer and fall of 1916 regarding your fee? A. There was not. * * *

"Q. Was there ever any discussion about a contingent fee to be made out of the settlement, except such as arose after the controversy about your fees in 1916? A. There never was any discussion or conversation regarding a contingent fee of any kind or character at any time.

"Q. When you wrote the letter in the summer of 1915, asking for the payment of $5,000 on account, did you then know that the Rindge Company or Mrs. Rindge or any member of that company then understood or believed that you were not to charge any fee to that company in addition to the $7,500 which you had already been paid? A. No; I did not.

"Q. Was there ever any conversation between you and Mr. Scotton, or between you and any other member of the Rindge Company in which you agreed that the $7,500 already paid would cover all your fees unless you made something for the Rindge Company?

"The Court: Or saved something for them? A. There was not.

"Q. July, 1914, when you received the check for $6,250, had there been any talk whatever of or concerning any possible litigation in the matter of the opening of Broadway, except the condemnation suit? A. There had not.

"Q. Up to that time had there been any talk about saving or making any money for the Rindge Company? A. Not after the entry of the judgment in the condemnation suit. That was not the purpose of the prosecution of the appeal."

[4-6] All of the circumstances of the employment of respondent's assignor by the appellant were placed before the jury in extenso. Whether or not, in view of the situation of the parties and their relation to the entire transaction, it was likely or probable that they contracted in the manner claimed by appellant was the peculiar province of the jury to determine. Where the evidence is in conflict, if there be substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached by the trial court, the conclusion is not open to review on appeal. In our opinion, there was sufficient evidence in the present case to support the verdict. In Treadwell v. Nickel, supra, the Supreme Court said:

"The sufficiency of the evidence to establish a given fact, even where the law requires proof of the facts to be clear and convincing, is primarily a question for the trial court and the jury, and if there be substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached below, the finding is not open to review on appeal. Steinberger v. Young, 175 Cal. 81, 84, 165 P. 432. We are not called upon to say that the evidence in the record is entirely plain and convincing. To the extent that its determination rests upon a mere preponderance of evidence, or upon the consideration of conflicting or contradictory evidence, the finding in the lower court is not subject to review in this court. Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 627, 638, 87 P. 93; De Kahn v. Chase, 177 Cal. 281, 283, 170 P. 608."

[7] The trial court instructed the jury that the burden was upon the defendant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the arrangements which had theretofore existed between defendant and Mr. Meserve, namely, that he was to work for what his services were reasonably worth, had been at a later time changed in the respects claimed by the defendant. Other instructions of similar import were given. Appellant assigns the giving of such instructions as error. The answer sets up the new contract as an affirmative defense. The rule with respect to burden of proof is well settled. When plaintiff proved the extent and character of services and the reasonable value thereof, if no evidence had been offered on the part of defendant, judgment must have gone for plaintiff. The defendant in setting up an affirmative defense as a rule assumes the full burden of proof on such issue. 24 Cal. Jur. p. 774; 10 Cal. Jur. p. 787, and cases cited. Section 1869 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Each party must prove his own affirmative allegations." In Wilson v. California C. R. R. Co., 94 Cal. 166, 29 P. 861, 17 L. R. A. 685, it is said:

"As a general rule, the burden is on the defendant to prove new matter alleged as a defense (Osborn v. Hendrickson, 8 Cal. 31; Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 22 [70 Am. Dec. 692]; Kuhland v. Sedgwick, 17 Cal. 124; Bryan v. Maume, 28 Cal. 244; Mulford v. Estudillo, 32 Cal. 131), even though it requires the proof of a negative. 'It makes no difference therefore, whether the actor is plaintiff or defendant, so far as concerns the burden of proof. If he undertakes to make a case, whether affirmative or negative, this case must be made out by him, or judgment must go against him. Hence it may be stated, as a test admitting of universal application, that whether the proposition be affirmative or negative, the party against whom judgment would be given as to a particular issue, supposing no proof be offered on either side, has on him, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, the burden of proof, which he must satisfactorily sustain. If there is a case made out against a defendant, on which, if the plaintiff should close, a judgment would be entered against the defendant, then the defendant has on him the burden of proving a case by which the plaintiff's case will be defeated.' Wharton on Evidence, § 357, and authorities cited."

In Prince v. Kennedy, 3 Cal. App. 404, 85 P. 859, the court says:

"The burden is on the party alleging an affirmative defense to prove it."

To the same effect, see Bettens v. Hoover, 12 Cal. App. 313, 107 P. 329.

We have examined the case of Scott v. Wood, 81 Cal. 398, 22 P. 871, relied upon by appellant, but we do not think it decisive of the case at bar, for the reason that the facts and pleadings in that case are to be distinguished from the present case in many respects. Under all the circumstances of this case, we find no error in the instructions as to burden of proof, especially in view of the fact that the court summed up the instructions as follows:

"Going over practically the same thing again, if you find that no contract was entered into between Mr. Meserve and the Rindge Company on the 31st day of July, 1914, as alleged in defendant's answer, and that plaintiff is entitled to recover payment beyond the $7,500 paid, then, and in such event, plaintiff in this case is entitled to a verdict at your hands for such amount as would be a reasonable fee to have been charged by Mr. Meserve for all of the services rendered by him, crediting thereon the $7,500, and the other amount that I have told you to credit, and figure in the interest on the amount you find up to date."

In this case the contract of employment was admitted, and the jury was instructed that the burden rests upon the plaintiff to prove his services and the value of his services.

[8-10] It is next claimed that the court erred in its instructions as to interest. The jury was instructed that if they found for plaintiff they should allow interest from January 22, 1917. The instruction was clearly erroneous. No interest is allowable on a quantum meruit prior to decision of the case. Macomber v. Bigelow, 123 Cal. 532, 56 P. 449. The question was raised on the motion for new trial. The court stated that he was satisfied from the authorities presented by appellant that interest was not allowable, to which Mr. Meserve acceded and stated "that $17,200 figured at 7 per cent. per annum between the two dates named in the instruction brings it to a cent"; whereupon the court ruled:

"The motion for a new trial will be granted unless the plaintiff consents to reduce the judgment to $17,200."

Mr. Meserve then consented and the court denied the motion for new trial. No objection was then made by appellant to the amount of the reduction in the judgment. The reduction of the judgment in the sum of $8,595.22 cannot be injurious to appellant. If the jury allowed interest, then the reduction was proper. If the jury did not allow interest, appellant has not been injured. Where interest has been allowed by the jury improperly, a remittitur of interest will cure the error. 29 Cyc. 1024, and cases cited. Neither was the erroneous instruction for the allowance of interest in conflict with the instructions restricting the damages to be allowed to the amount prayed for in the complaint, since the jury was told to add the interest to whatever amount they found.

[11] Appellant complains of the following instruction:

"The evidence given by Mrs. Rindge and Mr. Fred Rindge of a claimed subsequent conversation between them and Mr. Meserve would not and could not make a contract such as is pleaded in this case, but can be considered only by you as bearing upon the question of whether or not the statement made by Mr. Scotton, as to the conversations testified to by him as having occurred with Mr. Meserve, were or were not true, because the conversations which Mrs. Rindge and Mr. Fred Rindge claim were had in their presence were subsequent to the time that defendant admits the check was delivered to Mr. Meserve, and such conversations with Mr. Meserve, if they occurred, thus made subsequent to such time and subsequent to the payment to Mr. Meserve of the $6,250, would and could not have the effect of creating a contract between Mr. Meserve and the defendant, and are to be considered by you only as evidence bearing upon the question of whether or not the testimony of Mr. Scotton, as to the conversation which he had with Mr. Meserve, was or was not true."

We find no error in the foregoing instruction. It was alleged in the answer that the express contract between Mr. Meserve and the defendant company to limit the fee to $6,250 was made on or about July 28, 1914, at the time payment of the $6,250 was made. The conversations with Mrs. Rindge and Fred Rindge, mentioned in the instruction, occurred about two months thereafter, and were admissible only for the purposes stated in the instruction.

We have reviewed the many other objections of appellant to the instructions of the court and its rulings during the trial, but find no prejudicial error therein.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

JENSEN v. SPRIGG. (Civ. 5492.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 21, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 19, 1927.

1. Trial ⇐139(1)—That court would grant new trial on motion does not authorize directed verdict.

Verdict may not be directed merely because evidence is such that court would grant new trial on motion, as court may do so, even where there is substantial evidence to sustain verdict, if it believes that evidence preponderates against verdict.

2. Trial ⇐139(1)—Directed verdict is proper when evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain contrary verdict.

Directed verdict is proper when evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain contrary verdict, in which case court would be compelled to order new trial and may do so on its own motion.

3. Negligence ⇐136(14)—Negligence is ordinarily question for jury.

Existence or nonexistence of negligence is ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by jury.

4. Trial ⇐139(1), 141—Court may direct verdict only where evidence is undisputed or so conclusive as to require court to set aside contrary verdict.

Court may withdraw case from jury and direct verdict, only where evidence is undisputed or so conclusive that court, in exercise of sound judicial discretion, would be compelled to set aside contrary verdict.

5. Limitation of actions ⇐199(1)—Court may direct verdict in action barred by statute.

Court may direct verdict for defendant, where action is barred by statute of limitations.

6. Limitation of actions ⇐104(2)—Attorney's failure to inform client of holding that remedy by personal judgment was lost because of bankruptcy order held not fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment tolling statute barring action for negligence, where he informed client of bankruptcy adjudication nearly three years before (Code Civ. Proc. § 339).

That attorney sued for negligence in handling claim, did not inform plaintiff, in letter answering inquiry as to facts regarding loss of appeal, that Supreme Court held that judgment would not run personally against debtor, because of order in bankruptcy, was not act of fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment, preventing discovery of negligence until short time before filing action, otherwise barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339, where attorney informed plaintiff nearly three years before that defendant was adjudged bankrupt.

7. Limitation of actions ⇐104(1)—To suspend statute until discovery of fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation, facts must be unknown to aggrieved party.

To suspend statute of limitations until discovery of facts constituting fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation, facts must be unknown to aggrieved party.

8. Limitation of actions § 55(3)—Cause of action for attorney's negligence, resulting in loss of remedy, accrues when delay results in injury to client.

Client's cause of action against attorney for loss of remedy by personal judgment because of neglect accrues when delay results in damages or injury to plaintiff.

9. Limitation of actions § 55(3)—Client's cause of action against attorney for negligence, resulting in loss of remedy by personal judgment because of bankruptcy order, accrued at time of adjudication, known to plaintiff over two years before bringing action (Code Civ. Proc. § 339).

Client's cause of action against attorney for negligent delay, resulting in loss of remedy by personal judgment because of order in bankruptcy, accrued at time of adjudication in bankruptcy, known to plaintiff over two years before beginning action, and hence was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339.

10. Limitation of actions § 100(8)—Client's failure to discover fraud or misrepresentation by attorney within time for bringing action for negligence may be excused (Code Civ. Proc. § 339).

Where confidential relationship, such as that between attorney and client, exists, failure to discover facts constituting fraud or misrepresentation by attorney, within time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 339, for bringing action for neglect of duty, may be excused.

11. Limitation of actions § 104(2)—Attorney's failure to notify client of fact, already known to latter, is not fraudulent concealment tolling statute barring action for negligence (Code Civ. Proc. § 339).

Attorney's failure to notify his client of fact already within his knowledge is not fraudulent concealment, preventing discovery of attorney's negligence in handling claim within time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 339, for bringing action.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by Lawrence Jensen against Patterson Sprigg, after whose death Rodney Searle Sprigg, as administrator of his estate, was substituted. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse George and Clarence S. Preston, both of San Diego, for appellant.

Wright & McKee, Fred O'Farrell, and Eugene Daney, all of San Diego, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment on an instructed verdict in favor of respondent in an action brought by appellant against respondent, an attorney at law, for alleged negligence in handling a claim placed in his hands for collection. Respondent in his answer denies the alleged negligence and as a separate defense sets up the statute of limitations.

It is charged in the action and urged by appellant in his brief on appeal the following acts as constituting the negligence complained of: (1) Delay in filing suit on the claim and pressing it to trial and final judgment; (2) failure to record and preserve the lien of plaintiff against the yacht in the custom house; (3) negligence in failing to require a bond sufficient in its provisions to protect plaintiff in a certain injunction proceeding to restrain the removal of the yacht from San Diego harbor and from the jurisdiction of the superior court of San Diego county; negligence in failing to take possession of said yacht when it was afterwards tendered to him in compliance with the conditions of said bond; negligence in thereafter attaching said vessel and failing to hold it under such attachment, thus waiving the conditions of said bond if they were still valid and had not been complied with by the tender of the vessel; and negligence in thereafter bringing suit upon said bond to collect the amount of plaintiff's claim and judgment, abandoning every other remedy; (4) negligence in failing to have execution issued upon the final judgment obtained on said claim, and allowing it to become dormant and unenforceable; and it is further alleged in the complaint and urged by appellant in his brief that the defendant by means of fraudulent concealment and misrepresentation prevented plaintiff from discovering his negligence and the resulting damage until July 30, 1920.

Appellant contends that he was only required to make prima facie proof of the facts constituting negligence, want of skill, and fraudulent concealment to entitle him to have his case submitted to the jury and was not required to make out a case by such a preponderance of the evidence as would compel the court to refuse to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial upon motion of the defendant, if the verdict had been in his favor.

[1-4] "The rule as to directed verdicts is not that a verdict may be directed whenever the evidence is such that upon motion the court would grant a new trial. The court may grant a new trial even when there is substantial evidence to sustain the verdict, if it believes that the evidence preponderates against the verdict. It is under compulsion to order a new trial, and may do so on its own motion when the evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain the verdict. This is the meaning of the language of Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 123 P. 267, where it is said that a directed verdict is proper 'whenever, upon the whole evidence, the judge would be compelled to set a contrary verdict aside as unsupported by the evidence.' Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 150, 155 P. 631. The existence or nonexistence of negligence is ordinaly a question of fact to be determined by a jury, and while the court may withdraw the case from the jury and direct a verdict, it can do so only where the evidence is undisputed, or is of such conclusive character that the court, in the exercise of sound judicial discretion, would be compelled to set aside a contrary verdict. Davis v. California St. C. R. Co., 105 Cal. 131, 38 P. 647; Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 123 P. 267; Diamond v. Weyerhaeuser, 178 Cal. 541, 174 P. 38." Duggan v. Forderer (Cal. App.) 249 P. 533.

[5] Paralleling the facts in the instant case with the law quoted we incline to the view that the trial court in the exercise of sound judicial discretion was justified in directing the verdict for the defendant. It is, however, unnecessary to review the evidence on this question, for in our opinion the action was barred by the statute of limitations, and, if so, the right of the court to direct the verdict cannot be questioned.

Under section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a cause of action against an attorney for neglect of duty in the management of an action is barred at the expiration of two years after the neglect occurred. Hays v. Ewing, 70 Cal. 127, 11 P. 602; Boyer v. Barrows, 166 Cal. 757, 138 P. 354.

[6] Appellant concedes, in fact, he alleges in his complaint that the acts or remissions complained of which form the basis for his action would have been barred by the statute, but for the fact that respondent by means of fraudulent concealment and misrepresentation prevented him from discovering the alleged negligence until July 30, 1920, a short time prior to his filing the action.

In support of his contention in this respect appellant has directed our attention to various appeals taken from the superior court of San Diego county from judgments in cases in which appellant was represented by respondent as his attorney and to the facts and findings in such cases, which by stipulation are made a part of the record. These cases show the litigation carried on and the actions prosecuted for appellant by respondent in an attempt to collect a claim due appellant from one Fred Dorr for building the yacht Yankee Girl. Our attention is particularly directed to Jensen v. Dorr, 159 Cal. 742, 748, 116 P. 553, 556, from which appellant quotes the following language:

"While plaintiff may have been entitled to enforce the liens on the vessel regardless of the bankruptcy proceedings, he was not entitled to a personal judgment against the defendant in the face of such a decree, and * * * it cannot be doubted that it is an abuse of discretion for a trial court to refuse leave to a defendant to set up by supplemental answer a bankruptcy discharge obtained subsequent to the commencement of the action, as a bar to any personal judgment, where proper application is made therefor within a reasonable time after obtaining such discharge."

As proof of the concealment of all knowledge of this decision and of the loss of appellant's remedy by personal judgment against Dorr and other acts complained of, appellant relies on and directs our attention only to a letter written by respondent to appellant under date July 13, 1911, and the following testimony of appellant, Jensen:

"Q. Now, Mr. Jensen, did Mr. Sprigg ever show you a copy of this judgment—do you remember whether he ever showed you a copy of this judgment, or did he just state to you what the judgment was—the judgment of Judge Sloane? A. I never saw a copy.

"Q. You never saw a copy of it? A. No.

"Q. Did you or did you not as a matter of fact know that that judgment didn't run personally against Fred Dorr? A. I did not.

"Q. You did not know it. Did he ever tell you you didn't have personal judgment against Fred Dorr? A. No."

Respondent's letter of July 13, 1911, referred to and addressed to appellant, Lawrence Jensen, is as follows:

"I am in receipt of your favor of July 5th, and note its contents. You ask me what I propose to do with regard to Yankee Girl. I thought I made myself plain when you were here in regard to this. The Supreme Court held that my complaint was perfectly good, but that the superior court erred in ruling that the supplemental answer attempted to be filed by counsel for Dorr should have been filed. The Supreme Court also held that we should have proved that the various claims were assigned to you. Otherwise our judgment would have been perfectly good. I propose to proceed to trial on the same complaint and make this proof as required by the Supreme Court. I have no doubt but that judgment obtained with this proof will be sufficient and the lien we claim against Yankee Girl is perfectly valid. On last Saturday Mr. Carroll Allen came to San Diego, as he told me, with a view of settling the case. We had a conference on Sunday, at which time I stated to him if he would pay me $4,000, we would settle the case. This offer I made conditional upon your accepting the same. He stated to me that he believed the case should be settled, and that he would return to Los Angeles, consult with Mr. Lynn Helm, the referee in bankruptcy, and that he believed a settlement could be had. * * *

Appellant claims that this letter was both negative concealment and positive misrepresentation—that it shows on its face that it was in answer to an inquiry by letter from appellant as to the facts regarding the loss of his appeal; that the most important thing in the decision of the Supreme Court affecting appellant's interests was that appellant by virtue of the order in bankruptcy had lost his right to a personal judgment against Dorr.

The fact that respondent did not tell appellant in his letter of July 13, 1911, that the Supreme Court held that by virtue of the order in bankruptcy the judgment did not run personally against Dorr was not an act of fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment, because, as testified to by appellant himself, respondent informed him in 1908 that Dorr was adjudged a bankrupt.

"Q. Mr. Jensen, you knew that Mr. Fred Dorr was declared a bankrupt some time in 1908, didn't you? A. Yes.

"Q. That information was not kept from you? A. No; Mr. Dorr told me himself he was going broke.

"Q. Mr. Sprigg told you, too, didn't he? A. Yes."

Respondent could not well be held responsible for concealing a fact from his client, which his client for nearly three years had known and concerning which he himself had informed him.

In October, 1909, respondent made a motion in the superior court in the action of Jensen v. Dorr for a judgment on the pleadings. About the same time Dorr asked permission to file a supplemental answer setting up the fact that he had been adjudged a bankrupt, which was denied, and respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings was granted. This judgment was reversed on May 12, 1911.

[7] Respondent's statement in his letter that the Supreme Court held "that the superior court erred in ruling that the supplemental answer attempted to be filed by the counsel for Dorr should have been filed" was evidently inadvertently made in dictating the letter, as he follows with a statement that, "I have no doubt but that judgment obtained with this proof will be sufficient and the lien we claim against Yankee Girl is perfectly valid," and, further, that he was conferring through Mr. Carroll Allen with Mr. Lynn Helm, the referee in bankruptcy, attempting to effect a settlement. If he were relying on a personal judgment against Dorr and the loss of such personal judgment was vital, why should he be concerned about the lien on Yankee Girl? And unless Dorr was bankrupt, why should he be trying to effect a settlement with the referee of his bankrupt estate? In any event, appellant could not be misled by the statement complained of, for he knew Dorr was a bankrupt; that he was declared to be such in 1908. He was informed of such fact by both Dorr and respondent. In order to suspend the statute until the discovery of the facts constituting the fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation, the facts must be unknown to the aggrieved party. Whitten v. Dabney, 171 Cal. 621, 154 P. 312; Beal v. Smith, 46 Cal. App. 271, 189 P. 341.

[8, 9] Appellant urges that "plaintiff's cause of action for the loss of this remedy by personal judgment against Dorr, resulting from the neglect of defendant, accrued when the delay resulted in damages or injury to plaintiff," and cites Lally v. Kuster, 177 Cal. 783, 171 P. 961, in support of his contention. We agree with appellant in his contention, but it is apparent that the loss of his remedy by personal judgment against Dorr and the damage or injury resulting from such loss accrued when Dorr was adjudged a bankrupt, and that as appellant had knowledge of such adjudication in 1908, the statute had run before he began his action.

[10, 11] Unquestionably, where confidential relationship, such as the relationship between attorney and client, exists, failure to discover the facts constituting fraud or misrepresentation may be excused, but we know of no authority holding that failure on the part of an attorney to notify his client of a fact already within his client's knowledge is fraudulent concealment.

In our opinion, the action was barred by the statute of limitations, and being barred no error was committed in directing a verdict for defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

In action for damages for death of plaintiff's husband by automobile while crossing street, instruction that deceased was under duty of looking along street before crossing to center line of street to ascertain whether vehicles were approaching, where there was total absence of any evidence showing conduct of deceased during period covered by instruction, held fatal error.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐705(10)—Only ordinary care is required of pedestrian crossing street.

Ordinary care is all that is required of pedestrian in crossing the street.

6. Municipal corporations ⇐705(10)—In determining whether pedestrian used ordinary care in crossing street, jury should consider location, traffic, view and other facts.

In determining whether pedestrian used such due care as is commensurate with apparent present dangers in crossing street, jury should consider location involved, existing state of traffic, opportunity for obtaining clear view of street from every direction whence approaching vehicles might endanger an attempt to cross street, presence of obstructions to the view, such as buildings, passing cars, driving storms, clouds of dust, or darkness, and other facts.

7. Municipal corporations ⇐705(2)—Neither pedestrians nor vehicles have superior right to use of street.

Neither pedestrians nor vehicles have any superior right to use of public street; each must exercise privilege of its use with due regard to the other.

8. Municipal corporations ⇐705(1)—Degree of prudence required of pedestrians and drivers of vehicles must be determined from facts surrounding particular case.

Degree of prudence required of both pedestrians and drivers of vehicles in using public streets must ordinarily be determined from facts surrounding each particular case.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Eunice E. Kinnear, administratrix of the estate of Charles Albert Kinnear, deceased, against Lorenzo Martinelli. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Haswell & Martin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Cooley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a verdict in favor of defendant, in an action for damages for the death of the husband of plaintiff which occurred as the result of coming in contact with an automobile while crossing a city street.

The plaintiff complains of the giving of a certain instruction, and the refusal of others.

March 7, 1924, about 9:30 at night, the defendant, in company with an associate, was driving his open Buick automobile easterly along Mission street in the city of San Francisco. They were going to the Ferry Building, and had reached a point in the vicinity of Acton street, traveling at the rate of 15 or 18 miles per hour, along a course midway between the most easterly rail of the track and the easterly curbing. Suddenly they observed midway in the block, some 20 or 25 feet distant a pedestrian hastening across Mission street from the westerly to the easterly side where his car was parked. He had just passed the easterly rails of the track, and apparently neither heard nor saw the approaching machine. The street was poorly lighted at this point. The lights from the automobile disclosed objects only 50 or 60 feet ahead of the machine. There were no other vehicles or pedestrians in sight. There were no witnesses to the accident, except the occupants of the defendant's machine, and the evidence is uncontradicted to the effect that the defendant immediately upon seeing the pedestrian sounded the horn and applied his foot brake. There is no evidence of any attempt to use the emergency brake. The deceased was struck by the left front fender of the machine, which was badly damaged; the left plate glass windshield on the machine was shattered from the impact; the machine ran some 40 feet after the brake was applied before it was stopped. The body of the deceased lay upon the easterly rail of the track from 10 to 20 feet from the rear of the car. He was unconscious, and was taken by the defendant to the hospital. An immediate examination by the hospital physician disclosed the fact that the injured man was suffering from a basal fracture of the skull; a broken fibula of the right leg; and numerous bruises and contusions about the face and head. He was also bleeding from the nose and ears. There was no evidence of liquor on his breath. He never recovered consciousness, and died from the effects of these injuries a few days later.

The uncontradicted evidence of expert witnesses indicates from actual experiments that a similar Buick automobile traveling on a level pavement at the rate of 20 miles an hour could be stopped within 17 feet by the application of the foot brake alone; that the same machine traveling at the rate of 15 miles per hour could be stopped within the space of 12 feet; and that properly adjusted headlights should disclose objects 200 feet in advance of the car.

At the request of defendant the following instruction was given to the jury:

"I instruct you that, in the exercise of ordinary care for his own protection, the deceased was under the duty of looking to the south on Mission street before he crossed to the east of the center line of Mission street in order to ascertain whether any vehicles were approaching from the south, and, if so, whether any such vehicle was within such a distance as would make it hazardous for the deceased to attempt to cross in front of such vehicle. If you find from the evidence that the deceased negligently failed to use such ordinary care for his own safety and protection, and that such failure, if any, proximately contributed to the accident, then your verdict must be in favor of the defendant."

This instruction was given the full literal force of its language by a refusal to give the following instructions requested by plaintiff: (a) "I instruct you that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, there is a legal presumption that the deceased used due care on his part"; and (b) "I instruct you that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the law presumes that the deceased did everything that a reasonable, prudent man would have done under the same circumstances for the protection of his own safety."

[1] Plaintiff's last two instructions, which were refused, correctly stated the law (Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. Min. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 P. 714; Blackwell v. American Film Co., 189 Cal. 689, 698, 209 P. 999), and were proper instructions under the evidence of this case, for the reason that no human witness saw the deceased until after he had passed the center of Mission street, and suddenly appeared to the defendant 20 or 25 feet ahead of him easterly of the rails on his way across the street. For aught that the evidence shows, and, for aught that any living person knows, the deceased may have stopped and cautiously looked up and down Mission street before he entered the street, and before he attempted to cross the center line thereof. For aught that the evidence shows, he may have seen the defendant's car approaching at such a distance that, in the exercise of all due care, he would have been justified in assuming he had ample time to cross the street ahead of the machine, if it had been running at a lawful rate of speed. Since no witness testified, and no one knows what the deceased did for his own protection before he reached the center of Mission street, it was particularly appropriate, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the jury should have been instructed that the law presumed that he acted with due care and caution. He was entitled to the benefit of this presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

[2-4] The first instruction above quoted was given at the request of defendant, and was addressed to his special affirmative plea of contributory negligence. The burden is upon the defendant to prove affirmatively contributory negligence of the deceased, unless it is admitted by the pleading or established by the evidence of plaintiff. 19 Cal. Jur. 687, § 119. There is absolutely no evidence in the record as to whether the deceased did or did not look south along Mission street "before he crossed to the east of the center line" thereof—the presumption of law in this particular case is that he did so look to the south. Instructions should be based upon evidence actually adduced or upon reasonable inference from the evidence disclosed by the record.

24 Cal. Jur. 830, § 95; Risdon v. Yates, 145 Cal. 210, 78 P. 641; Hirshberg v. Strauss, 64 Cal. 272, 28 P. 235. The only evidence in this record with respect to the conduct of the deceased was that he was first seen easterly of the rails of the track walking rapidly in an easterly direction across the street, and that he did not look up while the defendant's car traversed the intervening space of 20 or 25 feet until he was struck. To conclude, from this circumstance, that he had therefore not looked easterly along Mission street before he reached the center thereof is mere speculation, and contrary to the presumption of law. We are of the opinion that the giving of this instruction under the facts of this particular case where there is a total absence of any evidence to show the conduct of the deceased during the period covered by the instruction is fatal error. The burden was on the defendant to show that the deceased failed to look easterly along Mission street "before he crossed to the east of the center line"; defendant failed to meet this requirement; there was no evidence in the record of the conduct of the deceased at that particular time; the presumption of law refutes this charge of negligence. The instruction is therefore not applicable to the facts and is erroneous.

In the case of Nickell v. Rosenfield (Cal. App.) 255 P. 760, the facts were similar in most respects to those of the instant case. A rehearing of that case was denied by the Supreme Court. A judgment for the defendant was reversed for the erroneous giving of the following instruction:

"In crossing Figueroa street, it was the duty of plaintiff in the exercise of ordinary care for her own protection to look to the left and to the right as well as ahead of her, and to particularly direct her attention to her left while she was crossing the easterly side of Figueroa street, and this duty was not fully performed by merely looking to the left as she stepped from the curb to the street, but the duty to exercise ordinary care in this respect was imperative upon her during all the time that she was crossing; and, therefore, if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff failed to perform this duty, and that her failure so to do was a proximate cause of the accident, and the injuries sustained by her, then your verdict must be in favor of the defendant. * * *"

The vice of the foregoing instruction which was pointed out by the court is that it attempts to specify in too great detail, as a matter of law, the precise acts of a pedestrian in attempting to cross a street, which would constitute negligence. The court there said:

"The placing of too high a duty upon plaintiff might leave the jury generally impressed that the degree of care incumbent upon her for her own protection was far greater than the law required."

[5, 6] Ordinary care is all that is required of a pedestrian in crossing a street. The question of the exercise of ordinary care is largely a question of fact to be determined by the jury from all the circumstances surrounding the particular case under consideration. In determining whether a pedestrian used such due care as is commensurate with apparent present dangers, the jury should consider the location involved, the existing state of the traffic, the opportunity for obtaining a clear view of the street from every direction whence approaching vehicles might endanger an attempt to cross the street, the presence of obstructions to the view such as buildings, passing cars, driving storms, clouds of dust, or darkness, and, from these and all other facts and circumstances present, determine whether the particular pedestrian used that degree of care which would be required of an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances.

In Burgesser v. Bullock's, 190 Cal. 673, 214 P. 649, it is said:

"The question of whether or not the pedestrian is negligent in crossing a street is one which, in the absence of express statutes regulating his conduct, must ordinarily be left to the jury, for the conduct of an ordinarily prudent person under such circumstances must be largely determined by the condition of the traffic at the particular time and place in question." Gett v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 192 Cal. 621, 627, 221 P. 376.

[7, 8] The rule is firmly established that neither pedestrians nor vehicles have any superior right to the use of a public street. Mayer v. Anderson, 36 Cal. App. 740, 173 P. 174. Each must exercise the privilege of its use with due regard to the other, and subject to such reasonable restrictions as may be imposed. The degree of prudence required of both pedestrians and drivers of vehicles must ordinarily be determined from the facts surrounding each particular case.

In support of the foregoing objectionable instruction given to the jury in this case the respondent relies upon Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493; Klusman v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 190 Cal. 441, 213 P. 38; Chrissinger v. Southern Pacific Co., 169 Cal. 619, 149 P. 175; Davis v. Breuner Co., 167 Cal. 683, 140 P. 586; Ogden v. Lee, 61 Cal. App. 493, 215 P. 122; Mayer v. Anderson, supra; and Moss v. H. R. Boynton Co. 44 Cal. App. 474, 186 P. 631. None of these cases are predicated on facts similar to the one at bar. Based upon the particular facts of the respective cases, they merely stated that in crossing a street congested with traffic a pedestrian "must look both ways," and "on neither side of a congested street is one relieved from exercising ordinary care for his own protection," and "it was a duty devolving upon plaintiff, as the act of an ordinarily prudent man, immediately before placing himself in a position of danger, to look in the direction from which danger was to be expected"; that this requirement "was a continuous duty, not met by looking once, and then looking away"; "that a pedestrian must be alert and watchful, and must look up and down the street"; and that it is not sufficient for one to merely "look straight ahead" upon entering a danger zone of a congested street. In each of these cases, however, there was evidence upon which the court was warranted in making use of such declarations.

Finally, the respondent cited with confidence in support of this objectionable instruction, the concurring statement of the Supreme Court in denying a rehearing in the case of Finkle v. Tait, 55 Cal. App. 425, 432, 203 P. 1031, 1034, in which a directed verdict in favor of the defendant was affirmed. The Supreme Court said:

"It [the accident] occurred after dark on a public street; the headlights of the automobile were lighted and would have been plainly visible to him [the plaintiff] if he had looked. * * * The only evidence on the subject shows that the headlight was in good order and that it was clearly visible at a considerable distance. It follows, therefore, that he either failed to take the trouble to look for automobiles on that side of the street as he crossed, or that he saw the automobile and carelessly walked in front of it. There was evidence that he was carrying a box of raisins twenty-three inches long, thirteen inches wide, and ten inches thick on his shoulder in such a position that it may have obscured his vision. If that was the case, then it was negligence for him to attempt to cross the street with his vision obstructed in that manner. * * *

The opinion of the appellate court, which was approved in this case, was written chiefly upon the theory that plaintiff failed to establish proof of any negligence on the part of the defendant. In denying the rehearing, the Supreme Court, however, does assert that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, and stresses the fact that at the time of the accident he carried upon his shoulder a box, which the court apparently assumed obscured his view, and the carrying of which under such circumstances, might constitute negligence. We do not understand that the Supreme Court meant to infer that, merely because a pedestrian was struck, while crossing a street at night, by an automobile with lights in good condition, that therefore the pedestrian must have seen the machine, and hence was guilty of negligence. Clearly, this would be speculation, and would be usurping the province of the jury. But what the court did say, and what seems entirely logical, was that a pedestrian crossing a street in the dark, with his view obscured by a box which he carried on his shoulder, would be guilty of negligence under the particular facts of that case.

But under no circumstances can that case furnish authority in support of the problem involved in the instant case, for in the Finkle Case the defendant was not deprived by the refusal of appropriate instructions of the benefit of the presumption of law to the effect that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, he was deemed to have acted with reasonable prudence. Nor was an instruction given in the Finkle Case, based upon a total absence of evidence, charging the deceased with contributory negligence for the omission of an act, the burden of proving which rested on the defendant.

Because of error in the giving and refusing of the instructions heretofore referred to, we are of the opinion that the judgment should be reversed. It is so ordered.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

4. Mechanics' liens § 281(5)—In action to foreclose mechanics' lien, evidence held to sustain finding that owner's alleged agent was not such agent that his knowledge of improvement bound owner (Code Civ. Proc. § 1192).

In action to foreclose mechanics' lien, where it was claimed that the owner had notice of the work through his agent and that his interest in the premises was liable because he did not file notice of nonresponsibility under Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, evidence held to sustain finding that his alleged agent was not such agent that his knowledge of the improvement would bind the owner.

5. Mechanics' liens § 72—That broker leased premises held not to make knowledge of improvement for which lien was claimed binding on owner (Code Civ. Proc. § 1192).

In action to foreclose mechanics' lien claimed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, the fact that owner's broker had leased premises to tenant held not to make broker's knowledge of performance of work for the tenant for which lien was claimed, acquired on subsequent visit to collect rent, binding on the owner.

6. Mechanics' liens § 72—Knowledge of improvement for which lien was claimed, acquired by one calling to collect rent, held not chargeable to owner (Code Civ. Proc. § 1192).

In action to foreclose mechanics' lien claimed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, knowledge of the improvement acquired by one calling to collect rent at the request of the owner's bookkeeper held not chargeable to the owner.

7. Principal and agent § 178(1)—Principal is chargeable only with such knowledge of agent as pertains to subject-matter of agency (Civ. Code, § 2315).

In order for a principal to be bound by the knowledge of a fact by his agent, the fact must arise from or be connected with the subject-matter of the agency, under Civ. Code, § 2315, providing that agent has such authority as principal confers upon him.

8. Mechanics' liens § 55(1)—Statute providing for mechanics' lien against owner's interest for improvements with his knowledge is not to be extended by judicial construction (Code Civ. Proc. § 1192).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, providing that certain improvements with knowledge of the owner of the premises shall be held to have been done at the instance of the owner and that his interest shall be subject to mechanics' lien unless he give notice that he will not be responsible, is based on the doctrine of estoppel, which is not to be extended by judicial construction.

9. Estoppel § 118—Estoppel is not favored and must be clearly proved.

An estoppel is not favored by the courts, and clear proof thereof is necessary.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action to foreclose mechanic's lien brought by F. A. Lorenz against A. F. Rousseau and another. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Orville C. Pratt, Jr., of San Francisco, and George F. Jones, of Oroville, for appellant.

Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco (William T. Sweigert, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. Respondent A. F. Rousseau was the owner of certain premises on Market street in San Francisco. The Mother Goose Confection Company was the lessee in possession of the premises and had engaged appellant, F. A. Lorenz, to perform certain alterations and installation work. The work was performed by appellant, but was never paid for by the Mother Goose Confection Company, which had in the meantime become insolvent. Appellant filed his claim of lien upon the premises and subsequently brought this action to foreclose the lien against respondent, the owner of the property. It is not contended that respondent had anything to do with the work, that he ever met the appellant contractor, or that he had any personal knowledge of the work being done. It is, however, claimed that one George H. McCarthy had knowledge of the work being performed upon the premises and that McCarthy was such an agent of respondent Rousseau as to make the knowledge of McCarthy his knowledge.

[1] Appellant urges that:

"The sole point involved is whether or not the respondent Rousseau, who owns the building on which appellant's work was admittedly done under a contract with a tenant in possession, had actual or constructive notice of such work during its progress. If he had, he should have filed a notice of nonresponsibility under section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or else he must suffer his interest in the building to be subjected to a lien for the value of appellant's work done thereon."

It would appear, however, from the record that there are two points involved instead of one, as suggested by appellant. One, did McCarthy himself have knowledge of the work being done? and the other, if McCarthy did have knowledge of the work, was he such an agent of respondent that knowledge by him would bind respondent? Obviously, the question of the agency of McCarthy is important only in so far as it assumes that McCarthy himself had knowledge. On this latter question there is a conflict in the evidence. Appellant testified that he saw McCarthy around the premises where he did the work at least a half dozen times. Mr. Holland, the tenant, a witness called on behalf of plaintiff, testified that McCarthy came to the premises two or three times while the work was in progress to collect the rent, while McCarthy himself testified that he did not believe he went to the premises until the work was finished; that his first recollection of the place was that it was all finished up; that Mr. Holland called his attention to some fellow who was painting in the gallery; that he saw no work performed, excepting some painters painting "Mother Goose" rhymes.

This testimony of McCarthy that he had no knowledge of any work being done on the premises until "it was all finished up" and that the only work he saw being done then was the painting of some "Mother Goose" rhymes, even assuming McCarthy to be the agent of respondent Rousseau, is sufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court "that at all the times herein mentioned the said defendant Rousseau had no knowledge and notice, or knowledge or notice of the making of said improvements, installations, and repairs."

[2, 3] The rule is well settled that when a finding is based upon a conflict in the evidence the appellate court will not disturb such finding on appeal. It is also well settled that findings must be so construed as to support rather than to defeat the judgment (Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 31 P. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257; Leist v. Dierssen, 4 Cal. App. 634, 88 P. 812; Vasey v. Campbell, 4 Cal. App. 451, 88 P. 509).

[4] On the question of McCarthy's authority as an agent of respondent Rousseau, the testimony of Rousseau may be summarized as follows: McCarthy was an independent real estate broker; Rousseau's building was vacant, and McCarthy received permission to put a sign on the building in question. The renting or leasing was an open proposition, Rousseau having no exclusive agent. Seeing the sign, Holland (the tenant) came to McCarthy about leasing the premises. McCarthy had no authority to lease or contract for Rousseau in any manner whatever. He did not have charge of the building. Even when taking a deposit from Holland he took it subject to the acceptance of Rousseau. He went to Rousseau, who prepared the lease. He took the lease to Holland for his signature. He then returned the lease to Rousseau for his signature. McCarthy was paid a commission for his services by Rousseau. Holland went into possession. Subsequent to the closing to the lease the bookkeeper asked McCarthy to go over to the building and collect the rent. McCarthy was not a regular rent collecting agent. He went, however, to collect the rent only, and was unable to do that. He neither had nor pretended to have authority to do anything else with regard to the premises and had no authority to order or authorize any repairs or improvements. Rousseau was an extensive realty operator and had no exclusive agent. McCarthy was merely one of a number of brokers active in seeking tenants for his properties. At the time the building was leased to the Mother Goose Confection Company other signs than McCarthy's were put up—it is hard to say how many. Almost every large real estate business in town leased his property or had signs on it at different times. Coldwell, Cornwall & Banker had the most signs; Mr. McCarthy was long in the minority; Madison & Burke and Von Rhein and Center & Spader rented property for him. Even if McCarthy did have knowledge of the work, this evidence is sufficient to sustain the conclusion that he was not such an agent of respondent Rousseau that knowledge by him would bind Rousseau.

[5, 6] To say that McCarthy, simply because he acted as a broker in leasing the particular premises, could afterwards bind Rousseau by knowledge gained on a subsequent visit to the premises to collect rent, is not tenable. If he could, so also could the numerous other agents who performed a like service for Rousseau. As to the point now discusse the question seems simply to be: Can knowledge of improvements being made on certain premises acquired by one who is merely requested to call and collect rent be imputed to the owner so as to bind the owner under the provisions of section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure? Both authority and reason answer that it cannot.

In Wieboldt v. Best Brewing Co., 163 Ill. App. 246, the court says:

"The knowledge of an agent can be imputed to the principal only when it relates to facts within the scope of the agency [citing authorities]. The only authority Haberer & Snow Company had to act for appellee was that given in the lease that was assigned to Westendorf, which was to receive the rents from Fabish, Kramer and Dumas up to the time they assigned their lease and after that from their assignee, Westendorf. They had no authority to receive rents from any one else or to consent to the change of the terms of the lease, or to a substitution of tenants or occupants. Whatever knowledge they acquired, therefore, as to who were occupying the premises or how, to whom, or when the rents were being paid by the occupants, other than Westendorf himself, was in relation to facts wholly outside of the scope of their authority as agents of appellee, and their knowledge of such matters cannot be imputed to him."

In Renton, Holmes & Co. v. Monnier, 77 Cal. 449, 19 P. 820, the court held that notice to the owner's architect of the contractor's assignment of his claims for payment under his contract was not notice to the owner, the court saying:

"Agencies are general or special, and an agent has such authority as the principal actually or ostensibly confers upon him (Civ. Code, § 2315). In this case it is not claimed that the architect had any other authority than that expressly conferred upon him by the written contract for the construction of the building."

[7] It is elementary that the principal can only be charged with knowledge of the agent, when such knowledge is of matters pertaining to the particular transaction in which the agent is authorized to act. Second National Bank v. Curren, 36 Iowa, 555. "Not being her agent in any manner connected with the purchase or payment of materials, the architect's knowledge, if any he had, that these were being obtained of plaintiff, was not chargeable to the owner." Chicago Lumber & Coal Co. v. Garmer, 132 Iowa, 282, 109 N. W. 780.

In the instant case it would be a departure from the established rule and do violence to the reason on which it is based to hold that knowledge of an ordinary rent collector that work is being done on certain premises is knowledge that is imputed to the owner and binding upon him under section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In order to bind the principal the fact or knowledge concerning such fact must arise from or be connected with the subject-matter of the agency. Ren- ton, Holmes & Co. v. Monnier, supra. Notice to an agent is not notice to the principal unless such knowledge is of a matter concerning which the agent has authority. Alabama Western R. Co. v. Bush, 182 Ala. 113, 62 So. 89; Moon Bros. Carriage Co. v. Devenish, 42 Wash. 415, 85 P. 17, 7 Ann. Cas. 649; Strauch v. May, 80 Minn. 343, 83 N. W. 156; Daly v. Arkadelphia Milling Co., 126 Ark. 405, 189 S. W. 1053; Green v. McDonald, 70 Vt. 372, 40 A. 1035; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Belcher, 88 Tex. 549, 32 S. W. 518; German Ins. Co. v. Goodfriend (Ky.) 97 S. W. 1098; Donham v. Hahn, 127 Mo. 439, 30 S. W. 134; Topliff v. Shadwell, 68 Kan. 317, 74 P. 1120; Collins & Toole v. Crews, 3 Ga. App. 238, 59 S. E. 727; Royle Mining Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 161 Mo. App. 185, 142 S. W. 438.

[8, 9] Counsel for appellant urges that it was "the duty of the court below to stretch rather than constrict the scope of McCarthy's agency when it was seeking to infer from his admitted functions what his authority, or lack of authority, might be to receive notice of improvements on respondent's behalf," and cites us to Gentle v. Britton, 158 Cal. 332, 111 P. 9; Harmon Lumber Co. v. Brown, 165 Cal. 197, 131 P. 368; Allen v. Wilson, 178 Cal. 678, 174 P. 661; and Western Well Works v. Cal. Farms Co., 60 Cal. App. 756, 214 P. 491, in support of his contention. In our opinion the cases cited do not establish the principle contended for, but, on the contrary, Allen v. Wilson and Gentle v. Britton, referring specially to section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, hold that this section is based upon the doctrine of estoppel, and it is well settled that estoppel is not favored and must clearly be proved. Franklin v. Merida, 35 Cal. 558, 95 Am. Dec. 129. Furthermore, the tendency of the law is, not to extend the doctrine of imputed notice, but to keep it confined within narrow and necessary limits. Wittenbrock v. Parker, 102 Cal. 103, 36 P. 374, 27 L. R. A. 197, 41 Am. St. Rep. 172; Trentor v. Pothén, 46 Minn. 298, 49 N. W. 129, 24 Am. St. Rep. 225; Hargadine v. Krug, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 52, 96 N. W. 286.

In the cases cited by appellant the facts are not the same as they are here. In National Lumber Co. v. Whalley, 162 Cal. 224, 121 P. 729, the question of the scope or extent of an agency was not involved. In Pacific Lumber Co. v. Wilson, 6 Cal. App. 561, 92 P. 654, the agent whose knowledge of improvements was held to bind the owner was an agent with general authority to look after the business of the owner. In Jefferson v. Leithauser, 60 Minn. 251, 62 N. W. 277, the agent was an agent with authority to generally look after the particular property in question.

In our opinion there is no merit in the appeal. The judgment is affirmed.

BROWN et al. v. CITY COUNCIL OF CITY OF LONG BEACH et al. (Civ. 5033.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 4, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 3, 1927.

1. Certiorari ⇨70(5)—On appeal from order denying issuance of writ of certiorari, appellate court cannot decide merits of original controversy.

On appeal from an order of the superior court denying issuance of writ of certiorari to review acts of city council and others in connection with an annexation election, so far as decision by appellate court was concerned merits of original controversy were not involved.

2. Certiorari ⇨70(6)—On appeal from order denying writ of certiorari, all material facts well pleaded in petition must be presumed true.

On appeal from order denying issuance of writ of certiorari, all material facts well pleaded in petition for writ must, by appellate court, be presumed to be true.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨29(4)—Petition for writ of certiorari held to show city was not authorized to annex territory because of its uninhabitancy or noncontiguity (St. 1915, p. 305).

Petition for writ of certiorari to review acts of city council and others in connection with annexation election held to state facts showing that entire territory embraced within strip annexed could not be considered either as inhabited or as contiguous to any portion of area included within existing boundaries of city, and that city was not directly authorized to annex to itself such territory, under St. 1915, p. 305.

4. Corporations ⇨28(2)—“De facto corporation” may exist only where organizers have made colorable compliance with law authorizing formation of corporation.

A “de facto corporation” may exist only where its organizers, though failing in some particular, in good faith have attempted to comply, and have actually made colorable compliance, with requirements of valid law authorizing formation of corporation, and thereupon such organization has entered on transaction of authorized business of corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, De Facto Corporation.]

5. Statutes ⇨195—Inclusion of one thing in statute excludes others.

In construing statute, inclusion of one thing in statute excludes others.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨17—De facto corporation could not result from unauthorized annexation of noncontiguous uninhabited territory.

No corporation, de facto or otherwise, could result from acts of city council of Long Beach in attempting to annex a strip of noncontiguous uninhabited territory, if no law existed under provisions of which municipality of Long Beach might have reorganized in manner in which it attempted to do.

7. Evidence ⇨65—Intending reorganizers of municipal corporation were presumed to know law with reference to annexing new territory (St. 1915, p. 305).

Intending reorganizers of municipality of Long Beach were presumed to have known that unless territory sought to be annexed, within meaning of St. 1915, p. 305, was inhabited, and that it was either contiguous to boundaries of existing municipal corporation or contiguous to an inhabited and contiguous portion of territory proposed to be annexed to such municipality, so far as such uninhabited and noncontiguous territory was concerned, no corporate existence could be created, since every one is presumed to know the law.

8. Municipal corporations ⇨17—Attempted annexation of noncontiguous uninhabited territory held not to show good faith necessary to create municipal corporation de facto (St. 1915, p. 305).

Attempt, under facts alleged in petition for writ of certiorari, to reorganize city of Long Beach to include territory that was not inhabited and was neither contiguous to boundaries of existing municipal corporation nor contiguous to an inhabited and contiguous portion of territory proposed to be annexed, within meaning of St. 1915, p. 305, held not to show good faith which is essential to creation of municipal corporation de facto.

9. Municipal corporations ⇨17—No municipal corporation de facto came into existence by unauthorized annexation of territory, notwithstanding user.

Where there was no law under which municipal corporation was authorized to reorganize as it attempted to do, and where, in attempted reorganization, element of good faith was lacking, under facts alleged in petition for certiorari to review city council's acts, notwithstanding user by pretended corporation of corporate powers, no municipal corporation de facto came into legal existence.

10. Municipal corporations ⇨33(8)—Certiorari lies to review council's acts on petition for election on annexation of territory without jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. § 1068).

Where city council in acting on petition presented to it, praying for holding election for purpose of determining whether proposed new territory should be annexed to city, is exercising judicial function, and because of facts involved no jurisdiction exists in city council as to such territory, writ of certiorari will lie to review acts of city council, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068.

11. Certiorari ⇨70(5)—Denial of certiorari where facts tend to favor issuance is subject to review by appellate court.

Denial of writ of certiorari to review acts of city council in connection with annexation election where all facts tend in favor of issuance of writ is subject to review by appellate court, since in such circumstances principle of judicial discretion has no application.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. W. Guerin, Judge.

Application by A. C. Brown and others against the City Council of the City of Long Beach and others for a writ of certiorari to review the acts of the defendants in connection with an annexation election. From an order denying the writ, petitioners appeal. Reversed.

Bauer, Wright & MacDonald and Alexander MacDonald, all of Los Angeles, for appellant Barnes.

L. D. Uhlman, of Long Beach, for other appellants.

Bruce Mason, City Atty., and Denio & Hart, all of Long Beach, for respondents.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Lucius P. Green, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for City of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a petition for a writ of certiorari.

It appears that, in accordance with the provisions of the "Annexation Act of 1913," as amended (Stats. 1915, p. 305; Stats. 1917, p. 26), an "initial" ordinance was passed by the city council of the city of Long Beach by which an election was noticed and held, by virtue and in pursuance of which certain territory was presumably annexed to said city. Thereupon the appellants herein sought, but were refused by the Attorney General of this state, a writ of quo warranto for the purpose of testing the ultimate question of the validity of the annexation proceedings. Thereafter, by means of an application for a writ of certiorari, petitioners applied to the superior court for substantially the same relief. After a hearing upon such application the issuance of the writ was denied; whereupon the petitioners therein appealed to this court from the order of the superior court in the premises.

The record shows that the territory sought to be annexed, in addition to comprising a comparatively small area of an inhabited community, included therein a strip of land (commonly and hereinafter designated as a "shoe-string strip") 100 feet in width, which connected at one end thereof with one of the boundaries of the city of Long Beach, and extended therefrom in the same width, in an irregular line, encircling or encompassing an uninhabited territory of some 33 square miles, and finally again connecting with another of the boundaries of said city.

The law under which the proceedings herein were instituted and which authorizes the annexation by a city of territory lying contiguous to the municipality proposing such annexation is to be found in the Statutes of 1915, p. 305. The provision of such statute having an important bearing upon the decision of this matter is as follows:

"The boundaries of any municipal corporation may be altered and new territory annexed thereto, incorporated and included therein, and made a part thereof, upon proceedings being had and taken as in this act provided. Any such new territory so proposed to be annexed to a municipal corporation must be contiguous thereto. * * *

In addition to the statutory requirement that any "new territory" proposed to be annexed by a municipality must be "contiguous thereto," another prerequisite (under the procedure adopted by respondents), as determined by a judicial construction of existing statutes, is that such "new territory" must be inhabited. Capuchino Land Co. v. Board of Trustees, etc., 34 Cal. App. 239, 167 P. 178; People v. City of Lemoore, 37 Cal. App. 79, 174 P. 93; People v. City of Monterey Park, 40 Cal. App. 715, 181 P. 825.

The petition in the superior court for the writ of certiorari contains allegations which in their ultimate effect show that within the intent of the statute, and the decisions by the court of this state, in no proper sense could the entire territory embraced solely within the "shoe-string strip," which encompassed and imprisoned 33 square miles of unincorporated and uninhabited territory, be considered either as inhabited, or as contiguous to any portion of the area included within the existing boundaries of the city of Long Beach, or even as contiguous to that portion thereof proposed to be annexed which in reality was inhabited; also, that at no time did the city council of said city ever find, ascertain, or determine that such questioned territory was either inhabited, or that it was contiguous either to the city of Long Beach as then constituted, or contiguous to that portion of the admittedly inhabited area proposed to be annexed. Among other things, it also appears that the "shoe-string strip" sought to be annexed does not constitute a single body of territory lying contiguous to said city of Long Beach, or to territory contiguous thereto, but in fact, by reason of natural boundaries and diversity of uses, is composed of 82 separate and distinct parcels or tracts of land; that of said 82 parcels, on each of 72 parcels thereof no person resided, and as to the remaining 10 parcels none of them was inhabited by more than 10 persons; that in several of said 82 parcels the line of the "shoe-string strip" cut houses into two parts, and in other cases divided houses from other buildings on such parcels of land; and that some of the uninhabited parcels of land consisted of portions of rights of way of different railroad companies or of portions of county highways. However, it also inferentially appears that each of the connecting ends of the "shoe-string strip" is contiguous either to an existing boundary of the city of Long Beach, or to a parcel of "inhabited" territory.

[1, 2] This being an appeal from an order of the superior court denying the issuance of the writ of certiorari, so far as the decision by this court is concerned the merits of the original controversy are not here involved. The matter stands in a situation similar to that presented by a demurrer to a complaint. All the material facts well pleaded in the petition for the writ must by this court be presumed to be true.

The principles of law applicable to the situation presented by the assumed facts herein are considered in each of the cases of Capuchino Land Co. v. Board of Trustees, etc., 34 Cal. App. 239, 167 P. 178, People v. City of Lemoore, 37 Cal. App. 79, 174 P. 93, and People v. City of Monterey Park, 40 Cal. App. 715, 181 P. 825, and therein in effect it is ruled that no validity can attach to a proposed annexation by a city of new territory in the face of a situation such as it set forth in the petition and to which reference has been had herein.

In the Capuchino Case (34 Cal. App. 239, 167 P. 178) the territory proposed to be annexed consisted of two separate parcels, one of which was "inhabited" and contiguous to the boundaries of the city seeking the annexation, and the other parcel, although "uninhabited," adjoined the first parcel. It was held that in such circumstances the proceedings for annexation were invalid.

In the Lemoore Case (37 Cal. App. 79, 174 P. 93) the following language occurs:

"We consider it manifestly unjust and inequitable under the circumstances described by the complaint for the electors residing in the two inhabited parcels Nos. 4 and 9 to determine the annexation of the other parcels against the will of their owners."

In the case of People v. Monterey Park, 40 Cal. App. 715, 181 P. 825, where this court considered a situation in many respects similar to that presented herein, it is said, in part:

"On these facts it is too plain to admit any doubt that the annexation proceedings were on their face an attempt by the flimsiest subterfuge to treat as inhabited various uninhabited tracts of land, and to annex them to the city of Alhambra under the form of proceedings prescribed by a statute which applies solely to annexation of inhabited territory. It is likewise clear that such proceedings were a palpable fraud upon the inhabitants of the community through whose lands the cord of connection [likewise a 'shoe-string strip'] was run from the land adjoining Alhambra to the limits of the new sewer farm. The annexation petition showed on its face that several of the parcels included were public highways and that therefore they could not be inhabited territory."

[3] On the face of the record, therefore, we have the legally admitted facts that, as regards the provisions of the statute and the decisions of the courts of this state, the city of Long Beach was not directly authorized to annex to itself the territory included within the "shoe-string strip."

But the point is raised by respondents that the writ of quo warranto is the exclusive remedy, if any, that is available to the petitioners, and especially that certiorari will not lie in the instant case. Many authorities bearing generally upon the question are submitted by respondents in support of their contention. On the other hand, several other equally eminent and fully as persuasive authorities are cited by appellants which indicate that at least in the circumstances of the instant case certiorari is a proper remedy. As may hereinafter become apparent, a consideration of the appropriateness of either of such remedies, as applied generally to conditions of a nature similar to that here involved, becomes unnecessary.

It is conceded by both appellants and respondents that the act of adding new territory to a city amounts to a reincorporation of the municipal corporation. It is also at least inferentially admitted by respondents that as to the "shoe-string strip" herein involved, because of its state of uninhabitaney and its noncontiguity features, as hereinbefore referred to, a corporation de jure was impossible of organization. The result is that, as affecting such "shoe-string strip," the most that may possibly be claimed by respondents is that by the perfecting of the annexation proceedings in presumably attempted compliance with the provisions of the statute, and, by user, the municipal corporation acquired a de facto existence. With so much in mind, respondents urge that under the provisions of section 803 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 358 of the Civil Code the only remedy available to petitioners was by quo warranto, and that, by virtue of the refusal of the Attorney General of this state to institute such a proceeding, the petitioners had no standing in court and were entitled to no relief. The language of the statutes on which respondents thus rely is as follows:

"An action may be brought by the Attorney General, in the name of the people of this state, upon his own information, or upon a complaint of a private party, against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any public office, civil or military, or any franchise, or against any corporation, either de jure or de facto, which usurps, intrudes into or unlawfully holds or exercises any franchise, within this state. * * *" Section 803, Code Civ. Proc.

"* * * The due incorporation of any company claiming in good faith to be a corporation under this part, and doing business as such, or its right to exercise corporate powers, shall not be inquired into collaterally in any private suit to which such de facto corporation may be a party; but such inquiry may be had at the suit of the state on information of the Attorney General. * * *" Section 358, Civ. Code.

While by no means conceding that respondents' point is well taken, but, to the contrary, resisting the claim with much vigor and earnestness, supported by eminent authority, appellants contend that, if it may be shown that, far from being a corporation de jure (which is admitted by respondents), the municipality in its attempted reorganization as a corporation does not constitute a corporation de facto, the statutes and authorities upon which reliance is placed by respondents have no application.

The first question, then, in that connection to be determined is whether the situation as presented warrants the conclusion that as to the "shoe-string strip" the city of Long Beach has a de facto existence as a municipal corporation.

[4] By the definitions as contained generally in the authorities, and as stated by authors well versed in the law, a de facto corporation may exist only where its organizers, although failing in some particular, in good faith have attempted to comply, and have actually made a colorable compliance, with the requirements of a valid law authorizing the formation of the corporation, and thereupon such organization has entered upon the transaction of the authorized business of the corporation.

It thus appears that, aside from the requirement of user of the corporate franchise—which in the instant case, if not specifically admitted by appellants, is not denied by them—the two remaining essential elements in the creation of a corporation de facto, to wit, a valid law under which even a corporation de jure might be created, and an attempted compliance in good faith with the requirements of the law by the organizers of the corporation, remain for consideration.

[5] It would seem a superfluity to state that, if under the provisions of an enabling statute a corporation de jure may not be created, the creation of a corporation de facto, which in its organization admittedly must be lacking in some particular regarding the requirements of the impotent statute, would be an utter impossibility. So that, if it be accepted as final that which is apparently conceded by respondents, to wit, that after even a substantial compliance by the organizers of a municipal corporation with the formal requirements of the statute a corporation de jure did not result, it would inevitably follow that no corporation de facto could come into being as an outcome of the acts of the organizers, which in the instant case admittedly amounted to something less than a full and complete compliance with the full demands of the statute. But aside from such admission, with its attendant consequences, it may be useful to inquire somewhat into the essential principles underlying the existence of a de facto corporation. Considering, then, first, the necessity of a valid law under the provisions of which the possibility of the creation of such a corporation may be had, it will be remembered that by the express terms of a part of the statute, as well as by judicial construction of other provisions thereof, before a municipal corporation may be reorganized, as affecting territory to be added to a municipal corporation already in existence, there must be present the two features of inhabitancy of the proposed added territory, together with its contiguity to the existing territory of the municipality proposing the annexation. Such being the requirements of the statute under whose provisions the annexation of the "shoe-string strip" was attempted, and by virtue of the facts set forth in the petition in the lower court for the writ of certiorari (which in this proceeding we are bound to assume as true), to the effect that as to such "shoe-string strip" neither the element of inhabitancy nor contiguity thereof was present, and invoking the maxim of construction of a statute that the inclusion of one thing excludes others, the conclusion must be reached that under the provisions of the statute under consideration the organization of a municipal corporation de facto, as affecting the territory embraced within the "shoe-string strip," was a legal impossibility. The law under which the respondents proceeded contains no provisions which permit the annexation to a city of "new territory" which is uninhabited and not contiguous either to the existing boundaries of such city or contiguous to a portion of the "new territory" sought to be annexed.

"It is fundamental that even a corporation de facto cannot exist in the absence of a law authorizing such corporation. On the same theory, for a corporation de facto to exist, the particular purpose for which such corporation is attempted to be organized must be authorized by law. That is, if a statute authorized corporations for certain specified purposes, a corporation organized under such a statute for a different purpose cannot be a de facto corporation. Thus, where a rifle club was organized under a statute authorizing corporations for scientific purposes only, it was held not to be a corporation de facto, as the purpose for which it was organized was not within the statute. So, in Indiana, a corporation organized for the purpose of buying and selling bonds was held not to be a de facto organization under a statute authorizing corporations for the purpose of buying and selling merchandise and conducting mercantile operations, as the term 'merchandise' did not include bonds"—citing authorities. Thompson on Corporations (3d Ed.) § 253.

[6] If no law existed under the provisions of which the municipality of Long Beach might have reorganized in the manner in which it attempted to do so, it is manifest that no corporation, de facto or otherwise, could result from its acts in the premises.

[7-9] The additional element of good faith in the attempted compliance by the organizers of the proposed corporation with the demands of the statute, so essential to the creation of a municipal corporation de facto, also requires some attention. Every one is presumed to know the law. Consequently the intending reorganizers of the municipal corporation, as affecting the proposed "new territory," knew, or should have known, that unless such territory within the meaning of the statute was inhabited and that it was either contiguous to the boundaries of the existing municipal corporation or contiguous to an inhabited and contiguous portion of the territory proposed to be annexed to such municipality, so far as such uninhabited and noncontiguous territory was concerned, no corporate existence could be created. Notwithstanding such assumed knowledge on the part of the intending reorganizers of the corporation, and in what must be legally regarded as a deliberate and intentional violation of the law as applied to the facts, such reorganizers proceeded with an attempted compliance with the remaining requirements of the statute. In such circumstances, it is plain that the term "good faith," as applied to the acts of the organizers, has no application. It necessarily results that both because there was no law under which the municipal corporation was authorized to reorganize as it attempted to do, and because in its attempted reorganization the element of good faith was lacking, notwithstanding the user by the pretended corporation of corporate powers, no municipal corporation de facto came into legal existence.

The effect of the ruling in the case of Brandenstein v. Hoke, 101 Cal. 131, 35 P. 562, is that, where an attempted organization of a corporation is had under an unconstitutional statute, such organization does not constitute a corporation de facto and its existence is even subject to collateral attack. Likewise, in Martin v. Deetz, 102 Cal. 55, 36 P. 368, 41 Am. St. Rep. 151, it is held in effect that the existence of an organization claiming to be an organization de facto, but which has no legal standing as such, may be attacked collaterally in a private action.

The question next to be considered is: Assuming the nonexistence of a municipal corporation de facto, together with the admitted fact that the remedy to petitioners by means of a writ of quo warranto was refused and denied them by the Attorney General of the state, is the writ of certiorari available in the premises?

"A writ of review may be granted * * * when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer. * * *" Section 1068, Code Civ. Proc.

That the various acts of the city council of the city of Long Beach in connection with the annexation proceedings here under consideration, as set forth in the petition presented by petitioners to the lower court, were done in the exercise of a judicial function, is illustrated in the case of Capuchino Land Co. v. Board of Trustees of the City of San Bruno, 34 Cal. App. 239, 167 P. 178. It is there held that the initial action of the board of trustees of a city (or what in the instant case would be the city council) in determining the sufficiency of a petition for annexation of "new territory" to a city "was essentially judicial in its nature, and hence was and is the proper subject of review in this proceeding." And the following authorities were cited as sustaining such conclusion: Stumpf v. Board of Supervisors, 131 Cal. 364, 63 P. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 350; Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 P. 35; People v. Oakland, 123 Cal. 593, 56 P. 445; Levee District v. Farmer, 101 Cal. 178, 35 P. 569, 23 L. R. A. 388; People v. Ontario, 143 Cal. 625, 84 P. 205.

[10] Assuming that, in acting upon the petition presented to the city council of the city of Long Beach praying for the holding of an election for the purpose of determining whether the proposed "new territory" should be annexed to said city, the said city council was exercising a judicial function, and that, because of the assumed facts herein and under the terms of the statute as hereinbefore set forth, no jurisdiction existed in said city council as to such "new territory" hereinbefore referred to as the "shoe-string strip," it would follow that the writ of certiorari would lie.

The case of Miller & Lux v. Board of Supervisors, 189 Cal. 254, 260, 274, 208 P. 304, 307, is also authority for the proper use of the writ of certiorari in the instant case. It is there said in part:

"It is contended that under this amended section the only way in which the validity of the order and of the formation of the district can be inquired into is in a quo warranto proceeding instituted by the Attorney General. The difficulty with respondents' contention in that regard is that the jurisdiction of this court and of the superior court to entertain writs of review is given by the Constitution (art. 6, §§ 4, 5), and this power cannot be taken away by the Legislature. Cameron v. Kenfield, 57 Cal. 550; Farmers' Union v. Thresher, 62 Cal. 407; City of Tulare v. Hevren, 126 Cal. 226, 58 P. 530; Pacific Telephone, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 652, 137 P. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822; Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 186, 149 P. 35. * * * The respondents contend that where the district has been exercising the powers of a de facto corporation, after the electors of the district have voted for incorporation, it is too late to inquire into the validity of the order calling the election by a writ of review. There is nothing in this contention."

[11] It is suggested by respondents that the denial of the writ by the lower court was wholly discretionary, and consequently an act not subject to review by this court. But

It is clear that, before a discretionary power may be exercised, some opposing facts or some sound legal reason must exist upon which such power may act. In the instant case, necessarily all the facts tend in favor of the issuance of the writ, and the law as applied thereto indicates no other course. In such circumstances the principle of judicial discretion has no application.

It is ordered that the order from which the appeal is herein taken be and it is reversed.

FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO. OF NEW YORK v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5869.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 20, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 14, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⇨403—Employee contracting contagious or infectious disease has burden of showing greater exposure than commonalty to recover compensation.

Employee contracting contagious or infectious disease has burden of showing affirmatively that he was subjected to exposure exceeding that of commonalty to recover compensation.

2. Master and servant ⇨373—Illness from contagious or infectious disease cannot be held proximate result of injury arising out of employment, without showing special exposure.

In absence of affirmative showing that employee, contracting contagious or infectious disease, was subjected to exposure exceeding that of commonalty, his illness or death cannot be said to have been proximately caused by injury arising out of his employment.

3. Master and servant ⇨417(7)—Whether employee contracting typhoid fever was subjected to greater exposure than commonalty is fact question for Industrial Commission.

Whether employee, contracting contagious or infectious disease, was subjected to exposure in excess of that of commonalty, is question of fact for Industrial Accident Commission.

4. Master and servant ⇨417(7)—Industrial Commission's finding on evidence that employee contracting typhoid fever was subjected to greater exposure than commonalty, is conclusive.

Industrial Accident Commission's finding, reasonably supported by evidence, that employee contracting contagious or infectious disease was subjected to exposure exceeding that of commonalty, cannot be disturbed on certiorari.

5. Master and servant ⇨417(7)—Reviewing court cannot determine weight of evidence in workmen's compensation proceeding.

Appellate court is without power to determine weight to be given the evidence, or which of two opposing inferences should be drawn therefrom, in workman's compensation proceeding.

6. Master and servant ⇨417(7)—Industrial Commission's award must be affirmed, unless there was no evidence to support findings.

Findings of Industrial Accident Commission need not accord with preponderance of evidence in appellate court's opinion, but award must be affirmed, unless there was no evidence reasonably sufficient to support findings.

7. Master and servant ⇨405(4)—Industrial Commission's finding that employee contracting typhoid fever was subjected to greater exposure than commonalty held supported by evidence.

Industrial Accident Commission's conclusion that employee, dying from typhoid fever contracted in Chile or Peru, where his employers sent him with knowledge of prevalence of such disease, to which evidence showed that natives were less subject than foreigners, was subjected to exposure in excess of that of commonalty, held reasonably supported by evidence.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), by Marie E. Gardiner for compensation for the death of Alexander S. Gardiner, employee, opposed by Balfour-Guthrie & Co., employer, and the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York, insurance carrier. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission of California awarding compensation, the insurance carrier brings certiorari. Award affirmed.

Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. A proceeding in certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for the death of Alexander S. Gardiner.

The petitioner was the insurance carrier for a copartnership known as Balfour-Guthrie & Co., by whom the deceased was employed at the time of his death.

The deceased had been an employee of the insured for several years, and in June, 1926, was sent by his employers from San Francisco to Valparaiso, Chile, to represent them at a nitrate conference to be held in the latter city. Although the primary object of the trip was to attend the conference, the deceased was also instructed to visit various concerns in South America with whom his employers were interested in a business way.

Pursuant to his instructions, the employee left San Francisco on June 12, 1926, stopping at several places en route to Valparaiso, where he arrived on July 8, and where he remained until July 18, 1926. Upon the completion of his duties there he visited several places and ports where nitrate is produced and shipped, arriving at Illa on July 25, where he showed signs of illness, and at Arequipa, Peru, on July 27, at which place he was taken to a hospital, where his death occurred on August 11, 1926. According to the diagnosis of physicians by whom he was treated, his death was caused by typhoid fever.

It was found by the commission that the employee sustained an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment, to wit, the contraction of the disease mentioned, which was the proximate cause of his death, and made an award to his widow.

It is contended by petitioner that the disease contracted by the deceased was due to a risk of the commonalty, and as a consequence did not arise out of nor was it proximately caused by the employment, and, further, that at the time the disease was contracted the deceased was not performing a service for his employers.

The testimony shows that one of the employers at least was familiar with health conditions in Chile and Peru, and that through him the deceased was warned of the danger of contracting the disease and advised as to the precautions to be taken to avoid it. It further appears that the disease, while not epidemic in the places visited, was prevalent there and, owing to sanitary conditions, a constant source of danger. It is clear from the testimony that the employers were aware of the danger and that the employee, during the period which elapsed between the arrival at Valparaiso and the date he reached Arequipa, was engaged in performing the duties of his employment, and the evidence reasonably supports the conclusion that the disease was contracted during that period.

[1-4] While an employee who contracts a contagious or infectious disease has the burden of showing affirmatively that he was subjected to an exposure in excess of that of the commonalty and in the absence of such showing his illness or death cannot be said to have been proximately caused by an injury arising out of his employment (Pattiani v. Industrial Accident Commission, 199 Cal. 596, 250 P. 864), the question is one of fact for the commission, and its finding thereon if reasonably supported cannot be disturbed (Engels Copper, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 183 Cal. 714, 192 P. 845, 11 A. L. R. 785).

In Pattiani v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, the employee was sent by his employers from San Francisco to several Eastern cities, including New York. Typhoid was epidemic in the latter city, but, so far as shown, the condition was unknown to the employers. The employee contracted the disease, and it was claimed that the infection was caused by his having eaten contaminated oysters while in New York. The finding of the commission was adverse to the claim, and the court in affirming the order said:

"The Commission found against that contention and by so doing must be held to have negatived the conclusion that the applicant contracted said disease because of the existence of such epidemic, in said city, or by any contact with such prevailing disorder."

The court refers in its opinion to the cases of Dryden v. Lachman Bros., 8 Cal. I. A. C. 14, Shepard v. A. Schilling & Co., 11 Cal. I. A. C. 57, and Miller v. Simon-Newman Co., 12 Cal. I. A. C. 276, decided by the commission, in which petitions for writs of review were denied. In each of these cases, as well as in the case then being considered, certain of the probative facts were similar to those of the instant case; but with the exception of Miller v. Simon-Newman Co., the conclusion drawn therefrom by the commission was adverse to the claimant, and, unlike the case at bar, it was not shown that the employer was aware of the prevalence of the disease contracted by the employee, or the danger of infection in the place to which the employee was sent. In the latter connection the court said:

"In arriving at our conclusion in the instant case we are not to be understood as announcing a rule which might be applicable to a case wherein the employer directs his employee to go to a place wherein within the knowledge of the employer there is prevalent a contagious or infectious disease."

In affirming the orders of the commission in the foregoing cases the review was limited to a determination of whether there was evidence supporting the findings (Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 177 Cal. 378, 170 P. 822), and it cannot be said that had the conclusions of the commission been otherwise the awards would have been annulled.

[5, 6] The court is without power to determine the weight to be given the evidence (Dearborn v. Industrial Accident Commission, 187 Cal. 591-594, 203 P. 112), or which of two opposing inferences should be drawn therefrom (Western Pacific R. R. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 193 Cal. 413, 224 P. 754). Moreover, it is unnecessary that the findings in its judgment shall accord with the preponderance of the evidence (San Francisco v. Industrial Accident Commission, 183 Cal. 273-282, 191 P. 26), and unless it can be said that there was no evidence reasonably sufficient to support the findings, the award must be affirmed.

[7] In the instant case the conditions shown were not unlike those in Miller v. Simon-Newman Co., supra, wherein a writ of review was denied; and in addition it appears that the employers were aware of the prevalence of the disease contracted by the employee in the localities which he was directed to visit. Furthermore, the evidence sufficiently shows that the inhabitants of these localities, while not immune from the disease, were less subject to infection therefrom than foreigners, and we are unable to say that the conclusion of the commission that the employee was subjected to an exposure in excess of that of the commonalty was not reasonably supported.

The award is affirmed.

LEVINSON et ux. v. CONTINENTAL NAT.
BANK OF LOS ANGELES et al.
(Civ. 5084.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Aug. 10, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 5, 1927.

1. Guaranty ⇨104—Guarantor of note, secretary of maker corporation, having purchased note together with collateral of co-guarantor, could not profit by transaction, being a fiduciary.

Where guarantor of note, secretary of maker corporation, purchased note together with collateral of co-guarantor, she was not entitled to profit in any way by the transaction, being a fiduciary.

2. Pledges ⇨44—Facts held to show sales of collateral by note purchaser sufficient to satisfy note; hence remaining collateral note and deed were discharged.

Facts held to show that guarantor, purchaser of note, had received from sale of collateral a sum sufficient to satisfy the note; hence co-guarantor's remaining collateral note and deed of trust held by purchaser were discharged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by S. Levinson and wife against the Continental National Bank of Los Angeles and Edna Elbow. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant Elbow appeals. Affirmed.

Janeway, Beach & Pratt, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Shapiro & Shapiro, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. The judgment from which the appeal herein is presented to this court was rendered in an action brought for the purpose of enjoining the enforcement of a deed of trust on certain real property, as well as for having it declared that the deed of trust had been satisfied and paid.

From the findings of fact made by the trial court, as well as from evidence adduced at the trial, it appears that the plaintiffs and defendant Elbow were the owners of the entire outstanding stock of Fashion Hat Company, a corporation (hereinafter styled the corporation), of which stock plaintiffs owned 71 shares and defendant Elbow owned 15 shares; that one of the plaintiffs was the president and that defendant Elbow was the secretary of the corporation; that the corporation borrowed from the defendant Continental National Bank (hereinafter termed the bank) the sum of $4,000, evidenced by the promissory note of the corporation, attested by its said president and its said secretary, and as security therefor the 71 shares of stock owned by plaintiffs, an assignment to the bank of "accounts receivable" of said corporation amounting to approximately $5,000, and the trust deed of plaintiffs on certain real property were deposited with the defendant bank; and that the said deposit of securities was also made security for a prior indebtedness of $750 owing by the corporation to the bank. It further appeared that the corporation was also indebted to the defendant Elbow in the sum of $3,000, evidenced by a promissory note in her favor; also, that at the time the $4,000 loan was made by the bank to the corporation both the plaintiffs and the defendant Elbow personally guaranteed the payment thereof; and as security for her said guaranty, defendant Elbow deposited with the bank a certified check in her favor for the sum of $4,000, which check was immediately cashed by the bank and its own cashier's check for the same amount in favor of said defendant Elbow was issued, but which check the bank retained in its possession. The record further discloses the facts that after the sum of $2,097.14 had been collected by the bank from the "accounts receivable" of the corporation and applied by the bank toward the discharge of the indebtedness owing by the corporation to the bank, for a consideration of the sum of $2,052.86, which was the total amount then owing to the bank, both on the $4,000 note and the $750 note of the corporation, the bank sold and assigned to an agent representing defendant Elbow the two promissory notes of the corporation to the bank and delivered to such agent all the securities which had been deposited by the corporation with the bank on account of said total indebtedness—the cashier's check for the sum of $4,000 deposited with the bank by defendant Elbow as security for her guaranty of the payment of the loan to the corporation at the same time being delivered to defendant Elbow. Within a few days following such sale and assignment, the said agent of defendant Elbow, acting within his assumed and purported powers as holder of said promissory note and as pledgee in connection therewith, conducted a "pretended auction" sale of said note and said securities held by him, at which sale defendant Elbow, in her own name, became the purchaser thereof for the exact sum which her agent in her behalf had theretofore paid to the bank for such notes and securities. Shortly thereafter she sold and delivered to certain other persons the said 71 shares of stock belonging to the plaintiffs, together with her own 15 shares of stock, for the sum of $4,000, which money, together with whatever sums might be collected on the "accounts receivable" of the corporation, were placed in a trust account for the purpose of paying creditors (other than defendant Elbow, and the balance of $750 on the former note of the corporation to the bank) of the corporation—after the claims of all such creditors had been paid, the balance remaining from the $4,000 paid for such stock and the money received from the "accounts receivable" to be applied toward the payment of the $3,000 note owing by the corporation to defendant Elbow—which arrangement was carried out, the defendant Elbow receiving therefrom, to her own use, an amount approximating $2,400.

The trial court further found as facts:

"That the said defendant Edna Elbow is the holder of said promissory note and the said deed of trust, signed by said S. Levinson and Tillie Levinson, as aforesaid, and that the moneys realized by the said Continental National Bank of Los Angeles, a corporation, from the outstanding accounts and the moneys realized subsequently by the defendant Edna Elbow for the shares of stock in said Fashion Hat Company, a corporation owned by said plaintiffs, together with the moneys realized by said Edna Elbow from said outstanding accounts, is more than sufficient to fully pay and satisfy the said promissory notes of the said Fashion Hat Company, a corporation, and that the said $4,000 promissory note, made, executed, and delivered by the plaintiffs, S. Levinson and Tillie Levinson, husband and wife, on the 12th day of December, 1921, in favor of the Continental National Bank of Los Angeles, a corporation, and secured by the said deed of trust of said date of December 12, 1921, covering the real property heretofore described, and the interest thereon, is fully paid and satisfied."

Appellant complains principally that "this case fails to sustain or justify the finding of the trial court to the effect that the trust deed note here involved has been fully paid; nor would it support a finding that anything had been paid on said note. * * *" Appellant also questions one other finding to the same effect, that the "moneys realized by the defendant bank from the accounts receivable, together with the moneys realized by Mrs. Elbow from said accounts, was more than sufficient to fully pay and satisfy the trust deed note. * * *"

[1, 2] In the circumstances of this case, the effect of the sale and assignment by the bank to the agent of appellant of the $4,000 note and the securities therefor should be regarded as a sale directly to appellant. Besides being the secretary of the corporation, Mrs. Elbow was a guarantor of the payment of the note, and she should be permitted to make no profit from the transaction. The facts adduced from the evidence show that, aside from her arrangement with the final purchaser of the outstanding shares of stock of the corporation to pay off the debts of the corporation, for those shares of stock she received in trust the sum of $4,000, to be used for the purpose of paying certain debts of the corporation; that at that time the amount unpaid on the $4,000 note of the corporation was approximately $1,900; and that defendant Elbow personally received the sum of $2,400. While it is true that defendant Elbow paid to the bank the sum of $2,652.86 for the note and the securities therefor, it should be remembered that such amount included payment of the former indebtedness of $750, also owing by the corporation to the bank. Added to this circumstance, the evidence and the findings by the court disclose the fact that after the final sale of the shares of stock of the corporation had been made by defendant Elbow she received in payment of certain "accounts receivable" the sum of $603.39, which amount, however, was included in the $2,400 received by her, to which reference has been had. The trust deed and the note appurtenant thereto were given primarily as security for the principal note evidencing the loan of $4,000 made by the bank to the corporation. All payments made to the bank by the corporation were credited to the principal note. The sale by defendant Elbow of the entire outstanding stock of the corporation was primarily for the sum of $4,000. In view of the implied agency of defendant Elbow in the premises, it is apparent that defendant Elbow having received the sum of $2,400 net for the 71 shares of stock belonging to the plaintiffs, and the 15 shares of stock of which defendant Elbow was the owner, it would follow that at least the plaintiffs should be entitled to a credit of 71/86 of the $2,400, or the sum of $1,981.39, which would be more than sufficient to satisfy the balance remaining due on the principal note given to the bank and for which the trust deed and its accompanying note were deposited as a guaranty. The fact that under the arrangements made by defendant Elbow with the purchasers of the stock to the effect that out of the moneys to be paid for such stock, together with any sums received on "accounts receivable" (which actually amounted to $603.39), it would be necessary to pay creditors of the corporation (other than defendant Elbow, and the sum of $750 owing by the corporation to the bank as a balance due on the promissory note given at a time preceding the date of the principal note here under consideration), should not militate against the conclusion reached by the trial court to the effect that the principal note was paid, and as a consequence that no further obligation existed on the part of the plaintiffs to satisfy the trust deed and the promissory note of which such trust deed was the security.

It satisfactorily appearing from the evidence that the principal indebtedness has been fully paid and discharged, it follows that the trust deed and its note should also be so regarded. As hereinbefore indicated, the evidence shows that sufficient money was received from the sale of the stock of the corporation and its "accounts receivable" not only to pay the balance of the indebtedness owing by it to the bank on the principal obligation, but as well to discharge certain other obligations of the corporation, which by computation are found to amount to the sum of $2,203.39. This court is therefore convinced that the findings of the trial court to which appellant objects are sustained by the evidence.

Other objections made by appellant to certain other findings require no consideration for the reason that they are either included in the findings already considered herein, or, as suggested by appellant, they are really immaterial and unnecessary to a decision of the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON v. MANSFIELD et al.
(Civ. 5206.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 26, 1927.

1. Mortgages ⚡32(6)—Mortgagor's reconveyance is not conclusively shown to be mortgage by fact that mortgagor remains in possession and price fixed is equivalent to pre-existing indebtedness.

Reconveyance from mortgagor to mortgagee is not conclusively shown to be given as security by fact that consideration may have been fixed by pre-existing indebtedness, or that mortgagor remained in possession after reconveyance, or that interest was charged by mortgagee upon sums which he expended.

2. Mortgages ⚡32(5)—Where facts and circumstances show continuation of debtor and creditor relationship, deed absolute in form may be held mortgage (Civ. Code, § 2924).

Deed absolute in form may be shown to have been intended as security for debt under Civ. Code, § 2924, where facts and circumstances, taken in connection with conduct of parties, show existence of indebtedness at time of transaction and continuation of relationship of debtor and creditor.

3. Mortgages ⚡294—Discharge of mortgage debt is sufficient consideration for mortgagor's reconveyance where transaction is fair and without fraud.

Mortgagor may transfer title to mortgagee by conveyance made subsequent to mortgage in consideration for discharge of mortgage debt, and where transaction is fair and honest without fraud and no unconscionable advantage is taken of mortgagor's position such consideration is sufficient.

4. Mortgages ⚡38(1), 86(3)—Finding that mortgagor's reconveyance of mortgaged property was made voluntarily and not intended as security held supported by evidence, in mortgagee's action to recover possession (Civ. Code, § 2924).

In action by mortgagee to recover possession of property after mortgagor's reconveyance and failure to exercise option to repurchase, finding of trial court that mortgagor's reconveyance was made freely and voluntarily and was not intended as security under Civ. Code, § 2924, held supported by evidence, though mortgagor retained possession thereafter under option agreement.

5. Mortgages ⚡38(2)—Evidence to establish that deed absolute on its face is mortgage must be clear and convincing (Civ. Code, § 2924).

Clear and convincing evidence is required to establish that deed absolute on its face is in fact mortgage, under Civ. Code, § 2924.

6. Appeal and error ⚡1009(1)—Whether evidence is sufficiently clear and convincing to prove deed absolute on its face is in fact mortgage is for trial court.

Whether evidence offered to change ostensible character of deed absolute on its face by showing instrument was in fact mortgage is sufficiently clear and convincing is question for trial court.

7. Appeal and error ⚡1011(1)—Findings upon conflicting or contradictory evidence are not reviewable.

Trial court's determination as to which of two opposing inferences shall be drawn from evidence or finding in favor of either party upon conflicting or contradictory evidence is not reviewable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul Burks, Judge.

Action by Cromwell C. Thompson against Ellen F. Mansfield and another, in which defendants interposed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. Neblett and John Dickinson, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edward Winterer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment in an action to recover the possession of certain real property situated in Los Angeles county.

The plaintiff alleged title with the right to possession and averred that the defendants were wrongfully in possession of the property. These allegations were denied by the defendants, who by their cross-complaint alleged that they were the owners of the property; that a conveyance thereof executed by them to plaintiff's predecessor in interest and under which plaintiff claimed title was a mortgage to secure the payment of the sum of $3,695.

The court found for the plaintiff and against the allegations of the answer and cross-complaint, and entered judgment accordingly. The defendants appealed from the judgment, and urge as grounds for reversal that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings.

Defendant Soyer is the daughter of the defendant Mansfield, and the plaintiff is the son of T. Arthur Thompson.

In March, 1922, the property was conveyed to the defendants by T. Arthur Thompson in exchange for a parcel of land owned by them. The conveyance was made subject to two incumbrances thereon, namely, a mortgage for $6,500 and a deed of trust to secure the sum of $3,500, both held by George V. Kirkwood. The defendants as part of the consideration for the transfer executed to T. Arthur Thompson a second deed of trust thereon to secure the payment to him of $2,250 in quarterly installments of $250 each, the total amount of incumbrances on the property being the sum of $12,250. The first installment, secured by the second trust deed, was in default in July, 1922, and at about the same time proceedings were commenced by Kirkwood to sell the property under the trust deed held by him. The plaintiff, who was acting as the agent for his father, was then advised by defendants that they would be unable to pay the installment or the amount due under the Kirkwood deed of trust. After considerable negotiation it was suggested by the attorney representing the defendants that the latter convey the property to Thompson, subject to the liens thereon, except the deed of trust held by him, and that the defendants be given an option to repurchase on or before January 1, 1923, subject to the above incumbrances, upon the payment of an amount with interest equal to the indebtedness to Thompson and such sums with interest thereon as might be expended by him to protect the property against foreclosure under the Kirkwood liens.

The defendants thereupon conveyed the property to Thompson subject to the mortgage in the sum of $6,500 and a deed of trust executed thereon by Thompson as a part of the transaction to the Union Mortgage Company to secure a loan of $3,850, which was used to pay the amount secured by the deed of trust held by Kirkwood. At the same time a reconveyance of the interest acquired by Thompson under the deed of trust held by him was made, the note secured thereby was surrendered, and an agreement was executed by the latter granting the defendants the right and option to purchase the property on or before the date mentioned, subject to the above incumbrances, upon the payment to him of the sum of $3,695; it being further provided therein that the defendants should retain possession until that time free of rent.

The sum last mentioned represented that originally secured by the Thompson deed of trust, which, with interest to January 1, 1923, would have amounted to $2,395, and included the interest paid and to be paid by Thompson on the mortgage mentioned, expenditures made by him to satisfy a mechanic's lien on the property, certain personal demands against the defendants due to third persons, and interest to the above date on the sums so expended.

On December 29, 1922, the defendants, by their attorney, made a written request for an extension of time under the agreement, which was granted, the request being as follows:

"Dear Mr. Thompson: Mrs. Miriam M. Soyer has asked me to communicate with you and request that the option on the premises 1630 North Wilson avenue, San Marino, California, be extended to February 1, 1923, with the understanding that she will not request a further extension of this option beyond that time. If this is agreeable to you may I ask you to notify Mrs. Soyer of this extension. Very truly yours, John Dickinson."

The option was not exercised, and some time after the date mentioned in the above communication demand was made for possession of the premises, which was refused by defendants, and on April 26, 1923, Thompson and his wife conveyed the property to the plaintiff, by whom a like demand was made and refused.

[1] Defendants contend that the evidence shows that the consideration for the deed was inadequate and that the price fixed for the reconveyance was equivalent to the pre-existing indebtedness; that interest was charged after the conveyance upon the sums expended by Thompson; and, it being admitted that the defendants remained in possession of the property, the only conclusion which can be reasonably drawn therefrom is that the deed was given as security. Such facts when shown are relevant to the issue and are circumstances to be considered with other evidence in the case, but, as held in the following cases, are not conclusive of the question: Farmer v. Grose, 42 Cal. 169-174; Montgomery v. Spect, 55 Cal. 352; Vance v. Anderson, 113 Cal. 532-541, 45 P. 816; Emery v. Lowe, 140 Cal. 379-383, 73 P. 981; Lynch v. Lynch, 22 Cal. App. 653, 135 P. 1101.

It is further urged that advantage was taken of the ignorance and necessitous condition of the defendants.

No direct evidence of the market value of the property was adduced, but it was testified by the plaintiff that he listed the property in the exchange for approximately $18,000, and that its value on September 30, 1922, was about the same as when the exchange was made. The value placed thereon by the defendants does not appear, but it was shown that their efforts to sell the property were unavailing.

The consideration for the reconveyance included not only the amount of the pre-existing debt, but also the sums expended and to be expended by the creditor as stated above, and it is clear from the evidence that no interest thereon was paid or to be paid unless the option should be exercised. Furthermore, the evidence fails to show that an unconscionable or any advantage was taken of his position by the creditor. On the contrary, it appears that instead of exercising the power of sale under his deed of trust and thus on the expiration of the time provided for notice under section 2924 of the Civil Code depriving the defendants of all interest in the property (Penryn F. Co. v. Sherman-Worrell F. Co., 142 Cal. 643, 646, 76 P. 484, 100 Am. St. Rep. 150; 25 Cal. Jur. "Trust Deeds," § 79, p. 95), the above transaction was entered into at their suggestion and the time for performance thereunder further extended at their request.

The contention that advantage was taken of the ignorance of the defendants cannot be fairly sustained. They were advised by competent attorneys from the commencement of the negotiations, and, moreover, it is apparent from the testimony of the defendant Soyer, the only witness called by the defense, that she was not ignorant of the nature of the transaction. As the court remarked during the course of her examination: "The court is impressed by the thought that this witness has a more clear understanding than she is willing to admit."

[2] A deed absolute in form may be shown to have been intended as security for a debt or obligation (Civ. Code, § 2924; Keese v. Beardsley, 190 Cal. 465, 213 P. 500, 26 A. L. R. 1538), and whether such was the intention is to be determined from all the facts and circumstances taken in connection with the conduct of the parties after the execution of the deed and the central facts to be found are the existence of an indebtedness at the time of the transaction and that the relations of debtor and creditor continue (Montgomery v. Spect, supra).

[3] There is nothing to prohibit a mortgagor from transferring the title to his mortgagee by a conveyance made subsequent to the mortgage, and a discharge of the debt where the transaction is fair and honest and without fraud and where no unconscionable advantage has been taken of his position by the mortgagee is a sufficient consideration for the transfer. Watson v. Edwards, 105 Cal. 70, 38 P. 527; Bradbury v. Davenport, 120 Cal. 153, 52 P. 301; Garwood v. Weaton, 128 Cal. 399, 60 P. 961.

[4] The plaintiff testified that the conveyance to Thompson was intended as a discharge of the debt, and the testimony of the defendant Soyer, who testified in effect that the debt was paid when the conveyance was made, supports the conclusion that such was her understanding. The testimony of these witnesses was conflicting, however, as to the intended effect of the option agreement, but that of the plaintiff, which the court believed, taken in connection with the significant facts that the instruments evidencing the agreement imposed no obligation upon the defendants (Henley v. Hotaling, 41 Cal. 22-29), and that in the written request for an extension the agreement was referred to as an "option on the premises," was sufficient to support the conclusion that a mortgage was not intended.

The facts of the case of Malone v. Roy, 94 Cal. 341, 346, 29 P. 712, cited by defendants, differ from those of the instant case in that as testified by the grantee of the mortgaged property by whom an option for a repurchase was given, the grantor agreed to pay the amount of the original debt within the period covered by the option, and, it appearing from the testimony without substantial conflict that the parties intended the deed as security, it was held that the finding of the trial court to the contrary was not justified by the evidence.

[5, 6] In order to establish that a deed absolute on its face is a mortgage requires clear and convincing evidence (Woods v. Jensen, 130 Cal. 200-203-206, 62 P. 473), but whether or not the evidence offered to change the ostensible character of the instrument is clear and convincing is a question for the trial court (Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323-337, 27 P. 186; Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 53, 30 P. 1020, 31 Am. St. Rep. 175).

[7] In such cases, as in others, this determination as to which of two opposing inferences shall be drawn from the evidence (Western Pacific R. R. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 193 Cal. 413, 224 P. 754), or a finding in favor of either party upon conflicting or contradictory evidence is not open to review on appeal (Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 39 P. 797; Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 627-637, 87 P. 93).

From a review of all the evidence we are satisfied that the contention that the conduct of plaintiff or his predecessor in interest was fraudulent or oppressive or that the conveyance was not made freely and voluntarily cannot be sustained and that the findings of the trial court are fully supported.

The judgment is affirmed.

GODFREY v. GODFREY. (Civ. 5043.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 10, 1927.

1. Deeds ☞71—Husband securing deed from wife after nagging, threats, and attempting to sell bonds of her daughter held not guilty of "duress" (Civ. Code, § 1569, particularly subd. 2).

Husband, who secured a deed from wife by means of nagging, threats to deny paternity of expected child, and by taking and attempting to sell bonds held in trust by wife for her daughter, held not guilty of "duress," within meaning of Civ. Code, § 1569, particularly subdivision 2 providing that unlawful detention of property of one illegally restrained is duress.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Duress.]

2. Deeds ☞210—Finding that husband secured deed from wife without consideration warranting recovery of property held sustained by evidence.

In action to recover real property brought by wife against her husband, evidence held to sustain finding that the husband secured the deed to the property by threats, undue influence, and extortion, and hence deed was without consideration.

3. Appeal and error ☞1011(1)—Finding and judgment founded on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed by appellate court.

Where finding of fact and judgment are founded upon conflicting evidence, they may not be questioned by the appellate court.

4. Appeal and error ☞173(10)—Issue of laches in delaying to commence action to recover real property cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

Where at the trial defendant did not raise the issue of laches in delaying 9 months to commence an action to recover real property, he might not raise the issue on appeal.

5. Contracts ☞75(1)—One, taking property in which he has no interest, by restoring it does not give consideration for property received from third person.

Where one takes and withholds personal property of another in which he has not the slightest interest, the restoration thereof is not a legal consideration for a contract by which he receives other property from a third person.

6. Contracts ☞75(1)—That one taking property in which he has no interest subsequently claims ownership in legal proceedings does not make restoration a consideration for property received from third person.

Where one takes personal property of another, in which he has not the slightest interest, and withholds it, that he subsequently claims ownership of the property in a legal proceeding does not make the restoration of the property any consideration for a contract by which he receives other property from a third person.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action to recover real property brought by Bertie H. Godfrey against John Phillips Godfrey. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Turnbull, Heffron & Kelly, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wm. J. Clark and Claude Morton, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. [1] The plaintiff and respondent instituted this proceeding for the recovery of a certain parcel of real property situated at Beverly Hills, in Los Angeles county, which she alleged that appellant had obtained from her by coercion, threats to impugn her character and chastity, duress, undue influence, and extortion.

The appellant and respondent intermarried on February 3, 1922, at which time the latter possessed and held in trust Liberty bonds of the value of $15,000, and other personal property belonging to her infant daughter, issue of a former marriage, named Ruth Meloy, and which were on deposit in a safe deposit box at the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank. On March 3, 1922, appellant purchased and caused to be conveyed to respondent the real property involved in this suit as a wedding present. Shortly thereafter appellant commenced, both personally and through friends and relatives of the respondent, a persistent course of urging and persuasion to induce Mrs. Godfrey to deliver the Liberty bonds to him for investment, which she repeatedly refused to do. Appellant then prevailed upon his wife to share with him the use of her safe deposit box, for which purpose she permitted him to register at the bank, but retained the key, which she concealed in a portfolio at home. On or about April 19, 1922, appellant surreptitiously abstracted the key from the portfolio, without the knowledge or consent of respondent, proceeded to the bank, and withdrew the Liberty bonds, which he delivered to and listed in his own name with a firm of stock and bond brokers, with instructions to sell them and to pay the proceeds to himself. Upon discovering the fact that the Liberty bonds of her daughter were missing, respondent accused Godfrey of having stolen them, which he at first denied, but finally admitted, stating that he would not relinquish them unless respondent would deed to him the real property above mentioned. Respondent caused Godfrey's arrest and filed an action in replevin for recovery of the securities; upon his release from custody, appellant apparently pursued a relentless campaign of argument, harassment, and threats that he would make respondent trouble unless she should consent to deed him the realty. Mrs. Godfrey testified at the trial that from the day that appellant obtained the bonds until the commencement of this suit, and thereafter, he constantly coaxed, nagged, and tantalized her about a deed; that upon one occasion appellant admitted that he was aware of the fact that the Liberty bonds belonged to Ruth, but that he told her, "I have asked you for the house, and you wouldn't give it to me, and I have taken the bonds, and will give them back to Ruth as soon as you deed the house over to me;" that he stated to the brokers, "I know they are her daughter's bonds, but she has a piece of property of mine, and when she deeds the property back to me, I will return the bonds." It appears that during all of this controversy the respondent was believed to be expecting an heir, and she alleged in her complaint, and testified, that following a protracted course of such attacks, appellant asked her in the presence of a witness, who corroborated much of her testimony, if she had "had enough of it," if she was "ready to sign over the deed," and that when refused again, Godfrey said:

"Well, then, we will have a little more." "You will either deed over that house to me, or I will cause you a lot of trouble; I will simply say that I am not the father of this child that you are expecting; and, besides, you won't get the bonds until you deed over the house."

The voluminous record before us teems with such unconscionable statements, demands and threats, and it appears that this incessant embarrassment and menace ultimately resulted in a physical and mental breakdown, which Mrs. Godfrey believed would cost her life and that of her unborn child. She and other witnesses testified that on April 29, 1922, respondent visited her attorney; that she was then in a highly nervous and distracted condition, and stated that she could no longer bear the anxiety, oppression, and fear of being accused of infidelity, and that she felt compelled to convey the property to Godfrey in order to protect Ruth's securities, and to save her life and that of her expected child. Her counsel swore that "she was crying; tears were running down her face; she stated that the controversy with her husband was killing her; that if it was not stopped immediately she would not live." Finally, having concluded that she must submit to appellant's demands, though acting contrary to the advice of her counsel, respondent executed a deed to the stenographer in her attorney's office, who in turn deeded the property to Godfrey, the bonds were returned, and the replevin suit was dismissed.

The trial court rendered judgment herein for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed. It is insisted that the return of the Liberty bonds, conveyance of the real property, and dismissal of the replevin suit was a legitimate compromise of pending litigation, and that it constituted a contract between the parties; that the evidence does not tend to show such a degree of duress as would entitle the plaintiff to rescind, and hence that the judgment should be reversed. Appellant cites but few authorities, none of which is applicable to the case at bar. He seeks to rely upon subdivision 2 of section 1569 of the Civil Code, which defines duress as the unlawful detention of the property of a person illegally restrained, and Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., 10 Cal. App. 746, 103 P. 938, holding that a mere threat to withhold a legal right, which one may legally enforce, does not constitute duress.

[2, 3] It is true that the acts of appellant did not consist of duress as defined by the section of the Civil Code cited in his brief, nor was the clandestine abstraction of the bonds and offering them for sale a mere threat to withhold them. But this is unimportant, for although the term "duress" was incidentally pleaded as a ground for recovery by the plaintiff and respondent, it was also alleged, the evidence strongly indicated, and the trial court found, that appellant's acquisition and retention of the Liberty bonds was unlawful and indefensible, and that he obtained a mere record title to the realty by threats, undue influence, and extortion, and hence without consideration; from which it results that had the technical term "duress" been entirely omitted from the pleadings, plaintiff's prayer that the deed be set aside entitled her to recover. The finding below reads as follows:

"That no benefit was conferred or agreed to be conferred upon the plaintiff to which the plaintiff was not lawfully entitled by reason of said deed, nor was any prejudice suffered or agreed to be suffered by said defendant other than such as he at the time was lawfully bound to suffer. That plaintiff did not receive any consideration or anything of value by reason of her said deed to Marion G. Wilson, and that there was not any consideration whatever for said deed. That said deed was not the free and voluntary act of plaintiff, but was extorted from plaintiff by defendant by the said threats and statements of defendant, and was executed by her under fear of the same. That said plaintiff would not have executed said deed to defendant, excepting for said acts, threats, and statements of defendant."

[4] Appellant denied both in his answer and upon the stand the essential allegations and testimony of respondent upon this issue, but the trial court found, and we think justly, that there was no consideration for the conveyance of the real property to him, and it is not within the province of this court to question a finding and judgment founded upon conflicting evidence. It is asserted in appellant's brief that the respondent was guilty of laches in delaying nine months to commence this action, but laches was not an issue at the trial, and cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Parkside Realty Co. v. MacDonald, 166 Cal. 426, 137 P. 21.

[5] It is contended that evidence of the contents of the answer filed by appellant in the civil suit brought by respondent to secure the return of her daughter's bonds was improperly refused admission in this case. The reason assigned for this claim is that the answer would have shown the contention of appellant in the former action, and that this would have established that respondent, through her attorney, had knowledge of such claim, and that proof of such contention and of respondent's knowledge thereof would have tended to show that in the settlement of the former suit appellant relinquished a right which constituted consideration for the settlement between the parties. The mere statement of this argument is sufficient to show its utter lack of logic. It is surely a novel suggestion that one, who, without the slightest interest in personal property of another, takes and withholds it, may make its restoration a legal consideration for a contract by which a third person parts with other property to the thief. This, of course, would merely legalize extortion.

[6] If such a transaction cannot be recognized in law, the mere fact that appellant, who, without right, took the personal property of respondent's child, afterwards had the assurance and brazenry to make a claim of ownership thereof in a legal proceeding surely cannot create a consideration where none existed.

No other points are presented which require discussion. The judgment is affirmed.

MICHENER v. HUTTON et al. (Civ. 5063.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 12, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 10, 1927.

4. Negligence ⇨121(2)—Doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is rule that accident is evidence of negligence of person in charge of work causing injury.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is the rule that under some circumstances the fact of an accident which causes an injury is of itself evidence of negligence on the part of the person in charge of the work or structure from which the accident or injury proceeds.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Res Ipsa Loquitur.]

2. Negligence ⇨121(2)—Control of thing causing injury essential element of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

In order for the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to apply, person sought to be held liable must have had control and management of the thing causing the injury.

3. Negligence ⇨121(2)—Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is inapplicable, where cause of damage is matter of surmise.

Where it is a matter of surmise only that the damage was due to a cause for which the defendant is liable, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is inapplicable.

4. Negligence ⇨136(6)—Evidence of plumbing contractor's negligence as to carpenter showing merely pipe fell held insufficient for jury.

Evidence of plumbing contractor's negligence where a carpenter was injured by the falling of a 30-inch piece of vent pipe, which had been securely placed in position extending through roof of house on day before by plumbing contractor, and which must have been moved by some person unknown, held insufficient for jury; doctrine of res ipsa loquitur being inapplicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harold Louderback, Judge.

Action for personal injuries brought by W. H. Michener against C. R. Hutton and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

James, Pace & Smith, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Jennings & Belcher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The judgment rests upon the verdict of a jury, which awarded damages in the sum of $2,000. Defendant Hutton was the plumbing contractor for a residence building in course of construction; defendant Goekler was his employee who did the actual plumbing work; plaintiff was a carpenter at work on the same building. Defendants appeal from the judgment.

[1] On the 27th day of September, 1922, Goekler was engaged in the installation of a vent pipe running from the bathroom on the second floor and out through the roof of the building. The pipe was run up in sections, each one of which was bell-shaped on the upper end, so that the section next above it rested in the bell-shaped top of the one next below and was fitted therein. The top piece, about 30 inches in length, extended through the roof and above it a distance of one foot. According to the uncontradicted testimony of Goekler, when he left his work he had installed this top piece in the manner above described. On the 28th day of September Michener was engaged in doing carpenter work on the ground floor, and was nailing in between the studding certain pieces known as fire stops. The plumber had not been on the building during that day. It is clear that the top piece of vent pipe could not have fallen out of place where Goekler had left it, and there is no evidence showing when or how it had been removed from position. Nevertheless, it is a proved fact that on the afternoon of the 28th, while Michener was at work as above stated, a 30-inch piece of vent pipe fell from the floor above and hit and injured Michener. It was then found that the top piece of the vent pipe had disappeared from its position, and apparently it was this piece which struck Michener. If it had been removed from position and left loosely at some place from which it rolled off and fell to the ground below, this must have been done by some one other than the defendants, and the defendants would not be responsible for the consequent injury. Therefore the judgment must rest in part upon an implied finding by the jury that Goekler's testimony describing his work and the condition in which he had left this piece of pipe was not true. In this condition of the case the plaintiff brought to his aid the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, which in substance is the rule that, under some circumstances, the fact of an accident which causes injury is itself evidence of negligence by the person who was in charge of the work or structure from which the accident or injury proceeded.

If the rule above stated was applicable to this case, then the mere fact that the pipe fell upon the plaintiff and injured him would constitute evidence legally sufficient to overcome Goekler's testimony showing that he had left the pipe in an entirely safe position. The court adopted plaintiff's theory of the law on the question indicated, and in accordance therewith gave its instructions to the jury. Instruction XIV reads as follows:

"If you find, however, from the evidence that the plaintiff was injured by the falling of the pipe, and if you further find that the pipe was under the management and control of the defendant, and that under such circumstances the pipe would not ordinarily have fallen, had the defendants exercised ordinary care in its control and management, then the mere fact that said pipe fell, if you so find, furnishes reasonable evidence that the accident, if any, arose as a result of negligence on the part of those having the control and management of the pipe, unless those having the control and management, by the evidence, explain the cause of the accident, if any, in such manner as to show that the accident was not the result of the want of ordinary care or negligence on their part."

Instruction XV repeated the same rule substantially to the same effect as shown by instruction XIV.

Appellants contend that the rule of res ipsa loquitur has no application to the facts of this case, and that without the aid of that rule the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict. We are unable to agree to the claim of counsel for respondent that because, according to the testimony, none of the other workmen on the house were above the ground floor on the day the accident occurred, therefore "in whatever position Goekler left the pipe there it must have remained until the plaintiff's act of sawing or hammering dislodged it, causing it to fall." There is no evidence that the house was not accessible to intruders between half past 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the 27th when Goekler left the job, and the morning hour when the carpenters took up their day's work on the 28th.

[2-4] A recent decision by Division 2 of this court contains a brief and sufficient statement showing a limitation which is pertinent to the present case, in the application of the rule now under consideration. In that case plaintiff sought to recover damages for injuries to his automobile, while it was in possession of the defendant for the purpose of having the car washed. The court said:

"The cause of the injury in this case is undetermined. It may have been one over which the defendant had control, and it might have been one with which he had nothing to do. In order that the maxim res ipsa loquitur may apply it must first be shown that the person held liable had control and management of the thing in question. * * * In the instant case, aside from the occurrence of the accident, there is no further showing of negligence on the part of the defendant, except the testimony above referred to that high motor speed could cause the damage which resulted. To hold the defendant liable under these circumstances would be to merely conjecture that he had conducted himself negligently and thus caused the injury. Where it is a matter of surmise only that the damage was due to a cause for which the defendant is liable the doctrine is inapplicable. O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217 [146 P. 674]."
Scellars v. Universal Service Everywhere, 68 Cal. App. 252, 228 P. 879.

"No general rule can be laid down that the mere occurrence of an accident is or is not sufficient proof of actionable negligence; for each case must depend upon its own circumstances." Ingalls v. Monte Cristo Oil & Development Co., 23 Cal. App. 652, 661, 139 P. 97, 100.

In the case at bar, if the pipe as erected had fallen from the position where it was placed by the plumber, this might be taken as evidence that it had been insecurely fastened. Or if there had been evidence that the plumber left any loose pipe not yet placed in the structure, its falling off might be taken as a fact sufficient to prove negligence in leaving such pipe where it probably might roll off. But here the only testimony showing that the plumber left the pipe on the premises fails to show that he left it anywhere except in a place from which, as is conceded, it could not fall. We are of the opinion that, in the absence of any other proof of facts which would lay a foundation for an inference of negligence on the part of defendants, the mere fact that the pipe fell, after being moved (as it must have been), by some person unknown, cannot be accepted as evidence that any act or omission of defendants caused the plaintiff's injuries.

The judgment is reversed.

Evidence that bank's customer obtained money from another bank upon his promissory note, which plaintiffs guaranteed and later were compelled to pay, and used such money to pay debt to bank, did not support count for moneys had and received by defendant bank.

- 4. Appeal and error ⇨1041(1)—Refusing permission to include name of coplaintiff in prayer of complaint held not prejudicial error, verdict being for defendant.

Where trial court granted leave to amend prayer of complaint to include coplaintiff's name in prayer, but subsequently declined to permit amendment, refusing permission held not prejudicial error where verdict was directed for defendant and addition of prayer for judgment in favor of coplaintiff would have afforded him no added relief except that he might join in appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Mina W. Williams and husband against the First National Bank of San Diego and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Eugene Daney and Frederick W. Stearns, both of San Diego, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. The appellants C. L. Williams and Mina W. Williams are husband and wife. On and prior to January 29, 1917, one M. D. Goodbody was indebted to respondent American National Bank of San Diego (hereafter for convenience called the American Bank), of which appellant C. L. Williams was vice president and chief executive, in amounts aggregating $70,000, for which it held promissory notes signed by Goodbody, or by one Charles K. Voorhees, who had charge of Goodbody's financial affairs; the American Bank was not authorized to carry an obligation of any firm or individual in such a large amount, and Williams was required by the bank to curtail Goodbody's loans, whereupon Williams negotiated with the Security Commercial & Savings Bank of San Diego (hereafter called the Security Bank) to take up two of Goodbody's notes, amounting to $10,000, for which Williams received from the Security Bank, and delivered to the American Bank, a cashier's check, and Goodbody executed and delivered to the Security Bank his promissory note for $10,000; Williams and Voorhees executed and deposited with the latter bank their notes for $10,000 and $3,000, respectively, as collateral security for Goodbody's paper; all three notes were dated January 29, 1917, and made payable six months from date. The Security Bank required further guaranties in the nature of real estate security, and Williams later deposited with his note a deed to certain real estate in San Diego county, but ultimately, and on September 28, 1918, all of the notes were canceled, and in their stead appellants executed two notes for $7,000 and $3,000, respectively, secured by a mortgage on real property of the appellant Mina W. Williams, and thereafter she was compelled to pay them both. During the month of December, 1917, the American Bank sold all of its assets to, and consolidated with, the respondent First National Bank of San Diego, and appellant C. L. Williams' connection with the bank then terminated.

Appellant Mina W. Williams, joining her husband as a party plaintiff, instituted this action against both of the respondents, alleging in her complaint the Goodbody indebtedness and the loan by the Security Bank above mentioned, and, further, that C. L. Williams' negotiations with the latter bank were conducted in his official capacity and constituted acts of the American Bank; that appellants' obligations to the Security Bank were incurred as an accommodation to the American Bank; that the latter received the $10,000; and that since the plaintiff was compelled to pay such indebtedness with interest, the American Bank or its successor owed her $10,875, for which she prayed judgment, and each of the plaintiffs testified to all of the facts so alleged.

The respondents contended that Williams extended excessive credit to Goodbody on behalf of the American Bank, and that when reminded of that fact he personally obtained credit for Goodbody at the Security Bank, without requesting or receiving authority to bind his own bank, in which transaction it had no interest and received no consideration.

The case was tried before the superior court and a jury. Appellants' witness Dordland, president of the Security Bank, testified: That Williams personally applied for the loan of $10,000, and made no mention of the American Bank. That following the consolidation he returned and said that he had severed his connection with the bank, and, further: "I don't want you to worry about this loan you have in here as that is my personal obligation." "So that you will feel entirely safe about it, I want to leave this deed with you to this piece of real estate which you will find is ample to cover it, and I expect soon to take up the note." That Williams then stated that it was not a bank matter, and that thereafter, upon another occasion, he said: "Well; you need not be apprehensive about that matter you carry, because I will personally take care of it." Voorhees, called by the plaintiffs, swore that he had been requested by Williams to take charge of Goodbody's financial affairs, and that he always considered himself in the employ of the American Bank, although he received his salary from Goodbody; that the latter's loans from the bank through Williams "ran up into the thousands"; and that when Goodbody was unable to obtain further credit, he (Voorhees) or some other person, would sign notes upon which money or credit was then furnished to Goodbody; that the witness' financial condition was practically insolvent, and his notes were valueless, but that Williams willingly accepted them, doubtless knowing of his irresponsibility; that he received nothing for executing the notes, and did not intend that he would be called upon to pay them. There is evidence tending to support the foregoing statement of facts. An officer of the First National Bank, testifying for the plaintiffs, stated that Goodbody's loans were greatly in excess of the amount which a national bank was by law permitted to carry for one individual; that he demanded that Williams have them reduced, that the bank had no authority to allow its own credit to be used for such purpose, and did not in fact agree to do so. It appears that neither of the respondents indorsed or took any part in obtaining credit upon the notes which were executed to the Security Bank, unless it can be said as a matter of law that the acts of its vice president even though ostensibly unofficial created an implied contract with appellants upon the part of the bank to save them harmless from any loss which they might incur in obtaining credit elsewhere for one of its patrons; Williams did not sign any of the documents mentioned in the name of the American Bank when obtaining or extending the $10,000 loan. Nearly two years thereafter, and after Williams' services and official connection with the American Bank had been terminated, he and his wife executed new notes and a mortgage as security therefor to the Security Bank, and it was insisted at the trial that Mrs. Williams was assured by her husband that the American Bank would guarantee that she should lose nothing through the transaction.

Thus it at once appears that there was presented a case for the jury to decide upon conflicting evidence, unless, regardless of Williams' power to bind the bank, or thereafter to bind the consolidated banks, they or either of them could not legally authorize him to do so in this instance, and that a verdict for the plaintiffs could not be sustained upon any theory. At the close of the plaintiffs' evidence the defendants moved for an instructed verdict, and after extensive argument upon the law and the facts, the motion was granted, and the plaintiffs appealed.

Each of the parties directs our attention to section 5200 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (Stats. 1906; Barnes' Federal Code, § 9234 [12 USCA, § 84]) which limits the liability which any person, firm or corporation may incur with a national banking association. That section prohibits any such liability in excess of 10 per centum of the amount of the actually paid-up capital stock of a national bank which remains unimpaired, and 10 per centum of its unimpaired surplus fund. The capital stock of the American Bank was $200,000, and its surplus was about $100,000. Hence, under the statutes, the utmost that this bank could legally have loaned to Goodbody, and the maximum liability which he could have been permitted to incur, was about $30,000, whereas he borrowed upon promissory notes of his own and of others, some of which were worthless, amounts aggregating $40,000 more than the federal statutes allowed.

But we are not here concerned with the question as to whether or not the American Bank, or Williams, violated the law in extending excessive credit, and it is not necessary to afford it more than passing attention for whatever evidentiary value it may have, coupled with the other facts presented, as an indication of Williams' knowledge and intent when negotiating with the Security Bank. Unless the plaintiffs were entitled to a verdict of the jury, this proposition may be eliminated.

We are convinced by an abundance of authority that neither of the respondent banks could have guaranteed Goodbody's notes, or have legally bound itself to secure Mina W.

Williams against loss in the transaction here involved. In Bowen v. Needles National Bank, 94 F. 925, 36 C. C. A. 553, which was an appeal from the Southern District of California, facts strikingly similar to those of the instant case were presented. The only difference of consequence is that there the defendant bank did in fact guarantee in writing that the obligations would be met at maturity. It was an attempt to finance the business of another, on paper, and without finances. The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, affirming a judgment for the defendants, said, in part:

"It may be stated in general that no banking corporation has the power to become a guarantor of the obligation of another, or to lend its credit to any person or corporation, unless its charter or governing statute expressly permits it. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Butchers' & Drovers' Bank, 16 N. Y. 125 [69 Am. Dec. 678]; Morford v. Bank, 26 Barb. [N. Y.] 568; Thomp. Corp. § 5721. Under section 5136 of the Revised Statutes [12 USCA, § 24] national banking associations are given the power to 'make contracts' and 'to exercise by its board of directors, or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking; by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; by receiving deposits; by buying and selling exchange, coin, and bullion; by loaning money on personal security; and by obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes according to the provisions of this title.' There is in these provisions no grant of power to guarantee the debt of another, nor can such guaranty be said to be incidental to the business of banking. It has been so held in Seligman v. Bank, 3 Hughes, 647, Fed. Cas. No. 12642; Norton v. Bank, 61 N. H. 589 [60 Am. Rep. 334]; and Bank v. Pirie, 82 F. 799, 27 C. C. A. 171. An apparent exception is recognized in the case of the discount of promissory notes by national banks which may be transferred with a guaranty, but it rests upon the ground that the guaranty of such paper is but an ordinary incident to its transfer in the course of banking. In People's Bank v. National Bank, 101 U. S. 181 [25 L. Ed. 907] the court said: 'To hand over with an indorsement and guaranty is one of the commonest modes of transferring the securities named.' There can be no doubt that the guaranty in the present case was ultra vires. It was aside and apart from the business of banking. The case is not that of an officer of a bank exceeding the powers delegated to him, but it is a case where the banking association itself has exercised powers in excess of those which were conferred upon it by statute. The plaintiff, equally with the defendant bank, was bound to take notice of the statute."

There are many other authorities which hold that an attempted guaranty by a national bank of the fulfillment of another's obligation in which the bank has no interest is ultra vires and void. Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co., 108 Iowa, 333, 79 N. W. 68; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Smith, 77 F. 129, 23

C. C. A. 80; Barron v. McKinnon (C. C.) 179 F. 759; Merchants' Bank v. Baird, 160 F. 642, 90 C. C. A. 338, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526; Flanagan v. California National Bank (C. C.) 56 F. 959, 23 L. R. A. 836. In the case at bar it is not contended that the American Bank transferred Goodbody's notes to the Security Bank, or that it indorsed them or discounted them. Williams merely obtained elsewhere the sum of $10,000 and refunded to the American Bank a portion of the moneys which it had loaned. Goodbody executed and delivered to the Security Bank a promissory note for $10,000, for which apparently a friend gave additional security, and it became a distinct transaction which the American Bank was prohibited from underwriting or guaranteeing.

[1, 2] It is obvious, therefore, that in the most favorable light which can be cast upon appellants' theory of the case, had the American Bank given to Williams express written authority to negotiate a loan, and agreed to protect him or any guarantor whom he might select against loss, which it is not contended here to have done, such authority or guaranty would have been ultra vires and void. If the bank could not delegate authority to do that which it in fact was itself precluded from doing, the inevitable result is that such authority cannot be implied from the mere fact that Williams was vice president and chief executive officer of the bank. It is argued that the American Bank had at other times so guaranteed commercial paper, and had negotiated, accepted, and paid such obligations through appellant Williams. This fact does not, however, alter the legal status of the present case. Appellants were therefore not entitled to demand reimbursement from either of the respondents, and a judgment in their favor would have been without legal foundation. The motion for a directed verdict against the plaintiffs was therefore properly granted.

[3] Appellants also pleaded by a common count an alleged cause of action for moneys had and received by the respondents. As we have seen, the amount received by respondents was in satisfaction of a debt due them from Goodbody, and was obtained upon the promissory note of Goodbody, which he executed and delivered to the Security Bank. No money was received by either of the respondents from Mina W. Williams, or from C. L. Williams, and this count was therefore not supported by the evidence.

[4] The appellant Mina W. Williams merely joined her coplaintiff in the title of her complaint, and the prayer demanded judgment for her alone. Following the conclusion of the plaintiffs' evidence, and during argument, their counsel asked leave to amend the prayer of their complaint, and to include the name of C. L. Williams therein, which the trial court announced was granted. After the close of argument by the respective parties, the court declined to permit such amendment, and instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendants. This is assigned as a ground for reversal. The trial court had full power and control over its orders and rulings during the trial, and reversed itself only after extensive argument of the facts and the law, which are embraced in the record before us. It may well have appeared that the requested amendment, including both plaintiffs in the complaint, when neither was entitled to judgment, would be futile and would avail them nothing. Had the motion been granted, the addition of a prayer for judgment in favor of C. L. Williams would afford him no added relief, except that he also might join in an appeal. Since we are impelled to hold in favor of the respondents, an affirmance of the judgment leads to the patent conclusion that appellants were not prejudiced by the subsequent ruling.

Appellants cite many authorities holding that where the plaintiffs make out a case they are entitled to have it passed upon by the jury, and that in making loans, discounting notes, or other legitimate banking business within the scope of the federal statutes permitting such transactions, the institution will be presumed to have knowledge of, and acquiesce in, and will be bound by, the acts of its officers. However, such a case is not here presented, and appellants cite no authority in conflict with those which do control in the instant case, and which have been cited as a basis for this decision.

The judgment is affirmed.

HATHAWAY v. MATHEWS et al. ★
(Civ. 5059.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California/ Aug. 10, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 3, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⚡330(2)—Evidence of conversations held admissible to show defendant owner riding with driver had loaned automobile injuring pedestrian.

In pedestrian's action for injuries from being struck by an automobile, testimony of conversations between defendant owner and defendant driver, showing that when the accident occurred the owner was riding as a guest of the driver to whom she had loaned the automobile, held admissible as against objection that they were hearsay, self-serving, and immaterial.

2. Appeal and error ⚡907(2)—Where trial court made finding of automobile driver's negligence, evidence would be assumed to support finding, though not appearing in record on appeal.

Where the trial court made a finding of negligence on the part of an automobile driver, it would be assumed that there was evidence sufficient to support such finding, although it was not set out in the record on appeal.

3. Master and servant ⚡330(3)—Evidence held insufficient as matter of law to prove owner riding in automobile allowed negligent driving (Motor Vehicle Act, § 19).

In pedestrian's action for injuries when struck by an automobile, evidence that the owner was in the automobile and that the driver was negligent held insufficient as matter of law to prove that owner had any opportunity to control the driver so that she could be said to have allowed a violation of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 406), § 19.

4. Appeal and error ⚡909(1)—Where trial court found automobile owner not liable for accident, appellate court must assume she could not prevent driver's negligence, nothing to contrary appearing (Motor Vehicle Act, § 19).

Where trial court found that the owner of an automobile was not liable for negligence in injuring plaintiff, though owner was in the automobile at the time of the accident, the appellate court must assume that she had no opportunity to prevent the negligence of the driver, and hence was not liable under Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 406), § 19.

5. Master and servant ⚡330(1)—Ownership of automobile establishes prima facie case against owner because of presumption that driver is agent.

The fact of ownership in an automobile negligence case, regardless of the presence or absence of the owner at the time of the accident, establishes a prima facie case against the owner because of the presumption that the driver is the owner's agent.

6. Master and servant ⚡330(1)—Presumption that automobile driver was owner's agent is rebuttable.

The presumption in an automobile negligence case that the driver is the agent of the owner may be overcome by evidence which convinces the court to the contrary.

7. Master and servant ⚡332(1)—Whether presumption of automobile driver's agency for owner riding was overcome held for trial court.

In pedestrian's action for injuries when struck by an automobile, where there was evidence that owner was guest of driver to whom she had loaned car, whether presumption of agency was overcome held for trial court.

8. Appeal and error ⚡1010(1)—Trial court's finding on evidence that negligent automobile driver was not owner's agent held not reviewable.

Trial court's finding from the evidence that negligent automobile driver was not driving as the agent of the owner who was in the car at the time, held not reviewable.

9. Municipal corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 706(5)—Evidence held insufficient as matter of law to show joint enterprise between owner and driver of automobile injuring pedestrian (Civ. Code, § 1714).

Evidence that automobile owner at the time of injuries to pedestrian was riding as guest of driver to whom she had loaned the automobile held insufficient as matter of law to show master and servant or principal and agent relation existing between her and the driver, so that the negligence of the driver could be imputed to owner under Civ. Code, § 1714, on the theory that she was engaged in a joint enterprise.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Maude Hathaway against Neal Mathews and Lillian Grant. Judgment for plaintiff against Neal Mathews only, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Merton A. Albee and C. E. Spencer, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment rendered for defendant Lillian Grant in a suit brought for the recovery of damages for personal injuries.

This appeal presents but a single question, namely, whether the owner of an automobile is liable for the negligence of the driver committed while the owner was riding in the automobile at the invitation of the driver to whom the owner had loaned the automobile. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff against the driver, Neal Mathews, who was the owner's codefendant. Defendant Mathews testified that he telephoned the defendant Miss Grant the evening before the accident and asked if he could borrow her car the next day to go to the beach; that he went to her home the next morning about 7:30; that:

"Miss Grant was employed at the time at the Berendo intermediate high school, located one block north of Pico and two blocks, I believe, beyond Vermont. When I arrived at the house she had her hat on coming out of the house. I told her I was coming and would take her. We got in the car together. I was driving the car. She told me over the telephone the day before that she would leave the key to the car by a certain tree in the yard, so that I would know where to get it. I thought she had gone to school that morning, but when I arrived and I found her getting ready to take the street car, I asked her to get into the car and ride with me, as I was going in the same direction and almost by the school, and that I wished her to ride with me, and she did get in the car, and I drove the car without any directions whatever from her, as to how to drive it, or what course to take, and I was driving the car at the time of the accident. Just after we crossed the intersection and just before the accident the plaintiff appeared suddenly in front of the car when I was within about six feet of her and Miss Grant screamed."

Defendant Lillian Grant testified:

"He called me up and talked about various things, and he asked me if I was going to use the car the next day. Well, I told him that I was not going to use the car, and he asked for it; I told him I would be glad to let him have it. * * * Next morning I left the key in the same hiding place and started to go out, get the car—get the street car—it passed our house, and I met him right at the corner. By hiding place for the key I mean the place by the tree in the yard where I had told him that I would leave it for him the next morning. * * * He told me he was going down to the beach; he said he would drive me by the school, as it was right on the road he was taking. I had intended to take the street car, which was the more direct route and more convenient for me usually, but when he asked me to ride, he stated that he would take me by my school; I rode with him. I was glad to go. I got in the car. I remember as we approached the intersection, the accident. He was driving the car."

[1] Appellant assigns as error the admission of the foregoing testimony over plaintiff's objection that the conversations between defendants were hearsay, self-serving, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. We see no force in this objection, since defendants were entitled to show the circumstances under which the defendant Grant was riding in the car at the time the accident occurred as an offer of proof that she, as the owner, had loaned her car to some other person.

The findings were that the defendant Lillian Grant was, on the 4th day of November, 1921, the owner and in possession of one certain Ford coupé. The court further found:

"II. That on the 3d day of November, 1921, said Lillian Grant agreed gratuitously to let the defendant Neal Mathews have the use of said Ford coupé on the 4th day of November, 1921, and, pursuant to said agreement, on said 4th day of November, 1921, and prior to the accident hereinafter mentioned, defendant Lillian Grant gratuitously loaned to defendant Mathews and defendant Mathews borrowed of defendant Lillian Grant the said Ford coupé, for the purpose on the part of defendant Mathews of driving in the same upon his own business to Venice, Cal.

"III. That on said 4th day of November, defendant Mathews went to the residence of defendant Lillian Grant for the purpose of obtaining said automobile, as aforesaid, and there saw defendant Lillian Grant and invited her to ride with him in said automobile to the Berendo junior high school in the city of Los Angeles, in said county, at which school defendant Lillian Grant was then and there employed as a teacher; and defendant Lillian Grant accepted said invitation and was riding in said automobile and sitting beside the defendant Mathews on the way to her said place of employment at the time of the accident hereinafter mentioned. That there was no other or further agreement between said defendants with reference to the use or control of said automobile at said time other than as hereinbefore found.

"IV. That the defendant Lillian Grant did not exercise or attempt to exercise any actual or physical control over the driving or operation of said automobile between the time of said lending of the same and the occurrence of the accident hereinafter mentioned.

"V. That defendant Neal Mathews thereupon drove and operated said automobile from said city of South Pasadena into the city of Los Angeles, and westerly upon and along North Broadway, a public street of said city of Los Angeles.

"VI. That Daly street, a public street of said city of Los Angeles, then intersected and now intersects said North Broadway in a northerly and southerly direction at a point where, for some distance, said North Broadway extended and extends in an easterly and westerly direction. That at said place double tracks of the Pacific Electric Railway extended upon and along the central portion of Daly street, and double tracks of the Los Angeles Railway extended upon and along the central portion of North Broadway, and the east-bound street cars of the Los Angeles Railway Company habitually stopped for the purpose of taking on and discharging passengers at a place on the southerly track on North Broadway, immediately west of the intersection of said street with said Daly street. That at said location Daly street was and is a narrow street and North Broadway a wide street; and said intersection and the territory adjacent thereto was within and constituted a 'business district' as the same was defined at said time by the Vehicle Act.

"VII. That at the hour of 8 o'clock a. m. on said 4th day of November, 1921, the plaintiff proceeded in a careful and prudent manner southerly across North Broadway from a point a short distance west of the west property line of Daly street, toward an east-bound street car of the Los Angeles Railway, which was then and there standing at the stopping place above described taking on and discharging passengers for the purpose of doing the same. That the entrance to said car was at the rear end, on the right side thereof. That plaintiff so proceeded to within two or three feet of the rear step on the left side of said street car, and was proceeding toward and near the rear end of said car, touching said car with her left hand, at the time of said accident.

"VIII. That at about said time the defendant Mathews was negligently and heedlessly driving said Ford coupé westerly along the northerly side of North Broadway, and up to the moment of the impact with plaintiff, and in so doing suddenly, negligently and at said speed, drove and operated said automobile from behind and past another automobile proceeding in the same direction, without first sounding or giving any audible or other signal or warning thereof, so that said Ford coupé emerged suddenly from behind said preceding automobile and passed the same; and defendant Mathews continued to so negligently drive and operate said automobile without sounding any warning of its approach that by reason thereof it ran against, upon, and over plaintiff, who was then and there unaware of its approach.

"IX. That by and through said negligence of defendant Mathews and his said careless and reckless operation of said automobile, the plaintiff was dangerously and grievously injured, in the following particulars, to wit: * * *

"XI. That by reason of all the premises, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $5,500, no part whereof has been paid."

As a conclusion of law from the above facts the court found that the plaintiff was not entitled to any judgment against the defendant Lillian Grant, and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the defendant Neal Mathews in the sum of $5,500, and judgment was entered accordingly.

Appellant takes the position that defendant Lillian Grant is liable under the express provisions of the California Vehicle Act, as well as under general principles of law, and that the particular findings upon which the court concluded as matter of law that defendant Lillian Grant was not liable, if they do call for such a construction, are to that extent unsupported by the evidence, and that, on the other hand, the findings as they now stand call for judgment against defendant Lillian Grant as matter of law. In view of this position taken by plaintiff, we have herein quoted substantially all of the evidence contained in the bill of exceptions, and substantially all of the findings, in so far as the same are material to the decision of this case. The question for decision is whether or not, as matter of law, this court can decide on the record before it that the trial court should have rendered judgment for plaintiff against defendant Lillian Grant, the owner, as well as against her codefendant, the driver of the automobile. Appellant argues that judgment should have been given against Miss Grant for the reason that section 19 of the Motor Vehicle Act at the time this accident happened provided as follows:

"No person shall allow a motor vehicle owned by him or under his control to be operated by any person * * * in violation of the provisions of this act." St. 1915, p. 406.

We find nothing in the foregoing section which would assist us in determining the question at issue favorably to appellant. There is no word of evidence in the record, nor any finding made by the court, to the effect that defendant Lillian Grant, as owner, ever allowed her automobile to be operated by her codefendant in violation of the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act. The only evidence contained in the bill of exceptions as to the manner in which the car was being driven at the time of and before the accident is the testimony of Mathews, the driver, as follows:

"* * * But when I arrived and I found her getting ready to take the street car, I asked her to get into the car and ride with me, as I was going in the same direction and almost by the school, and that I wished her to ride with me, and she did get in the car, and I drove the car without any directions whatever from her, as to how to drive it, or what course to take, and I was driving the car at the time of the accident. Just after we crossed the intersection and just before the accident the plaintiff appeared suddenly in front of the car when I was within about six feet of her, and Miss Grant screamed."

[2-4] The foregoing is not sufficient evidence on which to predicate a finding of negligence on the part of either the driver or the owner. Inasmuch as the trial court made a finding of negligence on the part of the driver, it may be assumed that there was additional evidence as to the manner in which the automobile was being driven sufficient to support a finding of negligence on the part of the driver; but there is no such testimony in the record before us. It can scarcely be said that this court can, as matter of law, without any evidence before it, determine that the defendant Grant was guilty of negligence because she, as owner, sat in the machine while it was negligently driven by another, without any evidence appearing in the record showing whether the owner had any opportunity to control the driver as to the manner in which the machine was driven. It does not appear from the evidence before us, nor from the findings of the court, when the negligence of the driver commenced, except that Mathews was driving negligently at about the time plaintiff was proceeding toward the standing street car. The trial court, having all the evidence in the case before it, found the defendant Lillian Grant not liable, and it therefore must be concluded from the testimony that the defendant Grant had no opportunity to prevent the negligence of the driver. This court is bound by that conclusion, in the absence of anything to the contrary in either the bill of exceptions or the findings. In Rocca v. Steinmetz, 189 Cal. 426, 208 P. 964, cited by appellant, the defendant is not sued as the mere owner of the automobile, but he is sued as the owner who has allowed his son to drive his automobile, knowing that his son is a reckless and careless driver. No proof of any such knowledge appears in the record before us, nor is there any finding of such knowledge made by the trial court.

[5-7] Appellant's contention that judgment should have been rendered against defendant Lillian Grant on general principles of law, independent of the Vehicle Act, cannot be sustained. While generally the fact of ownership alone, regardless of the presence or absence of the owner, as held in the cases cited by appellant, establishes a prima facie case against the owner, for the reason that the presumption arises that the driver is the agent of the owner, yet this presumption may be overcome by evidence which carries conviction to the mind of the court. Dierks v. Newsom, 49 Cal. App. 789, 194 P. 518; McWhirter v. Fuller, 35 Cal. App. 288, 170 P.

417; Frierson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 55 Cal. App. 397, 203 P. 788. It cannot be held in this court as matter of law on the record before us that there was not sufficient testimony to overcome this presumption of agency. In Randolph v. Hunt, 41 Cal. App. 739, 183 P. 358, cited by appellant, there was evidence that the driver had borrowed the car to seek employment, and that he invited the owner to go along to recommend him; but notwithstanding this testimony, respondent contended that there were two theories, upon either of which the verdict of the jury might be justified:

"The first is that the jury was warranted in rejecting the story as untrue and holding that there was no such arrangement between Hunt and Triggs, whereby the car was loaned to the latter. The second is, that if said car was borrowed, appellant did not part with control of it, and that it was his duty as owner and occupant to see that it was operated in a careful and prudent manner, and that he is responsible for the consequences of his violation of this duty."

The Court of Appeal said:

"As to the first of these contentions, it cannot be said here that the jury was bound to accept the statement of said witnesses as true. Being the exclusive judges of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses, if the testimony did not carry conviction to their minds, they had the legal right to reject it. We must assume that they did not believe the story, and we cannot say, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the jury acted arbitrarily, or otherwise than in good faith and with an honest purpose. We would not be justified by the record in branding the statement of these witnesses as false, although there are certain circumstances that tend somewhat to discredit it, but we are not in a position to interfere with the jury's discretion in that particular."

The Supreme Court, in denying a petition for rehearing, said:

"In denying a rehearing in this case we deem it proper to say that we limit our approval of the opinion of the district court of appeal, on the question of the liability of the owner, to the first of the reasons assigned therein as cause for affirmance of the judgment, that is to say, the reason summarized therein as follows: '1. The question of the alleged agreement with Triggs was submitted to the jury; it was resolved against appellant on conflicting evidence, and this finding cannot be reviewed by this court.' As to the soundness of the other reasons set forth by the district court for the existence of such liability, we express no opinion. The petition for rehearing is denied."

[8] So in the case at bar, the question of the alleged agreement between the driver and the owner was submitted to the court. It was resolved against appellant on the evidence, and that finding cannot be reviewed by this court. Appellant in her closing brief cites Bosse v. Marye (Cal. App.) 250 P. 693, wherein a rehearing was denied by the Supreme Court, as being decisive of this case. We cannot agree. In that case the sole liability attaching to defendant Rudolph Spreckels was conceded to be a statutory one, namely by reason of his having signed the application for the issuance to his minor daughter of a driver's license. In that case Miss Spreckels had driven the car to San Francisco, and on the return trip invited a companion to drive the machine. The accident occurred while the companion was driving and Miss Spreckels was seated in the automobile. The Court of Appeal said by way of obiter dictum, quoting from Randolph v. Hunt, supra, language on which the Supreme Court had refused to express an opinion, as follows:

"In this respect, we think the responsibility of a licensee is no different from that of an owner who turns over the wheel of his automobile temporarily to another, but continues to ride with the person intrusted with the driving. In such a case, it is said: 'Again, if the owner of an automobile lends his machine to another and on invitation becomes a passenger therein, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the owner has the right, and indeed, it is his duty to prevent, if possible, the driver from operating the machine in a reckless and dangerous manner and in violation of law. He cannot sit idly by and refrain from remonstrance, at least, while knowing that the driver is thus endangering the lives of others. If he has the opportunity to restrain the driver and fails to take advantage of it, he should be held responsible for the consequences. This is the just view, and it is supported by the authorities. The general rule is stated in 28 Cyc. 38, as follows: "Where an injury is inflicted by the use or operation of a motor vehicle, upon the public highway, the owner thereof is liable to respond in damages therefor, if the vehicle was being operated by such owner or was under his control. * * * In all cases where the owner is present he will be responsible for injuries sustained by third persons, unless the operator disobeys instructions as the owner is in law in control of the vehicle."' Randolph v. Hunt, 41 Cal. App. 739 [183 P. 358]."

In the present case there is no evidence in the record nor any finding that the owner sat idly by and refrained from remonstrance, or that she knew the driver was endangering the lives of others, or that she had opportunity to restrain the driver.

[9] Finally, appellant urges that Miss Grant should be held liable as engaged in a joint enterprise with Mr. Mathews. In Pope v. Halpern, 193 Cal. 168, at page 174, 223 P. 470, 473, it is said:

"The decisions are not in accord as to what constitutes a joint or common enterprise, but it has been held in this state that the passenger must exercise some control over the driver, or, in law, may be said to possess the right of such control, before it will be held that they are engaged in a joint enterprise. Bryant v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. [174 Cal. 737, 164 P. 385] supra. In St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Bell, 58 Okl. 84, 159 P. 336 (L. R. A. 1917A, 543), the court said: 'Parties cannot be said to be engaged in a joint enterprise, within the meaning of the law of negligence, unless there be a community of interests in the objects or purposes of the undertaking, and an equal right to direct and govern the movements and conduct of each other with respect thereto. Each must have some voice and right to be heard in its control and management.' It will be seen from these two decisions that in order that there be such a joint enterprise it is not sufficient merely that the passenger of the machine indicate the route, or that both parties have certain plans in common, such as a 'joy ride,' but the community of interest must be such that the passenger is entitled to be heard in the control and management of the vehicle. In Bryant v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., supra, the court, after referring to the case of Wentworth v. Town of Waterbury, 90 Vt. 60, 96 A. 334, where apparently the only basis for the imputation of negligence of the driver of an automobile to the plaintiff was the circumstance that they were both engaged in the common purpose of taking two ladies for an afternoon's drive to view a lake, said: 'In our opinion, the doctrine of imputable negligence should not be so loosely applied. To do so leaves the law in an uncertain state. The better view is expressed by Nonn v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 232 Ill. 378, 83 N. E. 924, 122 Am. St. Rep. 114:

"There can be no such thing as imputable negligence, except in those cases where such a relation exists as that of master and servant or of principal and agent. In order that the negligence of one person may be properly imputed to another they must stand in such relation of privity that the maxim qui facit per alium facit per se directly applies." Indeed, no other rule is consistent with section 1714 of the Civil Code, wherein it is declared that every one is responsible for an injury occasioned to another by his want of ordinary care "except so far as the latter has, willfully or by want of ordinary care, brought the injury upon himself.""

Tested by these principles, we are of the opinion that it cannot be held as matter of law from the evidence or findings before us that either the relation of master and servant or principal and agent existed between Miss Grant, the owner, and Mr. Mathews, the driver of the automobile.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur in the judgment: HOUSER, J., Acting P. J.; YORK, J.

84 Cal. App. 532

STOWE v. MAXEY, County Auditor.
(Civ. 3285.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 22, 1927.

1. Counties ⚡103—Statute empowering board of supervisors to acquire and maintain property for public purposes held inapplicable to holding county fair (Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 6).

Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 6, empowering county board of supervisors to acquire and maintain an exposition building or buildings, public pleasure ground, public parks, or property for other public purposes, held inapplicable to holding county fair and improving property for that purpose.

2. Counties ⚡50—Board of supervisors cannot delegate to corporation discretionary powers for holding county fair so as to render county liable for corporation's expenditures (Pol. Code, § 4041, subds. 6, 7; Const. art. 11, § 18).

The county board of supervisors must itself exercise the discretionary powers given by Pol. Code, § 4041, subds. 6, 7, for holding a county fair, and cannot delegate these powers to a private corporation so as to render county liable for deficiency incurred by such corporation in handling the fair, contrary to Const. art. 11, § 18.

3. Counties ⚡103—Statute authorizing supervisors to levy taxes to exploit county's resources held not to authorize holding county fair (Pol. Code, § 4056b, and § 4041, subd. 33).

Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 33, and section 4056b, authorizing the county board of supervisors to levy taxes to exploit the county's resources and to create a fund to prepare and maintain and exploit the county's products in industries, held not to authorize improving fair grounds and erecting new buildings for holding county fair.

4. Counties ⚡50—Supervisors having no authority to delegate power to corporation to hold county fair could not ratify corporation's action thereunder (Civ. Code, § 2312).

Where the county board of supervisors had no authority to delegate to a private corporation its power to maintain grounds for county fair and erect new buildings, it could not ratify the corporation's actions under an attempted delegation of power, especially in view of Civ. Code, § 2312, so as to render county liable for expenditures incurred by corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by C. A. Stowe against John D. Maxey, as the Auditor of the County of San Joaquin, to restrain defendant from drawing his warrant on the county treasurer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Louttit, Stewart & Louttit and Tye & Edwards, all of Stockton, for appellant.

Gumpert & Mazzer, of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This is an action in equity brought to restrain the defendant, as the auditor of the county of San Joaquin, from drawing his warrant upon the treasurer of said county, in payment of a certain claim allowed by the board of supervisors in favor of the San Joaquin County Fair Association. The plaintiff had judgment and the defendant appeals.

The transcript shows that in 1919 the San Joaquin County Fair Association was incorporated as a nonprofit corporation, for the purpose of advertising, exploiting and making known the resources of San Joaquin county, etc. During that year a county fair was held by said association in said county at a site called "Oak Park." Prior to the incorporation of the association just referred to and at all times since said date, the county of San Joaquin was and has been the owner of certain premises known as and called the fair ground site near the city of Stockton, upon which are located a race track, stables, exhibition buildings, and a grandstand. During the years 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, and 1924 the San Joaquin County Fair Association has conducted fairs upon the premises last here-in referred to. These fairs have been conducted upon said premises with the knowledge and consent of the individual members of the board of supervisors of San Joaquin county, but it does not appear from the transcript that the board of supervisors either expressly or impliedly took any legal action in reference to the use and occupation of said grounds by the San Joaquin County Fair Association, or with reference to the improvements and expenditures thereon made by the association.

The transcript shows that after taking possession of the fair grounds the association proceeded to make many improvements thereon in the erection of buildings, fences, barns, turnstiles, installation and conduct of a cafeteria, and generally doing all those things necessary to the conduct of a county fair upon said premises. It further appears from the transcript that the fair association proceeded to collect moneys from the sale of admission tickets and otherwise, and applied the same toward the payment of the expenses of conducting the fair and in the erection and furnishing of the buildings referred to, and in the purchase of personal property deemed necessary in the conduct and maintenance of county fairs.

It further appears that with the conclusion of the county fair held by the San Joaquin County Fair Association in the year 1924 the expenses at that time showed an excess of some $15,000 over receipts. For the purposes of paying off the deficit incurred by the San Joaquin County Fair Association, a corporation, in the conduct of the fairs referred to, a claim for approximately $15,000 was filed against the county of San Joaquin, the expenses making up this claim appear to have been incurred during the years 1923 and 1924. Upon the presentation of this claim the board of supervisors on the 12th day of January, 1925, adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, the county of San Joaquin is the owner of that certain real property, and the improvements thereon, known as Agricultural Park, which said property has been heretofore acquired by said county and improved with exposition buildings, race track, stadium, and other recreation and amusement park features; and

"Whereas, the San Joaquin County Fair Association, a private corporation heretofore, with the sanction and consent of said board of supervisors, took charge of and made certain improvements in and about said Agricultural Park for the purpose of improving same as a public recreation ground and park and rendering same more suitable for the carrying on of a county fair for the purpose of collection, preparing, and maintaining exhibitions of the products and industries of the county of San Joaquin as a domestic exposition, and for the purpose of exhibiting and advertising the agricultural, mineral, and other resources of said county, and did, in the month of August, 1924, hold, at said Agricultural Park, in said county, a domestic exposition known as the San Joaquin County Fair, for the purposes aforesaid; and

"Whereas, said San Joaquin County Fair Association, a private corporation, has presented, or caused to be presented to this board of supervisors certain demands against the treasurer of the county of San Joaquin for allowance and payment for certain debts incurred by said San Joaquin County Fair Association for and on behalf of the county of San Joaquin; and

"Whereas, it further appears to this board that the hereinafter specified claims and demands are legal charges against the county of San Joaquin pursuant to subdivision 6 of section 4041 of the Political Code of the state of California empowering boards of supervisors to pay out of the general fund the expenses of improving public pleasure grounds, public parks, and to preserve and take care of the same, as to such of said claims hereby so designated to be paid out of the general fund, and that the remainder of said claims hereinafter so designated to be paid out of the immigration fund are similarly legal charges against the county of San Joaquin pursuant to section 4056b of the Political Code of California, also subdivision 33 of section 4041 of the Political Code of the state of California, authorizing and empowering boards of supervisors to levy certain taxes for the purposes of creating a fund to be used for collecting, preparing, and maintaining an exhibition of the products and industries of the county for the purpose of advertising, exploiting, and making known said resources for the purpose of inducing immigration and increasing the trade and commerce of said county, and providing said claims and demands are, by appropriate resolution, ratified by this board of supervisors as having been incurred for and on behalf of said county of San Joaquin for its use and benefit, now therefore:

"It is hereby resolved and ordered that the incurring of the hereinafter designated claims and demands heretofore incurred by the San Joaquin County Fair Association, a private corporation, as aforesaid, be and the same hereby are ratified by the board of supervisors of the county of San Joaquin as having been incurred for its use and benefit for and on its behalf, and the same are hereby approved, allowed, and ordered paid to the following named persons, firms, and corporations, in the amounts set out after their respective names, from the general fund and the immigration fund of said county of San Joaquin, as hereinafter designated."

This resolution is the first official action taken by the board of supervisors in relation to the county fairs held in said county by the San Joaquin County Fair Association, a corporation.

The manner in which the fair association took general charge of the fair grounds and proceeded with its improvement of the same, the erection of buildings, and the holding of county fairs, is fully shown by the testimony of W. L. Douglas, the manager of the fair association. His testimony is as follows:

"My introduction to the board of supervisors was in June, 1920, when they came out to the fair grounds and the board of directors of the fair association and the board of supervisors and myself met on the grounds. I think it was June 16, 1920. Now, at that time, they had a tentative agreement that they would go ahead and expend some money in the improvement of the grounds. The fair association had been organized for two years and held a fair at Oak Park in 1919. The supervisors said they would expend a certain amount of money on cattle barns and a certain amount of money on the pumping plant. There was no resolution made at that time; there was no written agreement; but it was agreed at that time among themselves—the fair association directors and the board of supervisors—that the fair association would go ahead, run the fair, put on a fair during the year 1920, after this money had been expended. Since that time, each and every year, we have had various and numerous meetings with the supervisors, sometimes in their office, sometimes at the fair grounds. We have all been to the fair grounds together. The board of supervisors have gone out there and gone over the whole grounds with me. I showed it to them, told them what we were doing, showed them the improvements, asked their advice in various matters and various things that should be done and they have always been constantly apprised of what the fair association was doing towards improving and conserving the property on the San Joaquin county fair grounds. I called upon the board of supervisors one time and asked them to change the name from Agricultural Park to San Joaquin County Fair Grounds. I know of that resolution and the question came up of renting the stalls on the grounds. They sent me a letter advising me to go ahead and collect stall rent—rent stalls and collect money therefor. Those are the only resolutions that I have any record of, but the supervisors meeting with them at various times—they have always been advised what we are doing.”

In 1924, in preparation for the 1924 fair, the transcript shows that the association furnished materials and supplies, constructed fences about the race track, cared for the grounds, repaired the buildings, installed a pump and turnstiles, and performed other work considered necessary in connection with the holding of the county fair.

The trial court found, among other things, that in all matters connected with or pertaining to the construction, repair, furnishing, improving, preserving, managing and controlling the buildings and improvements on said premises, in the purchasing and furnishing of materials, supplies, etc., the San Joaquin Fair Association used and exercised its judgment and discretion and the judgment and discretion of its officers; that the county of San Joaquin and the board of supervisors of said county and the members of said board of supervisors did not exercise or use any judgment or discretion therein, nor did any officer of the county exercise any judgment or discretion in relation to said matters, and, summarizing the findings of the court which are quite lengthy, it is found that all the work of construction, repairs, furnishing, improvements, preservation, management, control, etc., the quantity and quality of the work to be done, the amount to be paid therefor, and everything practically connected therewith, was done and performed upon the initiative of the San Joaquin County Fair Association, without any action whatever on the part of the board of supervisors, or any purchasing agent of said county.

The first official action of the board of supervisors relative to the expenditures made and indebtedness incurred by the San Joaquin County Fair Association, a corporation, was the passage of the resolution which we have herein set forth. The transcript further shows that during all the times mentioned herein the county of San Joaquin had a duly appointed and acting purchasing agent, as provided for in subdivision 21 of section 4041, Political Code, and therefore, as provided for in subdivision 7 of said section, in order to require bids for furnishing materials, supplies, and work for the county, the aggregate sum to be expended under the contract must exceed the sum of $1,000. The court in this case has found that the contracts exceeded said sum.

[1] The appellant's contention in the first instance is based upon the provisions of subdivisions 6 and 33 of section 4041 of the Political Code and section 4056b of said Code. The inapplicability of subdivision 6 of section 4041 is apparent, however, as it nowhere relates to the holding of fairs or performing the acts generally done and performed by the San Joaquin County Fair Association, as shown by the testimony set forth in the transcript.

Subdivision 6 of section 4041 of the Political Code empowers the board of supervisors to purchase, receive by donation, lease, or otherwise acquire water rights, or real or personal property necessary for the use of the county, for a courthouse, jail, hospital, historical museum, art gallery, art institute, stadium, and almshouse, an exposition building or buildings, public pleasure ground, public parks, and other public purposes, and also property upon which to sink wells, etc. Provision is made as to the manner of acquiring such property. The method therein provided for was not followed in the case at bar, if the section were otherwise applicable.

Subdivision 33 of section 4041 authorizes boards of supervisors to levy a special tax not exceeding two cents on the hundred dollars of the assessed valuation of all property within the county to be used for advertising, exploiting, and making known the resources of the county for the purpose of inducing immigration to, and increasing the trade and commerce of, said county, or for the purpose of exhibiting or advertising the agricultural, mineral, or other resources of the county, and further specifying that, if the taxes so levied do not raise the sum of $5,000, the board of supervisors may appropriate from the general fund of the county an amount sufficient to make up the deficit between the amount received from the taxes and the said sum of $5,000.

Section 4056b of the Political Code empowers the board of supervisors of the several counties of the state of California to levy a special tax on the taxable property within their respective counties for the purpose of creating a fund to be used for collecting, preparing, and maintaining an exhibition of the products and industries of the county at any domestic or foreign exposition, etc., specifying, however, that the total tax for any such purposes in any one year shall not exceed six cents on each $100 of taxable property, and providing that such taxes shall only be levied by a two-thirds vote of the members of the board. The transcript does not show compliance with any of the sections or subdivisions of the sections of the Political Code.

Section 18 of article 11 of the state Constitution prohibits counties from incurring indebtedness or liability for any purpose exceeding in any one year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the consent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election held for such purpose.

There is no allegation in any of the pleadings in this action, nor in the briefs, indicating compliance with the sections of the Code relative to raising money for the holding of expositions, but it would inferentially appear that no such action was taken by the board of supervisors of the county of San Joaquin, from the fact that the first official act in relation thereto or pertaining to any of the matters involved in this action was the passage of the resolution dated January 12, 1925.

We are thus brought to a consideration of the questions whether the board of supervisors of the county of San Joaquin could legally delegate to the San Joaquin Fair Association the performance of the work, the holding, conducting, management of county fairs, making such expenditures as the association saw fit, exercising its own judgment, as found by the trial court, and then, after all such expenditures have been incurred, ratify the same so as to make the difference between the money received and the money paid out by the San Joaquin County Fair Association, a corporation, a valid claim upon the treasury of the county of San Joaquin.

The answers to these questions are so clearly and distinctly set forth in the opinion filed by the learned judge of the trial court that we take the liberty of quoting therefrom in extenso:

"This is an action brought by the plaintiff, a citizen and taxpayer of this county, to restrain the county auditor from drawing on the county treasurer of this county warrants in payment of certain claims that were, on or about the 12th day of January, 1925, approved and allowed by the board of supervisors of this county in the sum of $14,988.25, all of which were in favor of San Joaquin County Fair Association, a corporation, with the exception of $95.25 in favor of one F. A. Groom. * * * The expenditures on which the claims of the fair association are based were made by the association during the year 1924, and were made, as shown by the testimony, in the construction of permanent improvements on certain premises used for fair ground purposes, and owned by the county of San Joaquin, and also in the purchase, by the association, of certain personal property for the equipment and necessary use on such property. * * * The first official cognizance, however, that was taken by the board of supervisors of the county of the making of these improvements, or the procuring and furnishing of this personal property, was on January 12, 1925, when the board of supervisors * * * made and entered its resolution wherein it 'resolved and ordered that the incurring of the hereinafter designated claims and demands heretofore incurred by the San Joaquin County Fair Association, a private corporation, as aforesaid, be and the same hereby are ratified by the board of supervisors of the county of San Joaquin as having been incurred for its use and benefit for and on its behalf, and the same are hereby approved, allowed, and ordered paid to the following named persons, firms, and corporations, in the amounts set after their respective names, from the general fund and the immigration fund of said county of San Joaquin, as hereinafter designated: From general fund, San Joaquin Co. Fair Ass'n, as per bill of items attached, $2-366.03; F. A. Groom, Stockton, Calif., as per bill of items attached, $95.25; * * * San Joaquin Co. Fair Ass'n, as per bill of items attached, $2,706.79; San Joaquin Co. Fair Ass'n, as per bill of items attached, $3,800; San Joaquin Co. Fair Ass'n, as per bill of items attached, $4,245.09; from immigration fund * * * San Joaquin Co. Fair Ass'n, as per bill of items attached, $1,785.54.' * * * In view of the resolution passed by the board of supervisors, plaintiff's sole claim in this proceeding is that the claims in question were not in the first instance incurred in the manner limited and required by law defining the powers of boards of supervisors, and that consequently the board of supervisors was without power or jurisdiction to subsequently approve and ratify the making of the expenditures upon which the claims were based. Therefore, since the charges and allegations of plaintiff's complaint go to the extent of attacking the jurisdiction and powers of the board of supervisors to create a claim against the county by the subsequent attempted ratification of acts and conduct which the board in the first instance was without power to perform, this action on these grounds, and on these grounds alone, was within the power and right of the taxpayer to commence. For it involves solely and entirely a question of the law touching the proper limits of the board of supervisors, and not merely a question of fact in the exercise by the board, in a proper and legal manner, of its vested powers. Consequently this controversy involves more than a question of mere personal or private rights of citizens, but involves the manner of exercise by the board of supervisors of its limited powers in the expenditure of public funds. It is for this reason that the merely subsequent approval by the board of supervisors of the claims in question under the allegations of this complaint will not protect the auditor or the treasurer in the drawing or cashing of the warrants in question. As stated by our Supreme Court in the case of Walton v. McPhetridge, 120 Cal. 440, at page 443, 52 P. 731, 733: 'If illegal claims are allowed by the board it will be the duty of the auditor to refuse to draw warrants therefor (Linden v. Case, 46 Cal. 175); and the auditor ought not to draw his warrant for an illegal demand, even though allowed by the board, and if he does so knowingly and willfully he is personally responsible, and may be made to refund the money thus illegally paid (Merriam v. Board of Supervisors, 72 Cal. 519 [14 P. 137]). The case at bar is not one merely involving the findings of fact by a board with respect to a claim clearly chargeable against the county and within the jurisdiction of the board to allow or reject. In such a case, the conclusion of the board is final, and the auditor has no discretion to disregard it. Here the question is not one of fact, but whether or not the claim is in its nature one which the board had jurisdiction to allow. The mere introduction of the written claim which appellant presented to the board, with the indorsement of allowance, does not make a prima facie case. It does not show upon its face that it is a claim chargeable against the county, and, when viewed in the light of the complaint, the contrary appears.' See, also, Biggart v. Lewis, 183 Cal. 660, at page 672, 192 P. 437, 442; Reclamation District v. Riley, 192 Cal. 147, 218 P. 762; San Christiana Inv. Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 167 Cal. 762, 769, 770, 141 P. 384, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 676.

"Or, as succinctly stated in the case of Jacks v. Taylor, 24 Cal. App. 667, at page 674, 142 P. 121, 124: 'The mere fact that the claim was allowed by the board would not invest it with a validity which it did not theretofore possess.'

"As already noted, it appears in this case that the ownership of the fair grounds property with all its improvements, valued at over $200,000, was vested in the county of San Joaquin, and the duty of the care and control thereof during the year 1924 was vested in the board of supervisors. Furthermore, the power and duty of the making of improvements thereon, together with the manner of proceeding thereunder, was by statute delegated as a trust by the people, through their Legislature, to the board of supervisors. Section 4041, pars. 6 and 7, specifically provides that 'the boards of supervisors, in their respective counties shall have jurisdiction and power, under such limitations and restrictions as are prescribed by law: * * * To purchase, receive by donation, * * * real or personal property necessary for the use of the county, for * * * an exposition building or buildings, public pleasure ground, public parks, and other public purposes, * * * and to improve, preserve, take care of, manage and control the same; * * * to construct * * * build or rebuild, furnish or refurnish or repair, * * * exposition building or buildings for exhibiting and advertising, farming, mining, manufacturing, live stock raising, and other resources of the county, * * * and to provide all necessary officers, employees, attendants, and supplies for the proper maintenance of the same. * * * Whenever the cost of construction of * * * exposition building or buildings, stadium or other public buildings, or the cost of any repairs thereto or furnishing thereof shall exceed the sum of five hundred dollars, such work shall be done by contract, and any contract therefor shall be void unless the same shall be let as hereinafter provided.' Then follows specific directions touching plans, specifications, and bids, and proviso that 'in counties employing a purchasing agent, that furnishings, materials and supplies used in the work mentioned in this subdivision costing not more than one thousand dollars, may be purchased by said purchasing agent,' etc. And also to the board of supervisors is delegated the trust 'to purchase, acquire, construct, equip and maintain all necessary tanks, reservoirs, pumps, apparatus, motor vehicles and other machinery necessary or proper to facilitate the performance of the work in the county.' Paragraph 9. And, furthermore, by an amendment to this act passed by the Legislature in 1909 (St. 1909, pp. 126, 756), by subdivision 21 of said section 4041, they were specially authorized by the people of the state to delegate a portion of their own heretofore delegated powers to the extent that they might employ a purchasing agent 'whose duty shall be to purchase for the county and the officers thereof * * * and all other supplies; to purchase machinery, implements, material, and all other personal property, material or supplies, the same to be purchased only upon a proper requisition therefor. * * *'

[2] "The foregoing being the powers delegated to the board of supervisors, it appears without conflict, and, in fact, by the direct testimony of the manager of the fair association corporation, as well as by the recitals in the resolution of the board of supervisors of January 12, 1925, that all the expenditures which form the basis of the fair association's claim were made upon the initiative and judgment of the directors of such association, and under the sole direction of their manager, as regards the determining of the amount thereof, the kind, character, and extent thereof, as well as the cost thereof, and from whom and by whom purchased, and the manner and method of the purchase thereof, and that at no time and in no manner did the board of supervisors, acting as a board, assume any control thereof, or exercise any discretion in regard thereto, or in any way assume any authority or control thereof, or by original resolution or otherwise, authorize or direct the activities of the fair association in regard thereto. And, furthermore, an examination of the many various items and the general subject-matter of the claims fully shows that the purchase of the articles set forth therein, and the making of the improvements shown by the testimony to have been made through the use of the labor and material set forth therein, comprised and consisted of, to the extent of every dollar thereof, improvements, repairs, furnishings, and equipment upon county property which the law provides could be made only by the board of supervisors, and, furthermore, only by the supervisors by the use, in a legal manner and under legal forms, of their own judgment and discretion, and, furthermore, it appears from the testimony touching the amount, nature, kind, and character of the improvements made and personal property purchased, that the court must find that the use and employment by the board of supervisors of their own discretion and sound judgment in the first instance, and on the very originating of this work, was one of the duties imposed by law upon the board of supervisors. That permeating the very spirit of our government, so far at least as concerns municipal bodies, is the rule that officers to whom duties involving the use of judgment and discretion are allotted, must themselves use that judgment and discretion in the performance of their delegated trusts, and are themselves absolutely without power, under the law, to delegate to others the use of their own official judgment and discretion. In other words, for better or worse, the people are entitled to the services of their chosen servants to be exercised in the manner and to the full extent of their employment under the law. Consequently, to put the matter concretely, it would seem, as shown by the testimony herein, that the ways and means and purposes of the expenditure during the year 1924 (principally in the county's fair grounds) was a matter that in its details of planning, purchasing, and managing involved the exercise of judgment and discretion, and of a judgment and discretion of the kind and character pre-eminently and unquestionably possessed by a board of supervisors, and its own ministerial agent. It appears that these expenditures were not made by the people's delegated servants or trustees, but were made by others who had accepted, by their own implication, an assumed delegation from servants who under the law had no right or power to give such delegation.

"It is a canon of law, as well as of common sense, that a subsequent ratification cannot give validity of an act or a conduct which, in the first instance and in its inception, was without validity, or, as stated in our Civil Code (section 2312), 'A ratification is not valid unless, at the time of ratifying the act done, the principal has power to confer authority for such an act.' Now, as already indicated, the act which the resolution of January 12, 1925, seeks to ratify, is the act of the fair association (in every respect public-spirited, disinterested, and well-intentioned, it may be assumed) in accepting—and that by implication only—a direction from the board of supervisors to use their own judgment and discretion in devising, planning, executing, and paying for certain improvements on county property, and in the selection, bargaining for, and purchasing of furnishings—all in the sum of about $15,000. And that such was the act sought to be ratified is shown not only by the testimony, but is not in conflict with the recitals in the resolution of January 12, 1925.

"Now, it may be conceded (without reference to any questions involving advertising or the use of the purchasing agent), as contended by learned counsel, that the board did, as a matter of fact, have authority under the statute to have in the first instance planned and carried out this work, and to have made all the expenditures that were made. But from this it does not follow, in law or in fact, that the board had the power to do the act indicated above, and which the resolution itself of January 12th, clearly implies was done; which act was an attempted unlawful vesting in an unofficial body of the judgment and discretion vested in and delegated by the law to the board of supervisors. Also learned counsel placed some reliance upon language used by Justice Henshaw in the case of Power v. May, reported in 114 Cal. 207, 46 P. 6, and 123 Cal. 147, 55 P. 796. That was a case where an attorney at law applied for a writ of mandate against the treasurer of Tulare county to pay his claim based upon professional services rendered by him to the county. It was conceded in that case that the county had, in the first instance, power under the law to employ an attorney to render his professional services. And it further appeared that the only informality in regard to his employment (in addition to some matters of fraud and collusion which were afterwards satisfactorily explained) was 'that there was no previous formal resolution of the board authorizing plaintiff to perform the service; that there was an understanding to that effect, which for some unexplained reason was not entered upon the minutes of the board.' And it was in reference to this informality that the following language relied upon by counsel was used by the court: 'Can the board of supervisors legally allow a claim for the beneficial use of money, labor, or property, although the formalities necessary to bind the county have not been employed? Without entering into an elaborate consideration of this question, it is sufficient to say that this may at times, and under certain circumstances, be done, provided the power to do so be not withheld in the grant of powers to the board, and provided further that the service has been bestowed, or the money expended for the benefit of the county in a manner authorized by law. Under such circumstances, if the board had original power in the premises, it may cure informalities or irregularities in procedure by a subsequent ratification and recognition of its liability.' 114 Cal. 208, 46 P. 7.

"And in the final decision of the case the court disposed of the matter in the following language: 'While in all matters of such importance we think the board should act formally by resolution spread upon the minutes, still, as they had the power to act and the services were performed and the board did in fact subsequently approve the bill for the services and order it paid, we know of no reason why the subsequent ratification and order of payment should not be treated as equivalent to previous authority regularly given.'

"But, as already noted in the case at bar, there was neither any original contract of employment, nor was the act sought to be ratified anything more than an implied delegation, at the most, of authority to the claimant to give employment in the use of its discretion to other people. And therefore, in principle, the case at bar should not be governed by the case cited; but the doctrine applied in the later case of Knight v. City of Eureka, 123 Cal. 194, 55 P. 769. That also was a case where an attorney at law brought suit against a municipality to recover compensation for professional services of concededly high value and benefit to the city. But in that case the claimant was not obliged to rely upon mere ratification of a previous contract of employment. He was able to rely upon a resolution of the council which was passed before he accepted the employment or entered upon the duties thereof, and it was conceded in that case also that the city had authority, if properly exercised, to initiate the employment, and to be obliged to pay therefor. But in that case the resolution upon which the attorney relied was a resolution by which the council authorized and directed its own city attorney, with whom it had a contract, to employ such San Francisco counsel as he might deem necessary. In other words, the resolution upon which the attorney relied failed to show that the council made use of its own judgment and discretion in exercising its legal power to employ counsel, but delegated the use of that judgment and discretion to another party; just as in the case at bar, if it be assumed that there was any direction given to the claimant here which can be the basis of any implied contract, it was a direction which was a mere delegation of the use of the board's own judgment and discretion in the placing of permanent improvements on the county's property, and the purchasing of necessary furnishings therefor.

"Also, in deciding the case, the court enunciated and relied upon basic principles of law which it would seem are specially applicable in the case at bar, the following being some of the language used:

"'Practically, the authority here delegated left with the agent of the council the discretion to determine the necessity for employing an assistant and to fix his compensation. These were powers which, in our opinion, the council alone could exercise, and therefore could not be delegated.'

"'We think the true doctrine is correctly stated by Mr. Dillon at section 96: "The principle is a plain one, that the public powers or trusts devolved by law or charter upon the council or governing body, to be exercised by it when and in such manner as it shall judge best, cannot be delegated to others.'" 123 Cal. at pages 194, 195 [55 P. 769].

"And furthermore, if it is contended that the implied direction given to the claimant herein was not, in effect, as the facts seem to indicate, a mere attempted delegation of authority, but was a direct employment of the fair association corporation to itself do the work, then, and in that event, it is evident that such act of implied direct employment failed absolutely to come within the rules laid down by the statute for the guidance and control of the board of supervisors in the letting of contracts or the making of purchases involving such a large sum as $15,000, and pertaining to the kind and character of the permanent improvements assumed to have been contracted for herein.

[3] "Section 4056b and subdivision 33 of section 4041 of the Political Code are intended simply to give the board power to levy taxes for the purposes indicated therein, to wit: To advertise, exploit, and make known the resources of the county, etc., and to create a fund to be used for collecting, preparing, and maintaining an exhibit of the products and industries of this county at any domestic or foreign exposition for the purpose of encouraging immigration. But it is to subdivision 7 of section 4041 that we must look when we desire to ascertain the conditions and limitations under which the board of supervisors must act when they desire to exercise their powers in the way of making permanent improvements and refurnishing of the kind in the case at bar. By the Amendment of 1923, there was specially included in subdivision 7 matters pertaining to the rebuilding, furnishing, or refurnishing of 'exposition building or buildings for exhibiting and advertising farming, mining, manufacturing, live stock raising, and other resources of the county, stadium and such other public buildings as may be necessary to carry out the work of the county government, * * * and supplies for the proper maintenance of the same.' It therefore follows that the doing of the work by the supervisors for which compensation is sought herein could only be done under the restrictions touching plans, specifications, and bids laid down in subdivision 7.

"Likewise, as regards the acquiring of the personal property if it be assumed that the property was acquired directly from the claimant here, and not as the result of any delegation of authority to the claimant, then such acquisition should have been had through the purchasing agent designated by the Legislature in subdivision 21 of the act."

[4] In addition to the foregoing, we may add, quoting the language of the text-writer, in 18 Cal. Jur. p. 1002, § 273:

"It is generally recognized that ultra vires contracts of a municipal corporation are absolutely void, and cannot be the subject of ratification or estoppel in pais. And the decided weight of authority is to the effect that when, by charter or statute, the mode in which contracts of a municipal corporation may be entered into is prescribed, and any other method is expressly or impliedly prohibited, no contract will be binding unless made in the specified mode; the mode in such cases constitutes the measure of the power."

The citations set forth as supporting this statement of the law are too copious to be here inserted. And further, upon the same subject, we may quote from 7 Cal. Jur. p. 512, § 86:

"Inasmuch as a county has power to make only such contracts as are expressly authorized or such as may be necessary to the exercise of its powers, it follows that any contract made in excess of this power is ultra vires and therefore void. * * * Also where duties are enjoined by law upon county officers specially designated for their discharge, the board of supervisors is entirely without authority to contract with private parties for their performance"—citing a number of authorities.

The entire transcript in this case shows that the board of supervisors delegated its authority to a private corporation, even if we assume that it had authority to expend the money in the first instance. In making this statement, we must disregard what we have heretofore said, that the transcript shows no compliance with the law relative to the raising of money for the purposes of holding a county fair. That boards of supervisors may not delegate the performance of acts involving an exercise of judgment or discretion, see, also, 15 Corpus Juris, 465; Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) p. 84, par. 124.

We see no escape from the conclusion that the board of supervisors had no authority to delegate to the San Joaquin Fair Association, a private corporation, the performance of the acts which it did perform so as to render the county liable for any deficiency between the receipts and expenditures of such private concern in the handling of a county fair. Having no authority to make the delegation, the ratification is absolutely void.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

BLACKWELL v. THOMASSON. (Civ. 4791.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 8, 1927.

1. Evidence ⚡397(2)—Oral negotiations are merged in complete written contract, and it may not be varied by parol evidence.

Where a complete written contract is made, oral representations and negotiations are merged in the contract, and parol evidence is not permissible to vary its terms.

2. Evidence ⚡434(1)—Parol evidence is always admissible to prove fraud.

Fraud may always be proved by parol evidence.

3. Evidence ⚡434(11)—Fact that written automobile sales contract recited that it contained all conditions and representations held not to prevent purchaser from proving fraud by parol evidence.

The fact that an automobile sale was evidenced by a written contract reciting that all conditions and representations were embodied therein held not to prevent the purchaser from proving by parol evidence that the sale was induced by fraud in making false guaranty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ralph H. Clock, Judge.

Suit by Jack Blackwell against D. H. Thomasson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph P. Sproul and Sproul & Sproul, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James S. Jarrott and Jarrott & Jarrott, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff brought suit for the recovery of moneys paid under a sales contract for the purchase of an automobile. Defendant appeals from a judgment rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $275.

Plaintiff testified: That he saw an advertisement of the defendant guaranteeing a new car for 90 days; that he called on the defendant and the automobile was shown to him by a salesman, who said to him: "We guarantee the car for 90 days; you have got the advertisement in your hands and we stand by our guaranty. We give you a written guaranty also with that." That he agreed to purchase the machine, and that when defendant presented the contract for signature he inquired about the guaranty. That defendant said the guaranty could not be included in the contracts because it would cost too much to discount them, but that if plaintiff would sign the contract that he would have the guaranty typewritten and mailed to plaintiff the next morning. That plaintiff never received the guaranty and defendant refused it. By leave of court, plaintiff was granted permission to amend his complaint, alleging fraud. While there was a sharp conflict in the evidence yet there was evidence to support the finding of the court as follows:

"That as part of the consideration for said sale, the defendant guaranteed and represented that said car was new and in perfect condition, and that he, the said defendant, would keep the same in good condition and in good repair for a period of 90 days from and after June 11, 1921. That at said time defendant falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff that said guaranty would not be incorporated in the written agreement for the purchase of said car for the reason that defendant expected to sell said agreement, and if the same contained a written guaranty he would be unable to sell or discount the contract except at great loss, but that he would guarantee said automobile as hereinbefore set forth for the period of 90 days after said date and mail to plaintiff a written statement to that effect. That defendant made said representations, statements, and promises without any intention of performing the same, but solely for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to execute said contract for the purchase of said car and making the payments therein called for. That defendant failed to mail to plaintiff any guaranty in writing. That relying upon defendant's said representations, promises, and agreement, plaintiff paid to defendant the sum of $375 on the purchase price of said automobile. That at all times thereafter while said automobile was in plaintiff's possession plaintiff operated the same in a prudent and careful manner and took good care of the same. That at the time said car was delivered to plaintiff it was not in perfect mechanical condition, and was unfit for practical use as an automobile. That on July 17, 1921, the said automobile was defective and became out of repair and could not be operated by reason of the following defects: The radiator leaked, the self-starter would not work, it was impossible to keep lights burning on said car—the electrical appliances on said car being defective and burnt out the lights—the valves were defective, and would stick so that said car could not be operated, and the clutch would not hold when going up grade."

The purchase agreement contained the following:

"It is agreed that this instrument contains the entire agreement between the contracting parties and that no statement, promises, or inducements made by any party hereto, or employee, agent, or salesman of either party hereto, which is not contained in this written contract shall be binding or valid; and this contract may not be enlarged, modified, or altered except by endorsement hereon, and signed by the party of the first part or his assigns and the party of the second part."

[1-3] Appellant relies upon the rule that a written agreement cannot be varied by an oral statement. As held in the cases cited by appellant, the general principle of law, well settled, is that where a complete written contract is made, oral representations or warranties and all oral negotiations are merged in the written contract, and the general rule is that parol evidence is not admissible to vary its terms. But parol evidence is always admissible to prove fraud. The fact that the sale of the automobile is evidenced by a written contract which recites that all conditions and representations are embodied therein will not prevent the purchaser from proving by parol evidence that the sale was induced by fraud. Mooney v. Cyriacks, 185 Cal. 70, 81, 195 P. 192; Whiting v. Squeglia, 70 Cal. App. 108, 114, 232 P. 986; Odson v. Swanson, 70 Cal. App. 279, 233 P. 354; California Credit & Collection Corp. v. Randall (Cal. App.) 244 P. 958.

The judgment is ordered affirmed.

GUSTASON v. SPEAK. (Civ. 4858.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 10, 1927.

1. New trial $\Rightarrow$ 70—Trial court has power to grant new trial notwithstanding evidence might be sufficient to justify verdict for plaintiff.

That there was sufficient evidence to justify a verdict for plaintiff is not necessarily sufficient to deprive the court of power to grant defendant a new trial.

2. Malicious prosecution $\Rightarrow$ 21(1)—One acting honestly on advice of attorney after disclosing all facts has "probable cause."

Where defendant in action for malicious prosecution shows that before commencing the prosecution he, in good faith, consulted an attorney of good standing and stated all the facts, and was advised that a prosecution would lie and acted honestly on that advice, this of itself constitutes "probable cause."

3. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 977(3)—Order granting new trial will not be disturbed unless trial court abused discretion.

An order of the trial court granting a new trial should not be disturbed unless it is clearly manifest that there was an abuse of discretion.

4. New trial $\Rightarrow$ 70—Granting defendant new trial in malicious prosecution held not abuse of discretion, in view of evidence.

Granting new trial on the ground that the evidence did not support the verdict for plaintiff in action for malicious prosecution held not an abuse of discretion, in view of the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action for malicious prosecution by David Gustason against A. J. Speak. Judgment for plaintiff. From an order granting defendant a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William U. Handy, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Willedd Andrews, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for malicious prosecution of a criminal action against the plaintiff. In accordance with the verdict of a jury, judgment was entered for plaintiff in the sum of $500. Thereafter the defendant moved for a new trial. The court granted said motion, and in its order specified that the motion was granted upon the ground that the evidence does not support the verdict. From said order plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff as a physician had rendered professional services to the wife of respondent, A. J. Speak, and for those services had made a charge of $200. Mr. Speak contended that the charge was excessive. After the disagreement had continued for some time, Speak sent to the plaintiff a check for $125 with a notation thereon in the words "Payment in full to date." Thereafter the plaintiff pasted over the defendant's notation on the check a slip of paper on which he had written the following: "Applies on account statement rendered"—and stamped thereunder with a rubber stamp his own name and address. With the check in that condition he presented the same to the bank for payment. On being informed of these facts, Mr. Speak ordered payment stopped on the check. Thereafter Speak discussed this matter with his attorney, who advised him to see the district attorney. For the purpose of showing said check to the district attorney Speak obtained possession thereof from a justice court, where it had been filed in an action of Gustason to recover on his claim, and took it to the office of the district attorney, where he exhibited the check and made a statement of facts. According to his own testimony, Speak told the district attorney that there had been a dispute between him and the doctor, and that he had made his check a receipt to show that it cleared him of a $200 charge "if this check came through so and so; but when it came through here is the condition it is in." Thereupon the district attorney prepared a complaint charging the defendant with forgery and told Speak to take the papers to the justice court. Speak complied with this instruction and made affidavit to the complaint. According to Speak's testimony, he believed that plaintiff "was guilty of some offense there."

The deputy district attorney who had the interview with Speak stated that he issued the complaint because he thought that the document as presented to him was a forgery. His testimony corroborated that of Mr. Speak with reference to the interview and the appearance of the check, but denied that Speak had explained to him the circumstances under which the check was issued, or had stated that there had been any attempt to settle a disputed account. He said that he told Speak that "he thought it was a forgery." Prior to the commencement of this action the criminal complaint had been dismissed by the justice of the peace.

Appellant contends that the order granting a new trial should be reversed because there was sufficient evidence: (1) To justify the jury in finding that a crime had not been committed by the plaintiff; (2) to justify the jury in deciding that the defendants had not made a full, fair, and true statement of all material facts to the district attorney; (3) to justify the jury in finding that there was both malice and lack of probable cause.

[1] The fact that there was sufficient evidence legally to justify a verdict is not necessarily sufficient to deprive the court of power to grant a new trial; otherwise, the right to grant a new trial in substantially all cases of conflicting evidence would be destroyed. "The trial court in acting upon a motion for a new trial, particularly on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict or findings, has a wide discretion, and its action thereon, either for or against the motion, will not be disturbed on appeal unless it clearly appears to the appellate court that the discretion was abused. This proposition has been so often decided that it is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of it." Estate of Wall, 183 Cal. 431, 191 P. 687.

[2-4] Where a defendant in an action for malicious prosecution shows that before commencing the prosecution alleged to have been malicious, he has in good faith consulted an attorney at law of good standing, has stated to him all of the facts of the case, and has been thereupon advised by such attorney that a prosecution would lie, and such person has acted honestly upon that advice, this, of itself, constitutes probable cause. Johnson v. Southern Pacific Co., 157 Cal. 333, 338, 107 P. 611. It is evident that in granting a new trial in the case at bar the trial court was of the opinion that according to the preponderance of the evidence the jury should have found that the defendant had made a full, fair, and true statement of all material facts to the district attorney before swearing to the complaint, and that upon the advice given to him by the district attorney in response to that statement the defendant, Speak, was justified in believing that there was probable cause for the prosecution. The judge before whom the case was tried having acted in accordance with his opinion in respect to this matter, his order granting a new trial should not be disturbed on this appeal unless it is clearly manifest that in the granting of the order upon the stated grounds there was an abuse of discretion. We think that there was no such abuse of discretion.

The order is affirmed.

In re HOYLE. (Civ. 5835.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 20, 1927.

1. Newspapers $\Leftrightarrow$ 3(1)—Construction of statute defining newspaper must be reasonable considering object of providing means of displaying public notices (Pol. Code, §§ 4460, 4462, 4463; Civ. Code, § 3542).

In proceeding under Pol. Code, § 4462, the construction of Pol. Code, §§ 4460, 4463, which define a newspaper of general circulation, must be reasonable and must consider the object to be accomplished of providing efficient means for displaying public notices (Civ. Code, § 3542).

2. Newspapers $\Leftrightarrow$ 3(3) — Newspaper held "printed and published" in same place notwithstanding use of boiler plate material produced elsewhere (Pol. Code, §§ 4460, 4462, 4463; Civ. Code, § 3542).

In proceeding under Pol. Code, § 4462, newspaper held one of general circulation under Pol. Code, §§ 4460, 4463, requiring that to be a newspaper of general circulation it must be both printed and published in the place where it seeks the patronage of public advertisements, notwithstanding that in making up the paper boiler plate material was used which was produced elsewhere (Civ. Code, § 3542).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Printed and Published.]

3. Newspapers $\Leftrightarrow$ 3(3)—Use of boiler plate held not within term "typesetting," as necessary part of mechanical process to be performed where newspaper is printed (Civ. Code, § 3542; Pol. Code, §§ 4460, 4463).

In view of Civ. Code, § 3542, requiring construction of statutes to be reasonable, use of boiler plate in making up newspaper held not included within term "typesetting" as a necessary part of mechanical process which Pol. Code, §§ 4460, 4463, requires to be performed where paper is printed and published.

In the matter of the application of John E. Hoyle to have the standing of the South San Francisco Journal and South San Francisco News as a newspaper of general circulation ascertained and established. From a decree establishing the newspaper as one of general circulation pursuant to Pol. Code, § 4462, an appeal was taken. Affirmed.

Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for appellant.

Franklin Swart, of Redwood City, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a decree adjudging "the South San Francisco Journal and South San Francisco News" to be a newspaper of general circulation pursuant to section 4462, Political Code.

Appellant contends that because a newspaper is made up in part of what is commonly termed "boiler plate" material, which is prepared elsewhere, the paper is not printed and published at South San Francisco, according to the definitions of the terms "printed" and "published" as provided by section 4463, Political Code.

The evidence is without substantial conflict. John E. Hoyle is the owner and publisher of the newspaper in question. For more than one year prior to the filing of the petition in this case that paper was printed, published, and issued from a fixed place of business located in South San Francisco; all of the local items of news and intelligence, as well as advertisements contained in the paper, were secured in that vicinity and printed with the object of serving the community; the mechanical part of producing the newspaper, including typesetting, editorial work, and impressing the type upon the paper, were all performed in that place; it possessed a bona fide paid subscription list in and about that city; and it was operated, issued, and circulated for the dissemination of news and intelligence of a general character. In the makeup of the paper, characteristic of the average rural press, the columns which were not required for paid advertisements or news items were filled with what is commonly called boiler plate. The evidence indicates that this stereotype matter sometimes occupied from 20 to 50 per cent. of the available space in the forms. The sole question involved in this appeal is whether a newspaper which uses in its makeup boiler plate material procured elsewhere than at the place where the paper is printed and published is qualified to enjoy the standing and privileges of a newspaper of general circulation, as provided by statute.

Section 4460 of the Political Code provides that:

"A newspaper of general circulation is a newspaper published for the dissemination of local or telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character, having a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers, and which shall have been established, printed and published at regular intervals, in the state, county, city, city and county, or town, where such publication, notice by publication, or official advertising is given or made, for at least one year preceding the date of such publication, notice or advertisement. * * *

The terms "established," "printed," and "published," as they are used in the preceding section, have been defined by the Legislature in section 4463 of the Political Code. The word "printed" means that the mechanical operation of producing the newspaper, including the typesetting and the impressing of the types upon the paper, or what is commonly known as the presswork, shall have been performed during the whole of the period of time prescribed by statute to qualify a paper as one of general circulation. The word "published" means that the newspaper must have been issued from the same place where it is printed. In order to qualify a newspaper as one of general circulation so as to entitle it to publish official notices and advertisements, it must be both printed and published in the city, town or county where it seeks the patronage of such public advertisements. Sections 4460, 4463, Pol. Code: Application of Monrovia Evening Post, 199 Cal. 263, 248 P. 1017.

[1] In determining whether a paper which makes use of boiler plate is qualified to enjoy the standing of a newspaper of general circulation, the language of the statute should be given a reasonable construction, keeping in mind the object sought to be accomplished by the Legislature, which was to provide for an efficient means of displaying public notices in order to reach the attention of interested parties in a particular community. In re McDonald, 187 Cal. 158, 201 P. 110; Application of Monrovia Evening Post, supra. In the case last cited it is said:

"The very purpose of requiring the publication of official notices is to inform the people concerning proceedings of a public nature for their general welfare. It appears reasonable to require such notices to be published in newspapers having a fixed and permanent domicile and a substantial circulation at the city or place where the inhabitants live who are most vitally interested in the transactions respecting which notices are required."

In this case the "Monrovia Evening Post" was held not to be a newspaper of general circulation in the city of Monrovia for the reason that all the mechanical portion of making up and issuing the paper, including stereotype plates, typesetting, and presswork, were performed in the printing shop of the "Pasadena Evening Post" at Pasadena, and not at Monrovia.

[2] Apparently the purpose of requiring a newspaper of general circulation to be both printed and published in the place where the public notices are to be made is to require such a paper to have a fixed and permanent abode. Evidently two things were considered as most important in determining the standing or permanency of a newspaper plant, namely, the location at which the mechanical part of the operation of making up the paper is performed; and, secondly, the process of issuing the paper, including the presswork, as well as the publication and circulation of the paper.

[3] In the exercise of a liberal construction of the statute it would seem unreasonable to hold that the "mechanical work of producing a newspaper" is not performed at the place where the paper is issued, even though it has a fixed place of business where its presses, forms, type, stock and printing apparatus are kept and used, where its editorial and mechanical work is done, and where local news is gathered, advertisements secured, and the bulk of its subscription list exists, merely because a percentage of its forms are made up of stereotype plates which are prepared elsewhere. This construction of the statute would probably disqualify every newspaper in existence, including the average rural press, as well as the more pretentious city daily papers, for all newspapers resort to the use of boiler plate material and many of them profit by the use of the more modern matrix system as well as the telephoto process of making plates for use in their columns, most of which newspaper feature material is produced outside of the local printing shop, and is furnished to the trade by syndicates which specialize in the service. It would seem almost impossible to successfully operate a newspaper in this progressive age without the use of the modern stereotype material. The newspaper field is now favored with many able and instructive specialists in editorial work, and in every line of activity, including finance, commerce, trade and agriculture, whose articles are stereotyped, syndicated and sold to a wide circle of newspaper customers. The so-called "funny page" and the pictorial magazine department of the great daily papers, cartoons, cuts of individuals, historic, picturesque and tragic scenes of calamities, advertising plates of drugs, nostrums, books, magazines and business enterprises of every sort are stereotyped or matrix-plated and sold to the trade for convenient and profitable use. Certainly it cannot be reasonably said that the use of this modern method of disseminating news and intelligence disqualifies a paper from becoming a newspaper of general circulation. It is true that primarily in the process of producing much of this boiler plate material, the type is first set by means of a mechanical typesetting machine, from which the dies are made and the plates cast, after which, in the composite form of boiler plate, the material is sold to the trade. Boiler plate, as it is commonly used for newspaper purposes, may be considered in the nature of material or equipment by the aid of which a newspaper is made up and produced. We are of the opinion that the use of boiler plate in the process of making up a newspaper is not included within the term of "typesetting" as a necessary part of the mechanical process which the statute requires to be performed in the place where the paper is printed and published. To hold otherwise would do violence to the cardinal rules of construction.

(Civ. Code, § 3542; 23 Cal. Jur. 722, 725), and would destroy the statute.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

W. H. MARSTON CO. v. CENTRAL ALASKA FISHERIES CO. (MUELLER, Intervener).
(S. F. 11497.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 29, 1927.

1. Guaranty ⚡102—Where guarantor claimed that he personally discharged obligations, evidence that company of which he was president filed claim against coguarantor's estate held admissible.

In action by assignee of guarantor to recover from principal amount paid in discharge of principal's indebtedness, where guarantor claimed that he personally furnished money that discharged obligations, evidence that company of which he was president filed creditor's claim against coguarantor's estate held admissible.

2. Guaranty ⚡100—If guaranty used money of another to pay guaranty obligation at principal's request, principal could not repudiate implied obligation to reimburse payor.

If guarantor used moneys in his possession and under his control belonging to company of which he was president with permission of latter to pay guaranty obligation, and payment was also made at request of principal and payee, principal could not repudiate its implied obligation to reimburse payor.

3. Principal and surety ⚡185—Surety, upon performing obligation, has right to action in assumpsit upon implied promise of principal to make him whole.

Full payment and performance by surety extinguishes primary obligation, and new rights and liabilities then arise, upon part of principal to reimburse surety for moneys expended with legal interest, though not according to terms of primary obligation, and upon part of surety right of action in assumpsit upon implied promise of principal to make him whole.

4. Bills and notes ⚡214—Assignment of right, title, and interest in claims against corporation held sufficient to transfer assignor's right of recovery on notes (Civ. Code, §§ 953, 954, 1044).

Assignment embracing all of assignor's right, title, and interest in his claims and demands against corporation, including his claim and demand on certain notes, held sufficiently specific to transfer assignor's right to recover on notes to assignee, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 953, 954, 1044, though no actual transfer of the notes was made.

5. Guaranty ⚡102—Finding that company to whom guarantor assigned claim against principal paid indebtedness at guarantor's request was equivalent to finding that relationship of creditor and debtor existed.

Finding of court to effect that company to whom guarantor assigned claim against principal paid indebtedness of which latter was guarantor, at his special instance and request, was equivalent to finding that relationship of creditor and debtor was thereby created, from which an implied promise at once arose on part of guarantor to repay amount advanced by company to meet his obligation.

6. Corporations ⚡506—Where corporation would have made no defense otherwise, permitting stockholder to intervene as party in interest held not error.

Where it was plain that unless stockholder intervened no defense whatever would have been made by defendant corporation or by any person in its behalf in action by guarantor to recover from corporation amount paid in discharge of its indebtedness, there was no error in allowing stockholder to intervene as party in interest.

7. Parties ⚡48—Denying stockholder, intervenor, right to continue as party after failure to sustain complaint in intervention held not error.

In action by assignee of guarantor to recover from principal amount paid in discharge of principal's indebtedness, where guarantor had been one of stockholders and officers of principal, denying intervenor, a stockholder of defendant corporation, right to continue as party after failure of proof to sustain allegations of complaint in intervention charging collusion on part of plaintiff and directors of defendant corporation, held not error.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by the W. H. Marston Company against the Central Alaska Fisheries Company to recover as assignee of guarantor from principal amount paid in discharge of principal's indebtedness, in which Fred A. Mueller intervened. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for appellant.

B. D. Marx Greene and William Kehoe, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. By the complaint herein, which contains 26 causes of action, plaintiff alleged an indebtedness against defendant, Central Alaska Fisheries Company, a corporation, evidenced by several promissory notes made and executed by Central Alaska Fisheries Company to the First National Bank of Berkeley, reduced by a few payments made thereon to the sum of $123,027.95, with interest, which indebtedness was assigned by W. H. Marston, as guarantor, to W. H. Marston Company. Said bank thereafter indorsed certain of said notes without recourse and contemporaneously therewith delivered the same to the Central National Bank of Oakland and the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco, respectively.

The trial court found that the only cause of action upon which plaintiff was entitled to recover against defendant, Central Alaska Fisheries Company, was the one which recited a transaction whereby W. H. Marston, on December 1, 1920, loaned said Central Alaska Fisheries Company the sum of $5,000, as evidenced by the latter's promissory note to him, which note was thereafter assigned to plaintiff. Judgment accordingly went for plaintiff for the sum of $5,000 only, with interest. It is from that part of the judgment which limited the amount recoverable against said defendant to the note last above mentioned that the appeal was taken. Practically all of the indebtedness sued upon was evidenced by promissory notes made during the year 1921. A portion of said indebtedness had its inception in 1920, at a time when W. P. Springer was president and Peter A. Wagner, secretary-treasurer, and W. H. Marston, vice president, of Central Alaska Fisheries Company, and was carried into the transactions of 1921 in the form of renewal notes. Beginning with the year 1921, W. H. Marston became president, and his son, Otis Marston, secretary, of said company. W. H. Marston and his son Otis were also contemporaneously president and secretary, respectively, of the W. H. Marston Company, a corporation. All of the said promissory notes executed by Central Alaska Fisheries Company to the First National Bank of Berkeley were guaranteed by W. H. Marston either by indorsement upon said notes or by a written contract of continuing guaranty executed by him. In most instances both methods of guaranty were adopted.

By the first cause of action, it is alleged that at the special instance and request and for the use and benefit of the Central Alaska Fisheries Company, W. H. Marston paid to said First National Bank of Berkeley the sum of money herein sued upon and assigned to plaintiff his claim and demand thereto. By the second cause of action it is alleged that at the special instance and request and for the use and benefit of the Central Alaska Fisheries Company, W. H. Marston Company, at the special instance and request of W. H. Marston and in order to discharge the liability of the said W. H. Marston as a guarantor of the obligation of said Central Alaska Fisheries Company, paid to said First National Bank of Berkeley the amount named in the first cause of action; that after said W. H. Marston Company made said payment at the special instance and request of W. H. Marston, guarantor aforesaid, he likewise assigned and transferred to said W. H. Marston Company all his right, title, and interest in and to all claims and demands that he had against said Central Alaska Fisheries Company. The two allegations above specifically referred to, to wit, the satisfaction or payment of the Central Alaska Fisheries Company's indebtedness to the bank, first, by Marston, and, second, by the W. H. Marston Company at the former's request, in view of the court's findings, become important questions in determining the character of the transactions and the rights of Marston, especially with respect to his relations with the W. H. Marston Company.

[1] The W. H. Marston Company owned considerable income-producing property, but had no bank account. It would seem that all of the income derived from its property was received by W. H. Marston and deposited to his account. The W. H. Marston Company borrowed upon its notes during the years 1920 and 1921 $130,000. Of this sum it would seem that $30,000 was furnished by the First National Bank of Berkeley, $50,000 by the Central National Bank of Oakland and $50,000 by the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco, and the whole amount was deposited with the First National Bank of Berkeley and placed in the account of W. H. Marston. He paid all the taxes assessed against the W. H. Marston Company's property and premiums on policies of insurance as they became due. When called upon to make good his guaranty of the Central Alaska Fisheries Company's notes he responded by checks against his personal account. It appears that upon the death of Peter A. Wagner, who was a coguarantor with Marston of the Central Alaska Fisheries Company's said indebtedness, W. H. Marston Company (and not W. H. Marston) filed, on December 7, 1921, a creditor's claim against the estate of Peter A. Wagner totaling $83,000. The claim, which was filed more than three years before the commencement of the present action, was based upon six separate promissory notes executed during the months of October, November, and December, 1920, by said Central Alaska Fisheries Company to the First National Bank of Berkeley; the payment of which was jointly and severally guaranteed by said Peter A. Wagner, W. P. Springer, and W. H. Marston, all stockholders and officers of said Central Alaska Fisheries Company. The claimant, W. H. Marston Company, averred in its affidavit that it was the owner and holder of said notes, and that the affidavit was made by W. H. Marston, the president of said company, for and on its behalf. Said claim was allowed and approved for $43,026.79. Appellant complains against the ruling of the court admitting this evidence, but we think it was clearly admissible as some evidence relevant to the present claim made by said W. H. Marston that he personally furnished the money that discharged the obligations owed by the Central Alaska Fisheries Company to the First National Bank of Berkeley on account of said promissory notes. This evidence and the further circumstances that all of the income from the W. H. Marston Company's property or business inured to the personal use and benefit of W. H. Marston, and the payment by him of all charges and expenses accruing against said company's property, would also tend to show that the W. H. Marston Company and W. H. Marston were for all practical purposes one entity. The learned trial court evidently took the view that the money paid by the personal checks of Marston on account of said Central Alaska Fisheries Company's indebtedness were in fact moneys belonging to the W. H. Marston Company, and that said payments constituted a voluntary payment by said company and were made without a sufficient consideration to support them.

The court found as a fact that the Central Alaska Fisheries Company had not paid either to W. H. Marston or to the W. H. Marston Company any part of said sum of $123,027.95 alleged by separate counts to be owing either to W. H. Marston or to the W. H. Marston Company, and it would follow therefrom that said obligation was never discharged by said Central Alaska Fisheries Company, but was actually paid at the latter's request to said payee from moneys which, according to the only evidence in the record on the question, belonged to either W. H. Marston or the W. H. Marston Company. There is no evidence in the record that would justify the inference that moneys paid to discharge the Central Alaska Fisheries Company on its guaranteed notes were moneys belonging to said company.

It was also specifically found that W. H. Marston, at the various times alleged, assigned and transferred to the W. H. Marston Company all his right, title, and interest in and to his claims against the Central Alaska Fisheries Company, including his claim and demand on each of said several promissory notes, but it was further found not true that said W. H. Marston Company thereby became the owner and holder of any of said notes. Finding No. 46 is here pertinent. It follows:

"As to paragraph II of the twenty-fifth cause of action, the court finds:

"That it is true that on or about September 24, 1923, the said Central Alaska Fisheries acknowledged in writing to the said W. H. Marston Company that it was indebted to the said W. H. Marston Company as the assignee of said W. H. Marston in the sum of $123,027.95, alleged to have been paid out by the said W. H. Marston at the special instance and request of said Central Alaska Fisheries Company as alleged in the second paragraph of the first cause of action of said amended complaint, with interest upon said sum from December 30, 1922. It is likewise true that the said Central Alaska Fisheries, on or about September 24, 1923, promised in a writing signed by the said Central Alaska Fisheries, to pay to the said W. H. Marston Company as the assignee of said W. H. Marston the said sum of $123,027.95, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from December 30, 1922; and it is likewise true that no part of said sum or the said interest has been paid by the said company; but the court finds that it is untrue that said W. H. Marston ever paid out any sums of money as alleged in the second paragraph of said first cause of action of said amended complaint, and therefore the said W. H. Marston had no claim against the said Central Alaska Fisheries Company, Inc., which he could assign to said W. H. Marston Company, and the promise made by said Central Alaska Fisheries, Inc., to pay said sums of money to said W. H. Marston Company as assignee of said W. H. Marston was made without consideration, and attempted to acknowledge an indebtedness which did not exist."

[2] If it be true that W. H. Marston, as found by the court, never paid out any sums of money at the special instance and request of the Central Alaska Fisheries Company to the First National Bank of Berkeley for the use and benefit of said Central Alaska Fisheries Company, as alleged in paragraph II of the first cause of action, and that no obligation of any character was created in favor of the W. H. Marston Company by reason of the payments made by it to said bank at the special instance and request of W. H. Marston "in order to discharge the liability of the said W. H. Marston as a guarantor of the obligations of said corporation" (Central Alaska Fisheries Company), as alleged in paragraph II of the second cause of action and found by the court to be true, it would follow that the obligation of the Central Alaska Fisheries Company to pay its indebtedness would go wholly discharged. If as a matter of fact W. H. Marston used moneys in his possession and under his control which belonged to the W. H. Marston Company with the permission and consent of the latter to pay his guaranty obligation, and said payment was also made at the request of the Central Alaska Fisheries Company and the payee, that would constitute a transaction between Marston and said Marston Company about which the Central Alaska Fisheries Company would have no legal ground of complaint. Nor could it repudiate its implied obligation to reimburse the payor. Wheeler v. Bull, 131 Cal. 421, 425, 426, 63 P. 732. Such a transaction would constitute a loan as between W. H. Marston and W. H. Marston Company, or at least a payment of money by the W. H. Marston Company to the use of W. H. Marston, and in either event an implied obligation on the part of W. H. Marston to reimburse W. H. Marston Company would be created. The evidence is without contradiction to the effect that W. H. Marston paid the Central Alaska Fisheries Company's indebtedness from moneys deposited in his name and private account. All checks were so drawn and paid. It is very doubtful if there is any satisfactory evidence in the record that would justify a holding that the particular moneys used by W. H. Marston to pay said indebtedness were not his own. Surely there is no evidence tending to prove that he was not fully authorized to use said moneys deposited in his name for purposes and in ways that would indicate a proprietary right in him. No question of fraud or misappropriation on the part of W. H. Marston is claimed or suggested by respondent. Yule v. Bishop, 133 Cal. 574, 62 P. 68, 65 P. 1094, is relied upon by respondent as a case decisively against appellant's right of recovery. We do not so regard it. That was
